STEWART v. SILVA. (S. F. 10415.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1923.
As Modified Dec. 19, 1923. Rehearing Denied Dec. 19, 1923.)

1. Deeds — 194(2)—Possession of deed prima facie evidence of delivery.

A presumption of delivery arises from the fact that grantee actually had possession of it and produced it in court.

2. Deeds — 194(2)—Presumption of delivery from grantee's possession of deed not overcome by evidence of nondelivery.

Notwithstanding grantor of land continued to deal with it, pay taxes, insurance, and live on it with his goddaughter, the grantee, after alleged delivery of deed thereto to her, such fact did not show deed was not delivered, and inferences arising therefrom of nondelivery were not sufficient to overcome grantee's prima facie case from possession of deed.

3. Deeds — 56(2)—Misapprehension by grantor of effect of deed does not affect fact of delivery.

Under Civ. Code, § 1056, a misapprehension by the grantor of the effect of his deed does not affect the fact of delivery, if made with the intention to deliver.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Mamie Silvia Stewart, as administratrix of the estate of John J. Silvia, deceased, against Maria Filomena Adelaide Silva, also known as Mary F. A. Silva. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jordan & Brann, of San Francisco, for appellant.

H. L. Hagan, of San Francisco, and T. J. Ledwich, of Oakland, for respondent.

WILBUR, C. J. The sole question at issue in this case is whether or not certain deeds executed by John J. Silvia as grantor to the defendant were delivered and thus vested the title, theretofore in said decedent, in the defendant. The question arises in an action to quiet title brought by the daughter of John J. Silvia, deceased, acting as the administratrix of his estate to quiet title to the land described in the conveyances. The trial court found that the conveyances were not delivered, and therefore that the title was in the decedent at the time of his death, and therefore entered a judgment quieting such title. The defendant appeals from this judgment.

The decedent made three deeds of the property in compliance with his promise to the defendant that if she came to San Rafael and worked for him during the rest of his life he would give her the property. Upon arriving in California in 1913 or 1914, decedent made a deed of this property to the defendant, which deed was placed in escrow with Thomas P. Boyd, his attorney. Later this deed was taken from the attorney by the grantor and delivered to the grantee and she was in actual possession thereof until 1919. In this deed the first name of the defendant was written as Mary instead of Maria. For that reason the deed was returned to the grantor and taken by him to his attorney, who prepared a new deed and the first deed was destroyed by the grantor. On August 20, 1919, the grantor and grantee both went to the office of the attorney. This attorney and the grantee both testify as to what occurred, and from this testimony, if believed, it is clear that the deed was delivered at that time. The grantee testified as follows with reference to what occurred at that time:

"Q. Will you repeat his identical language at the handing over of the second paper? A. He gave me the paper. 'This is the deed of your property that I give you. From now on this property is yours, but during the time I live I will receive all the interest and I shall pay the taxes, and then, after I die, send this paper to the recorder.' * * * Q. What was done with that deed after it was handed to you on that occasion in 1919 in Mr. Boyd's private office? A. I took it and put it into a little hand bag I had in my hand, took it home, and kept it in my trunk. I saw it every time I would open my trunk; I would see it in the bottom of the trunk, underneath my clothes."

The witness also testified that the deed remained in her possession until after the death of the grantor, whereupon she took it to the recorder's office and had it recorded.

The attorney, Thomas P. Boyd, was also called as a witness with reference to the delivery of the deed, and testified as follows:

"A. I got the deed from the desk of Miss Essie Boyd, my sister. It had been signed and acknowledged by Mr. Silvia, and I brought it into the office. I then told Mr. Silvia that he should hand this deed to Miss Silvia himself, and I told him the effect of handing that deed to her would be to deprive himself of title to the property. I asked him in fact if he knew what he was doing, if he understood it, and he said he did. So I then told him to hand the deed to her and tell her the property was hers. He took the deed from my hand, handed it to her in my presence, said something to her in Portuguese, which I did not understand, and she took that deed, put it into her handbag, and left."

This witness also testified that during the grantor's last illness he visited the grantor, and that the grantor then asked about the deed. "He asked me," the witness testified, "if she would be safe in her property. I said, 'Yes, you can make the thing doubly sure by making a will if you want to.' He said he would not bother making a will as long as I was satisfied she had the property. It was hers."

Mrs. Eva L. Osborn, who was employed by Mr. Boyd as stenographer and clerk, testified that the deed had been prepared at the instance of the grantor. With reference to the delivery, she testified that Mr. Boyd took the deed into the room where the grantor and grantee were at the time in his office, and then testified as follows:

"Q. Then what took place, if you know? A. He left the door open when he went in so I saw everything that went on. He had the deed. Mr. Boyd had the deed, and he said to Mr. Silvia: 'Now, John, I hope you know what, you realize what you are doing; when this deed passes to this lady, the property becomes hers. It is no longer yours; you are making no mistake about this?' And he said: 'No, that is all right; I know, I trust her, and I want her to have it.' Q. And then what happened? A. Then Mr. Boyd said: 'Well, then you take the deed and hand it to her personally and tell her that.' Q. And then what happened? A. Then Mr. Boyd handed it to Mr. Silvia, and he handed it to Miss Silvia and said something to her but it was in Portuguese; I do not know what it was. Q. What did she do with the instrument, if anything? A. She had a little hand satchel and she put in there."

The trial court found that on August 20, 1919, the decedent signed and acknowledged before a notary public a certain grant, bargain and sale deed, sufficient in form to convey the real property described in the action to the defendant, but found that the deed was never delivered, but that the deed was secured by the grantee after the death of the grantor and recorded.

Six witnesses testified that the grantor told them that he had deeded the property to the grantee. Some of these statements were made previous to the acknowledgment and delivery of the second deed and for that reason undoubtedly referred to the first deed.

The evidence relied upon by the respondent to overcome the direct testimony of these witnesses as to the delivery of the deed relates largely to the dealing of the parties after the making of the deed with the property therein described. The insurance policy upon the house was retained in the name of the grantor. Taxes were paid by the grantor. On January 1, 1916, the store was leased for five years by a written lease entered into by John J. Silva and John V. Cardoza and Manuel V. Cardoza. The property was therein described as owned by Silva. It is argued:

"If the 1914 deed was not regarded by the parties as a valid conveyance, it is a reasonable inference that they did not intend the 1919 conveyance to have any greater validity."

[1] The respondent's argument is in effect that the trial court was justified in disbelieving the testimony of the grantee because she had made contradictory statements; that the trial court was justified in disbelieving the attorney who testified for the reason that the attorney had executed the lease of the property in 1916, after the deed of 1914, showing that although the two deeds were said to have been delivered under somewhat similar circumstances, the attorney did not believe that title had passed. In this connection, however, it should be observed that the first deed was deposited with the attorney in escrow to be delivered upon the death of the grantor; the legal effect of this arrangement being that the grantor would retain a life estate. Under these circumstances, of course, the making of the lease was perfectly proper. Even if we assume that the trial court believed and intended to find as a fact that the attorney, his clerk, and stenographer, and the defendant deliberately testified falsely as to the delivery of the deed, we still have the presumption of delivery arising from the fact that the grantee in the deed actually had the possession of the deed and produced it in court. This alone constituted prima facie evidence of delivery. Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 242, 17 Pac. 193, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151. It was there said:

"Possession of a deed of property, however, by the grantee therein named, and upon the same principle by one holding by conveyance of the same property under him, is prima facie evidence of its delivery.

"The question of delivery being one of fact, and possession being only primary evidence of delivery, he who disputes such fact may rebut the presumption arising from possession by showing that there has in fact been no delivery; but it has been said that where a deed is found in possession of the grantee, nothing but the most satisfactory evidence of nondelivery should prevail against the presumption. (Devlin on Deeds, § 294.)

"In Tunison v. Chamblin, 88 Ill. 379, it was said: 'When a deed duly executed is found in the hands of a grantee, there is a strong implication that it has been delivered, and only clear and convincing evidence can overcome the presumption. Otherwise titles could be easily defeated, and no one could be regarded as being secure in the ownership of the land.' * * *

"In Branson v. Caruthers, 49 Cal. 374, it was said: 'The production of the deed of gift by the attorneys of the wife [the grantee] was sufficient evidence of its delivery and acceptance.' (Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609.)"

[2] If we not only disregard the testimony of the witnesses who were present at and participated in the delivery of the deed to the grantee and also disregard the declarations made from time to time by the grantor that he intended to deed the property to the grantee and that he had deeded the property to the grantee, what have we left in the evidence to overcome the presumption of delivery arising from the possession of the deed by the grantee? There is nothing substantial. The evidence of the continued dealing with the property by the grantor was not necessarily in conflict with the actual situation disclosed by the evidence as offered by the defendant. The grantor was her godfather, who had brought her to this country to keep house for him. They lived together, and it was quite natural that the godfather, the grantor of the property, should continue to deal with it, pay taxes, insurance, and live upon the property with his goddaughter, the grantee, as he in fact did. This would not show that the deed was not delivered and the inferences arising therefrom of nondelivery would not be sufficient under the circumstances to overcome the prima facie case arising from the possession of the deed by the grantee. The fact that the grantor at the time of the delivery expressed a desire that the deed should not be recorded until after his death and intended to exercise acts of ownership thereover during his life, if we accept the testimony of the grantee that such statements were made by him at the time of the delivery of the deed, would not prevent the delivery from being effective if the grantor in fact intended to deliver the deed.

[3] A misapprehension by the grantor of the effect of the deed would not affect the fact of delivery, if made with the intention to deliver. See section 1056, Civ. Code; Whitney v. Dewey, 10 Idaho, 633, 80 Pac. 1117, 69 L. R. A. 572.

The situation presented by this appeal may be summed up as follows: If the trial court disbelieved all the witnesses who testified on behalf of the defendant with reference to the delivery of the deed, there is no evidence to overcome the presumption of delivery derived from the fact that the grantee had possession of the deed. If the trial court believed the testimony of these witnesses, it could not escape a finding of fact that the deed was delivered. In either event the finding of the trial court was erroneous.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WASTE, J.; SEAWELL, J.; MYERS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

LENNON, J. I concur in the conclusion of Mr. Justice WILBUR, which results in a reversal of the judgment in this case, primarily ly for the reason that it is the general rule that the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of a witness tending to establish an issuable fact in the case may not be arbitrarily disregarded by the trial court. Hayward v. Rogers, 62 Cal. 348, 372; Gage v. Billing, 12 Cal. App. 688, 108 Pac. 664; 10 Cal. Jur. p. 1143. To the contrary, such testimony must be accepted as proof of the fact which it is offered to establish, unless it can be said that such testimony is so inherently incredible and improbable as to amount to no evidence at all. Hutchison v. Holland, 47 Cal. App. 710, 190 Pac. 1072; Hynes v. White, 47 Cal. App. 549, 190 Pac. 836. In the instant case the testimony of several witnesses concerning the issue of the execution and delivery of the deed in controversy is not inconsistent with the circumstances which admittedly preceded, attended, and followed the making and alleged delivery of said deed, and prima facie no good reason appears why the testimony of said witnesses may not be said to reasonably harmonize with said circumstances. In the absence of circumstances tending to support a conclusion opposite to that deducible from the testimony of those witnesses, the trial court was not privileged to reject their testimony. Williams v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 419; In re Sullivan's Estate (Cal. Sup.) 211 Pac. 458.

DONAT v. DILLON. (L. A. 7269.)

Municipal corporations ☞ 706(6)—Negligence of automobile driver turning at street intersection held question of fact.

Where defendant, a motorist driving north, attempted to turn a corner to the left, and passed beyond the center of the intersection, and gave a proper arm signal, he was not free from negligence as a matter of law, in regard to a guest riding south in an automobile going at an unlawful speed, if on seeing the approaching car, 100 feet away, he failed to proceed across the intersection in a careful and prudent manner, and to make sure that he had sufficient space to make the turn in safety as required by Motor Vehicle Act, § 20 (n), as amended by St. 1919, p. 214, § 12, since the right of way given by subdivision (f) to the driver first reaching the crossing is subject to the limitations prescribed by subdivision (n) in respect to one turning into another street.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; T. N. Harvey, Judge.

Action by L. W. Donat against H. T. Dillon. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Emmons, Aldrich & Heck, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Kaye & Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment entered against him for $1,401.90, in an action brought by plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries caused by a collision between an automobile driven by the defendant and another automobile in which the plaintiff was riding as the guest of one H. C. Riddle.

The facts of the case, as shown by the findings, which are supported by the evidence, are as follows: Plaintiff was riding as a guest of Riddle, who was driving his automobile in a southerly direction on the westerly side of Chester avenue in the city of Bakersfield. The defendant was driving in a northerly direction on the same avenue, and both were approaching its intersection with Twenty-Fourth street. On arriving at this point the defendant undertook to make a left turn in order to proceed westerly on Twenty-Fourth street. Before turning he extended his left hand in a horizontal direction outwardly from the left side of his car, thereby giving the proper signal of his intention to make the change of course mentioned. He thereupon ran beyond the center of the intersection and, proceeding at a slow rate of speed, completed the turn. His automobile had just cleared the car tracks on Chester avenue when it collided with that of the plaintiff. The defendant, as he testified, first observed the car driven by Riddle approaching from the north as he was "just ready to make the left-hand turn." At this time Riddle's machine was about 100 feet north of the intersection, and was approaching said intersection at an excessive and unlawful rate of speed, exceeding 30 miles per hour. The defendant did not again observe the oncoming automobile until it was in such a position that a collision was inevitable.

The trial court, in addition to a finding substantially to the foregoing effect, found that "the said defendant so carelessly and negligently operated and drove his said automobile that he caused the same to divert from the easterly side of said avenue to the westerly side thereof and to enter the path of the automobile being driven by the said Riddle in such manner as to collide with great force and violence against the left side of the automobile being driven by the said Riddle, and thereby caused the same to overturn." The court further found that defendant negligently attempted to make said turn "without first seeing that there was sufficient space for such movement to be made in safety," in this that, when about to commence making the turn, the defendant observed the approach of the Riddle car, which at that moment was a distance of approximately 100 feet north of the northerly boundary of Twenty-Fourth street, "but that the said defendant failed at said time to observe the speed at which the said car being driven by Riddle was approaching, and further failed to observe the movement of the said car being driven by Riddle, and did not again see said car until his own car was about to collide against the left side of the automobile so being driven by the said Riddle."

The principal contention of defendant upon this appeal is that the evidence is not sufficient to establish the fact of negligence upon his part, or to prove that such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. It was conceded at the trial that the negligence of Riddle in driving at an excessive rate of speed was not imputable to the plaintiff, so that if defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, plaintiff could recover notwithstanding the contributory negligence of Riddle.

As we see it, this case falls within the general rule that negligence is a question of fact for the trial court or jury. Here it was peculiarly a question for the court trying the cause to decide as a matter of fact whether or not the defendant was negligent in executing this left turn in the manner in which he did. The defendant seeks to take the case out of the operation of this rule, and would, in effect, have us decide as a matter of law that one having reached the intersection and having given the signal indicating his intention to turn has then relieved himself of all further care in the matter. But it is obvious that such is not the law. A motorist must at all times use due care to avoid colliding with another; he must be ever alert and watchful, so as not to place himself in danger, and, while he may assume that others will exercise due care, he cannot for that reason omit any of the care which the law demands of him. Assuming, therefore, that the defendant had the right of way, he was required to proceed across the intersection in a careful and prudent manner, ever watchful of the direction in which danger was most likely to be apprehended. He could not close his eyes so far as south-bound traffic on Chester avenue was concerned. To the contrary, having observed Riddle's car approaching at an exceedingly fast rate of speed for that vicinity, the defendant was no longer entitled to rely upon the presumption that the driver of this machine would comply with the rules of the road, and he was bound to take such reasonable measures as he could under the circumstances to prevent the injury. It was, therefore, a question for the trial court to determine upon all the evidence and the reasonable deductions therefrom whether the defendant, after having seen the approaching machine, continued to exercise the care and prudence which a reasonable man would have exercised under the circumstances. And, as we cannot say that the trial court reached an unreasonable conclusion, we are bound by its finding of the ultimate fact which determined the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

Furthermore, there is nothing in the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act which specifically gave the defendant the right of way under the circumstances of this case. Subdivision (n) of section 20 of this act provides that—

"The person in charge of any vehicle in or upon any public highway, before turning, stopping, or changing the course of such vehicle, and before turning such vehicle when starting the same, shall see first that there is sufficient space for such movement to be made in safety, and if the movement or operation of other vehicles may reasonably be affected by such turning, stopping or changing of course, shall give plainly visible signal to the persons operating, driving or in charge of such vehicles of his intention so to turn, stop, or change his course. * * *" Stats. 1919, pp. 191, 216.

And in subdivision (f) of the same section it provided that—

"Excepting where controlled by such traffic ordinances or regulations as are permitted under this act the operator of a vehicle shall yield the right of way at the intersection of their paths to a vehicle approaching from the right unless such vehicle approaching from the right is further from the point of the intersection of their paths than such first-named vehicle."

Although a machine first reaching the intersection may have the right of way, it does not follow that one who changes his course at the intersection of a street is entitled to the full protection of this rule, for common sense tells us that he is bound to exercise great care to avoid colliding with machines that are on the street, and across whose path he must travel. Clark v. Fotheringham, 100 Wash. 12, 170 Pac. 323. It seems to us that this was what the Legislature had in mind when it provided that a vehicle, before starting to turn, "shall see first that there is sufficient space for such movement to be made in safety," so that the practical effect of this provision is to cast upon motorists intending to turn the duty of exercising greater care than is ordinarily required of them.

In accordance with the above-expressed views, we are of the opinion that the judgment of the trial court was proper, and should be, and is hereby, affirmed.

SCHOOLER v. WILLIAMSON. (Sac. 3403.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1923. Rehearing Denied Jan. 4, 1924.)

I. Trusts —43(1)—Statements indicating knowledge of effect of indorsements admissible in action to establish trust.

Statements made by the owner of bonds to his attorney at the time of drawing his will, relative to the effect of indorsement on the envelope containing the bonds, indicating knowledge of its legal effect, held admissible in an action to establish a parol trust in favor of indorsee.

2. Evidence —231(3)—Declarations subsequent to transfer of interest inadmissible.

Declarations made subsequent to a transfer of bonds or an equitable interest therein by the transferer adverse to that interest are inadmissible in an action to establish title.

3. Evidence —121(1)—Declarations made between the dates relied on to establish a parol trust part of res gestæ.

Where declarations made on the 19th, 20th, and 31st of the same month are relied upon as part of a parol declaration of trust, intermediate adverse statements made on the 26th are under Code Civ. Proc. § 1850, part of the res gestæ and admissible in an action to establish such trust.

4. Gifts —28(2)—Intent of owner not given effect if acts did not constitute valid transfer.

That one indorsing the name of another on an envelope containing bonds did so under the bona fide belief that a valid transfer was thereby effected would not warrant the court in giving effect to such intent.

5. Evidence —233—Declarations as to title and character of possession of bonds held admissible.

Where the owner of bonds indorsed the name and address of another on the envelope containing them, after expressing an intent to make a gift of them to the indorsee, declarations subsequently made by him, while retaining possession of the bonds, concerning his title and the character of his possession, are admissible in an action by the indorsee to establish a parol trust.

6. Trusts —44(1)—Evidence held to negative parol trust in bonds.

Evidence held to sustain findings negating parol trust in bonds.

7. Trial —374(2)—Court in action to establish trust may disregard jury's findings.

An action to establish a parol trust in personality being equitable and the findings of a jury in an equitable action being merely advisory, the court may disregard the jury's findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by Nellie E. Schooler against Edward Thomas Williamson, as executor of the last will of Joseph Richardson Houghton, deceased, and individually. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bond & Delrup, of Chico, and William H. Schooler, of San Francisco (Charles A. Shurtleff, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Charles P. Gale, of San Francisco, and George F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondent.

WILBUR, C. J. In this action the plaintiff seeks to establish her right to ten $1,000 bonds of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, now in the possession of the defendant as executor of the last will of Joseph Richardson Houghton, deceased. These bonds first came into possession of the defendant in October, 1920, when he was appointed guardian of Joseph Houghton, who had been on the 25th of October, 1920, declared an incompetent. They were at that time in a safe deposit box in the vaults of the Union Trust building in an envelope, on the outside of which was indorsed the following: "Mrs. Nellie E. Schooler, No. 3859 21st Street, San Francisco, Cal." And upon the back of the same envelope in the same handwriting, but in pencil, was the following: "10 bonds Pac. Telephone & Tel. Company. Interest payable Jan. 2d and July 2d—5 per cent. per annum."

Guy R. Kennedy, an attorney at law, who drew the will of the decedent, testified that between the 1st day of August, 1918, and the 15th day of April, 1919, he had a conversation with Mr. Houghton in Chico in which the latter said that he had an envelope on which there was the name of Mrs. Schooler written together with her address in his safe deposit box; that at that time he stated that he had not given them (the bonds) to her and had not given possession of them to her, and they were a part of his estate the same as the other bonds, and that Mr. Houghton then asked the witness if under the circumstances she would get the bonds after his death, and the witness told him that she would not. On April 15, 1919, the witness drew the will of Mr. Houghton and at that time had a conversation with him about an envelope in his safe deposit box in the Union Trust Company which contained ten $1,000 bonds on which the name of Nellie E. Schooler was written, together with her address. The witness testified:

"I asked him about the envelope again, and asked him if he had given those bonds that it contained to Mrs. Schooler, and he said, 'No;' and I asked him if he had delivered possession of them to her, and he said, 'No;' and I asked him if they were part of his estate, and he said, 'Yes;' and I said, 'They go the same as the rest under the terms of the will,' and he said 'Yes.'"

On July 26, 1920, this witness and Mr. Houghton visited the safe deposit vaults of the Union Trust Company and opened his safe deposit box. At that time the witness saw the envelope containing the ten $1,000 bonds of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company with the name and address of the plaintiff written thereon. He then examined the envelope and identified it as the same envelope offered in evidence, and testified that at the time the same was exhibited to him by Mr. Houghton the witness asked:

"Major, is this the envelope you talked about in Chico, and he said 'Yes;' and I said, 'Have you ever given these bonds to Mrs. Schooler,' and he said, 'No;' and I asked him if he ever delivered possession of them to Mrs. Schooler, and he said, 'No;' and I said, 'Are they part of your estate,' and he said, 'Yes;' and I said, 'Just the same as the other bonds,' and he said, 'Yes.'"

This witness also testified that, in the first will executed by the deceased, $10,000 in bonds was left to Mrs. Schooler and that the conversation concerning the envelope arose in connection with the execution of the new will in which the legacy to Mrs. Schooler was reduced $5,000.

The coupons on the bonds due January 1, 1920, and July 1, 1920, were not clipped from the bonds and were still thereon at the time of the death of the decedent.

It is clear that upon this evidence the judgment of the trial court in favor of the defendant was amply justified, but the appellant contends that the evidence of the declarations of the deceased hereinbefore stated were improperly received in evidence because they were self-serving declarations and hearsay.

Before disposing of the question thus raised by the appellant the evidence upon which she relies to establish her rights to the bonds will first be stated. Appellant alleges that on the 19th day of July, 1920, the decedent informed her that he intended to go at once to the Union Trust Company and that he had some bonds there that "I shall fix for you, and then that will make it right." That on the next day he told her that he had "fixed it for me and that he felt very much better over it; he said, 'Those bonds were there.' I said, 'Perhaps I will not get them;' and he said, 'Oh, Ed is honest; Ed will give them to you.'"

Frederick William Clements testified that he was with Major Houghton on the 19th day of July, 1920; that at the request of the decedent he accompanied him to the safe deposit vaults in the Union Safe Deposit and Trust Company at the corner of Market and Grant avenue; that at that time and in his presence the bonds were counted, the numbers written down, and that at that time the bonds were taken from one envelope and placed in another upon which the deceased wrote the name and address of the plaintiff, which envelope was identified as the one introduced in evidence containing the bonds at the time they came into the possession of the defendant. The envelope containing the bonds was replaced in the safe deposit box, and the decedent stated, "I am glad I done that," and pointing to the box he said, "There is $5,000 more for her there." As they were leaving, the following conversation occurred between the witness and Mr. Houghton:

"I said, 'Joe, you are not doing that right,' I said, 'Supposing that envelope gets lost?' He said, 'Ed will give them to her,' meaning Mr. Williamson; and I said, 'That is all right; if you could come back the day after you are dead and see that she gets them, it will be all right;' and he said, 'You see that she gets them; they are hers, and for her, and you see that she gets them.'"

The witness testified that he repeated the statement later and said that he had told the plaintiff what he had done. The witness testified that afterwards he had a number of conversations of similar import and that the witness repeatedly stated to Mr. Houghton, "You are not doing this right, Major."

On the 31st of July, 1920, the witness testified that he again accompanied Mr. Houghton to the safe deposit vaults; that the box was again opened and Mr. Houghton made a search among his papers, apparently looking for a will and during the course of the search picked up the envelope and said, "These are Nellie's; I am glad I done that."

The deceased was about 74 years old at the time of his death. He left no near relatives, and his estate was valued at about $160,000, most of which was bequeathed by his will to his friends.

[1] These conversations between Mr. Houghton and his attorney with reference to the effect of an indorsement upon the envelope containing bonds were admissible to show that the decedent knew at the time he is alleged to have written the name of the plaintiff upon the envelope containing the bonds that such writing would not have the effect of transferring title to the appellant, and that notwithstanding such indorsement, if there was no delivery of the bonds, he would still have full power of disposition over such bonds as a portion of his estate. The declarations of 1918 and 1919 of the donor that he had theretofore placed the bonds in an envelope so indorsed were wholly immaterial for any other purpose, for it is conceded that the decedent owned the bonds when he made these declarations tending to show his ownership, and, in so far as they tended to confirm title in the decedent at that time, such declarations conform to the theory of the appellant, namely, that he was at that time the owner of the bonds. A week after the time fixed by the appellant's witnesses as the time of the placing of her name and address upon the envelope Mr. Houghton stated to his attorney that the envelope and the indorsement thereon were the same referred to by him in the conversation two years earlier as having been made by him without any intention of making a gift of the bonds. This declaration concerning the indorsement clearly tended to show the purpose and intent of the owner in making such indorsement, whenever it was made.

[2] It may be conceded that the declarations of the deceased made after the transaction of July 19, 1920, concerning the title to the bonds, would not be admissible against a person to whom he had transferred the bonds, or an equitable interest therein, if such declarations were in derogation of that interest. Keese v. Beardsley (Cal. Sup.) 213 Pac. 500. But the sole question here is whether or not there was a transfer of such equitable interest. If the transfer be conceded, the subsequent declarations would have no probative value, because such declarations are only material upon the issue of transfer. The question here in issue is the motive and intention of the owner of the bonds in holding them in his own safe deposit box without delivery of them to the plaintiff, and without any indorsement thereon indicating an intention to so deliver said bonds and without any evidence of a transfer of title or interest in the bonds other than the somewhat equivocal remarks made by the owner at the time the witness Clements was present, and immediately before and after that occasion. The most definite statement indicating a present intent to pass a beneficial interest in the bonds is the statement of Mr. Houghton to the witness Clements on July 31, 1921, "These are Nellie's; I am glad I done that." It is only on the theory that on July 19 or July 31, 1920, the donor then and there intended to surrender to the plaintiff the entire beneficial interest in the bonds and also intended to retain the title and possession thereof for her, that the plaintiff can succeed in this case. Thornton on Gifts, etc., p. 423, § 419. It is conceded that if the evidence merely establishes an intention on the part of Mr. Houghton to make a testamentary disposition of the bonds, or that he intended to make a gift of the bonds, the transaction was ineffective.

[3, 4] Plaintiff's whole case turns upon the significance of the statement of Mr. Houghton to the effect that he had "fixed" the bonds so that plaintiff would get them when he died and that he subsequently stated, "These are Nellie's." If this last-mentioned statement of July 31st is a part of the parol declaration of trust relied upon by appellant, it is clear that the intermediate declaration of July 26th is a part of the res gestæ and therefore admissible (Jones on Evidence, § 347; section 1850, Code Civ. Proc.), and that the introduction of the declaration of July 31st made the decedent's declarations of July 26th also admissible. We do not, however, place our decision wholly on that ground. In considering the evidence bearing upon his intention, it is clear that if he believed that under the law the effect of writing her name on the back of the envelope constituted the bonds her property of writing her name on the back of the transaction of July 19, 1920, was to bequeath the bonds to her, or if he believed that the transaction amounted to a gift of the bonds, he was mistaken, but the court cannot give effect to such gift or bequest because of his bona fide belief that title to the bonds had passed or would pass by reason of his acts. It is significant that nothing was said or done concerning the interest coupons attached to the bonds then due or as to the interest which would accrue during the lifetime of the deceased.

The rule is thus stated in Thornton on Gifts and Advancements, supra, p. 200, § 225:

"* * * When the circumstances are equivocal and it is doubtful whether the donor intended a gift or a loan, explicit declaration of intention made after the transaction has taken place is admissible for the purpose of removing the ambiguity. Thus where a donor deposited money in a savings bank in the name of the donee without his knowledge, and retained possession of the passbook until he died, letters between the bank and the donor with reference to the deposit, and his declarations relating to the deposit while holding the book were admitted to show the character of the act. So any declarations of the donor while in possession of the subject-matter of the gift is admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ, to prove the character of his possession."

See, also, Id., pp. 198, 199, § 224. See, also, Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 Pac. 1; Donahue v. Sweeney, 171 Cal. 388, 153 Pac. 708; Fisher v. Oliver, 174 Cal. 781, 164 Pac. 800; Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 497, 45 Pac. 867; Estate of Hall, 154 Cal. 527, 532, 98 Pac. 269.

[6] The evidence complained of was properly admitted, and the findings of the court were amply supported by the evidence.

[7] Appellant raises another point based upon the fact that the case was tried before a jury and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff which was ignored by the trial judge, who entered a judgment on findings made in favor of the defendant. Appellant claims that the trial judge had no right to make findings, thus ignoring the verdict of the jury, but it cannot be questioned that the findings of a jury in an equity case are merely advisory. Sweetser v. Dobbins, 65 Cal. 529, 4 Pac. 540; Davis v. Judson, 159 Cal. 121, 113 Pac. 147. This is an equity case. The appellant never acquired the legal title to the bonds in question. Upon her own theory of the case she is merely the beneficiary of a trust created by the testator. Her action is to secure a judgment declaring that the defendant holds the bonds in trust for her and that the purpose of the trust had been so far accomplished that the bonds may be delivered to her. Several other incidental points are advanced by the appellant, but the case is fully disposed of by what has been heretofore stated, and no other point requires further consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. POMPA. (Cr. 2570.)

Rehearing Denied Dec. 24, 1923.)

1. Homicide $\S$ 329—Matters presented only by denied motion for new trial reviewed, though appeal was technically only from judgment.

In cases of capital crime, the law is reluctant to deny a defendant a full consideration of his points because of technical errors or omissions of his counsel, and so, on appeal technically only from the judgment, the court will consider matters relative to a view by the jury, presented by the denied motion for new trial; the entire record being before the court, and it appearing from papers filed with the trial court clerk at the time of the appeal that defendant desired and intended to have alleged errors in respect to the view and in the denial of the motion included in the record and presented for review on the appeal.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 651(1), 1152(1)—Change in physical condition of premises does not preclude the granting of view by jury, and order reviewable only for abuse of discretion.

That physical conditions on or about the premises have to a degree been changed does not prevent the court, under Pen. Code, § 1119, from granting a view by the jury, but is merely a fact to be considered by it in exercising its discretion, its conclusion in regard to which will be disturbed only on a clear showing of abuse of discretion.

3. Courts $\S$ 74—Sessions may be held outside courtroom.

Sessions of court may be held in places other than the courtroom, if otherwise the forms of law governing the trial of causes are observed.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 660—Defendant held precluded by acquiescence from objecting to informalities in procedure during view by jury.

Defendant, by his acquiescence and the acquiescence and active participation of his counsel in the taking of testimony and receiving of evidence by the jury, during a view of the premises, is precluded from objecting to informalities in procedure of the trial court during the view.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 660—Objection to shower for view by jury to be made at time of designation.

Any objection by defendant to the shower for a view by the jury should be made at the time of his designation by the court, and, not being then made, is waived.

6. Criminal law §660—Objection to questions by judge to shower during view to be made at time.

Any objection by defendant to the trial judge, during a view by the jury, putting questions to the shower, intended to clarify and expedite the proceedings, should be made at the time.

7. Criminal law §651(2)—Evidence may be received on a view by the jury.

Evidence may be received on a view by the jury, under Pen. Code, § 1119, if the forms of law are otherwise being observed.

8. Criminal law §651(1/2)—Shower for view by jury need not be sworn as such, where previously sworn as witness.

The shower for a view by the jury need not be sworn at or after his designation; he having been sworn as a witness at an earlier stage of the case, and so being under oath as witness in whatever statements he makes to the jury in the course of his duties as shower.

9. Criminal law §660—Omission to swear bailiff for view by jury an irregularity, to be objected to at time.

Omission to swear the bailiff in charge of the jury for a view by them is at most an irregularity, to be objected to at the time.

10. Criminal law §1166 1/2(1)—In absence of failure of bailiff in charge of jury to perform duties, failure to swear him not ground for reversal.

Failure to swear the bailiff in charge of the jury for a view is not ground for reversal, in the absence of a showing of failure by him to perform his duties.

11. Criminal law §656(3)—Remark of court in correctly excluding statement at most misconduct, not to be taken advantage of as error of law.

For the court, in sustaining defendant's objection to admission of a statement by him, to intimate that the statement would have been admissible if the interpreter could have been produced to testify what defendant did say, a matter on which it was not then required to make a ruling, was at most misconduct, which cannot be taken advantage of as an error of law.

12. Criminal law §1166 1/2(12)—No injury from intimation that statement, not shown, would under certain circumstances be admissible.

No injury is shown from any misconduct of court, on correctly excluding defendant's statement, in intimating that it would have been admissible if the interpreter could have been produced to testify what statement was made; whatever statement defendant made not being before the jury during the trial.

13. Criminal law §1170 1/2(1)—No prejudice from absence of fuller explanation of claimed discrepancy, in view of witness' statements at trial and previously.

Witness' testimony on the trial clarifying, but not contradicting, his statements on the preliminary hearing, defendant was not prejudiced by a fuller explanation not being given by witness of claimed inconsistency in his statements, opportunity for which the court on his cross-examination stated would be given later, but for which no request was made.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Russ Avery, Judge.

Aurelio Pompa was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Frank E. Dominguez and W. T. Helms, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. The defendant herein was convicted of murder in the first degree, consisting in the killing of one Wm. D. McCue, on October 19, 1922, in a building in the city of Los Angeles, intended for a post office, then in course of construction, and in which the deceased and the defendant were, at the time of said homicide, employed. Upon this appeal the defendant does not contend that the evidence in the case was insufficient to justify the verdict of conviction, but rests his demand for a reversal upon three points, which are: (1) That the jury received evidence outside of court other than that resulting from a view of the premises; (2) that the court misdirected the jury in matters of law arising during the course of the trial; (3) that the verdict is contrary to law.

The first of the foregoing contentions is predicated upon the action of the trial court in permitting a view of the premises where the homicide occurred and upon what transpired during the course of that particular proceeding. The facts leading up to and attending the view of the premises by the jury are undisputed and are these: At an early stage in the trial the district attorney moved the court that the jury be taken to the scene of the crime. The defendant's counsel objected to this procedure upon the ground that the physical features of the building had changed through its completion, and on the further ground that, since the defendant had introduced no evidence, the motion was premature. The court at that time reserved its ruling on the motion until after the evidence was closed, but at a later stage of the trial, when the prosecution had closed and when all of the defendant's witnesses, except himself and one Joe Leon, had been fully examined and when the cross-examination of the witness Leon was in progress, the district attorney, apparently becoming impatient at the witness' lack of understanding of the plot of the premises, which was being used as an exhibit in the case, renewed his motion that the jury be taken to view the premises. To this defendant's counsel offered no objection, whereupon the court proceeded to direct the bailiff to make arrangements for conveyance on the following morning of the jurors, the respective counsel, the judge, the clerk, the interpreter, and the defendant to the scene. The court also directed that one Elmer Long, who had been the chief witness offered by the prosecution as to the facts preceding and attending the homicide, also attend for the purpose chiefly of showing and explaining to the jury the state of the building as it was in its incompleeted condition on the date of the tragedy, and the location of the parties to the crime in relation thereto at the time of its commission, and where the deceased fell. To these directions the defendant's counsel offered no objection and even went so far in his concurrence therein as to suggest that the exhibit may be taken along. The court replied:

"That will be done. Now, I will say, for the benefit of the jury, that there will be no argument and no taking of testimony while there; and the court must designate some one to point out the particular things; and if there should be any other objects down there, physical objects that the jury desire to have pointed out, bring it to the attention of the court, who will take it up with counsel, and probably the counsel will stipulate that the question either is or is not a proper question; and if it is a proper question, by stipulation it can be also asked of Mr. Long to point out."

"Mr. Hopkins: It might be well, if I might suggest, that the jurors also have in mind that pointing this out is not evidence."

"The Court: No; the only purpose of this visit is to give the jury a better understanding of the location where the witnesses have testified various things happened, so that the jury may understand the testimony of the witnesses with reference to the physical facts, as they existed on the 19th of October."

On the following morning the court, including the bailiff and clerk, the jury, the defendant, the interpreter, the respective counsel, and the selected shower, repaired to the scene of the crime, whereupon the court directed Mr. Long "to proceed to explain the various points to the jury as suggested by the court yesterday." This the latter proceeded to do, beginning at the outside of the building indicating its exits and entrances as they were on the date of the homicide, and thence entering the building and explaining the changes that had occurred in its interior at or about the immediate spot where the shooting had taken place. In so doing he was frequently assisted by questions put to him by the judge of the court, which had the effect of clarifying his explanations. Certain of the jurors also asked questions having the same object and effect. To this procedure the defendant's counsel offered no objection at the time but, on the contrary, expressly assented thereto, only objecting once or twice during the entire course of the proceedings when one or other of the jurors asked a question which went to the immediate occurrence of the crime itself, as, for example, a juror asked this question: "How far was the defendant when he shot McCue?" to which the court promptly sustained the objection. Again, just as the tour of inspection was closing, a juror referring to a certain opening in the wall, asked: "Was it open all the time for the workmen to get their tools?" to which Mr. Long replied: "We had a man there to take care of the tools." "The Court: Any objection to that question and answer?" "Mr. Hopkins: Yes, we object to all this evidence;" to which the court replied, "The question and answer stricken out as not being part of the physical part." We cite these instances to show the extent of the defendant's concurrence in the proceedings which actually took place at the scene of the homicide, at the close of which the court, giving its usual admonition to the jury, took a recess until the afternoon.

When the court reassembled at its courtroom in the afternoon, counsel for the defendant announced that he intended to formulate a number of objections to what took place during the course of the inspection when the transcript of the proceedings was written up. The trial then proceeded with the further cross-examination of the witness Leon and with the taking of the defendant's testimony. At the close of the defendant's case his counsel presented his foreshadowed objections to the proceedings had in relation to and during the viewing of the scene of the crime. These embraced an objection to any view at all, upon the ground that it was not required by the state of the evidence in the case and was not conducted in the manner agreed upon at the time of the court's order directing the view, and on the further ground that the conditions of the post office building had been so far changed as to render improper the order for their inspection, and on the further ground that the jury had not been placed in charge of any official in the manner required by law, and on the further ground that the shower had not been confined to his duties as a shower in a legal or lawful manner, and on the further ground that the taking of testimony, both mute, demonstrative, verbal, and by actions and conduct, was permitted; that the taking of such testimony was out of court and was not given by any witness or by any one sworn to give testimony; that the court did not charge the jury before going to view the locus in quo as to their duties not to communicate with each other, and other duties as required by law; that persons other than the shower were allowed to and did speak and converse on the subject of the trial in the presence of the jury; that the jurors discussed the case as between themselves at the time of this showing, and that the jurors discussed the case out of the presence of each other; that the jurors were allowed to and did separate, and were not kept in hearing of each other and the hearing and sight of the shower; that the trial judge commented on the evidence in the presence of the jury; and that comments were made by the shower, by the court, and by other persons while the jurors were not all together and within sight and hearing. The defendant's counsel further objected to the selection of Mr. Long as the shower, upon the ground that he was not the best qualified person to be selected for such duty, and on the further ground that he was one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution. In support of these various objections there was no other evidence proffered except the reporter's transcript of the proceedings during the view, and it will be obvious that as to some of the aforesaid objections the reporter's transcript would shed no light upon them. The court, in passing upon said objections, stated:

"Section 1119 of the Penal Code of the State of California provides as follows [reading]: 'View of premises, when ordered and how conducted. When, in the opinion of the court, it is proper that the jury should view the place in which the offense is charged to have been committed, or in which any * * * material fact occurred, it may order the jury to be conducted in a body, in the custody of the sheriff, to the place, which must be shown to them by a person appointed by the court for that purpose; and the sheriff must be sworn to suffer no person to speak or communicate with the jury, nor to do so himself, on any subject connected with the trial, and to return them into court, without unnecessary delay or at a specified time.'

"Now the district attorney made a motion in the first instance, to have the jury see the premises, and the court took the matter under advisement. I think the court denied the viewing of the premises at that time. Later the motion was again called to the attention of the court, and from certain expressions that were made in court, certain evidence taken, it became clear to the court, and the court then formed an opinion that it was at that time, and the court now thinks that it was proper that the jury should view the premises in which the offense is charged to have been committed.

"The court did order the jury to go to the place in the custody of the sheriff. The jury was admonished before the jury left the courtroom not to discuss the case amongst themselves, or with any one else, or to suffer any one else to approach them on the subject of the case, or to form or express any opinion on the cause until the cause should be finally submitted to them. The jury then was conducted to the place in question, being the place in which the offense was alleged to have been committed, otherwise known as the Post Office building at Third and Central avenues, city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California; and the sheriff, or deputy sheriff, was directed to conduct them to that place; and the deputy sheriff who conducted them to the place, to the observation of this judge, was very careful to keep the jury in a body; and the court observed that the deputy sheriff so in charge of the jury did order other people away from the jury—he did that upon several occasions—so that the court now finds as a fact that the deputy sheriff in charge of the jury did keep the jury together in a body, in so far as that was humanly possible for twelve people to be kept in a body when they move from one place to another, walking around; but the court finds no one discussed the case with the jury at that time, and no one was given an opportunity to discuss the case with the jury; and the court did not observe that the jury, or the jurors, were discussing the facts among themselves; and, so far as the court was able to observe, that the jurors did in fact and in good faith obey the admonitions heretofore given them on that occasion, and that there was no misconduct on the part of the jury, or the jurors, or, so far as that matter has been brought to the attention of this court, by any counsel in the case.

"The deputy sheriff who accompanied the jury has been bailiff in this courtroom for a long time, and is a thoroughly trusted officer, who knows his business, and, so far as this court knows, performed his duty in the usual excellent manner that he has always done, in this instance, and as he has been accustomed to do upon numerous occasions.

"The person selected by the court to point out the place in which the offense charged to have been committed, or in which any other material fact occurred, was a witness in this cause, had worked for the construction company in the construction of the buildings; had shown by his evidence under oath that he knew the condition of the buildings at the time of the occurrence of the offense charged to have been committed; he was there in the building at that time; his recollection was at least reasonably accurate on the witness stand here as to the condition then, as compared with the condition now; and, in the opinion of the court, Elmer Long, so appointed by the court, was the best person that the court knew to be appointed for the purpose, and who could most faithfully and accurately point out the place and the physical objects as they existed on the 19th of October, 1922.

"So far as certain questions being asked by the court, those questions were asked for the purpose of drawing out more particularly the attention of the person, Elmer Long, who was appointed to show the place, so that the accuracy of the conditions could be pointed out in the building as they existed on the 19th of October, 1922.

"The court finds that the conditions had not changed to such a material extent as that the same could not be pointed out with accuracy as to the actual conditions as they existed on the 19th of October, 1922. In other words, that the conditions are not changed to such an extent as to make the viewing of the premises unwarrantable or improper.

"The jury did not separate while they were in the conduct of the sheriff or the deputy sheriff. So far as the jury is concerned, and so far as the deputy sheriff is concerned, I think that everything was properly done.

"The objections as made specifically are overruled."

[1] After the trial court had thus made its ruling, the defendant's counsel undertook to point out specific portions of the transcript of said proceedings which he claimed supported his objections, and also undertook to point out portions of the statements made by the shower which were in the nature of evidence, which, according to his contention, could not properly be taken in the course of the viewing of the premises provided for by law. The court, however, adhered to its former ruling and overruled each and all of the defendant's said objections. In so doing, and in answer to a statement made by the defendant's counsel that he had not been given an opportunity to cross-examine Mr. Long during the view, the court stated that it would give defendant's counsel the opportunity to call Mr. Long to the stand and to interrogate him as to anything pointed out by him, any remark made by him, or any statement made by him in answer to any question which was there propounded, either by the court, or by the prosecution, or by the counsel for the defendant, or by any juror. The defendant's counsel declined to avail himself of this opportunity and stood upon his objections. The trial then proceeded to its close, resulting in a verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree. Upon his motion for a new trial, the defendant's counsel again presented his objections to the proceedings and occurrences preceding and attending the view of the premises, basing his motion for a new trial thereon and presenting only the reporter's transcript of the case in support thereof. The court denied said motion for a new trial, whereupon the defendant took an oral appeal from the judgment in open court, and also filed with the clerk a written notice of appeal from the judgment. He did not in either form of appeal specify that he also appealed from the order denying a new trial, but in his written application to the clerk for a transcript, filed with his said written notice of appeal, he set forth the grounds of his appeal, one of which was the alleged error of the court in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. The transcript on appeal contains the entire record of all of the proceedings in the case, including those had upon the view of the premises, together with the defendant's later specific objections to the sufficiency and legality of such proceedings. Upon the hearing upon this appeal the respondent has presented an objection to the consideration by this court of the propriety or correctness of the action of the trial court in ordering and conducting the proceedings during which the view of the scene of the homicide was had, for the reason that those were matters which were properly presentable only upon motion for a new trial and were only reviewable upon an appeal from the order denying a new trial, which appeal, the respondent contends, this appellant has not taken. Upon this appeal the entire record in the case is before this court, and, since it appears from the papers contemporaneously filed with the clerk of the trial court at the time of the appeal from the judgment, that the appellant desired and intended to have the alleged errors of the trial court in the respect above indicated and in its denial of his motion for a new trial included within said record and presented to this court for review upon this appeal, we are not disposed to deny him that opportunity, since this court has said, in People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 217, 48 Pac. 85, that—

[2] We are thus brought to a consideration of the merits of the appellant's first contention, viz. that the jury received evidence out of court other than that resulting from a view of the premises. Under this heading the appellant undertakes to discuss in his brief the propriety of the making of any order by the trial court providing for a view of the premises in question, in view of the circumstances of the case, and particularly of the fact that the physical features of the premises where the homicide occurred had been materially changed by the completion of the building since the date of the tragedy. This point requires but brief discussion, in view of the broad discretion with which trial courts are invested under the terms of section 1119 of the Penal Code with respect to permitting the jury to view the place where an offense is charged to have been committed. The fact that physical conditions upon or about the premises may have been to any degree altered is a fact to be considered by the trial court in exercising its discretion to permit or refuse to permit such view, and its conclusion in that regard will not be disturbed upon appeal, in the absence of a clear showing of an abuse of such discretion. No such abuse of discretion is disclosed by the record in this case.

spective parties, reached the premises to be thus viewed, the procedure there was much broader than its earlier limitations imposed by the court, and that considerable testimony was taken and evidence received by the jury upon the scene of the alleged crime. But the record expressly discloses that during the entire proceedings attending and embracing the view of the premises the court in its completeness, including the judge, the clerk, the bailiff, the reporter, the interpreter, the jury, the defendant, and the respective counsel was at all times present; the only element absent being the walls and fittings of the courtroom wherein the court is usually convened. There is no special sacredness in the atmosphere of a courthouse or the walls or furnishings of a courtroom which requires that sessions of the court shall be held there and not elsewhere, if otherwise the forms of law governing the trial of causes are observed, which appears to have been done, though with some absence of formality, in the instant case (Block v. Kearney, 6 Cal. Unrep. 660, 64 Pac. 267); but aside from this we think that the defendant is precluded from objecting to any of the alleged informalities in the procedure of the trial court during its view of the premises in question by the fact of the entire acquiescence of himself and the acquiescence and even active participation of his counsel in the taking of testimony and receiving of evidence by the jury during the inspection of the scene of the homicide. If the defendant or his counsel had any objection to the shower appointed by the court, such objection should have been made at the time of his designation, and when not so made must be held to have been waived. If the defendant had any objection to make to the action of the trial judge in putting certain questions to the shower intended to clarify and expedite the proceedings, they should have been made at the time, and this was evidently understood by defendant's counsel, since he did in fact object to certain questions asked the shower by the court or by a juror which were promptly sustained by the court. So, also, as to every other alleged irregularity in the proceedings which the defendant's counsel undertook to take advantage of after the proceedings during the view of the premises were concluded and at a later session of the court. All of these we hold to have been waived by the defendant's failure to object and concurrence in their commission at the time. People v. Fitzgerald, 137 Cal. 546, 70 Pac. 554; People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 542; People v. Tarm Poi, 86 Cal. 225, 24 Pac. 998. As to certain of these asserted irregularities the record fails to disclose their existence and the defendant, not only did not support his claim of their occurrence upon his belated objection or upon his motion for a new trial, but the trial court, in ruling upon the defendant's said objections on both occasions, expressly negatived their presence during the proceedings as matter lying within the observation and knowledge of the court at the time.

[7-10] There are, however, one or two matters embraced in the appellant's objection to the regularity of the proceedings of the trial court upon the view of the premises in question which would seem to require a more particular consideration. At the conclusion of the proceedings at the scene of the crime the defendant's counsel, in response to an inquiry by the court, said: "We object to all this evidence." This general objection then made forms the basis for the appellant's present contention that the statutory proceedings for a view of premises where an offense is alleged to have been committed is so limited in its scope as to preclude the reception by the jury of any evidence during such view. This conception of the scope of such proceeding is an erroneous one, based upon certain expressions of this court in the early cases of Wright v. Carpenter, 49 Cal. 607, and People v. Green, 53 Cal. 60, wherein proceedings upon a view of premises were very strictly limited, both as to procedure and effect; but this court, in the later cases of People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 623, 10 Pac. 169, and People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833, overruled so much of these earlier cases as appeared to hold that evidence could not be received by the jury in the course of a view of the scene of an alleged offense; the court holding that a jury, in viewing premises and having pointed out to them the places which, according to the testimony in the case, the parties occupied therein at the moment of the crime, were receiving evidence and might properly do so, if the forms of law were otherwise being observed. There is one further point urged by the appellant under this head, which might be disposed of before passing to the other points in the case. It is that at the time the jury went to the scene of the alleged crime the bailiff, in whose charge the jury were placed by the court for the purpose of being taken to the premises for the view and thereafter returned to the court, had not been sworn, and also that the shower had not been sworn. As to the latter, the point has no merit, since the record shows that the person selected as shower had been sworn as a witness in an earlier stage of the case, and hence was under oath as such witness in whatever statements he made to the jury in the course of his duties as such shower. As to the omission of the court to swear the bailiff it was at most an irregularity which should have been objected to at the time. Ball v. United States, 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. Ct. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300; State v. Crilley, 69 Kan. 802, 77 Pac. 701; Knouff v. People, 6 Ill. App. 155. But beyond this it has been held that the fact that the bailiff or other officer placed in charge of a jury had not been sworn to the faithful performance of his duty in that particular capacity will not be ground for a reversal, in the absence of a showing that the unsworn officer has not faithfully performed his duties in that capacity. Wilson v. State, 15 Ga. App. 632, 84 S. E. 81; State v. Crilly, supra.

[11, 12] The next contention of the appellant is that the court misdirected the jury in matters of law arising during the course of the trial. The first matter referred to under this head relates to an episode during the cross-examination of the defendant, during which the district attorney sought to question him as to a statement regarding the shooting of the deceased made by the defendant at the coroner's inquest. The record, however, discloses that, after repeated efforts on the part of the district attorney to examine the defendant as to such statement, as the same was embodied in a stenographic report of the proceedings at the inquest he failed in that effort, for the reason that the interpreter at the inquest was shown by said report to have incorrectly reported what the defendant actually said on that occasion. The appellant does not here contend that the trial court did not correctly rule in excluding such evidence, but complains that the court in so ruling intimated that the statement then made by the defendant would have been admissible if the interpreter could have been produced to testify as to what the defendant did then say. This objection is too remote. What the court may have incidentally stated concerning a matter upon which he was not required at the time to make a ruling might possibly be misconduct, but could not be taken advantage of as an error of law. Besides, no injury is shown to have resulted to the defendant, since whatever the statement the defendant may have made at the coroner's inquest did not get before the jury at any time during the trial of the cause on account of the absence of the interpreter which prevented the proper foundation for its admission being laid.

[13] The next error of law which the appellant alleges to have been committed by the trial court occurred during the cross-examination of Elmer Ballou, one of the defendant's witnesses. Ballou was being asked, for the purpose of impeachment, as to certain testimony given by him upon the preliminary examination. The district attorney read from the transcript the matter to which the witness there testified, and then asked the witness the question: "Did you so testify?" to which the witness replied, "I did." He was then asked: "Which was the truth?" His answer was: "That was the truth, but it was not as clear," and he further said, "I am telling the truth both times;" whereupon one of the defendant's counsel said, "If the court please at this time I request that the witness be permitted to explain." The court replied: "He will be given an opportunity later." The record shows that the examination of the witness proceeded for some time thereafter, and that counsel for the appellant had the opportunity of having his witness make any explanation he desired as to any apparent discrepancy in his two statements but did not avail himself of it. A comparison of the two statements of the witness, as given in the record, shows that the witness' explanation made at the time was all the explanation the situation required, since his statement on the trial clarified but did not contradict his testimony given upon the preliminary hearing. The defendant was therefore in no way prejudiced by the fact that a fuller explanation was not given at the time or called for later in the witness' examination.

The final contention of the appellant is that the verdict of the jury is contrary to law. Under this heading he merely repeats his insistence upon the former alleged errors of the trial court, which have already been discussed and determined. We are satisfied from a careful consideration of the whole record in this case that no error has been committed which would justify a reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

WAITE et al. v. SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 4, 1924.)

1. Judgment $\S$ 163—Whether state court had jurisdiction after record filed in federal court not available on motion to vacate default.

Where action was begun in state court, and defendant petitioned for removal to the federal court, and thereafter plaintiff took default in the state court, whether the state court had jurisdiction after transcript of the record was filed in federal court and before petition to remand was granted could be urged on appeal, but is not available in motion to vacate default, by reason of defendant's alleged mistaken belief that jurisdiction was in the federal and not the state court.

2. Judgment $\S$ 139—Court exercises legal discretion in passing on motions to vacate defaults.

In passing on motions to vacate defaults, the trial court exercises a sound and legal discretion, which is guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed principles.

3. Judgment — 163—Doubts resolved in favor of application to vacate default.

It being policy of the law to bring about trial on the merits wherever possible, in application for vacation of default, any doubts which exist should be resolved in favor of the application.

4. Judgment — 143(3)—Mistake as to law ground for vacating default.

Where action was begun in the state court, and defendant petitioned for removal to the federal court, where it filed transcript of record and petition for removal, a default judgment taken while the action was pending in the federal court in which defendant asserted a meritorious defense should on defendant's motion be set aside, defendant showing a proper case for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, from default entered because of his mistake of law.

5. Judgment — 153(1)—Five months' delay held not to defeat motion to vacate.

Notwithstanding that defendant did not move to vacate default until more than five months after it was entered, during most of which time it acted on the belief that the state court had no jurisdiction, but filed its motion within five weeks after order of the federal court remanded the cause to the state court, such delay did not defeat its right to relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by C. E. Waite and another against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order denying its motion to set aside judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. M. Chapman and Ward Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion to vacate and set aside a default judgment.

On January 19, 1921, plaintiffs filed their complaint in the superior court of Los Angeles county, alleging that they delivered to defendant, a common carrier in interstate commerce, goods of the value of $3,326.10 to be transported from Portland, Or., to Los Angeles, Cal., and which, through the negligence of the defendant, were destroyed by fire at Quail, Cal. Recovery was sought for their value.

On January 31, 1921, defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint, and at the same time filed a petition for the removal of the cause to the United States District Court for the Southern District of California on the ground that the action involved a law of the United States. On February 15, 1921, the petition and demurrer came on for hearing, and the petition was thereupon denied and the demurrer overruled by the court, with 10 days' leave to defendant to answer.

On March 2, 1921, defendant filed in the said federal court a transcript of the record and a petition for removal thereto from said superior court, and while the action was pending in the federal court the plaintiffs, on March 26, 1921, caused default to be entered against the defendant in the state court for failure to answer within the required time. Judgment upon said default was entered April 14, 1921. The defendant, having in the meantime filed its answer in the federal court, the plaintiffs on April 11, 1921, filed in said court their motion to remand the cause to the state court. This motion was submitted for decision on April 18, 1921, and granted on August 6, 1921. Thereafter, on September 12, 1921, defendant filed in the state court notice of motion to set aside and vacate the judgment by default, which motion was denied on September 19, 1921. From the order in that behalf made the defendant prosecutes the present appeal.

[1] The motion to set aside the judgment was made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for relief from orders made through the "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect" of those against whom they are rendered. In effect, the ground of the motion was that defendant suffered its default to be entered, and judgment thereon to be rendered because of its mistaken belief that jurisdiction of the cause was in the federal and not the state court. Whether this mistake on the part of the defendant is of such a character as to entitle it to the relief sought is practically the only point involved on this appeal. In passing upon it, we lay aside the question whether the state court had jurisdiction of the cause after the transcript of the record had been filed in the federal court and before the petition to remand was granted, for that question, while it could be urged upon an appeal from the judgment, is not available on the present appeal.

It is not questioned that defendant was at all times acting in the honest belief that the federal court alone had jurisdiction, and that plaintiffs knew that it was for this reason that defendant did not file an answer in the state court. In fact, it was shown by an affidavit of one of the counsel for respondents that appellant's time to answer ran out on February 25, 1921; that on March 1, 1921, affiant informed counsel for defendant that the time for filing an answer had expired, and asked whether defendant intended to answer in the state court, to which counsel for defendant responded that "they did not recognize the jurisdiction of the state court and had already filed a transcript of the proceedings in the federal court, and would file in that court an answer to the complaint within the time provided by federal statutes in such cases provided"; that on March 21, 1921, affiant called defendant's counsel on the telephone, and informed him that affiant intended to stand upon the jurisdiction of the state court, desired to proceed in that court, and wished to enter the default of defendant there, but that before doing so he desired to give the defendant an opportunity to take whatever necessary proceedings it might determine upon; that defendant's counsel then requested that the matter be allowed to stand in abeyance for a few days so that the situation might be considered by defendant; that on March 25, 1921, defendant's counsel informed affiant that defendant had determined to proceed with the action in the federal court, and "informed said affiant to proceed to enter the default, but requested that he be notified when that was done, in order that he might consult with their San Francisco correspondents for further instructions"; that on March 26, 1921, the default was entered; and that on March 31, 1921, affiant wrote and mailed a letter to defendant's counsel in which he said:

"Re Waite v. S. P. Co. * * * In accordance with your request, I desire to notify you that the default of the defendant in the above action has been entered in the state court, and I desire to further notify you that the plaintiff intends to proceed to take judgment against the said defendant in the action now pending in the superior court."

It must be conceded that, while the determination by both the federal and state courts was in favor of the jurisdiction of the latter, the defendant was not without plausible grounds for its contention, and the fact that the United States District Court retained the case under advisement for many months would seem to be sufficient indication that the question of law involved was in doubt, and was one upon which an attorney might very well be mistaken. In any event, if it be conceded that the defendant's mistake of law was a reasonable one under the facts set forth in the complaint, we believe that its neglect to file an answer because of such belief is at least excusable.

[2] The legal principles underlying the granting of motions to set aside defaults are comparatively simple, and have been frequently announced by this court. At all times the trial court is to exercise a sound and legal discretion in passing upon an application for relief against such a judgment. This discretion, however, is not capricious or arbitrary, but it is an impartial discretion guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles.

"It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law, and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice." Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 422, 424.

[3] It is also well established that it is the policy of the law to bring about a trial on the merits wherever possible, so that any doubts which may exist should be resolved in favor of the application, to the end of securing a trial upon the merits. Jergins v. Schenck, 162 Cal. 747, 748, 124 Pac. 426. And it has been held by this court that in a proper case relief may be obtained under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure from a default judgment entered by reason of defendant's mistake of law. Mitchell v. Cal., etc., S. S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, 580, 105 Pac. 590; Douglass v. Todd, 96 Cal. 655, 31 Pac. 623, 31 Am. St. Rep. 247; Tuttle v. Scott, 119 Cal. 586, 51 Pac. 849. See, also, Staley v. O'Day, 22 Cal. App. 149, 133 Pac. 620.

[4] Tested by these legal principles, we believe that it was the duty of the trial court to grant the defendant's motion. The defendant asserts a meritorious defense, which it set out in the answer filed in the federal court, a copy of which was attached to its affidavit filed in support of its motion, and it ought to be given the opportunity of presenting this defense. Nor is there anything to indicate that the plaintiffs will be in any way prejudiced by a trial upon the merits, especially in view of the fact that it is within the power of the superior court to impose terms in granting the motion.

[5] While it is true that the defendant did not file its motion to vacate the default judgment until more than five months after it was entered, it must be remembered that during most of this time defendant was acting upon its honest belief that the state court had no jurisdiction of the action. It filed its motion within five weeks after the making of the order by the federal court remanding the cause to the state court, which delay is not such as will defeat a defendant's right to be relieved under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., 89 Cal. 332, 26 Pac. 825.

For the reasons above indicated, the order refusing to vacate and set aside the judgment by default is reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court, with direction to permit the defendant to file an answer to the plaintiff's complaint within such time as the court may deem proper, and upon such terms as may seem just.

A writing as follows: "Notice is hereby given by the undersigned that the following petition will be presented to the board of supervisors, * * *" published together with and preceding a petition addressed to county supervisors stating, "We, the undersigned petitioners, * * *" followed by the names of the petitioners, was a sufficient notice, under Stats. 1889, p. 371, providing that, to incorporate a city, a petition signed by 50 electors shall be published in some newspaper "together with a notice," since it showed upon its face that it was given by petitioners, although the notice itself was not separately signed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Quo warranto by the Attorney General, upon the relation of Walter P. Temple, against the City of Montebello and others, to determine the validity of a proceeding leading to the incorporation of defendant City. From a decision in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Woodruff & Shoemaker and Lawler & Degnan, all of Los Angeles, Paul M. Gregg, of San Luis Obispo, and Paul Vallee, Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and J. H. O'Connor, Asst. County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Delphin M. Delmas, Frederick Baker, Thomas A. Berkebile, Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, and Robert B. Murphey, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action of quo warranto, commenced in the superior court of Los Angeles county by the Attorney General, upon the relation of Walter P. Temple, to determine the validity of the proceeding leading to the incorporation of the city of Montebello as a city of the sixth class, under the Municipal Corporation Act of 1883 (Stats. 1883, p. 93). After decision rendered in favor of defendants, judgment was entered that plaintiff "take nothing by this action." From this judgment, plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff contends that the incorporation order is illegal and void, basing its contention upon the single ground that the published notice of the hearing of the petition for the incorporation not being signed, was legally insufficient to vest the board of supervisors with jurisdiction to hear the petition. The defendants' position is (1) that the published notice shows on its face that it was given by the petitioners, and fully complies with the Municipal Corporation Act, supra; (2) that the proceeding for the incorporation of a city of the sixth class is a legislative act, therefore the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors is not open to attack in a quo warranto action.

Section 2 of the Municipal Corporation Act, supra, as amended, provided that the incorporation proceedings shall be initiated in the following manner:

"A petition shall first be presented to the board of supervisors of such county, signed by at least fifty of the qualified electors of the county, residents within the limits of such proposed corporation, and the affidavit of three qualified electors residing within the proposed limits, filed with the petition, shall be prima facie evidence of the requisite number of signers. The petition shall set forth and particularly describe the proposed boundaries of such corporation, and state the number of inhabitants therein as nearly as may be, and shall pray that the same may be incorporated under the provisions of this act. Such petition shall be presented at a regular meeting of such board, and shall be published for at least two weeks before the time at which the same is to be presented, in some newspaper printed and published in such county, together with a notice stating the time of the meeting at which the same will be presented. * * *" Stats. 1889, p. 371.

Plaintiff alleges in its complaint that late in August and early in September, 1920, there was published in the Montebello News, a newspaper of general circulation in the county of Los Angeles, the following notice:

"Notice.

"Incorporation of the 'City of Montebello' as a City of the Sixth Class.

"Notice is hereby given by the undersigned that the following petition will be presented to the board of supervisors. * * *"

There was also published, together with and following said notice, a petition in the following terms:

"Petition for the Incorporation of the Proposed 'City of Montebello.'

"To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles, State of California.

"We, the undersigned petitioners, respectfully represent that we are qualified electors of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and reside within the limits of the hereinafter proposed municipal corporation. * * * (Here follow the names of said petitioners.)

On the day designated in the notice, the petition was presented to the board. Thereupon, and after an election had been held, in which 401 out of the 473 electors of Montebello had voted in favor of incorporation, such proceedings were had that, on the 11th of October following, by an order entered upon its minutes, the board declared said territory to be a municipal corporation of the sixth class, under the name of Montebello. A certified copy of this order was filed in the office of the secretary of state; and from that time on the city of Montebello has exercised all the functions of a municipal corporation.

We are of the opinion that the published notice was sufficient, and that consequently the record shows a compliance with the statute. To sustain its contention that the notice was insufficient, the plaintiff relies chiefly upon the case of In re Central Irrigation District, 117 Cal. 382, 49 Pac. 354, in which this court held that the notice therein published did not comply with section 2 of the Wright Act (Stats. 1887, p. 29), providing for the organization of irrigation districts. This statute, so far as the question of notice is concerned, is identical in wording with the Municipal Corporation Act of 1883, supra. In Re Central Irrigation District, supra, the court, in commenting upon the notice, said:

"It was shown that there were published for two weeks in the Weekly Colusa Sun the petition, with the names of the signers thereto, and immediately below this the following: 'The foregoing petition will be presented to the honorable board of supervisors of Colusa county on Monday, October 10, 1887, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day.' The notice was unsigned. It did not bear upon its face any showing of authority. It did not appear from it that it was given by the petitioners, who alone could issue the process. Indeed, from all that is shown, the so-called notice may have been but the declaration of the editor of the newspaper, and the publication of the so-called notice may have been but the statement in the paper of a bit of news. It is essential to the validity of a notice that it shall bear upon its face evidence that it has been given by the person authorized so to do, and this evidence is shown by the signature of the officer or other person charged with the duty."

It is clear from this quotation that the court did not intend to lay down a hard and fast rule that the published notice must in all cases be signed. To the contrary, it was simply a decision that the notice published must bear upon its face the signatures of the petitioners or show that it was issued by them or given under their authority.

In the present case the notice comes first (while in Re Central Irrigation District, supra, it came last) and reads: "Notice is hereby given by the undersigned. * * *" Following this is printed the petition, beginning with the words, "We, the undersigned petitioners, respectfully represent, * * *" and at the end of the publication appear the signatures of the petitioners. Surely this notice could mislead no one. It gave full and detailed information in regard to the time and place at which the petition would be presented to the board of supervisors. No one could believe that the newspaper was publishing this formal document, separated from the rest of the contents of the newspaper by a heavy black line, and covering over 10 pages of the printed manuscript, as a bit of news. In brief, as this notice showed upon its face that it was given by the petitioners, the only persons authorized to give such notice, it was sufficient to warn all persons who might desire so to do to present their objection at the time and place named, why the petition should not be granted. And, as was said by this court in Imperial Water Co. v. Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, at page 24, 120 Pac. 780, 785:

"We know of no authority to the effect that a signature to the published notice is a necessary part of such process, where the only notice given or required is a publication in a newspaper. The substantial thing is that such notice shall be given as, under the circumstances, would have a reasonable tendency to apprise the parties interested of the nature of the proceeding and the time and place of the hearing. * * *"

In Ahern v. Board of Directors, 39 Colo. 409, 89 Pac. 963, it was held that a notice similar to the one here in question did not conform to the Colorado statute, which is identical with the Municipal Corporation Act, supra. The court in that case cited In re Central Irrigation District, supra, as decisive of the point involved, but we are of the opinion that the present case, as well as Ahern v. Board of Directors, supra, can be distinguished from the case of In re Central Irrigation District in the manner in which we have already pointed out. For this reason we do not feel constrained to adopt the conclusion reached in Ahern v. Board of Directors, supra. Furthermore, in the case of Tulare Irrigation District v. Shepard, 185 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 531, 46 L. Ed. 773, the Supreme Court of the United States apparently disapproves of the suggestion made by counsel that the published notice should be signed, and, by way of dictum, intimates that the decision of this court in Re Central Irrigation District, supra, should be limited to a notice similar to the one before the court in that case.

We have taken some pains to distinguish the present case from In re Central Irrigation District, supra, but we are of the opinion that a later case (Fogg v. Perris Irrigation District, 154 Cal. 209, 97 Pac. 316) is decisive of the identical point here raised. In that case, as here, the publication showed a notice essentially like the one published herein, immediately followed, as is the one here, by the petition. The only signatures appearing in the publication was, as here, those appearing under the petition. The notice was not—as here it is not—separately signed. It was there claimed that the notice and the petition were distinct instruments, each of which must be separately signed, and that one single set of signatures could not perform the twofold function of attesting both. It appeared, from an examination of the original on file, that the petition and notice were both contained in a single document, hence it was argued that this document was either a notice or a petition, but could not be both. But the court rejected this argument, as it could see no legal objection to this method of embodying the notice and the petition in one document and using it for each purpose successively. The court, in holding that this document, when published, was a sufficient notice, even though the only signatures appearing upon the face of the publication were those following the petition, said: "The only notice required is a notice to be published in a newspaper." So far as the question of the notice in that case is concerned, it was immaterial that the published document was circulated among the petitioners. That fact did not appear upon the face of the published notice. Interested parties reading this notice in the paper would receive no more information as to its authenticity than they would receive from the notice published in the present case. Further, there is a factor in the published notice here involved not appearing in the case of Fogg v. Perris Irrigation District, supra, which makes this a much stronger case upon its facts. The notice, as published in the Fogg Case, read, "Notice is hereby given that, * * *" and left it to be inferred that it was given by the petitioners; while the notice here expressly states that it is "given by the undersigned," and at the end of the publication appear the signatures of the petitioners.

Under the view which we take of this case, it is unnecessary to discuss any other points raised in the briefs.

For the reasons which we have above indicated, the judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county, declaring the city of Montebello to be a de jure and a de facto municipal corporation should be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; MYERS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

ALLIED ARCHITECTS' ASS'N OF LOS ANGELES v. PAYNE, County Auditor.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 30, 1923.)

I. Counties $\S$ 153½—Promotion of patriotism is a public purpose.

The promotion of patriotism is a public purpose for which the public money of a county may be expended.

2. Counties $\S$ 153½—Erection of building serving as a stimulus to patriotism would be for public purpose.

Erection of a building by a county as a memorial hall to the extent that it would serve as a stimulus to patriotism would be for a public purpose, which would not be defeated by permitting its use by associations of veterans, whose purpose is to promote patriotism or by restricting its use to them.

3. Constitutional law $\S$ 70(1)—Means of promoting public purpose held for legislative determination.

The means and methods of promoting a public purpose by legislative enactment is ordinarily for legislative determination.

4. Constitutional law $\S$ 205(2)—Restriction of use of memorial building to associations of veterans held not to confer special privileges.

The restriction of the use of a county memorial building to be erected under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4041f, as added by St. 1921, p. 476, to "associations" of veterans, does not confer special privileges on such veterans as are members of associations; the Legislature having in view the promulgation of patriotic impulses by the formation of associations for that purpose.

5. States $\S$ 119—Statute authorizing erection of memorial hall for association of war veterans not unconstitutional as a "gift."

Pol. Code, $\S$ 4041f, as added by St. 1921, p. 476, authorizing boards of supervisors to erect a memorial hall for the use of associations of veterans of every war, is not unconstitutional as involving a "gift" to an individual, municipal, or other corporation, in violation of Const. art. 4, $\S$ 31, as the benefit conferred is but incidental to the paramount purpose of promoting patriotism and is in itself inconsequential.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Gift.]

6. States $\S$ 119—Prohibited "gift" of public property defined.

Notwithstanding Civ. Code, $\S$ 1146, defining a "gift" as a transfer of personal property made voluntarily and without consideration, Const. art. 4, $\S$ 31, prohibiting gifts of public property, is not limited to a transfer of personal property only, but includes all appropriations of public money for which there is no authority or enforceable claim or which may rest upon moral or equitable obligation; but the gifts contemplated are gratuities bestowed without return.

Action by the Allied Architects' Association of Los Angeles against H. A. Payne, as County Auditor of Los Angeles County. Application for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Auditor of Los Angeles County, directing him to approve claim for services rendered. Granted.

Milton D. Sapiro, Geo. J. Hatfield; and John U. Calkins, Jr., all of San Francisco, and M. B. Silberberg and Walter K. Tuller, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

E. T. Bishop, County Counsel, and Ivan G. McDaniel, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate directing the respondent, as county auditor of the county of Los Angeles, to approve the claim of the Allied Architects' Association and the claim of C. W. Maples, duly assigned to said association. The claim of the association is for services rendered in the preparation of certain architectural plans for a proposed "Victory Hall," for which an appropriation of $500,000 has been made by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles. The claim of C. W. Maples is for services in the form of labor rendered in maintaining the present temporary quarters designated and dedicated by the board of supervisors for the use of patriotic, fraternal, and benevolent associations, composed of veteran soldiers, sailors, and marines who have served the United States honorably in any of its wars.

The purposes for which the proposed Victory Hall is to be erected and maintained by the county of Los Angeles are contained in the declaratory clauses of a resolution of the board of supervisors adopted on July 13, 1923, which reads as follows:

"It is resolved by the board:

"1. That said Victory Hall, for which an appropriation of $500,000 has been made by this board, is to be erected, supplied and maintained by Los Angeles county, and is at all times to be used exclusively as a meeting place for the use of patriotic, fraternal and benevolent associations, whose membership shall be composed only of veteran soldiers, sailors and marines who have served the United States honorably in any of its wars, and to the exclusion of all persons not members of such associations.

"2. That said present temporary Victory Hall, now supplied and maintained by the said county, is exclusively used for the purposes above mentioned, and none other."

The appropriation of $500,000 for the erection of the building to be known as Victory Hall and the maintenance of a temporary building for the uses specified in the above resolution was made under and by virtue of section 4041f of the Political Code, enacted by the Legislature in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 476), which is as follows:

"Homes and meeting places for veterans and associations of veterans to be provided. Any county may provide and maintain (1) a home or homes for veteran soldiers, sailors and marines who have served the United States honorably in any of its wars; (2) buildings, memorial halls, or meeting places for the use of patriotic, fraternal and benevolent associations of such persons. For these purposes the board of supervisors of any county shall have jurisdiction and power:

"(a) To purchase, receive by donation, take by condemnation, lease or otherwise acquire, real or personal property necessary for such building or buildings, and to improve, preserve, take care of, manage and control the same.

"(b) To purchase, construct or lease, build or rebuild, furnish or refurnish, or repair any and all such buildings, and to provide all necessary custodians, employees, attendants and supplies for the proper maintenance of the same.

"(c) To levy in any year a special tax not to exceed three mills on the one dollar of assessed valuation on all the taxable property in the county, such tax to be in addition to all other taxes provided for and the fund so created to be expended for the purposes hereof.

"(d) To establish a fund or funds for the purposes hereof, and to transfer from the general fund to such fund or funds, from time to time, such moneys as the board may deem necessary.

"(e) To incur, in the manner provided by law, a bonded indebtedness on behalf of the county for any of the purposes hereof."

Both claims, although regularly approved by the board of supervisors, were refused approval by the county auditor upon the ground that subdivision 2 of the Code section above quoted, by virtue of which the debts were incurred, is unconstitutional and void in that (1) it is in violation of article 1, §§ 11 and 21, of the state Constitution; (2) the statute provides for the expenditure of public money for other than public purposes, and (3) the statute provides for the making of a gift of "public money or thing of value" contrary to article 4, § 31, of the Constitution.

The gravamen of the contention that the statute in question is unconstitutional is that it limits the use of the building, when erected, to "patriotic, fraternal and benevolent associations, whose membership shall be composed of veteran soldiers, sailors, and marines who have served the United States honorably in any of its wars, and to the exclusion of all persons not members of such associations." In other words, it is not the erection of the building to which objection is made, but it is its dedication to a particular use. In this behalf it is claimed that the limitation of its use subjects the entire plan to the constitutional inhibitions against the granting of special privileges, the expenditure of public money for a private purpose, and the making of a gift of public money or thing of value.

[1, 2] It is settled beyond question that the promotion of patriotism, involving as it does the sense of self-preservation, is not only a public purpose but the most elemental of public purposes. Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 188 Cal. 607, 206 Pac. 631; People v. Westchester Nat. Bank, 231 N. Y. 465, 132 N. E. 241, 15 A. L. R. 1344; Opinion of Justices, 211 Mass. 608, 98 N. E. 338. The continuity of our governmental institutions is dependent in a large measure upon the perpetuation of a patriotic impulse which is but the willingness to sacrifice all for the ideas and the ideals which form the foundation stones of our republic. It will not be gainsaid that patriotism is promoted by the erection of a memorial monument, be it granite shaft or building, symbolic of the soldier's spirit of sacrifice, conceived and consummated in recognition of his deeds of heroic daring, and perpetuating in grateful remembrance those who dedicated their lives to the service of their country. Such a monument brings visibly and effectually before the minds of the present and future generations the sacrifices of the past. It is conceded, as indeed it must be, that the erection of a building as a memorial hall, to the extent that it would serve as a stimulus to patriotism, would be for a public purpose. Kingman v. City of Brocton, 153 Mass. 255, 26 N. E. 998, 11 L. R. A. 123; Barrow v. Bradley, 190 Ky. 480, 227 S. W. 1016; Hill v. Roberts, 142 Tenn. 215, 217 S. W. 826.

Of course, it goes without saying that it is not necessary that such a building shall stand vacant in order to be effective for the purpose for which it was designed and erected. True, the building standing vacant would accomplish, in a measure, the purpose for which it was designed; but if its mere erection would have the effect of promoting and stimulating patriotism, then, of course, its occupancy and use as a meeting place for those who honorably served their country in her time of need must necessarily increase the extent of the utility of the building as a means for the promotion and promulgation of patriotic principles and practices. To permit the men whose associations have been effected for the purpose of inculcating and promoting patriotism to use the vacant halls as a rendezvous for revivifying and broadcasting the spirit of patriotism throughout the length and breadth of the land is clearly a public and not a private purpose.

[3] The means and methods of promoting a public purpose by legislative enactment is ordinarily for legislative determination. Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 188 Cal. 607, 206 Pac. 631. And the determination of the Legislature to make the memorial hall in question a living force for the promulgation of patriotic principles by dedicating its use to associations created to foster the spirit of patriotism rather than leaving it a mere unoccupied inanimate tribute to the men who made the supreme sacrifice was certainly a wise and commendable exercise of legislative power.

We do not think that it is necessary that the proposed Victory Hall should be open to the public generally in order to bring its erection and maintenance within the meaning and designation of a public purpose. To permit the use of the hall by the people generally for general purposes would be to permit it to be used necessarily at times for something other than the promotion of patriotism. The obvious object of the use of the hall is to promote patriotism, and when it has done that it has done all that is required. It is not necessary, nor, still keeping in mind the paramount purpose of its erection, desirable, that the scope of its use be enlarged to indefinite limits. The hall being dedicated to patriotic purposes it is but reasonable and right to say that in the promotion of that purpose its use and occupancy should be limited to those associations which are builded upon patriotism and perpetuated for the preachment of patriotism. Indeed, the Legislature by its limitation of the use of the building to those who were joined as brothers in arms in defense of the nation conserves rather than detracts from the purpose for which it was erected.

[4] It is conceded that our veterans of every war are as a whole a reasonable classification, within the purview of the Constitution, for legislation which has in view the conferring of benefits upon them. Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 189 Cal. 159, 206 Pac. 631; Board of Directors v. Nye, 8 Cal. App. 527, 538, 97 Pac. 208. It is, however, insisted that by the limitation of the use of the hall to associations of veterans a classification into a subclass has been made which is unreasonable and, therefore, falls within the inhibition of the Constitution. It is said that such limitation confers special privileges upon veterans who are members of patriotic, fraternal, and benevolent associations, even though composed exclusively of veterans, to the extent that it excludes all other veterans who stand in the same relation to the purpose of the law but who do not happen to be a member of any of the enumerated associations. It is to be noted that the building is devoted to and to be used as a "meeting place" for the use of associations of veterans. The Legislature undoubtedly had in mind that it was by the meeting together, the gathering, the coming together, and congregating of the veterans that the patriotic impulse would by that contact be revived and radiated to the people at large. Having in mind this purpose, there is a reasonable and substantial distinction existing for the dedication of the hall to the use of associations and not to the use of individual veterans. And in view of the fact that no minimum or maximum of membership is required of any veteran association which may use the hall and the fact that any number of veterans may associate themselves together, it follows that by the formation of small organizations practically the entire body of veterans may, if they desire, make themselves eligible to the benefits of the statute.

In the fact above stated lies the distinction between this case and the case of Kingman v. Brocton, 153 Mass. 255, 26 N. E. 998, 11 L. R. A. 123, relied upon by respondent in support of the contention that the restriction of the use of the building operates to defeat its public purpose. Even if it were to be conceded that the situation in the case last referred to was not distinguishable from the situation presented here, still it must be borne in mind that the decision of one jurisdiction is not absolutely binding upon the courts of another jurisdiction and that it is ordinarily resorted to for its persuasive effect rather than for its controlling influence. In the case above cited, the persuasive effect of the decision is weakened, if not entirely destroyed, by the fact that the limitation of the use was to an individual and particular post of the Grand Army of the Republic. Obviously, such a stringent limitation of its use might well suffice to defeat the public nature of its purpose.

[5] The contention that the entire plan and scheme of the statute is unconstitutional, in that it involves a gift to any individual, municipal or other corporation, cannot be sustained. The same principle which actuated this court in upholding the validity of the statute in the case of Veterans' Welfare Board v. Jordan, 189 Cal. 124, 146, 208 Pac. 285, 22 A. L. R. 1515, is applicable here. That case, although dealing with another and different inhibition of the Constitution, is, we think, particularly pertinent to the present situation, inasmuch as it involves the construction and application of analogous fundamental constitutional principles. In that case the court had under consideration the validity of a statute authorizing a bond issue to be used for the purchase and improvement of large tracts of land by the veterans' welfare board and the subdivision and resale of the same on long terms of credit to veterans. The objection there was made that the statute authorizing the bond issue contravened the provision of the Constitution prohibiting the giving or loaning of the credit of the state. Article 4, § 31. Although it was held that the bond issue proposed would create a debt against the state when such bonds were issued, it was held that the statute was valid as authorizing the expenditure of public money for a public purpose. In disposing of the objection the court said:

"In view of the fact that the money raised * * * is applied to a public purpose, * * * the fact that incidentally there is a benefit derived by the purchaser from the credit of the state and that such purchaser is a veteran should not render invalid such legislation. That is to say, where the transaction authorized by statute on its face purports to be a purchase and sale of land and there is no loan of credit in the ordinary acceptance of such terms and where in substance and effect the legislation accomplished a wholly different public purpose from the mere extension of credit, the law is not to be held unconstitutional as a violation of the substance and effect of the provision against lending or giving the credit of the state."

It may be fairly said in the instant case that the benefit conferred is but incidental to the paramount purpose contemplated by the statute and is in and of itself inconsequential. The main object of the statute should not be circumvented and condemned because some mere incidental and inconsequential benefit may be derived from the operation of the statute. It is true that the Veterans' Bond Act of 1921 (St. 1921, p. 959) was held to be unconstitutional so far as it authorized the use of money from the sale of bonds in the farm and home purchasing scheme. Veterans' Welfare Board v. Jordan, supra. But this ruling resulted from the fact that the benefit to the individuals was a direct benefit because the homes and farms which by the terms of the act they were enabled to possess and occupy was to be put to a strictly private use, whereas in the instant case, the possession, use, and occupation of the building will at all times be devoted to a strictly public use. As was said in Veterans' Welfare Board v. Jordan, supra:

"The distinction * * * is perhaps not very great, but enough * * * to require us to give the benefit of the doubt, if any, of the constitutionality of this scheme, to the legislative determination of that matter."

[6] But aside from this the granting of the use of the memorial hall cannot, we think, in any view which may be taken of the case, be said to fall within the inhibition of the Constitution against the making of a gift of public money, or thing of value to any individual, municipal, or other corporation. A "gift" is defined by the Civil Code to be "a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration." Section 1146, Civ. Code. "A gift is something bestowed without return." Miller v. Dunn, 72 Cal. 462, 474, 14 Pac. 27, 32 (1 Am. St. Rep. 67). "To be a gift, this voluntary transfer must be gratuitous—a handing over to the donee something for nothing." Yosemite Stage, etc., Co. v. Dunn, 83 Cal. 264, 23 Pac. 369. The gift which the Legislature is prohibited from making is not limited, of course, to a "transfer of personal property" as defined by section 1146 of the Civil Code, but includes all appropriations of public money for which there is not authority or enforceable claim, or which perchance may rest upon some moral or equitable obligation. Conlin v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Cal. 17, 21, 33 Pac. 753, 21 L. R. A. 474, 37 Am. St. Rep. 17. But a gift as implying a gratuity, that is, something for nothing, or, as expressed in Miller v. Dunn, supra, "something bestowed without return," is the "gift" meant by the Constitution. It cannot, we think, be truthfully said that in the instant case there will be no return for the benefit conferred. While it is true that the return anticipated is incorporeal and intangible, it is nevertheless a very vital and valuable return to the state. The promotion and promulgation of patriotism upon which the state must rely for its own self-preservation is in truth and in fact a good consideration for the thing granted by the state and justifies the extending the bounty of the state.

There is no need to attempt to justify the loaning of the use of the building as payment for either a legal or a moral claim. The granting of the use of the building is not analogous to the direct payment of bonuses to persons who have served in past wars. The justification for the grant does not rest upon the moral or equitable obligation of payment to the veterans for services already rendered. In its dedication of the use of the building to associations of veterans the state is not looking toward the past, but to the future. In short, it is not for past services rendered that the proposed building is dedicated to the use of those who served their country, but for the services to be rendered by them to the state in the future by keeping alive and fostering that spirit of patriotism which actuated them when they offered their all, even unto "the last full measure of devotion," for the perpetuation of the ideals and institutions for which this nation stands.

With reference to the hypothetical situation suggested that the building might perchance be used as the meeting place for associations composed entirely of veterans of other states and that no money of this state should be expended for any benefit which might possibly be shared by veterans who enlisted from other states, it is only necessary to say that the contingency suggested is so remote as to be practically negligible. Furthermore, the question of what organizations are eligible to use the building being merely an administrative matter, the situation can be met when the problem arises—if it ever does arise. Patriotism involves not only a love for a particular state, but for the whole United States—the individual profit and glory of each state is, in a manner of speaking, the community property of the nation at large.

It follows from what has been said that the board of supervisors, acting in pursuance of section 4041f of the Political Code, is empowered to erect as a memorial hall the building to be known and designated as Victory Hall. Furthermore, it is empowered to limit the use of the hall to a meeting place for associations of veterans who have served the United States honorably in its wars. We do not, however, wish to be understood as holding that the Legislature has not the power to enlarge the scope of the use of the hall to include kindred organizations or to open it to the public at large if future exigencies in-dicade that a wider use of the hall would enhance its usefulness and better subserve the public needs.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

In re KRATZ'S ESTATE.KEEGAN v. CRAIG.

Exceptions, bill of ~~§~~ 58(3)—Purchaser held not entitled to service of bill of exceptions on appeal from order confirming sale.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 650, as amended by St. 1911, p. 400, making it unnecessary to serve bill of exceptions on the party who has not appeared in the proceeding, an executor's sale purchaser, who did not appear at the hearing on confirmation of sale in the manner specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, made applicable to probate matters by section 1713, was not entitled to service of copy of proposed bill of exceptions on appeal from order confirming sale, notwithstanding fact that his name appeared in the order appealed from, and that he would be injuriously affected by a reversal of the order and that he was present with an attorney at the hearing.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives and Victor R. McCucas, Judges.

In the matter of the estate of Valentine Kratz, deceased. Proceedings by J. C. Craig, executor, for sale of decedent's land. From an order confirming sale, H. M. Keegan, successor in interest to Mollie E. Kratz, widow of the deceased, and the daughter of Mollie E. Kratz, appeals. On motion for affirmance of order. Motion denied.

Nathan Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. P. Adams, W. W. Orme and Miller & McComas, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, C. J. This is an appeal from an order confirming the sale of the real estate of the decedent to Martin C. Neuner, purchaser. The purchaser moves for an affirmation of the order confirming the sale upon the ground that appellant's proposed bill of exceptions was not served upon him as required by the provisions of section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and consequently claims that there is no record upon which the appellant can present his appeal, and consequently that the order must be affirmed. The purchaser's contention is based upon the proposition that the purchaser of the real estate to whom the sale is confirmed by the order appealed from is an adverse party to the appellant. It was held by this court, in Estate of Bell, 125 Cal. 539, 58 Pac. 153, that the purchaser to whom a sale of real estate was confirmed by the order appealed from was an adverse party required to be served with a notice of appeal. In the Estate of Young, 149 Cal. 173, 85 Pac. 145, it was held that where the bill of exceptions proposed by an appellant was not served upon an adverse party, and where the points relied upon for reversal were shown only by such bill of exceptions, the judgment should be affirmed upon motion of such adverse party.

Upon the authority of these cases and the decisions therein cited, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed, unless by reason of the amendment to section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, adopted subsequent to those decisions, and called to our attention by the appellant, the rule in this state upon that subject is changed.

Section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 400) by the addition of the concluding paragraph. As it now stands, this paragraph reads as follows:

"No bill of exceptions, notice of appeal, or notice or paper, other than amendments to the pleadings or an amended pleading, need be served upon any party whose default has been duly entered, or who has not appeared in the action or proceeding." Stats. 1915, p. 207.

The appellant claims that this amendment was adopted for the purpose of setting at rest the question as to who was to be served in the preparation of a bill of exceptions, and that therefore no adverse party who had not formally appeared in the action need be served with the proposed bill of exceptions, notwithstanding the fact that section 650 still requires that the proposed bill of exceptions be served "upon the adverse party."

Appellant also contends that the cases of Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 508, 77 Pac. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102, Estate of Carpenter, 146 Cal. 661, 80 Pac. 1072, Estate of Young, 149 Cal. 173, 176, 85 Pac. 145, and Ford v. Cannon, 5 Cal. App. 185, 187, 89 Pac. 1071, established the proposition, even before the amendment to section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, that unless the purchaser had appeared and made himself a party by such appearance, that the bill of exceptions need not be served upon him. In Estate of Bell, supra, however, it was held that where the interest of the purchaser appeared by the decree itself, he was an adverse party upon whom the notice of appeal should have been served. If he was an adverse party within the meaning of the Code section requiring the notice of appeal to be served upon him, the same rule would require the service of the proposed bill of exceptions upon him, although the Code section with reference to notice of appeal has been amended, so that it no longer has to be served upon adverse parties. Under this decision it is clear, we think, that prior to the amendment of section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, in 1911, that the proposed bill of exceptions, notwithstanding the authorities cited, would have to be served upon the purchaser in order to lay the foundation for an appeal from the order confirming the sale to him. The question then is whether or not the mere fact that the name of the purchaser appears in the order appealed from, and that he would be injuriously affected by a reversal of the order, and that he was present with an attorney at the hearing for a confirmation of sale to him, is a sufficient appearance of the purchaser within the meaning of the section as now amended. The method of making an appearance in court is fixed by statute. Section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines the method of making an appearance in court, and these rules apply to probate matters. Section 1713, Code Civ. Proc. In Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 305, 45 Pac. 470, 471, it was said:

"A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him, and he can appear in no other way. This statute was intended to settle all disputes upon the subject. There can be no chance for argument about equivocal acts. * * * There was no need of a statute to tell us that the acts specified would constitute appearance. The occasion for a rule was to dispose of questions upon which there might be dispute. There was no such appearance in this case."

There is no contention in this case that the purchaser conformed with the requirements of section 1014, Code of Civil Procedure, with reference to an appearance, or that he appeared within the meaning of that section. It follows that under the express provisions of section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1911, it was unnecessary to serve him with a copy of the proposed bill of exceptions. If he desired to have the proposed bill of exceptions served upon him in the event of an appeal, he could have secured that privilege by filing a written appearance in the case.

Motion denied.

STEELE v. SCOTT. (S. F. 10321.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1923.
Rehearing Denied and Judgment Modified
Jan. 10, 1924.)

1. Contracts —265—Party rescinding need not undo acts of other party in effort to restore status quo.

The duty of a party to a contract rescinding, in so far as restoring the status quo is concerned, does not extend to the undoing of acts performed by the other party.

2. Sales —123—Sale to second buyer of half interest in business subsequent to sale of other half to first buyer held not to affect first buyer's right to rescind.

After a sale to plaintiff by defendant of a one-half interest in a restaurant business, defendant could part with the half interest remaining in him, but by doing so he could not affect any legal right of the plaintiff to rescind who did all that was necessary in restoring the status quo when he made tender to defendant of the proportionate interest in the business which defendant had sold to him.

3. Partnership —122—Findings held to establish copartnership was formed with seller in view of buyer's acquisition of half interest in seller's business.

Findings held to establish that the copartner between plaintiff and defendant seller was formed in view of the acquisition by plaintiff of a half interest in the business of which defendant was the sole owner.

4. Partnership —227—Transfer by one partner of his half interest to others held not to create partnership between them and other partner.

Where plaintiff buyer became a copartner with defendant, sole owner of a restaurant business, by reason of plaintiff's purchase of a one-half interest in the business, a transfer by defendant to third persons of his remaining interest did not create a partnership between them and plaintiff.

5. Sales —124—Buyer's continuation of business for 30 days after seller's wrongful refusal to receive it back held not to affect buyer's right to rescind.

That, subsequent to defendant seller's refusal to receive a half interest in a restaurant business, tendered back by plaintiff buyer, the latter and the successors to defendant's remaining one-half interest, in operating business for 30 days, consumed some of the articles, rendering impossible its return to defendant, held not to affect plaintiff's right of rescission, where because of the nature of the business the continuance of it was practically forced upon plaintiff by defendant's wrongful refusal of the tender, and the value of the articles consumed was deducted from the amount which the trial court found that defendant had fraudulently obtained from plaintiff.

6. Sales —124—Seller held placed in statu quo.

Where the trial court found that the value of articles consumed by plaintiff, buyer of a one-half interest in a restaurant business, in operating it for a short period after defendant seller's wrongful refusal to receive back plaintiff's interest as tendered, was a certain amount, and that, apart from that amount, the business was valueless, the deduction of that amount from the amount paid by plaintiff for his interest placed defendant in statu quo.

7. Sales —398—Judgment for return of buyer's money held "relief consistent with the case" within statute.

In an action by a buyer to recover the purchase price of a one-half interest in a restaurant business, where the complaint alleged in separate counts a cause of action for rescission, for money had and received, and for breach of contract based on failure of consideration, held that, independently of the question of rescission, the facts found by the court, being within the issues, required a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the return of his money, less one-half of the value of the personal property consumed by plaintiff in operating the business for a brief period; such a judgment being relief consistent with the case within Code Civ. Proc. § 580.

8. Election of remedies —15—Sales —398—When amount recoverable on rescission may be damages recoverable in action for deceit, stated.

If the grounds upon which rescission is asked are fraud and deceit in obtaining plaintiff's money in exchange for worthless property, the rule that in case of rescission of a contract an action for damages thereon cannot be sustained does not apply, but in such case, in order to prevail, plaintiff must prove his allegations of fraud, and, if the court finds that in fact the property was worthless, its judgment, whether it include a cancellation or not, must award to plaintiff the money so paid by him, whether for rescission or as compensation for defendant's deceit, such a case clearly being within Code Civ. Proc. § 580.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by H. B. Steele against F. J. Scott. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

C. F. Humphrey and Grant & Zimdars, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. F. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. Plaintiff in his complaint, in one count, sets forth a cause of action for the rescission of a contract of sale; in a second count, a cause of action for money had and received; and, in a third, a cause of action for breach of the contract by reason of the consideration therefor having failed.

The cause was tried, and the court found that the defendant on February 7, 1917, owned a certain restaurant business in San Francisco, and then and prior thereto had represented that it was profitable; that the receipts of the restaurant were in excess of $135 per day, and that the business was clearing more than $300 per month over and above all expenses, this latter representation being in the form of a written guarantee; that he also represented that there were goods and personal property of great value belonging to the business, and a half interest in the business was worth $1,750. The court found that as a matter of fact all these representations were false and known to be so by the defendant; that the business had made no profits since May 1, 1916; that these representations were made to the plaintiff for the purpose of inducing him to buy; that the plaintiff believed and relied thereon and was thereby induced to pay defendant $1,650 for a half interest in said business, making the first payment on February 7, 1917, and completing the payments on the 16th of that month; that plaintiff was induced to enter into a partnership agreement with the defendant on February 16, 1917, for the conduct of said business; that on February 24th following plaintiff discovered that said representations were false, and on February 28, 1917, notified defendant that he repudiated and rescinded said sale and copartnership; that he then tendered to defendant and offered to restore to him all property received, upon condition that defendant return his $1,650, and gave due notice of such rescission; that plaintiff was not a man versed in business and had no knowledge of the restaurant business; that he believed and relied upon defendant's representations and was induced thereby to buy said one-half interest and pay $1,650 therefor, and to enter into said partnership; that between February 16 and 24, 1917, upon similar representations, defendant sold the other one-half of the business for $900 to one Sam Illich and the latter's four partners, who were experienced restaurant men, and that these, on February 28, 1917, also rescinded their purchase; but that defendant refused to accede to such rescission or to the rescission by plaintiff, and that plaintiff and said Sam Illich and the latter's four partners conducted the business until March 28, 1917, applying all receipts therefrom to the current expenses thereof, but that the receipts were entirely insufficient to pay the necessary running expenses, and on March 28, 1917, the business was attached in actions brought to recover these unpaid expenses, and closed up, and all the physical property subsequently applied under execution upon judgments obtained in said actions, and that there was nothing left; that the physical property belonging to the business was not worth in excess of $500 at the time of the sale to plaintiff, and the one-half thereof sold to plaintiff was not worth in excess of $250; that plaintiff was damaged by reason of said facts in the sum of $1,650, less the sum of $250, which latter was the value of one-half of the physical property belonging to said business at the time of plaintiff's purchase.

The trial court made this further finding, to wit:

"When plaintiff made his offer of rescission on February 28, 1917, * * * said plaintiff could not at said time restore to defendant the one-half interest in the partnership existing at the time of plaintiff's purchase thereof (and which was a partnership of said plaintiff and defendant) for the reason that said defendant had previous to such offer of rescission by plaintiff, sold the other one-half interest in said business to said Sam Illich and his four partners, and because thereof the partnership existing at the time of said offer of rescission was a partnership consisting of said plaintiff and said Sam Illich and the latter's four partners."

The court thereupon entered judgment in favor of the defendant, from which plaintiff appeals; the case being here upon the judgment roll.

The appellant makes two contentions in support of his appeal, namely, that upon the findings of the court he was and is entitled to judgment annulling the contract and ordering the return of the money paid by him; and, second, that even if the findings will not support such a judgment, they nevertheless support and require a judgment in his favor for the amount so paid by him, inasmuch as the findings show that such amount was fraudulently obtained as the consideration for property possessing no value whatever, such a judgment being within the case by the pleadings and proof.

We agree with the appellant in both of these contentions.

It may be said, parenthetically, that while the price paid was the sum of $1,650, the appellant acquiesces in a deduction of $250 from that amount, found by the court to be the value of certain articles or commodities turned over to him by the defendant in connection with the transfer of the business, and which were entirely consumed in conducting the business during the brief period that it survived the transfer to the plaintiff. While we think the plaintiff is quite liberal in this concession, we will consider the appeal upon the understanding that he is now only asking this court to direct that a judgment be entered in his favor for the purchase price less this sum of $250, to wit, $1,400.

Referring to the trial court's findings above set forth, it is apparent therefrom that the only grounds upon which it denied the plaintiff judgment in the sum of $1,400 are those stated in the last of those findings. By it the court finds that the plaintiff could not have restored to the defendant "one-half interest in the partnership existing at the time of plaintiff's purchase thereof (and which was a partnership of said plaintiff and defendant) for the reason that said defendant had, previous to such offer of rescission by plaintiff, sold the other one-half interest in said business to said Sam Illich and his four partners; and because thereof the partnership existing at the time of said offer of rescission was a partnership consisting of said plaintiff and said Sam Illich and the latter's four partners."

[1, 2] This finding upon its face purports to be nothing more than an inference drawn by the court from its previous findings; and if such inference is erroneous, as it undoubtedly is, the previous findings retain and must be given their due legal effect. The court specifically found that the plaintiff duly gave notice of rescission of the contract upon sufficient grounds, and tendered back the property received. That property was a half interest in a certain restaurant business; and the court finds that such tender is inefficacious because the defendant had in the meantime parted with the remaining half interest retained by him at the time of his transaction with the plaintiff. But the duty of a party to a contract rescinding, in so far as restoring the status quo is concerned, does not extend to undoing acts performed by the other party. The defendant was, of course, at liberty to part with the moiety of the business remaining in him after the sale to the plaintiff; but by doing so he could not affect any legal right of the plaintiff. So far as the latter was concerned, the status quo was restored when he made tender of the proportionate interest in the business which the defendant had transferred to him. 13 C. J. 621; 2 Black on Rescission and Cancellation, § 618, p. 1427; Hammond v. Pennock, 61 N. Y. 145.

[3, 4] It is not necessary to refer at length to two other erroneous inferences contained in the particular finding under discussion, namely, that the half interest in the business purchased by plaintiff was a half interest in a partnership existing between the parties, and that the sale by defendant of his remaining interest to other persons constituted such other persons and the plaintiff partners in said business. As to the first, the preceding findings of the court establish that the co-partnership between plaintiff and defendant was formed in view of the acquisition by the former of a half interest in a business of which the defendant was the sole owner; and, as to the second, the transfer by the defendant to Illich et al. of his remaining interest did not in law create a partnership between them and the plaintiff. With the exception of this erroneous inference from the previously found facts, there is no finding that the plaintiff ever entered into partnership with these persons.

[5, 6] If it be objected that subsequent to the tender wrongfully refused by the defendant, the plaintiff and the successors to defendant's remaining half interest, in the conduct of the business for some 30 days, consumed some of the property, rendering impossible its return to the defendant, a sufficient answer to this is that the property forming the subject of the sale being a going business, the continuance of the business during the brief period of 30 days was practically forced upon the plaintiff by the wrongful act of the defendant, and the value of the articles thus consumed was deducted from the amount which the trial court found that the defendant had fraudulently obtained from the plaintiff. By this deduction from the amount to which by the findings of the trial court the plaintiff would have been entitled, the defendant was placed in statu quo, since the court finds that it was the full value of the property consumed, and that apart from this modicum of property the business was valueless. The plaintiff's right of rescission, therefore, remained unaffected. Clark v. Wells, 127 Minn. 353, 149 N. W. 547, L. R. A. 1916F, 476; Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 80 Pac. 234.

[7] We think, also, that independent of any question of rescission, the facts found by the court, being within the issues, required a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the return of his money, less one-half of the value of the physical personal property, or $250. A judgment for the return of the money was, therefore, "relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue." Code Civ. Proc. § 580; Tyler v. Mayre, 95 Cal. 160, 27 Pac. 160, 30 Pac. 196; Murphy v. Stelling, 8 Cal. App. 702, 97 Pac. 672; Union Oil Co. v. Mercantile Refining Co., 8 Cal. App. 768, 97 Pac. 919.

[8] In opposition to this view the respondent cites the case of Westerfeld v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58 Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667, holding that in the case of rescission of a contract an action for damages thereon cannot be sustained. While that case undoubtedly states the general rule, it is not of invariable application, and it was so held in Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 Pac. 964, in which that case was reviewed in an opinion by the late Chief Justice Beatty. It may happen, as here, that upon rescission the plaintiff is entitled to a sum of money, to which amount he would be equally entitled in an action for deceit brought upon the contract. In such a case, if the grounds upon which rescission is asked are fraud and deceit in obtaining plaintiff's money in exchange for worthless property, in order to prevail the plaintiff must prove his allegations of fraud; and if the court find that in fact the property was worthless, its judgment, whether it include a cancellation of the contract or not, must award to the plaintiff the money so paid by him. This amount is the same whether recovered as the result of rescission or as compensation for the detriment suffered through the defendant's deceit. Such a case comes clearly within the provisions of section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure, above cited. Bancroft v. Woodward, 183 Cal. 99, 190 Pac. 445; Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 Pac. 964. See, also, Glover v. Radford, 120 Mich. 542, 79 N. W. 803; Richardson v. Lowe, 149 Fed. 625, 79 C. C. A. 317.

It results from the foregoing that upon the court's findings of fact (disregarding its erroneous inferences based thereon) it should have entered judgment for the plaintiff for at least the sum of $1,400, with interest and costs as prayed.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court, with directions that it enter such judgment, provided, however, that the defendant may within the time provided by law move for a new trial, or appeal, if so advised, upon the ground that the findings of fact are not supported by the evidence.

CALIFORNIA PRESS MFG. CO. v. STAFFORD PACKING CO. (L. A. 7152.)

1. Sales ⚡442(5)—Profits lost through breach of warranty held too remote to constitute element of damages.

Where a plant for the manufacture of fishmeal from fish offal, though not of the capacity warranted, by working less than half time, could convert all the offal available, damages for the loss of profits, based on the theory that more offal might have been produced, if more fish had been purchased in the open market, were too remote and speculative to be recoverable.

2. Damages ⚡40(1)—Lost profits not reasonably within contemplation of parties not recoverable.

Damages for the loss of anticipated profits, which cannot be said to have been reasonably within the contemplation of the parties, are not recoverable.

3. Sales ⚡442(5)—Damages for loss of profits anticipated by new business enterprise not recoverable.

Loss of profits growing out of a breach of a contract to furnish a machine of a designated capacity to an unestablished business is too uncertain to constitute a basis for the computation of damages.

4. Sales ⚡442(5)—Damages for not furnishing machine or article ordinarily market value of another.

The measure of damages for failure to furnish a machine or article as agreed is usually the market value for which another might have been procured, rather than the possible loss of profits.

5. Sales ⚡288(2)—Breach of warranty as to fishmeal plant waived.

Where the purchaser of a fishmeal plant, after discovering a breach of warranty as to the capacity of the plant, agreed that, if the vendor would install a new drum and consent to a change in the contract as related to payments, the plant would be accepted, which was done, he thereby waived the breach of warranty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by the California Press Manufacturing Company against the Stafford Packing Company, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for defendant on the cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

S. W. Molkenbuhr, of San Francisco, and Porter & Sutton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, J. The plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant, under a conditional sales contract, a fishmeal machine or plant, for an agreed sum of $8,000. On the refusal of the defendant to pay a trade acceptance for the amount of the final installment due on the purchase price, plaintiff instituted an action in claim and delivery to recover possession of the machinery. The complaint was in the usual form for actions of this character. The defendant answered, denying plaintiff's right to possession, and, at the same time, filed a cross-complaint, alleging a breach of warranty on plaintiff's part in failing to furnish a machine having an agreed capacity, and sought damages for the alleged loss of prospective profits which would have been realized had the machine been as warranted. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, denying the alleged breach of warranty, and any loss of profits, and, as an affirmative defense, pleaded a waiver by defendant. The trial court ordered, and the jury returned, a verdict in favor of the press company for the return of the fishmeal machine, and, in case delivery could not be had, then for the value thereof. The jury also returned a verdict in favor of the packing company under its cross-complaint for the sum of $1,000 damages for loss of prospective profits. Plaintiff in due course moved for a new trial, and, this being denied, it has appealed from that portion of the judgment awarding damages to the defendant. Its contentions are that damage resulting from the loss of expected, future, or prospective profits was not within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was entered into in this case, and that any such expected profits claimed by respondent are too dependent upon numerous, uncertain, and changing contingencies to afford a trustworthy and definite measure of damages, and are likewise speculative, remote, and not the direct and immediate result of the nonfulfillment of the contract.

The appellant was the sole manufacturer of a large machine and accessory equipment by means of which machine or device fish canners are able, by a continuous process, to reduce fish offal or cannery waste into fishmeal and fish oil, useful for fertilizer and other purposes, and for animal consumption. The respondent packing company negotiated with the predecessors of the appellant for the purchase of a plant to cost, when set up and in operation, the sum of $8,000. These negotiations resulted in the execution of a written contract, by the terms of which appellant agreed to furnish "one continuous fishmeal plant, having a capacity of two and one-quarter tons of raw material per hour." The contract contained a guaranty that the machinery furnished should be of standard quality, and that any parts developing mechanical defects within 30 days from the time machinery was put in operation would be replaced by the seller at its own expense. When the plant was set up and in operation, it did not have the capacity to reduce two and one-quarter tons of raw material per hour. There was considerable correspondence between respondent and the appellant concerning the operation of the plant. Numerous inspections were made by appellant's employees and experts in an endeavor to increase the capacity of the plant. A number of adjustments and replacements were made, which "brought the plant somewhere near the capacity we [respondent] desired." As a result, respondent agreed to accept the plant, provided the appellant would install an additional drum on the drier, and would agree to put forth its best efforts to increase and better the performance of the machine. This arrangement was agreeable to appellant, which also, at the request of the respondent, agreed to a modification of the terms of payment for the plant. The changes in installation were made, and respondent continued to use the machine as before. It made two payments on the unpaid purchase price under the modified terms of the agreement, but failed to honor a trade acceptance for the balance, and this action resulted.

[1] The respondent attempts to justify its claim for loss of profits "solely because of the breach of appellant's warranty, and the loss to respondent directly by failure of the fishmeal machine to consume to the capacity warranted by appellant, thereby causing the respondent to lose the difference between what the fishmeal machine would have produced, if it had performed in compliance with the warranty, and what it actually produced." It relies upon the language of the contract, by which appellant proposed to furnish "one continuous fishmeal plant, having a capacity of two and one-quarter tons of raw material per hour." Assuming that both of the parties to the transaction may have contemplated that the packing company would make a profit from the manufacture and sale of the by-products of its fish business, and that this case on the facts thus far related might fall within the reasoning of Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62, other facts differentiate it from the situation there considered. It is clearly established by the evidence that the machinery installed by appellant did actually convert all of the fish offal which the respondent could produce, and did so by working less than half time. Respondent's theory is, however, that it could have purchased more fish in the open market; that if it had done so and packed more fish it could have produced more offal, and therefore, if the machinery had been capable of converting it into meal and oil, respondent would have made more money. It is at once clear that the prospective profits claimed by respondent are too remote and speculative to be recoverable.

[2] It is a well-settled rule that the damages that can be recovered for any breach of contract are only such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the agreement, as the probable result of a breach.

"Other damages are too remote. * * * This rule does not mean that the parties should actually have contemplated the very consequence that occurred, but simply that the consequence for which compensation is sought must be such as the parties may be reasonably supposed, in the light of all the facts known, or which should have been known to them, to have considered as likely to follow, in the ordinary course of things, from a breach, and therefore to have in effect stipulated against. The understanding and intention of the parties in this regard must of course be ascertained from the language of the contract in the light of such facts." Hunt Bros. Co. v. San Lorenzo Water Co., 150 Cal. 51, 56, 87 Pac. 1093, 1095, (7 L. R. A. [N. S.] 913).

The president of the respondent company testified that, at the time the contract was signed, all that was said by either of the parties was that he told Mr. Meakin, the inventor of the fishmeal machine and president of the appellant company, that respondent wanted a machine which it "could use for making fishmeal out of scrap and fish in general," and "he said he was going to give us a machine for such purpose." Meakin testified that at the time the contract was entered into he knew the purpose for which the respondent wanted the machine and for which it was to be used by the packing company. No testimony was introduced showing that there were any special circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract whereby appellant engaged itself to assume a loss for prospective profits, or to have warranted respondent in reasonably supposing that it would assume the same. The contract itself contains no stipulation to pay for "prospective profits."

[3] Another element enters into the consideration. At the time the parties were negotiating for the sale and purchase of the fishmeal plant in this case, the respondent had not theretofore engaged in the conversion of its fish offal or cannery waste into fishmeal. It therefore had no experience in the operation of any such plant as it contemplated purchasing. So far as it was concerned, the enterprise was a new undertaking and engaging in a new industry. The reduction of cannery by-products into fishmeal and fish oil by appellant's process was an entirely new industry invented by the president of the appellant corporation. It would appear unlikely, therefore, that either the appellant or the respondent had in contemplation a warranty by the appellant sufficient to cover anticipated profits which the respondent might realize had the machine the capacity called for by the contract. As a proposition of law, it is well established that loss of profits growing out of a breach of contract, and resulting to an unestablished business, is of too uncertain a character to constitute a basis for the computation of damages for the breach. Kettering v. Sheppard, 19 N. M. 330, 142 Pac. 1128. Where a new business or enterprise is engaged in, and damages by way of profits are sought for its interruption or prevention, the rule is that they will be denied, for the reason that such business is an adventure as distinguished from an established business, and its profits are speculative and remote, existing only in anticipation. 17 Cor. Juris. p. 797, § 118; Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 244, 48 Pac. 62. The rule is one of necessity. Damages must be certain of ascertainment. If one engages in a new industry, there are no provable data of past business from which the fact can be legally deduced that anticipated profits would have been realized. Central Coal Co. v. Hartman, 111 Fed. 96, 99, 49 C. C. A. 244.

[4] Aside from these considerations, the general rule is that, as between possible methods by which a loss may be computed, the law prefers that which leads to certain, and not speculative, results. The damage to be recovered for not supplying a machine or other article, as agreed, is usually the market value for which another may be procured, and is not to be founded upon the uncertain and speculative basis of the profit which might have been made from its use. 2

Mechem on Sales, § 1779. The great weight of authority seems to be that the recovery of profits is possible only under exceptional circumstances, unless the engagement by its very terms discloses them to have been in effect, in whole or in part, a subject-matter of the contract. Pusey & Jones Co. v. Combined Locks Paper Co. (D. C.) 255 Fed. 700, 705. The grounds upon which rest the general rule of excluding profits in estimating damages are concisely stated in Howard v. Stillwell & Bierce Mfg. Co., 139 U. S. 199, 11 Sup. Ct. 500, 35 L. Ed. 147, a case almost identical with the one here. Damages were there sought to be recovered for loss of profits due to the failure to construct a flour mill within a certain period and with a given capacity per hour. The court gave three reasons for excluding profits (139 U. S. 206 11 Sup. Ct. 501 [35 L. Ed. 147]):

"(1) That in the greater number of cases such expected profits are too dependent upon numerous, uncertain, and changing contingencies to constitute a definite, and trustworthy measure of actual damages; (2) because such loss of profits is ordinarily remote, and not, as a matter of course, the direct and immediate result of the non-fulfilment of the contract; (3) and because most frequently the engagement to pay such loss of profits, in case of default in the performance, is not a part of the contract itself, nor can it be implied from its nature and terms [citing cases]."

See, also, Globe Refining Co. v. Landa Cotton Oil Co., 190 U. S. 540, 23 Sup. Ct. 754, 47 L. Ed. 1171. The subject was reviewed by another court in a case involving a sale of flour mill machinery, the contract for which warranted the machinery to have a capacity of a certain number of barrels per day, and it failed to measure up to the stipulated capacity. Damages were sought for loss of profits "which might have been made." The court held it was no part of the contract that the plaintiff should make profits by carrying on a business with the machinery which the defendant agreed to erect. It distinguished the transaction from a sale of chattels or of land in which the possible profit is the very object of the contract and is necessarily in the contemplation of the parties, saying:

"When a machinist furnishes machinery to a mill owner, it is no part of his engagement that a profitable business shall be carried on with the machinery furnished. Of course if it is defective he is responsible for the damage resulting directly from such defect; but that is a very different thing from the uncertain, remote, and speculative profits which may or may not be made in the business to be done." Pennypacker v. Jones, 106 Pa. 237, 242.

It is therefore manifest, from these authorities, that the issue as to prospective profits advanced by the respondent in this case was improperly submitted to the jury. The cases cited by respondent in support of its claim for such profits lose persuasive force when applied to a situation like that we are now considering. They relate to such other, and different facts as to be readily distinguishable, and do not in the least militate against the rule preventing a recovery of prospective profits not in the contemplation of the parties, or of profits "which might have been earned" in a new and untried industry.

[5] For another reason, respondent should not be allowed to recover damages in this case. In its answer to the cross-complaint, certain acts on the part of the respondent were pleaded by the appellant as amounting to a waiver and as an estoppel. It was clearly proved that some time after the plant was in operation, during a conference between the presidents of the two companies, Mr. Stafford, president of the respondent, said he was satisfied with the cooker and press connected with the plant, but complained that the capacity of the drier was not two and one-quarter tons. He proposed that appellant install an additional drum on the drier, on which being done, "he felt sure the plant would be satisfactory, and he would accept it." The additional drum was thereupon installed by appellant at a cost of $1,500. The packing company thereafter wrote a letter to appellant, in which, after discussing certain tests of the plant, it said:

"The last changes you have made have brought the plant somewhere near the capacity we desired, and we are not going to insist on a rigid adherence to your guarantee."

It expressed itself as thoroughly satisfied with the performance of the drier, while still of the conviction that it was impossible to make the cooker and press, in its then condition, do the required amount of work. It suggested that appellant might be able to make certain improvements or adjustments which would accomplish the desired results, and agreed to accept the plant, if appellant would agree to put forth its "best efforts to increase and better the performance of the cooker and press assembly," and provided appellant would deviate slightly from the terms of the contract in the matter of making final settlement. This proposal was agreed to by the appellant. Later, the respondent in writing repeated the substance of this offer which, it stated, "was that we would accept the plant, and trust that you will see that this plant does deliver two and one-quarter tons per hour." It renewed its offer to give trade acceptances for the balance of the purchase price, and requested that the time for payment of the same be extended until it could get returns from its tuna packing season. Its offer being agreeable to appellant, respondent executed and mailed to the press company, for signature, three trade acceptances, two for $1,000 each, due July and August following, respectively, and the third for the balance of $1,238.50, due in September. The first two trade acceptances were paid without further protest when due. During all of this time the respondent used the fishmeal machine in connection with the operation of its plant.

The foregoing facts are established without contradiction. There is some dispute in the evidence as to what the appellant did on its part to increase the output of the machine. But, from the facts proven, it must be held that the respondent did not insist, but, on the contrary, waived a rigid adherence to any guarantee on the part of appellant as to the amount of the output of the machine. The facts proven present a clear and complete defense to the claim for damages for the breach of the warranty as to capacity. By causing appellant to expend the sum of $1,500 in installing a new drum, upon the promise that respondent would accept the machine, and by accepting the plant in the condition in which it was after its installation, and securing at the time an extension of the period for making final payments, respondent must be held to have waived any right to claim damages by reason of the failure of the machine to measure up to capacity, and is now estopped from asserting any such demand in this action.

The conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary to attempt to analyze the testimony in what we think would be a vain endeavor to determine the method by which the jury arrived at the sum of $1,000 as the amount of the prospective profits lost by the respondent. It also becomes unnecessary to consider the contention of the appellant that the trial court committed error in admitting in evidence the "Cost Book" of the respondent, in order to determine the physical and actual capacity of the plant per hour, in the absence of any witness being called to testify or identify slips and memoranda which were copied into the book.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

PEOPLE v. HENDRIX. (Cr. 2572.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 4, 1923.)

1. Homicide $\S$ 253(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for first degree murder.

In a homicide case, evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction for murder in the first degree.

2. Homicide $\S$ 166(8)—Sexual relations with deceased's wife after killing admissible.

Proof of acts of sexual intercourse with deceased's wife after the killing was admissible as tending to show motive.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 371(4)—Evidence of sexual assault admissible in homicide prosecution.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence of a criminal sexual assault upon deceased's wife after the killing was admissible as tending to show the intent or motive of the defendant in the commission of the homicide, though also tending to prove commission of another offense.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1169(2)—Introduction of photograph held not substantially prejudicial.

In prosecution for homicide, any error of the court in permitting introduction in evidence of photographs of deceased's wife, showing her cut, bruised, and scratched condition caused by rocks, brush, and barbed wire on her way to inform officers of the killing of her husband, and her condition of mind on arriving there, offered for the purpose of showing that she did not in fact consent to defendant's sexual acts with her after the killing, could not have substantially prejudiced the defendant, where the prosecution had introduced all of the details of the alleged criminal assault upon the wife and her flight over the mountains without shoes or stockings.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 1169(2)—Rejection of evidence not prejudicial, where similar evidence introduced.

Rejection of some testimony as to reputation of a witness could not have prejudiced the accused, where the part which was admitted was clear and direct.

6. Witnesses $\S$ 340(3)—Lack of chastity not admissible to impeach.

Lack of chastity of a witness is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching credibility.

7. Criminal law $\S$ 676—Court may limit number of impeaching witnesses.

Where testimony as to reputation of witness for truth, honesty, and integrity was but cumulative, court did not err in excluding it; it being proper for the court to limit the number of witnesses.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 656(4)—Remark of court held not prejudicial.

Where, during examination of witness in homicide case, the court stated that there was a discrepancy as to the date of the homicide, whether or not the morning following was the 14th or 15th of August there was no prejudicial error; there being no dispute that there was such a discrepancy.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 730(9)—Argument of counsel held not prejudicial.

Where, during argument of case, district attorney stated that defendant claimed that deceased threw a stick of stovewood at him, and defendant's counsel assigned this remark as misconduct, adding that there was no evidence that the stick of wood thrown was firewood or stovewood, and the district attorney, referring to this interruption, stated that it showed to what technicalities counsel was resorting to save "the neck of this defendant," there was no prejudicial error, where the jury was admonished by the court to pay no attention to such matter.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Spencer M. Marsh, Judge.

J. V. Hendrix was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Chester C. Kempley, Dist. Atty., and E. L. Johnson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was tried in the county of San Diego for the killing of one Thomas Kester, and was found guilty of murder in the first degree. He moved for a new trial, and, the motion being denied, he was sentenced to suffer the penalty of death. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

In the early part of the summer of 1922, the defendant, J. V. Hendrix, Thomas Kester, the deceased, and the wife of the latter met in a lumber camp in the northern part of the state. There they entered into an agreement to engage in the unlawful manufacture and sale of whisky in San Diego county. A little later the two men worked in a lumber camp at a place called Sterling. They left there for San Diego, taking with them the sum of $300, saved from the earnings of the two men, and which was deposited with Mrs. Kester as treasurer. With this sum they purchased the equipment for a still. From Sterling to San Diego the party traveled in an automobile belonging to Kester, camping at night at various points on their way. At the lumber camps and while traveling the defendant took his meals with the Kesters and slept near their tent. About two weeks after arriving in San Diego they rented a small piece of land in a secluded part of the county, and there installed the still in a small adobe building and put it into operation. Kester and his wife slept in a tent a short distance from the still, and the defendant occupied a bunk near by.

On the evening of August 14, 1922, the defendant ate no dinner, stating that he was indisposed. Later Mrs. Kester, having finished her housework, joined the defendant and her husband at the still where they were engaged in general conversation, nothing unusual occurring. At 9 o'clock she bade the two men goodnight, went to her tent, and retired for the night. At 9:30 she heard her husband say to the defendant, "To-morrow we will go to San Diego, and Thursday we will go to Warner's Hot Springs." Following this remark she heard a crash and a thump five or six times, whereupon she hurriedly arose and left her tent, calling out, "What's the matter?" The defendant replied, "Nothing's the matter." To an inquiry after her husband the defendant stated that he had gone over the hill for water. Just then she heard the voice of her husband, faint and growing fainter with each word, saying "Help me, dear, help me," immediately followed by "thud, thud, thud, as if of something hitting upon wood," to quote the words of Mrs. Kester. Thereupon, knowing that something was wrong and dressed only in a nightgown, she fled from the camp. While endeavoring to crawl under a tight board locked gate about 100 yards from the still she was overtaken by the defendant, who grabbed hold of her, threw her on the ground, called her a "nasty puppy," and said "You are mine now," and there attempted to and to some extent did have sexual intercourse with her. She admits that she threw her arms around his neck and said, "Oh, John, I am so excited," and that she did not resist the assault, but she states that what occurred was against her will, and at the trial the prosecution attempted to show that her nonresistance was prompted by fear. The defendant then told her that her husband was dead. He also asked her how much money she had, and said he was going to take her to Louisiana. They spent about 30 minutes at the gate, when the defendant took her to the tent. On the way there they stopped at the still to enable the defendant to place a jar so as to save a wasting of the distilling whisky. Thereupon they went to bed for the night, where he again attempted an act or acts of sexual intercourse with her. He also at this time said to Mrs. Kester, "In the morning I will bury Tom, and you get breakfast, and we will head over across the Rockies in the machine;" also, "I will go to the gallows for you. You nasty little thing, why didn't you approach me before? Why did I have to do this to approach you?" Then hearing a dog snore, Mrs. Kester pretended to believe that "Tom" was "coming to life," and persuaded the defendant to go out and investigate, and when he did so she slipped out of the tent, made her escape over the mountain in her nightdress, without shoes or stockings, and reported the slaying of her husband to the authorities at San Diego.

While the Kesters and the defendant were in San Diego looking for a location for a still, the Kesters lived with Mrs. Kester's parents, and the defendant lived next door in a vacant house; Mrs. Kester doing the cooking for him. The Kesters were married in April, 1922. Mrs. Kester was 24 years old and her husband was 42. He was tall and weighed 200 pounds. He was blind in one eye, and the sight of the other eye was impaired. As a result of a severe attack of rheumatism, his right arm and leg were shorter and thinner than the left arm and leg. The defendant was 52 years old, was in good health, and weighed 170 pounds.

The autopsy surgeon, Dr. John J. Shea, examined the body of the deceased, and found that he had been beaten to death by a blunt instrument; all of the wounds being on the back of the head.

The county coroner, S. C. Kelley, testified that, on the morning of August 15th, he visited the site of the homicide, accompanied by Deputy Sheriffs Sexson and McNett. They found the body, a pickhandle with stains of blood on it, and a loaded Winchester rifle in the defendant's bunk. Within about 15 minutes after the deputy sheriffs left to return to San Diego a man appeared on the scene who later proved to be the defendant. He said to Coroner Kelley that his name was Henderson; that he was a neighbor living with his family over the hill; that he had heard some shooting and he came to learn what the trouble was. Later, during the conversation, he told the coroner that his name was Johnson. Subsequently, on the return of Deputy Sheriff McNett, the defendant was put under arrest, and at that time he denied that he knew anything about the death of Kester. He stated to a newspaper reporter, Albert E. Brown, that he had to kill Kester, for he was coming at him with a stick of wood. He also told this witness that he had been intimate with Florence Kester, and that they had planned to run away. The rifle which was found in defendant's bunk was usually kept in the tent of the Kesters. A blunt piece of iron, which Mrs. Kester said she had seen in the defendant's bunk a few days before the slaying, was found near the still house, and on it there were blood stains, hair, and a piece of skin.

As before stated, the defendant claimed that the killing of the decedent was in self-defense. In that behalf he testified that on the 10th of August, while he and Mrs. Kester were alone, he had told her that she had a pretty foot, and Kester, having overheard the remark, later, and in the absence of Mrs. Kester, told him that a man who "would brag on another man's wife was a son of a bitch." To this statement the defendant made no reply, walked away, and the matter was dropped. On the fatal evening of August 14th, after Mrs. Kester had retired for the night, the decedent and the defendant had a dispute about how much material should be drawn from the still, the deceased, saying that in this instance he was going to have his way; that the deceased called the defendant a son of a bitch, and hit him over the head with an empty quart bottle. The defendant got up from his sitting position and turned to the door of the still. Deceased threw a piece of wood at him, also a pick handle. The deceased's aim was poor, and neither of these missiles hit the defendant. The defendant seized the pick handle, and as the deceased was advancing towards him with another piece of wood in his hand, the defendant knocked the piece of wood out of the deceased's hand. Then the deceased pulled a knife out of his belt, whereupon the defendant hit the deceased two blows on the head with the pick handle; the deceased falling near the bunk of the defendant on the second of these blows. At this juncture the deceased picked up a piece of iron and again advanced upon the defendant. Then the defendant struck the deceased another blow, felling him. Deceased dropped the piece of iron, and when he arose he was standing within arm's length of an oak tree and reached for a rifle which he had previously placed there, saying, "Damn you, I will put your light out." Then, says the defendant, "I hit him the last blow." Subsequently, the defendant looked for Florence Kester and found her, when she answered a call, standing down the road at the first gate. Upon approaching her she threw her arms around him saying, "Oh, John, I am so excited." They walked back to the cook house, where they each had a drink of whisky, and at his suggestion she made some coffee, which they also drank. Subsequently, they went out to the still house together, and while there she helped the defendant adjust a jar to prevent the waste of malt, and at her request the defendant turned the body of her dead husband around so that his head was lying uphill. This being done, she said, "I believe I will see how much money he has," and she took $10 out of his pants pocket. Then they went back to the tent. Thereafter the defendant left the tent, and on returning 10 minutes later he found that Mrs. Kester had gone. Defendant further testified that he neither had nor attempted to have sexual intercourse with Mrs. Kester that night, but admitted that their relations had been intimate, commencing with the last afternoon in Sterling, and continuing up to shortly before the slaying of her husband. Defendant further testified that at the time of the killing he, the deceased, and the woman were all somewhat under the influence of liquor.

The morning after the slaying, the defendant, in answer to a question by a deputy sheriff, said, "I hit the son of a bitch because he threw a stick of wood at me," and for the reason that "I believed that my life was in danger."

It was not until the trial that the defendant claimed that he had been hit on the head with a bottle, and that he had been attacked by the deceased with a stick of wood, a pick handle, another stick of wood, a knife, a piece of iron, and a rifle.

It might also be well to state that the officer who made a careful physical examination of the defendant shortly after his arrest found no swelling or any mark on his head tending to support defendant's assertion that he had been hit there with a bottle by the deceased.

According to the testimony of the officers, the dust on the ground around the body of the deceased tended to show that the body had been turned around as testified to by the defendant.

[1] No claim is made that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict; and it is clear that there is abundant evidence in the record which, if believed by the jury, showed the defendant to be guilty of a cruel and deliberate murder.

[2, 3] Over the objection of defendant, evidence was admitted tending to prove that after the murder defendant committed an act or acts of sexual intercourse with Mrs. Kester. This evidence was offered, and we think was admissible, as tending to show a motive for the crime charged. It is true that evidence of crimes other than the one for which a defendant is on trial is not usually admissible; but to this rule there are exceptions; and, where evidence is material as tending to show the intent or motive of the defendant in the commission of the offense for which he is being tried, the fact that it also tends to prove the commission of another offense by him will not warrant its exclusion.

In the case of People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186, the defendant murdered his wife, and shortly thereafter he went to a place several miles distant, where he killed her parents. It was held that evidence of the killing of the parents was admissible to show that the killing of both of them and their daughter was part of a common plan, and was relevant to establish the motive for the crime for which the defendant was on trial, and that the evidence could not be excluded because it tended to establish another and different offense.

In People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 339, 83 Pac. 43, it was held that evidence was admissible tending to prove the existence for some time prior to the homicide of an incestuous relation between the defendant and his daughter, the purpose of the evidence being to establish a motive for the killing of a young man who had made improper amatory advances to the young woman. In addition to the jealousy with such advances might reasonably be considered to have aroused in the defendant, it was suggested, as an additional reason for allowing the testimony, that the defendant might have feared that, if the young man had succeeded in winning the girl's favor, he would discover and expose the criminal relation; the fear of such exposure also furnishing a motive for the crime.

In the case at bar we think the evidence was clearly admissible to show motive, for, according to the testimony of Mrs. Kester, immediately after the slaying the defendant not only attempted to have sexual intercourse with her against her consent, but he also asked her in effect why she had not consented to this relationship before and saved him the necessity of killing her husband. He also proposed they should flee the locality together and go to Louisiana, where he had previously resided. The case is similar to People v. Cook, supra, in that both the defendants endeavored to establish that the killing was done in legitimate self-defense; and, each being charged with murder, the evidence of motive was not only material but important. That the jury might infer one in the present case from the existence of a desire on defendant's part to continue or initiate a liaison with the wife of the deceased will hardly be disputed, especially in a case where the defendant attempts acts in pursuance of such relation before the body of his victim is cold.

[4] Apparently for the purpose of showing that Mrs. Kester did not in fact consent to defendant's acts, the prosecution, over the objection of defendant, was permitted to introduce evidence showing the effects of her efforts to escape them. To this end a photograph was admitted showing the cut, bruised, and scratched condition of Mrs. Kester's feet caused by contact with rocks, brush, and barbed wire on her way to San Diego, and of her condition of mind on arriving there. In this behalf defendant contends that admitting, for the sake of argument, that the prosecution was entitled to introduce evidence of the assault for the purpose of proving motive, still it should have been confined to evidence of the bare assault, without any of the details thereof. The prosecution had, however, introduced in evidence, without objection, practically all such details and of what followed the assault, including, among other things, all that was said and done by Mrs. Kester and the defendant, both at the gate, and in the tent immediately following the slaying, also of her flight over the mountains in her nightgown and without shoes or stockings. Consequently it cannot reasonably be held that the admission of the photograph showing the condition of her legs, and that she was in an agitated state of mind on reaching San Diego, was of any substantial prejudice to the defendant.

of witnesses to prove that the general reputation of Mrs. Kester for chastity was bad. As to some of these witnesses the evidence was received. As to one or possibly two it was excluded. It is urged on behalf of the defendant that in rejecting any of the proposed testimony the court committed prejudicial error. It is doubtful whether the question of the excluded testimony is so presented by the record that it calls for determination, but we shall, nevertheless, pass on the merits of the rulings. The testimony was apparently offered to rebut the evidence of the prosecution, already referred to, relating to defendant's asserted conduct in attempting to have or having sexual intercourse with Mrs. Kester after the killing, which evidence was admitted on the theory that the defendant's desire to possess the woman furnished a motive for the murder. Assuming, without deciding, that evidence of general reputation for lack of chastity, at a period several years before the killing, is competent to rebut evidence of motive for the murder, yet it does not appear to us that the defendant could have been prejudiced by the rejection of a part of the proffered testimony. The part which was admitted was clear and direct, and we cannot say it was not sufficient to enable the jury to determine the question involved. And if it is contended that the evidence of the lack of chastity was admissible for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of Mrs. Kester, the contention is without support in the authorities. People v. Yslas, 27 Cal. 630; People v. Johnson, 106 Cal. 289, 293, 39 Pac. 622.

[7] Defendant also complains that the testimony of two of his witnesses as to the reputation of Mrs. Kester for truth, honesty, and integrity was improperly excluded. It appears to have been rejected upon the ground that it was too remote; it appearing that the witnesses knew nothing about her reputation in the respects mentioned for the period of approximately 2½ years last past. Assuming, contrary to the great weight of authority (Estate of Akers, 184 Cal. 514, 194 Pac. 706; 3 Wigmore on Evidence [2d Ed.], § 1617; 22 Corp. Jur. [Evidence] § 575; Lawson v. State, 32 Ark. 220; State v. Lanier, 79 N. C. 622; People v. Nunley, 142 Cal. 441-445, 76 Pac. 45) that this testimony was too remote, and that the court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting it on this ground, still the court's action in this regard amounted to no more than a reasonable limitation on the number of witnesses on the subject. The rejected testimony was but cumulative, and in such case the trial court may properly limit the number of witnesses. It is not seriously urged—nor could it be under the attending circumstances—that the limitation was unreasonable, or that prejudice resulted to the defendant, especially as no attempt was made by the prosecution to controvert the testimony that said witness' reputation for veracity was bad. People v. Yokum, 118 Cal. 437, 441, 50 Pac. 686; 4 Wigmore on Ev. § 1908; People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, 89, 122 Pac. 435; People v. Murray, 41 Cal. 66.

[8, 9] The defendant makes two assignments of misconduct: (1) During the examination of a witness the court stated that there was a discrepancy as to the date of the homicide—whether or not the morning following was the 14th or 15th of August. That there was such a discrepancy is not disputed. (2) During the argument of the case the district attorney stated that the defendant claimed that the deceased threw a stick of stovewood at him, whereupon the defendant's counsel assigned this remark as misconduct, adding that there was no evidence that the wood thrown was firewood or stovewood. The evidence was merely that it was a stick of wood. The district attorney, referring to this interruption, stated that it showed to what technicalities counsel was resorting to save "the neck of this defendant."

In regard to the first of these assignments, the matter is so trivial as not to require consideration. The second is scarcely more serious; but in any event the jury was admonished by the court to pay no attention to such matters, and it cannot be seriously urged that the defendant was at all prejudiced thereby.

Because of the gravity of the case we have examined with painstaking care the record and the points advanced by the defendant. We find no substantial error, and are entirely satisfied that the defendant had the benefit of a fair trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LE ROY. (Cr. 2620.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 6, 1923.)

1. Burglary $\S$ 4(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for burglary, evidence aside from mere possession of stolen property held sufficient to sustain a conviction.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 369(7), 1169(1)—Evidence that witness had owned watch found in defendant's camp held prejudicial error.

In a prosecution for burglary, where, among articles found in defendant's abandoned camp, was a watch, admitting evidence of witness that it was her watch, and that it had been taken from her without her consent, which connected defendant with another crime, was prejudicial error requiring reversal.

Lawlor, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Frank Le Roy was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Reversed.

Drapeau, Orr & Gardner, of Ventura, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WILBUR, C. J. [1, 2] The facts in this action are correctly stated in the opinion written by Mr. Justice Houser, which we adopt, as follows:

"Defendant was convicted of the crime of burglary. He appeals from the judgment and from the order of the court denying his motion for a new trial.

"It is first argued that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. There was ample evidence to sustain at the least the following ultimate facts: The person who committed the burglary wore a peculiarly shaped pair of shoes, and that such person had a camp in the river bed. A pair of shoes such as was worn by the burglar, as well as several of the stolen articles, were found in a place where defendant had been 'hobo' camping in the 'jungles of a river bottom.' The tracks of the burglar were followed from the house which was burglarized to a point within 50 feet of defendant's camp. When arrested (which was at a time three months after the date of the burglary) defendant was wearing a shirt which was identified as one which had been stolen at the time the burglary was committed.

"It was not shown that the shoes which were found in the camp were worn by defendant at any time, nor that they were of the size worn by defendant. However, it is admitted that the shoes were of such a size that defendant might have worn them. On the other hand, the defendant in his testimony did give an explanation of his possession of the shirt. Those matters, however, were for the consideration of the jury, going to the point whether or not, from all the evidence in the case, the jury should believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime. Defendant's explanation of his possession of the shirt was undoubtedly considerably weakened by an attack upon his credibility as a witness, arising particularly out of the fact that theretofore he had been convicted of a felony on two separate occasions. (1) While it is true that the mere possession of stolen property, standing by itself, is insufficient evidence upon which a conviction may be sustained, the presence in defendant's abandoned 'hobo' camp of several of the stolen articles, together with the shoes apparently worn by the burglar at the time the offense was committed, and the fact that, when the shirt was found in defendant's possession, he refused to tell where he got it, furnished sufficient additional evidence against defendant to justify the jury in reaching the conclusion that defendant was guilty. People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 482, 485, 76 Pac. 232.

of the offense with which defendant was charged, but it was used as a means of connecting defendant with the occupancy of the camp where the other articles were discovered. In this connection a witness, after identifying the watch as being her property, testified as follows: 'Q. And is there anything inside of the case of the watch that enables you to state that it is your watch? A. There was. Q. And what is inside of the case there, Mrs. Proctor? A. When it was taken from it (me) it had "E. Ormsby" engraved on the inside case, which now has been changed. Q. We ask you, Mrs. Proctor, what it has been changed to? A. E. Kemsley. Q. Semsley now, will you say? A. I would say Semsley.'

"Other testimony in the case showed that defendant had called at the post office for mail addressed to C. Semsley. Defendant's contention is that error was committed by the court in admitting such evidence, for the reason that it insinuated into the minds of the members of the jury the fact that more than one burglary had been committed, and the possibility of defendant being guilty thereof. But there was no direct evidence of the commission of any other burglary, or anything to the effect that the watch had been stolen. The evidence, in substance, was that the engraved name of 'Ormsby' thereon had been changed to 'Semsley.'"

The purpose of the evidence in regard to the watch, as a means of connecting the defendant with the occupancy of the camp, was fully accomplished, by testimony showing that the watch had been found at the camp, and that it contained a name similar to that used by the defendant. The fact that the watch was identified by the witness, Mrs. Proctor, as her watch, and that it had previously had her name engraved therein, was thus wholly immaterial, so far as the avowed purpose for which the evidence was adduced. The court erred in admitting this testimony over the objection of the defendant.

The next question is whether or not the error of the court was so prejudicial to the rights of the defendant as to result in a miscarriage of justice. The witness stated, "this is my watch." This would indicate that, notwithstanding its presence in the hobo camp with the name of the defendant engraved thereon and her own name scratched out, she had never parted with title thereto. The witness also stated that the watch had been taken from her, and, in view of the fact that she stated that it was her watch, and the fact that it was found with the stolen goods belonging to the complaining witness, the clear inference from all the facts and circumstances was that it had been stolen, notwithstanding the fact that the witness did not expressly so state. From the fact that the watch was stolen, the name of the owner removed, and that of the defendant put in its place, the inference would be very clear that the defendant was connected with the crime. Indeed, if the witness had testified that the watch had been taken from her without her consent, the evidence to connect the defendant with that crime would be nearly as full and complete as the evidence tending to connect him with the crime of which he is convicted, with the single exception of the footprints leading from the camp to the place of the burglary, for in one case we have a stolen watch with his name engraved therein, indicating possession, and in the other case we have the actual possession of the stolen shirt.

We cannot escape the conclusion that this evidence was so prejudicial that it probably resulted in the conviction. Under the well-known rule pertaining to criminal cases depending upon circumstantial evidence, it was much easier to account for the possession by the defendant of the stolen shirt three months after it was stolen upon the hypothesis for his innocence, than to account for the possession of a stolen watch from which the name of the owner had been removed and the name of the thief had been substituted. For instance, the defendant was found guilty of going to and entering into the house of the complaining witness with intent to commit the crime of larceny, and the only evidence tending to show that he went to that house and returned therefrom was the footprints made by shoes found at the camp, which, upon the presumption of innocence which required the jury to accept the view of the circumstances most favorable to the defendant, they might well have assumed were worn by some other member of the group at the camp. If the defendant did not aid or abet in the commission of the crime, but accepted the shirt, knowing it was stolen, his offense would not be burglary. The evidence tending to support the verdict, while sufficient to sustain that verdict, was, nevertheless, meager. The defendant was laboring under the extreme disadvantage of having to admit on cross-examination that he had been twice convicted of felony, and, while this evidence was admissible solely for the purpose of discrediting his testimony, it is manifest that the jury was likely to consider it in weighing the incriminating circumstances proved against him.

For the error in admitting this testimony, the judgment must be reversed.

In view of our conclusion, it is unnecessary to pass on the other matters presented by the defendant.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: MYERS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LENNON, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

LAWLOR, J. I dissent.

It is conceded by the main opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict, but, before considering the asserted error in the admission of the evidence touching the watch, I shall refer to other phases of the proof, in order to show that, even if such rulings were erroneous, the admission of the evidence cannot be held to call for a reversal.

According to the record, appellant asked for mail both for "Frank Monroe" and C. Semsley, and on arraignment he gave the name by which he was prosecuted. "Recent possession" of the shirt is established by appellant's own testimony to the effect that, in the first part of September (the burglary was committed on August 24) it was left where he was camped near the Santa Clara bridge, between El Rio and Montalvo, by two men, Art Croten and his father, who drove in with a Chevrolet express car. Art Croten was wearing the shirt at the time. The two men camped with appellant about three days. When departing they left the shirt and some other articles and, he "washed up the shirt and have wore it ever since." Appellant admitted he was living in that camp between the 1st and 10th of September; that he bought the car from the Crotens, paid them $190 in currency, and "they went away with the car and beat me out of the car," took his roll of blankets with them, and that they were more valuable than the roll they brought to the camp and left there. Jacob Cohn, who kept a grocery store at El Rio, testified that appellant bought supplies from him several times in the early part of spring and in October and November. In October, accompanied by appellant, he delivered goods to a "hobo camp" in the river bottom about a mile or a mile and a half north of the bridge, on which occasion he saw two or three other men at the camp. John Donlon, Jr., testified that in the month of April he saw appellant at a camp a mile and a half "up the river in the direction of Santa Paula," above the Montalvo bridge, and that appellant told him he was camped there. This camp was southwest of the Linehan place. He was attracted to the presence of appellant by noise in the brush, that this was the only camp he knew of on the river bottom, and that he had met appellant on a trail in the river bed prior to the meeting at the camp, and two or three weeks later he met him on the road coming from Oxnard. Henry C. Sullivan, a deputy sheriff, testified that the camp where the things were found was "about a mile north, or a little northeast of the Montalvo river bridge, the east end of the Montalvo river bridge"; that Donlon directed him to the camp and was present at the time the things were found. The testimony of Cohn, Donlon, and Sullivan approximates the distance of the camp from the bridge and agrees in the description and location—referring to the camp where the shoes, watch, and jewelry were found—and neither Cohn nor Sullivan refer to any other camp on the river bottom.

Appellant did not testify as to the location of the camp visited by the Crotens, but Sullivan quoted him as stating in the district attorney's office that he lived in the river bottom, west of the bridge. He testified his camp was between El Rio and Montalvo, near the bridge—not giving the distance from the camp to the bridge.

The evidence is, then, that Cohn accompanied appellant to the camp; that Donlon saw appellant at the only camp he knew of in the river bottom; that appellant told him he was camped there; that he directed Sullivan to that camp; and that it was at that camp the things were produced in his presence. None of this testimony was contradicted, nor is it denied that the shoes were worn by appellant, that the shoes, the jewelry, and watch were located in the camp, nor that he brought them there. Appellant's counsel argue that if he was connected with the camp the officers would have contrived to find him there. There is no claim by the defense, and no one testified that there was a camp on the river bottom other than the one where the missing property was located. There is direct evidence that appellant was seen at the camp before the burglary, that he said he camped there, and the only camp shown to exist was that camp, and it was there the things were found. It can hardly be true, in the light of the record, that the shoes were the only evidence that appellant went to and returned from the Linehan house, for the possession of the stolen property is evidence of burglary, and this would cover both the going to and coming from the house during the brief absence of the occupants.

The adverse verdict disposes of the statement in the majority opinion that upon the presumption of innocence the jury may well have assumed the shoes "were worn by some other member of the group at the time." And especially as appellant was the only person the evidence traces to the camp where the shoes were discovered. Moreover, there is no evidence that there was any other occupant of the camp before the burglary.

Appellant's direct examination was limited to the possession of the shirt. There is no counter evidence of any kind that he did not commit the burglary. He admitted two previous convictions of felony, but could not recollect the character of one of them. The evidence given by appellant, including the fantastic story of this admitted hobo buying an automobile from his supposed visitors and paying $190 in currency for it, the car, like his visitors, vanishing into thin air, would alone destroy the defense. The court instructed the jury as to the limited purpose for which the evidence of previous convictions might be considered, and that such evidence would not warrant a verdict of guilty of the crime charged upon any less degree of proof than that required in any other case.

Upon this evidentiary showing there can be no warrant for placing the finding of miscarriage of justice upon the character or quantity of the proof.

The judgment of conviction is to be reversed because the owner of the watch was allowed to testify, "This is my watch," that it had been taken and that her name on the watch had been obliterated and "Semsley" substituted. One tendency of this testimony would be to further identify the time-piece.

If nothing more were shown than that the watch was found in the camp, and that it bore a name appellant was known to have used, the jury would probably draw the inference that he was the owner—a false hypothesis which the prosecution should not allow the jury to assume, even if it more certainly tended to connect appellant with the camp. It follows that the facts as to the watch should have been proved completely, even if the evidence suggested an unexplained possession in appellant. It was open to the defense to request an instruction limiting the purpose for which the jury might consider the evidence as to the watch, and none was proposed. It is the duty of the prosecution to rebut every presumption which, under any theory of the case, might favor innocence, and to anticipate matters of defense sounding in the case of the prosecution when it is believed the accused is guilty. In view of the evidence and the entire record, it should not be held that appellant was prejudiced in his rights by the admission of the evidence in question, even if it be assumed it was not proper to admit it in order to further identify the watch. Under no circumstances can it be said the admission of the evidence worked a miscarriage of justice.

The order denying the motion for a new trial should be affirmed.

BECSEY v. CALIFORNIA TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. (S. F. 10191.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1923.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1924.)

1. Vendor and purchaser — Purchase money paid to trust company held paid to it as agent of vendor.

Where defendant held property conveyed by vendor, under a trust agreement under which moneys received from the land were to be applied to the satisfaction of a mortgage thereon, and defendant was to execute deeds to purchasers when the mortgage was satisfied and a certain percentage of the purchase price as fixed by the vendor had been paid, moneys paid to defendant by plaintiff's predecessor pursuant to a contract of purchase with the vendor, held paid to and accepted by defendant as agent of the vendor.

2. Vendor and purchaser — Purchaser paying purchase price of land to agent of vendor could not recover money from agent.

Where money received by defendant trust company from plaintiff's predecessor, a purchaser of two lots, one for $600 and the other for $400, was paid to defendant as agent of the vendor, under a certain trust agreement between defendant and the vendor under which the purchase money was to be applied so as to satisfy a certain mortgage, and deeds executed by defendant when a certain percentage of the purchase price was paid, as fixed by vendor, the money so paid immediately became the property of the vendor to be applied in accordance with the trust agreement, and plaintiff could not recover the money from defendant where the latter applied it in accordance with that agreement, even if, assuming $995 was paid as alleged, the money was applied in payment of the $400 lot, and the balance on the $600 lot, plaintiff's recourse being against the vendor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Marjorie Becsey, administratrix of the estate of Elizabeth Kyne, deceased, against the California Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James Gartlan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

McCutchen, Olney, Willard, Mannon & Greene and John W. Parker, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, C. J. This is an action to recover the sum of $995. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit.

Plaintiff in this action alleged that her predecessor in interest, Patrick Kyne, had deposited with the defendant $995 in trust, to be invested in certain real estate in the city of San Francisco; that Patrick Kyne had demanded of the defendant that it secure for him a conveyance of the real property; that the defendant refused to do so; and that the defendant, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, had itself purchased the real property in question and sold the same to other parties without plaintiff's knowledge or consent. The defendant denied the allegations of plaintiff's complaint.

[1, 2] It developed on the trial that, instead of the plaintiff's predecessor having intrusted the defendant with $995 with which to purchase for him certain real estate, he had made a contract himself with the Sunnyside Land Company for the purchase of two lots, one for $600 and the other for $400, in a tract of land the legal title to which had been conveyed by the Sunnyside Land Company to the defendant trust company prior to its contract with Patrick Kyne. The defendant held the property under a trust agreement by which all the moneys received from the sale of the land in question were to be paid to the mortgagee of the property, until the mortgage was satisfied. Deeds were to be made by the defendant trust company to the purchasers when a certain percentage of the purchase price fixed by the Sunnyside Land Company had been paid, and then only upon condition that the mortgage covering that portion of the property had been released. The purchaser, Patrick Kyne, paid the entire purchase price of one lot and a considerable portion of the purchase price of the other lot so purchased by him from the Sunnyside Land Company. This money was paid in part to the Sunnyside Land Company and in part to the defendant. Whether paid to one or the other, it was paid in pursuance of the contract for the purchase of the land, and by the agreement between the Sunnyside Land Company and the defendant was to be applied to the payment of the first mortgage upon the land. It is obvious that the moneys paid to the defendant were paid to it and accepted by it in its capacity as agent of the vendor, the Sunnyside Land Company. Inasmuch as the money received by the defendant from Patrick Kyne was paid to it as the agent of the vendor of the land, it is clear that the plaintiff cannot recover the money from the agent, but that her recourse is against the vendor to whom the money was thus paid. It is clear that as soon as the money was paid by Patrick Kyne to the defendant for the Sunnyside Land Company or in pursuance of the relationship created between the Sunnyside Land Company and the defendant by the trust agreement under which the defendant held the title, the money immediately became the property of the Sunnyside Land Company, to be applied in accordance with the agreement of that company contained in the trust agreement between it and the defendant and the other parties participating in the trust agreement. Assuming that the plaintiff made a prima facie showing of payment of the sum of $995, and that this amount was applied to the full amount of the purchase price of the $400 lot and the balance to the payment upon the lot for which the purchase price was $600, it nevertheless follows that the motion for nonsuit was properly granted by the trial court, for the reason that the plaintiff had not established any right to recover the money paid from the defendant. Whether upon proper showing the plaintiff could have established under the trust deed a right to the conveyance of the property from the defendant to her is a question which is not involved in this case, nor is it necessary for us to consider what rights the plaintiff may have against the Sunnyside Land Company, which is not a party to this action.

To recapitulate: The facts alleged by the plaintiff as the basis for her recovery were not true. The money was not intrusted to the defendant by Patrick Kyne to purchase land for him, but was paid by him upon a contract made for the purchase of land, and immediately upon the payment became the property of the Sunnyside Land Company, to be applied in accordance with its agreement and directions. The defendant, having so applied the money in accordance with the instructions of its owner, cannot be held accountable to the plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

RIVERSIDE PORTLAND CEMENT CO. v. TAFT et al. (S. F. 10340.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1923.)

1. Attachment 338—Judgment creditor entitled to return of property taken under replevin bond or value thereof.

Where attached property has been released under replevin bond, plaintiff in attachment is entitled to have all the property taken under the replevin bond returned, or if it cannot be returned then to have judgment for the value of the whole, and is not bound to accept part, but if he does so its value must be deducted.

2. Replevin 1—Possession only involved in action of.

Only the right to possession is involved in replevin action.

3. Attachment 338—Where attaching creditor diverted property from possession of sureties, credit given on bond.

Where attached personal property was turned over to claimants under replevin bond and thereafter attaching creditor obtained judgment, but levy was made on replevied property, under instructions of creditor's attorney, first to satisfy another judgment, and then levy execution in action by the third party claimant, the creditor thereby intermeddled with the property in a way that diverted it from control of sureties so as to entitle them to credit on the bond for the amount diverted.

4. Attachment 338—Amount of money attached but not released by replevin bond deducted from judgment against sureties.

Where personal property and money were attached, but the property was released to claimant under replevin bond, but the money was never discharged from the attachment, in action against replevin sureties the amount of money so attached should be applied in reduction of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by the Riverside Portland Cement Company against Mrs. G. W. Taft and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named and others appeal. Reversed.

Frank Kauke, of Fresno, and El. I. Feemster, of Visalia, for appellants.

A. W. Carlson, of Fresno, and Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is taken because of the refusal of the trial court to reduce the judgment obtained by respondent in an action against appellants as sureties on a claim and delivery bond given for the redelivery of certain personal property by applying a sum of money seized by respondent on attachment levied upon the personal property of respondent's debtor, but which sum of money was not claimed by the third party claimant and was not taken from the sheriff's possession in the replevin suit; and, further, because of the court's refusal or failure to apply the value of certain personal property actually taken possession of in said replevin suit and which was afterwards applied, with the consent and by the direction of respondent, in satisfaction of a judgment obtained in a different action and for which no credit, offset, or recoupment was allowed appellants, as sureties, in the action against them.

Respondent obtained a judgment in the court below against Mrs. G. W. Taft, H. H. Backer, and A. H. Backer, sureties on the claim and delivery bond executed by them with W. W. Taft as principal, in the sum of $7,929.15. The history of the case involves the proceedings of three other cases tried in the superior court of Fresno county. The chronological order of those cases is as follows:

John Grummett commenced an action against the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company to recover the sum of $3,045.25. Judgment for that amount was rendered in his favor in said action on January 20, 1920. This will be referred to as the Grummett suit.

The Riverside Portland Cement Company (respondent herein) commenced its action against the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company some time after the institution of the Grummett suit to recover the sum of $5,000 with interest. An attachment was issued therein, and the sheriff of Fresno county, on April 12, 1917, levied on certain machinery, tools, appliances, and materials used in the manufacture of cement pipe and kindred products, a large amount of manufactured product, and also $990.92 in cash. W. W. Taft claimed ownership of all the attached property except the $990.92, gave a claim and delivery bond, and took the property into his possession. On April 9, 1921, judgment in this action was rendered in favor of respondent and against the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company for the sum of $5,000, with interest from April 20, 1917. This case will be referred to as the attachment suit.

W. W. Taft failed in his action as a third party claimant against Horace Thorwaldson, sheriff, and judgment went against him and the sureties on his claim and delivery bond for the sum of $7,929.15. This sum included the judgment in the attachment suit, to wit, $5,000, together with interest, plus damages and costs. This action will be referred to as the replevin suit.

The attorneys who represented Grummett in his suit against said common debtor, Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company, also represented the respondent in its attachment suit, the defendant sheriff in the replevin suit, and also the respondent in the instant case. This representation of said several parties by the same attorneys, the long delays, due in part to appeals and retrials, in bringing any of said actions to a final determination, and the order in which executions were levied under instructions from the attorneys representing the respective parties, is responsible for a confused situation. Although many months intervened between the entries of judgments in the Grummett suit and the replevin suit, respectively, executions thereon were issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff on the same day with the following written instruction signed by the attorneys who represented both of said judgment creditors:

"Instructions to Sheriff. Under the execution in the case of John Grummett v. Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company, and the execution in the case of W. W. Taft v. Horace Thorwaldson, please levy upon the following described property, to first satisfy the execution the case of Grummett v. Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company and after the satisfaction of that execution, levy upon the same property to satisfy the execution in the case of Taft v. Thorwaldson so far as it may be sufficient."

A list of the property, describing the articles to be levied upon, was appended to the instructions. It included a number of the articles of machinery, appliances, and tools which had been taken over by Taft upon giving the claim and delivery bond. A number of the articles enumerated in said list were, in obedience to the instructions given in the Grummett and replevin suits, taken possession of by the sheriff and subsequently sold at execution sale, bringing $2,290, which amount was applied in part satisfaction of the Grummett judgment. Execution in the replevin suit was returned wholly unsatisfied. Plaintiff in the present case thereupon brought suit on the bond and recovered judgment for the amount of the judgment rendered in the attachment suit, to wit, $6,186.

85. This sum, augmented by damages allowed by the court, aggregated $7,929.15. The last-named sum was the alternative amount fixed in case a delivery of the replevied property could not be made. In the suit prosecuted against the principal and sureties on the bond the court found that the defendants had not returned the personal property released to W. W. Taft, nor had said judgment or any part thereof been satisfied. It also found that the sum of $990.92, which had been levied upon as the property of the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company in the attachment suit and which had never been released from said levy or claimed by any third party, was not in any way "connected with the bond sued on in this action and was not affected by said suit." It also found that substantially all of the property delivered to W. W. Taft by reason of the undertaking sued upon was sold, disposed of, and used up by him long prior to the recovery of the judgment against him for its return, and therefore it was impossible for the appellants to return to the sheriff the property replevied by said Taft.

We are satisfied that the findings of the court upon the two matters above specified are not sustained by the evidence. As to the first proposition, appellants by their answer put in issue their right to have the $990.92, held by respondent by virtue of said writ of attachment, applied as part satisfaction against appellants on the theory that respondent was entitled to recover from them the amount of the judgment recovered from the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company, and no more. This undoubtedly was the measure of appellants' obligation to respondent. The $990.92 item was not and could not have been litigated in the replevin action. In the action against the sureties, however, it was proper for the court to consider the fact that respondent held under attachment said sum of $990.92, which could and should have been applied to appellants' debt. As to the second proposition, the uncontradicted evidence as shown by the property lists is that a portion of the pipe-making machinery and appliances which was taken on execution in the Grummett Case was practically the same property that was levied upon in the attachment suit and afterwards replevied by Taft. From an examination of the property lists it is inferable that the property, including manufactured products, which was sold under the Grummett execution, was equal in value to the property levied upon in the attachment suit. It was not, however, identical in form and did not correspond numerically in manufactured product with the articles levied upon in the attachment suit and later taken over by Taft. It is the claim of appellants that when this property was taken on execution in the Grummett case, under the instructions given by the attorneys who represented both Grummett and the Riverside Portland Cement Company, it amounted to a return of and an acceptance by the latter of said attached property, and exonerated the bond. It is urged that a contrary conclusion would require the appellant sureties to pay the judgment in the replevin suit without getting the property to compensate them for the judgment. This is the precise thing which Hunt v. Robinson, 11 Cal. 262, holds cannot be done.

[1, 2] The general rule in this state is well settled that the respondent was entitled to have all of the attached property taken under the replevin bond returned, and, if it cannot be returned, then to have a judgment for the value of the whole. Only the right of possession is involved in the replevin action. If a portion be accepted, the value thereof should be deducted from the judgment. The respondent, however, is not bound to accept a portion of the property. Whetmore v. Rupe, 65 Cal. 237, 3 Pac. 851; Burke v. Koch, 75 Cal. 356, 17 Pac. 228; Metrovich v. Jovovich, 58 Cal. 341. If there was an acceptance, constructive or otherwise, of the property which was capable of identification by respondent, it should not for this reason alone be held to have accepted property which was not in existence when the attachment was levied and consequently was never in the custody of the court.

Doubtless the attorneys in the instant case, acting in a dual capacity, were attempting to serve the interests of Grummett as well as the interests of the Riverside Portland Cement Company. No doubt the bond of Taft was regarded by them as sufficient to insure the satisfaction of the judgment in the attachment case. This unquestionably accounts for the instructions given by them to the sheriff to first levy the execution issued in the Grummett Case and "after satisfaction of that execution to levy upon the same property to satisfy the execution in the case of Taft v. Thorwaldsen so far as it may be sufficient."

[3, 4] No attempt was made to replevy the $990.92. The personal property taken under the replevin bond was and remained in the custody of the law by virtue of the lien of the attachment. The giving of the replevin bond did not remove or obliterate the lien of the attachment. The doctrine early announced in the case of Hunt v. Robinson, supra, and which has remained unchallenged, is to the effect that a replevin bond gives to the party merely the possession of the property pending the litigation. The effect of such a bond under our statute is not to divest either the title or the lien (attachment or execution) of the other party. The contest is about specific personal property. The recovery of the thing itself and not damages in lieu thereof is the primary object of the suit. The value is recoverable only as an alternative when delivery of the specific property cannot be had. The effect of the replevin bond is simply to give the party the possession of the property pending the litigation.

"It is certain that the unsuccessful party may deliver the property and discharge himself from so much of the judgment as is made up by the assessed value. The very reason why he may do this is because the suit is about that specific property, and because the title is not affected by the replevin bond. But, where property attached is released upon the bond of the defendant, he cannot discharge himself, or his sureties, by a delivery to the sheriff of the same property, for the reason that the lien is gone. In the case of Nickersen v. Chatterton et al., 7 Cal. 568, we held that 'when the plaintiff or defendant in the original suit obtains judgment for the delivery of the property, or if it cannot be found, then for its value, the title in the property vests in the party against whom the judgment is given, subject to the right of the successful party, to take it in discharge of so much of the judgment as is made up by the assessed value of the property.'

"The claimant and his sureties, who have stipulated for the return of the property, would then be left to pay the judgment in the replevin suit, while, at the same time, they would not get the property to compensate them for the judgment. This would certainly place the claimant of property seized by an officer in a worse condition than that of an ordinary trespasser. When A. takes the property of B., and the latter obtains judgment for the value of the property, if A. pays the judgment, he is entitled to the property. The law gives him the property for the judgment. But if the theory of the plaintiff be true, the unfortunate claimant must pay the judgment, and still lose the property. In claiming the property he assumes a double responsibility; while the defendant in the attachment or execution may be fortunate enough to obtain double the value of the property seized by the officer. In reference to such a theory Mr. Justice McLean, in the case of Hagan v. Lucas [10 Peters, 400], already referred to, makes these forcible remarks:

"If the property be liable to execution, a levy must always produce a forfeiture of the condition of the bond; for a levy takes the property out of the possession of the claimant, and renders the performance of this bond impossible. Can a result so repugnant to equity and propriety as this be sustained? Is the law so inconsistent as to authorize the means by which the discharge of a legal obligation is defeated, and at the same time exact a penalty for the forfeiture? This would indeed be a reproach to the law and to justice."

"But the theory that the possession obtained by virtue of the writ of replevin is only temporary, and does not divest the title or discharge the lien, is the most logical, and at the same time the most just to all parties. The party ultimately entitled to the property has a double security; while the party who replevies it does not incur the extraordinary risk of having to pay the judgment and also to lose the property. And the defendant, in the attachment or execution, has no opportunity to obtain two prices for his property.

"If these views be correct, the lien of the attachment continued, and when the same property came again into the hands of the sheriff, the condition of the replevin bond, to return the property, was fulfilled. The property was then liable to a second levy, but such second levy was subject to the levy under the prior attachment." Hunt v. Robinson, supra.

The $990.92 seized in the attachment suit has been held undisturbed, and is still held unclaimed by any other party litigant. It has never been discharged from the attachment lien. No one has disputed the right of respondent to have that amount applied to its judgment in the attachment suit. Such an application would reduce the judgment of respondent against the sureties to that extent. The sureties possess every right that Taft had. They are entitled to a recoupment to the extent of the sum of money held by respondent and which it should apply in partial satisfaction of its judgment against the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company. Under the authority last cited, the sureties were certainly entitled to all other personal property subject to identification or its value which they obligated themselves to make good.

Respondent undoubtedly knew that a portion, at least, of the property described in the instructions to the sheriff was the identical property that had been attached and replevied by Taft. Extensive lists were made of all the property attached and afterwards taken over by Taft in the replevin action.

Respondent consented that the personal property which had been relinquished by Taft should first be applied to the extinguishment of the Grummett judgment. This act was an assumption of authority over said property. It thereby directed that any claim it had against said property as growing out of the attachment lien or arising from any source be made secondary to the Grummett execution. Respondent at least became an intermeddler in a way that diverted the property from the control or possession of the sureties who owed Grummett no obligation and who had a right to the property if compelled to pay the debt owing by the Fresno Glazed Cement Pipe Company to respondent.

We are of the opinion that the judgment of respondent should be reduced by allowing as credits the following: The $990.92 held by virtue of respondent's attachment lien; also the value of the personal property taken in the replevin action and capable of identification, and which was thereafter sold in satisfaction of the Grummett judgment.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed.

In re RELPH'S ESTATE. (Sac. 3362.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1923.)

1. Wills ⚡384—Directed verdict reversed regardless of errors if evidence sufficient, but errors disregarded if evidence insufficient.

Where judgment in will contest was for proponents on directed verdict, if there was evidence sufficient to support material allegations on any issue presented, it must be reversed regardless of errors in admission of evidence; while if evidence was insufficient all errors which did not prevent introduction of additional evidence thereon would be immaterial.

2. Evidence ⚡217—Declarations of subscribing witness to will not original evidence.

In a will contest, statements by a subscribing witness after testator's death to the effect that testator had not left a will, were not admissible as original evidence.

3. Witnesses ⚡321—Witness not to be impeached by party calling him except for surprise.

A witness cannot be impeached by the party who calls him, except on a showing of surprise.

4. Witnesses ⚡380(5)—Witness to will held witness of contestants, and not subject to impeachment.

In a will contest, where subscribing witness to will had been examined by the court on preliminary proof, and thereafter called by contestants on issues which were to be tried by jury, he became a witness for contestants, and could not be impeached by them by showing prior contradictory statements, except on showing of surprise.

5. Wills ⚡272—Will contest before probate involves two proceedings.

When a will is contested before probate there are two proceedings, one being the petition for probate of the will, and the other a contest thereof.

6. Wills ⚡272—Probate proceeding and contest contrasted.

A petition for probate of a will is an ex parte proceeding in rem, in which proponent tenders issues of fact relative to validity, and, while all persons interested are in a sense parties, they are not active parties litigant, the burden being on proponent to prove his allegations; but a contest is an adversary proceeding, the parties to which are all persons interested in the estate who have filed grounds of opposition to probate and those who have appeared and answered, the only issues being those which are framed by the pleadings.

7. Wills ⚡288(1)—Burden of proof of issues in contest on contestants.

In a will contest, the burden of proof as to the issues rests on contestants, and proponents need not submit evidence until contestants shall have produced some evidence legally sufficient to support their allegations.

8. Wills ⚡324(1)—Evidence and issues of fact in proceeding to probate will for court.

In proceedings to probate a will, as distinguished from a contest, evidence and issues of fact are for the court, even though a jury may be demanded to try issues on the contest.

9. Witnesses ⚡267—Granting right to cross-examine in probate proceedings is matter of grace.

In a proceeding to probate a will, granting the contestants the right to cross-examine witnesses is a matter of grace, and not of right.

10. Wills ⚡322—Order of proof in probate and contest proceeding in court's discretion.

In a will contest, the order of proof rests in the court's discretion, and it may direct preliminary proofs on the petition for probate to be made either before or after hearing issues on the contest.

11. Wills ⚡263—In probate proceeding, contestants not parties.

In a proceeding to probate a will, contestants are not parties.

12. Wills ⚡322—Better practice to hear evidence in proceeding to probate in absence of jury.

In a will contest, it is better practice for the trial court to hear preliminary proof on the petition for probate in the jury's absence.

13. Wills ⚡384—Contestants not prejudiced by refusal of right to impeach witness.

In a will contest, where contestants called a subscribing witness, who denied that he had made statements that testator left no will, and the court refused to permit them to call witnesses to impeach him, as such impeaching testimony would not have supplied anything affirmative in support of allegations of their contest, where there was no other evidence to overcome presumption of testator's sanity, contestants were not thereby prejudiced.

14. Wills ⚡109—Will held legally executed.

Where will as drafted by the attorney was twice read by testator before execution, and its provisions met with his approval, and the dispositive provisions were in full accord with his express desire, it was executed in full compliance with Civ. Code, § 1276.

15. Wills ⚡52(6)—Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of testator's sanity.

Where testator, aged 19, became seriously ill, and was taken to a hospital where at times he was delirious, evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of sanity with respect to his condition at time the will was executed.

16. Evidence ⚡474(4)—No abuse of discretion in holding witness incompetent to testify as to testator's sanity as an "intimate acquaintance."

In a will contest, where no attempt was made to qualify a nurse as an expert on the subject of insanity, and her testimony could have been admissible only on the theory that she was an "intimate acquaintance" of testator (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10), and it was shown that she had never seen testator until the day before, there was no abuse of discretion in holding her incompetent to testify.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Intimate Acquaintance.]

17. Wills ⚡384—Whether witness as to sanity of testator was intimate acquaintance rests in trial court's discretion which will only be disturbed for abuse.

Determination of the question whether a witness as to testator's sanity has been shown to be an intimate acquaintance is committed in the first instance to the trial court's discretion, and only on showing of abuse thereof will its rulings be disturbed on appeal.

18. Wills ⚡294—Cross-examination of witness as to what he had once done for testator held competent.

Where subscribing witness to will stated that testator had the habit of coming to him for advice, and that testator asked him whether he would do the same thing again as he did when testator went into the army, it was proper for him to state on cross-examination by proponent that testator in 1918 delivered to him an olographic will in favor of the same beneficiary; such evidence being relevant and material.

19. Wills ⚡360—Objection as to receiving secondary evidence not entertained if first urged on appeal.

In a will contest, even though it be conceded that secondary evidence of the contents of an olographic will should not have been received without first requiring proof of a search therefor, and that it could not be found, where contestants did not object on that ground, the objection, which might have been cured had it been presented at trial, will not be entertained when first urged on appeal.

20. Wills ⚡166(1)—Evidence insufficient to show will unduly influenced.

In a will contest, evidence held insufficient to show any pressure which overpowered testator's mind or overcame his volition at the time will was made.

21. Wills ⚡163(5)—Rule as to beneficiary active in preparation of will held inapplicable.

In a will contest, the rule that one who unduly profits by a will as beneficiary, and who sustains a confidential relation to testator and participated in procuring the will, has burden to show that will was not induced by coercion or fraud, did not apply merely because the beneficiary's half-brother participated in preparation of will.

22. Wills ⚡327—Directed verdict against contestants held proper.

In a will contest where it was alleged that it was not legally executed, that testator was not of sound mind, and was unduly influenced, but there was no evidence to support such allegations, a directed verdict for proponents was proper.

23. Wills ⚡384—Excluding evidence as to alleged date of execution not prejudicial error.

Where will was alleged to have been executed while testator was of unsound mind on December 17th, and there was no showing of difference as to his condition on that date and the day following, there was no prejudicial error in excluding evidence that the will was executed on December 18th.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Glenn G. Relph, deceased. On proceedings to contest will. From judgment admitting will to probate, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky and Robert L. Beardslee, both of Stockton, for appellants.

J. B. Curtin, of Sonora, for respondent.

MYERS, J. Contestants appeal herein from a judgment admitting a will to probate, following a directed verdict. Glenn G. Relph, the testator, died on the 21st day of December, 1919, at the age of 20 years, leaving as his next of kin certain uncles, aunts, and cousins, and leaving a document purporting to be his last will and testament, which bore date December 17, 1919, and is the instrument here in controversy. By it he bequeathed his entire estate to Miss Ila Blackwell, who was described therein as his affianced wife, and who was named therein as executrix without bonds. She having offered the will for probate, written grounds of opposition thereto were filed by contestants herein, uncles of the testator, upon the grounds that the same was not executed, published, acknowledged, or witnessed as required by law, that the testator was not of sound mind at the time of the execution thereof, and that the will was the product of the undue influence of said Ila Blackwell and of John A. Marconi, one of the subscribing witnesses thereto. The proponent having filed her written answer to the opposition, wherein she denied substantially all of the material allegations thereof, the matter finally came on for trial with the result above noted. The grounds urged upon this appeal are errors of law in the admission and rejection of evidence, and that the trial court erred in directing the verdict, for the reason that the evidence was sufficient to sustain each of the grounds of contest.

[1] The claimed errors in the admission and exclusion of evidence are more than 60 in number, but it is not necessary to here consider any of these which did not operate to prevent contestants from introducing additional evidence. The judgment appealed from being predicated upon a directed verdict, it is manifest that, if there was evidence legally sufficient to support the material allegations of the contest upon any one or more of the issues presented, the case must be reversed regardless of the commission of errors in the admission of evidence. On the other hand, if the evidence was legally insufficient to support the allegations of the contest upon any of those issues, it follows that all errors which did not operate to prevent contestants from introducing additional evidence thereon would be wholly immaterial.

[2] The great majority of the claimed errors involve the same point, to wit, the contention that the trial court erred in excluding evidence offered by contestants for the purpose of impeaching the witness John A. Marconi, which evidence was clearly incompetent for any other purpose whatsoever. This is the point chiefly relied upon by contestants upon this appeal, and an outline of the history of the trial is necessary to its clear understanding.

The case came on for trial, and, a jury having been impaneled and sworn, the trial judge stated that he would hear the preliminary proof as to the document claimed to be the last will and testament, and that he would himself examine the witnesses upon said preliminary proof. Thereupon Ila Blackwell, proponent, was sworn, and testified as to the death of the deceased, the estate left by him, and other jurisdictional facts. John A. Marconi and Mary Marconi, subscribing witnesses to the will, were sworn, and each testified to the circumstances of the execution of the will, all in response to questions from the trial judge. During the examination of these witnesses the court stated in answer to questions of attorney for contestants that the contestants were not bound by the testimony of the aforesaid witnesses, as it was only making preliminary proof. At the conclusion of their testimony the trial judge said:

"The court will hold the preliminary proof will show the prima facie execution of the document, so that you may go ahead with your contest immediately after the opening of court, Mr. Levinsky [counsel for contestants], at 1:30."

Thereupon, at the reconvening of court, contestants "went forward" and called John A. Marconi as their witness, and he was again sworn as a witness and examined by them as to the circumstances of his relations with the testator and the preparation and execution of the will, after which he was cross-examined by proponent upon the same subjects.

After certain other witnesses had been called and examined by contestants they recalled Marconi, and endeavored to prove by him that after the death of the testator he had made statements in the presence of certain of the contestants and at a designated time and place to the effect that the testator had not left a will. This was excluded by the trial court upon objection of the proponent. Counsel for contestants then asked for a continuance on the ground that certain of their witnesses were not present, whereupon the court said to him:

"You have the right to cross-examine this witness as to the testimony which was introduced this morning. If you want to cross-examine on that you may do so."

Counsel for contestants then proceeded to cross-examine Marconi upon the testimony which he had given upon the "preliminary proof," in the course of which the trial court stated, in response to an inquiry from counsel for proponent:

"This cross-examination is permitted simply upon preliminary testimony which was taken by the court this morning."

Counsel for proponent then requested the court to instruct the jurors whether or not they were to consider it, to which the court replied:

"I have stated it is for the court, not for the jury."

The cross-examination then proceeded, and in the course of it contestants were permitted, over the objection of proponent, to ask the witness if he had not subsequent to the death of the testator made statements indicating that the latter had not left a will, and if he had not made statements on the evening of the day when the will is claimed to have been executed indicating that in his opinion the testator at that time was not of sound mind. The times, places, and persons present, with respect to each of the claimed declarations, were designated in the questions. He answered each of them in the negative. Thereafter contestants called various witnesses, by whom they sought to prove that the witness Marconi had made the declarations at the times and places indicated in the questions which had been put to him. This proof was excluded by the court upon the objection of proponent. In answer to a question from counsel for contestants for an explanation of his ruling, the trial judge said:

"There is no foundation laid for it, to start with; couldn't be any foundation laid, under the circumstances of the case, at the present time. I will state it because you don't seem to comprehend the ruling of the court. If, when it comes to the proponents' side of the case, and the proponents put Mr. Marconi on the stand, and he testifies, then you can ask him if he didn't make such and such declaration, then bring back the witness. That state of the case has not been reached."

[3] This ruling was clearly correct. The witness Marconi was in no sense a party to the proceeding or in privity with any party thereto. His declarations or admissions made out of court and out of the presence of the parties would have no value as original evidence. They would be pure hearsay and inadmissible for any purpose, except to impeach him as a witness. If it had been shown that the witness Marconi had stated in the presence of various persons that "Glenn Relph was utterly insane during that entire week of his last sickness," this would not have been competent evidence as to the testator's mental condition. It could not have been considered by the jurors as tending to prove anything whatever upon that question. It could have been considered by them only as reflecting upon the veracity and reliability of Marconi as a witness. Thiele v. Newman, 118 Cal. 571, 48 Pac. 713. But a witness cannot be thus impeached by the party who calls him, except upon a showing of surprise, which was not made here. People v. Johnson, 131 Cal. 511, 63 Pac. 842; People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 Pac. 101; Bollinger v. Bollinger, 154 Cal. 695, 99 Pac. 196.

[4] Appellants invoke the rule that a witness is generally regarded as the witness of the party first calling him. Applying that rule to the situation herein, it still follows that Marconi was the witness of contestants in this proceeding. He had not been called as a witness for proponent in the proceeding upon the contest of the will, the issues in which were to be tried by the jury, but solely upon the proceeding for the probate of the will, the issues upon which were addressed solely to the court.

[5-7] When a will is contested before probate there are two separate and distinct proceedings pending before the court. One is the petition for the probate of the will. The other is the contest of the probate of the will. Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 414, 73 Pac. 1070, 74 Pac. 441; Estate of McDermott, 148 Cal. 43, 49, 82 Pac. 842; Estate of Cullberg, 169 Cal. 365, 146 Pac. 888. The petition for the probate of a will is distinctly a proceeding in rem. Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 585, 150 Pac. 989; Estate of Allen, 176 Cal. 632, 169 Pac. 364. The petitioner or proponent appears therein as plaintiff and tenders to all of the world all of the issues of fact relevant to the ultimate question of the validity of the will. While all persons interested in the estate are in a sense parties defendant thereto, there are no defendants in the sense of active parties litigant in this proceeding. It is in a sense an ex parte proceeding, in which the burden rests upon the petitioner to prove all the material allegations of his petition, whether denied or not, and the responsibility is upon the court to guard and protect the interests of all persons interested therein. The contest of a will, on the other hand, while a proceeding in rem, is at the same time an adversary proceeding, the parties to which consist, on the one hand, of those persons interested in the estate who have appeared and filed written grounds of opposition to the probate of the will (commonly referred to as the contest), and, on the other hand, those persons interested in the will who have appeared and filed written answer thereto. The only issues of fact involved therein are those which are framed by the allegations of the contest and the denials of the answer. Estate of Gregory, 133 Cal. 131, 136, 65 Pac. 315. As to those issues the burden of proof rests upon the contestants (Estate of Latour, supra; Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695, 9 Ann. Cas. 795; Estate of Cullberg, 169 Cal. 365, 146 Pac. 888), and the proponents are not called upon to submit any evidence until the contestants shall have produced some evidence legally sufficient to support their allegations upon one or more of those issues. If the contestants fail to produce such evidence, the decision of the contest must be against them, even though the proponents produce no evidence therein whatsoever. Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 421, 73 Pac. 1070, 74 Pac. 441.

[8-11] In the proceeding for the probate of the will, as distinguished from the proceedings upon the contest, the evidence and the issues of fact are solely for the consideration and determination of the court, even though a jury may have been demanded and impaneled for the trial of the issues upon the contest. Estate of Latour, supra; Estate of McDermott, supra. The contestants are not parties to this proceeding, and have no right to appear therein (Estate of Latour, supra), but the trial court, having itself the right to cross-examine the witnesses produced therein, may, in the exercise of its discretion, permit counsel for contestants so to do (Estate of Cullberg, supra). But when such permission is granted it is as a matter of grace, and not in recognition of a right possessed by contestants. The matter of the order of proof rests in the sound discretion of the trial court and it may, in the exercise of that discretion, direct the proofs upon the petition for the probate of the will (commonly referred to as the preliminary proof) to be made either before or after the hearing of the issues upon the contest. Estate of Smith, 176 Cal. 729, 171 Pac. 289. But whether the hearing upon the so-called preliminary proof be had before or after the hearing upon the contest, the evidence therein is addressed solely to the trial court, and the contestants are not parties thereto. The trial court herein followed the procedure recommended by Mr. Justice Shaw in the opinion upon application for rehearing in Estate of Latour, supra. In the proceeding upon the contest of the will the petitioner for the probate thereof is not even a necessary party litigant thereto. It sometimes happens that after he has filed his petition for the probate of the will, and written grounds of opposition thereto have been filed, he elects to leave the defense of the will to other persons, and accordingly files no answer to the contest, and therefore never becomes a party litigant therein.

[12] It doubtless would have been better practice for the trial court to have heard the evidence adduced upon the preliminary proof herein in the absence of the jury. This would have eliminated the possibility of any confusion in the mind of counsel or jurors as to what evidence was to be considered by the latter, but no objection was made on behalf of any party to the course which was followed by the court herein. Counsel for all parties acquiesced therein, at least tacitly, and the trial judge made it plain by repeated declarations that the evidence adduced upon the preliminary proof was for the consideration of the court alone, and not for the jury.

[13] But, even if it be assumed that the testimony of the witnesses upon the preliminary proof was to be considered by the jury as a part of the evidence directed to the issues upon the contest, and that the contestants were therefore entitled to impeach the witness Marconi, nevertheless they were not prejudiced herein by the action of the court in denying them that right. If they had succeeded in effectually and completely impeaching the witness Marconi, the sole effect thereof would have been to eliminate his testimony from the consideration of the jury—to erase it all, as it were. It would not have had the effect of supplying any affirmative testimony in support of the allegations of their contest. Marconi had testified upon the preliminary proof in response to a question by the court that in his opinion the testator was of sound mind at the time of the execution of the will. Assume this testimony to have been completely destroyed by the impeachment of this witness, and we still have left the presumption of sanity which would compel a finding against contestants upon this issue, unless they produced some evidence which was legally sufficient to sustain a finding of mental incompetence. Marconi also testified to the circumstances of the execution of the will. Assume that testimony also to have been completely wiped out by his impeachment and we have left the testimony of Mary Marconi to the effect that the will had been executed in accordance with all of the statutory requirements. Assume her testimony also to have been completely eliminated from the case, and we are still faced by the fact that the jury would have been compelled to find against the contestants upon the issue of nonexecution, unless they produced some evidence which tended affirmatively to prove such nonexecution. Estate of Latour, supra.

[14] This brings us to a consideration of appellants' contention that the court erred in directing the verdict, for the reason that the evidence was sufficient to support findings in their favor upon the issues presented by the contest. With respect to the issue of nonexecution, contestants' claim is thus stated in their brief:

"The document is not the last will and testament of Glenn G. Relph, deceased, in that he did not request or direct the preparation thereof. Neither did he request or direct the contents thereof. Neither did he know the contents thereof at the time of the alleged execution thereof."

As we gather from their argument, this claim is chiefly predicated upon the circumstances that the provisions in the will nominating Miss Blackwell as executrix thereof, with power to sell the property of the estate, and directing that she be not required to furnish bonds, were not requested or suggested by the testator, or by any one in his behalf, but were inserted therein by the attorney who drew the will, of his own motion. It does appear, however, that the will as drafted by the attorney was twice read by the testator before the execution thereof, and that its provisions apparently met with his complete approval. With respect to the dispositive provisions of the will, it further appears that they were in full accord with the testator's expressed desire "to see Ila get what I have if anything happens to me." The testimony shows, without conflict, that the will was executed in full compliance with all the essential requirements of section 1276, Civil Code. See Estate of Cullberg, supra; Estate of Dow, 181 Cal. 106, 183 Pac. 794.

[15] With respect to the issue of unsoundness of mind, the utmost that can be said to be established by the evidence in support of contestants' claim may be summoned up as follows: That the testator became seriously ill on Monday, the 15th of December, and was then taken to a hospital for treatment; that he was then suffering great pain, and his body, hands, and face were badly swollen; that a day or two later one eye was swollen shut and the other nearly so; that on the night of Tuesday, the 16th, he was very restless, tossing around and talking quite at random; that on Wednesday evening, December 17th, he was very sick, suffering great pain, breathing very hard, spoke in a choked sort of voice, complained of the heat when it was not warm, and at times during that evening he spoke irrationally and at other times he spoke rationally; that on Thursday evening he was very sick, was groaning and vomiting, and trying to mumble to himself, and when spoken to did not reply; that at times during the nights of Wednesday and Thursday he wanted to get up, and said he wanted to go get himself something to eat, and wanted to go down town and buy him some clothes, and called to his horses, and called them by name; that on Friday during the daytime he seemed to be in a great deal of pain, was groaning, and was very restless and talked irrationally. There is no evidence whatever of any mental weakness or delirium during the daytime on either Wednesday, the 17th, or Thursday, the 18th, and the will is claimed to have been executed about noon on the 17th. It is clear that the evidence was wholly insufficient to overcome the presumption of sanity with respect to the testator's condition at that time. See In re Redfield, 116 Cal. 637, 48 Pac. 794; Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 Pac. 1085; In re Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 Pac. 172, 711; Estate of Carithers, 156 Cal. 422, 105 Pac. 127.

[16, 17] It is of some significance that several uncles and an aunt of the testator who testified at the trial (among them the two contestants) were shown to have been with the testator repeatedly during his last illness, yet none of them testified he was of unsound mind. The only witness for contestants of whom this question was asked was Miss Joens, a nurse who attended testator during part of his last illness. Proponent's objection thereto upon the ground that no foundation had been laid and that the witness was not competent was sustained, and this ruling is complained of as error. No attempt was made to qualify her as an expert upon this subject, and her testimony could have been admissible only upon the theory that she was an "intimate acquaintance" of the testator. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 10. It was shown that she had never met nor seen the testator until the afternoon of December 16th, the day before the will was executed. The determination of the question whether or not a witness has been shown to be an "intimate acquaintance" is committed in the first instance to the sound discretion of the trial court. It is only upon a clear showing of abuse of such discretion that its ruling thereon will be disturbed on appeal. In re Wax, 106 Cal. 343, 351, 39 Pac. 624; People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 360, 75 Pac. 1093; Estate of McKenna, 143 Cal. 580, 584, 77 Pac. 461. No such showing is here made. We do not find the slightest ground for concluding that the trial court abused its discretion herein. An utter stranger does not ordinarily become the intimate acquaintance of another within less than 24 hours after their first meeting. There is nothing in the case of Estate of Budan, 156 Cal. 230, 104 Pac. 442, which conflicts with this conclusion. There a nurse who had been in attendance upon the testator during every hour of the day over a period of three days, and who had talked with him daily on various subjects, was permitted by the trial court to testify as an intimate acquaintance. All that this court decided upon that point was that such ruling could not be said to be a clear abuse of its discretion by the trial court. We are not called upon to here determine whether or not the trial court would have been guilty of an abuse of discretion if it had admitted this testimony.

[18, 19] As to the issue of undue influence, the evidence showed that John A. Marconi, one of the witnesses to the will, was a half-brother of Miss Blackwell, the sole beneficiary; that he had known the testator between six and seven years; that their relations were very friendly, and that the testator was in the habit of coming to him for advice; that on Monday, December 16th, the testator said to him, "John, do you know what you done for me when I went to the army? Do you know what I gave you when I went to the army?" to which the witness answered, "Yes;" and the testator said, "Will you do the same thing for me again?" to which the witness answered in the affirmative, and the testator said, "I am awfully bad off. You may not think it, but I am. Something may happen to me. I dreamed of my mother last night. I had a talk with her. I suppose you know the only one that is near to me is Ila, and in case anything happens to me I want you to prepare something to help me out in this matter to see Ila gets what I have if anything happens to me." Upon cross-examination the witness explained the reference to "what I gave you when I went to the army" by stating that in 1918, shortly before testator enlisted in the army, he had delivered to the witness an olographic will whereby he bequeathed all of his property to Ila Blackwell; that the witness had kept the same until testator's return from the army, when the witness had returned it to the testator and had not seen it since. That testimony was admitted over contestants' objection that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, not cross-examination." That it was cross-examination is clearly apparent. That it was both relevant and material is equally clear. If it be conceded that the court should not have received secondary evidence of the contents of the olographic will without first requiring proof of a search therefor, and that the same could not be found, the answer is that contestants did not object upon this ground, and an objection which might have been cured had it been presented at the trial will not be entertained when made for the first time upon appeal. The witness Marconi then went to Stockton, employed a lawyer, and instructed him to prepare a will for the testator bequeathing the entire estate to Miss Blackwell, which was done, and the witness paid the attorney for his services and returned to the hospital and delivered the draft of the will to the testator, who then read it, and again on the following day at noon reread it and executed it. When the will had been signed and executed the testator said to the two witnesses, "Now, Mary and John, can I depend" or "will you see that Ila gets all that I have?" The beneficiary, Miss Blackwell, was not present at any time during the execution of the will.

[20] Respondent calls our attention in this connection to the fact that the only undue influence pleaded herein is found in the allegations that the respondent and Marconi procured the execution of the will by making certain alleged false representations to the testator, and that there is not a scintilla of evidence to support those allegations, and she invokes the rule that, where fraud or undue influence is relied upon as a ground for contest, the facts constituting it must be alleged, and contestants can prevail only upon proof of such facts. Estate of Gharky, 57 Cal. 274, 279; Estate of Kilborn, 158 Cal. 593, 112 Pac. 52; Estate of Kile, 72 Cal. 131, 133, 13 Pac. 320. But it is not necessary to apply this rule in order to affirm the action of the trial court upon this issue. There was an utter lack of any proof of pressure which overpowered the mind of the testator or overcame his volition at the very time the will was made. Estate of Gleason, 164 Cal. 756, 130 Pac. 872; Estate of Clark, 170 Cal. 418, 149 Pac. 828; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 Pac. 932; Estate of Stoddart, 174 Cal. 606, 163 Pac. 1010; Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 460, 117 Pac. 532; Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 193, 64 Pac. 294; Estate of Morcel, 162 Cal. 188, 121 Pac. 733.

[21] Contestants, in reply, invoke the rule that "where one who unduly profits by the will as a beneficiary thereunder sustains a confidential relation to the testator, and has actually participated in procuring the execution of the will, the burden is on him to show that the will was not induced by coercion or fraud" (Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 384, 168 Pac. 561, 562; Estate of Nutt, 181 Cal. 522, 528, 185 Pac. 393), and that "a 'presumption of undue influence' arises from proof of the existence of a confidential relation between the testator and such a beneficiary, 'coupled with activity on the part of the latter in the preparation of the will.'" (Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 261, 104 Pac. 6). The rule is well recognized, but is not applicable to the facts herein. Miss Blackwell, the beneficiary, not only was not shown to have been active in the preparation of the will, but was not shown to have participated in any way in procuring its execution. She testified that she did not even know that the testator had executed a will until some weeks after his death. Conceding that because of her interest in the case the jury might have disbelieved this testimony, there is no evidence in the case that she did in fact have any earlier knowledge that a will had been or was to be executed. Marconi, who was active in the preparation of the will and participated in procuring its execution, was not a beneficiary thereunder, and did not sustain a confidential relation to the testator. Neither is there any evidence that he was in any sense an agent of Miss Blackwell, or that there was any concert of purpose or concert of action between them. The single circumstance that he was her half-brother, standing alone, is of no importance.

[22] We are satisfied, not only that the action of the trial court in granting the motion for an instructed verdict was correct, but that it would have been error to deny the motion.

[23] But one more assignment of error need be considered herein. Marconi had testified that according to his best recollection the proposed will was drafted by the attorney on the afternoon of December 16th, and he testified positively that it was not executed until noon of the day following the day upon which it had been drafted. Contestants called as a witness the attorney who had prepared the will, and sought to show by him that it had not been drafted until the afternoon of December 17th, from which the conclusion would follow that it was not executed until noon of the 18th. The trial court excluded this evidence, and its action in so doing was clearly erroneous. Contestants were entitled to prove, if they could do so by competent evidence, the precise date and hour when the will was executed. This was a fact which was material and relevant to each of the issues upon the contest. But we are unable to see that contestants were injured in the least by this ruling. The evidence is to the effect that the mental and physical condition of the testator was substantially the same on the 18th as on the 17th. There is, in fact, no evidence of any change in these respects on those two dates. Therefore, if we assume that the contestants would, in fact, have proved that the will was executed on the 18th instead of the 17th, such proof would have added nothing whatever to the case in support of their allegations upon the contest.

The judgment is affirmed.

SIMONTON et al. v. LOS ANGELES TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al. (L. A. 6902.)

1. Executors and administrators §315(4)—Equity may grant relief against decree of distribution obtained by extrinsic fraud.

The fraudulent concealment, by a testator's widow, of the common property, from the attention of the probate court in the administration of testator's estate, was extrinsic fraud, and a court of equity has jurisdiction to interpose and furnish appropriate relief from the final decree of distribution obtained by the employment of that fraud.

2. Trusts §102(2)—Title to legatees' estate vesting on death of testator not changed by fraudulent withholding by executrix, and her distributees will be declared involuntary trustees for rightful owners.

Where legatees' estate, limited in remainder, in view of Civ. Code, § 694, vested immediately on the death of testator, the title to the property was not changed by the fraudulent omission of the executrix to account for it as a part of testator's estate, and where, on her later death, such property was distributed, equity will declare her distributees to be involuntary trustees of the rightful owners.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by J. G. Simonton and others against the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Stewart & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

George W. Prince, Jr., and Thomas C. Ridgway, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Jesse A. Gyger, of Los Angeles, amicus curiae.

SEAWELL, J. A petition for a rehearing was granted in this case, and it is therefore before us for further consideration. The principal reason for granting the petition was to correct and expunge the following misstatement of law which appeared in the last paragraph thereof: "The appellants here are not the heirs of Jane Simonton, and take nothing by her will."

The court does not wish to be misunderstood as to the specific personal property subject to litigation. Appellants are entitled to litigate in this action only the one-half of the personal property alleged to have been omitted from G. W. Simonton's estate, and which property was claimed by them as remaindermen under the will of G. W. Simonton, deceased, adversely to the estate of Jane Simonton, deceased, and not as her heirs or under her will. The decree of distribution as made in the estate of Jane Simonton as to all other property has become final, and is not subject to further disturbance under the issues as framed and the law as settled in the matter of the Estate of Jane Simonton, deceased, 183 Cal. 53, 190 Pac. 442. To what extent, if at all, the record in the proceedings of the case last mentioned may be urged as a bar to the present action for the remainder in the other half of the property, after the termination of Jane Simonton's life estate therein, cannot now be determined, as the record is not properly before us, and we are not in a position to say, and therefore express no opinion on the subject.

We readopt as the law of the case the following portions of our former opinion enlarged by an insertion of new matter which appears between the quoted portions:

"This proceeding was brought to impress a trust upon certain specified personal property consisting of shares of the capital stock of certain banks, trust companies, etc., the ownership of which is a matter of dispute, distributed to respondents by final decree of the probate court of the county of Los Angeles in the Matter of the Estate of Jane Simonton, deceased. The Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, was made a party for the sole reason that it is the executor of the last will and testament of Jane Simonton, deceased.

"Appellants by a second amended complaint allege, first, that Jane Simonton, as the executrix of the last will and testament of her predeceased husband, G. W. Simonton, fraudulently and designedly concealed said personal property claimed by appellants to have been common property of said G. W. Simonton and his wife, Jane Simonton, from the notice, attention, and consideration of the probate court in the administration of the estate of said G. W. Simonton, and the same was not mentioned, reported or accounted for by her as executrix of said estate but was fraudulently and wrongfully appropriated by her to her own personal use and benefit, in violation of her trust and to the prejudice of appellants, children and descendants of children of G. W. Simonton, deceased, by a former marriage. It is further alleged that appellants had no knowledge of the existence of said personal property or means of discovering the existence of the same until after said property had been inventoried and returned by the executor of the last will of said Jane Simonton as a part of the separate property of her estate. Said property was by the final decree in the estate of said Jane Simonton distributed to respondents, members of her branch of the family, as provided by section 1386, subdiv. 8, Civil Code, to the exclusion of appellants.

"By way of a second cause of action appellants allege, secondly, that said personal property was not inventoried or accounted for by said Jane Simonton, as executrix of her husband's estate; for the reason that she entertained the false belief and was laboring under a mistake to the effect that it was her separate property and was no part of her said husband's estate, or that it was omitted by or through other mistake not shown to appellants.

"A general demurrer was sustained to both causes of action. Appellants refused to amend, and judgment was entered accordingly for respondents. Hence, this appeal.

"The demurrer was no doubt sustained on the theory: First, that the fraud charged or mistake committed was intrinsic to the proceedings in the Matter of the Estate of G. W. Simonton; and, second, that the probate court in the Matter of the Estate of Jane Simonton found as an issue properly before it for determination that said personal property was her separate property at the time of the death of her husband and by the final decree of distribution filed therein appellants and all other persons claiming any portion of said estate are concluded thereby. The William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323; Code Civ. Proc. § 1666; Estate of Schmierer, 168 Cal. 747, 145 Pac. 99.

"A brief statement of the allegations of the second amended complaint which follow closely the contentions made by counsel is essential for an understanding of the issues submitted for decision.

"G. W. Simonton died testate on the 16th day of August, 1904, a resident of the county of Los Angeles. His estate was administered upon by his wife, Jane Simonton, who was named in his will as executrix. All of the property which was returned or reported as property belonging to the estate was common property and was distributed in accordance with the terms of his will as follows: One-half to the widow, Jane Simonton, in her absolute right as her one-half of the community property, and the other one-half to her during her life with remainder over to the children of said G. W. Simonton or their representatives then surviving. No specific devises of property were made.

Jane Simonton thereafter died, to wit, February 25, 1917, testate, a resident of the county of Los Angeles, without issue of her body, but there survived her children of her said predeceased husband by a former wife and representatives of other children by said former marriage, all of whom it appears are joined as plaintiffs and appellants herein except Sophie Harris, a daughter, who is not a party to this proceeding. She also left blood relatives of her own. By her will she devised and bequeathed the residue of her property to her heirs at law as provided by the laws of succession of the state of California.

"Counsel take the position that the decision must turn upon a finding whether or not the omission or failure to include said personal property in the estate of W. G. Simonton constituted extrinsic or intrinsic fraud."

[1] That the fraud described by the complaint is extrinsic in character is not a debatable question under the authorities of this state. The case of Silva v. Santos, 138 Cal. 536, 71 Pac. 703, dealt with the settling of a guardian's account and his discharge, and, as it marshals the authorities of this state and makes reference to others, we quote at length:

"The principal question argued in the briefs is whether, upon the admitted facts stated in the complaint, the judgment of the court settling the guardian's account and discharging him from his trust, from which no appeal was taken, is final. Beyond dispute the jurisdiction of the superior court, sitting in probate, is both original and exclusive. (Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552; Estate of Strong, 119 Cal. 663; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323. See, also, the earlier cases of Graff v. Mesmer, 52 Cal. 638; Allen v. Tiffany, 53 Cal. 17; Brodrick v. Brodrick, 56 Cal. 564.) Conceding this, however, appellant contends, and we think the law is, that equity has jurisdiction to interpose and furnish appropriate relief where a judgment or order has been attained by the employment of frauds and artifices such as would justify interference of such court. Appellant cites Dean v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 473; Tobelman v. Hildebrandt, 72 Cal. 313; Lataillade v. Orena, 91 Cal. 565; Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, sec. 1007. To these may be added the more recent cases of Curtis v. Schell, 129 Cal. 208; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323; and Aldrich v. Barton, ante, p. 220. In Griffith v. Godey, 113 U. S. 89, Mr. Justice Field said: 'If the property be omitted by mistake, or be subsequently discovered, a court of equity may exercise its jurisdiction in the premises and take such action as justice may require. * * * And a fraudulent concealment of property, or a fraudulent disposition of it, is a general and always existing ground for the interposition of equity.' We are aware of the rule that the fraud which will prevail to set aside a judgment or decree must be extrinsic and collateral to the questions examined and determined in the action. (Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129; Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 690; Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73.) It was said in Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, that 'it is settled beyond controversy that a decree will not be vacated merely because it was obtained by forged documents or perjured testimony.' (See Fealey v. Fealey, 104 Cal. 354.) It would seem to us, however, that the complaint brings to light transactions which were not embraced in the guardian's account, but are extrinsic and collateral to the matters set forth in it. The case made is quite as strong as the facts presented in the recent case of Aldrich v. Barton, ante, p. 220. The theory generally underlying the refusal of equity courts to vacate decrees is, that the complaining party has had his day in court, and that there must be an end of litigation, and that titles would often be thus disturbed and rendered uncertain, and the innocent be made to suffer. Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, is a striking illustration of the flexibility of equity jurisdiction where to do justice to the injured and innocent and pursue the guilty the decree was not disturbed, but the party fraudulently benefited by it was held to be a trustee, and equity laid hold of him as such, leaving the original decree as to others unaffected."

See, also, Gaver v. Early (Cal. Sup.) 215 Pac. 394; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 66, 25 L. Ed. 93.

[2] The fact that the personal property was fraudulently withheld from the attention of the probate court and was not administered upon at all in the estate of W. G.

Simonton could not have defeated appellants of their estate limited in remainder which vested immediately upon the death of said testator. Section 694, Civ. Code. The title to the property was not changed in any wise by the omission of the executrix fraudulently to account for it. While the property was included in the estate of Jane Simonton as constituting a part of her estate by her alleged fraudulent acts in violation of her office and trust, and distributed as a part of her estate to respondents, the appellants are not concluded by a decree thus wrongfully procured, and equity with its broad and general powers of relief will come to their aid. The equities of this case are well stated in Estate of Walker, 160 Cal. 547, 117 Pac. 510, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 89, in the following language:

"Respondent's position is that neither the order admitting the will to probate, nor the effect of that order, is in any wise an attack, direct or collateral, upon the decree of distribution; that if through accident, fraud, or mistake, the distributees are holding property under the decree, to which they are not entitled, equity will do justice, not by overthrowing the decree of distribution, but by declaring the distributees to be involuntary trustees of the rightful owners of the property. This principle is, of course, well established. (Civ. Code, § 2224; State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233, 81 Am. Dec. 118; Wingert v. Wingert, 71 Cal. 105, 11 Pac. 853; Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 Pac. 158; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 87 Am. St. Rep. 98, 67 Pac. 282; Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 419, 77 Pac. 1007; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 481, 89 Pac. 317; Insurance Co. v. Hodgson, 76 Cranch, 332, 3 L. Ed. 362; Case of Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, 22 L. Ed. 599.) Respondent further argues that only in the probate court can the status of the instrument offered for probate be established as a will (McDaniel v. Patterson, 98 Cal. 86, 27 Pac. 651, 32 Pac. 805; Estate of Christensen, 135 Cal. 674, 68 Pac. 112), and that in the absence of the establishment of the status of the instrument as a will the devisees and legatees named therein could have no standing in a court of equity. Therefore, it was right and proper, if adequate proof of the execution and character of the instrument were established, for the court to grant it probate.

"This reasoning, we think, is indisputably sound. The sanctity and immunity of a decree of distribution which has become final attaches to the decree itself and not to those who under it may have derived an unconscionable advantage through fraud, accident, or mistake. Such questions the probate court does not possess the requisite machinery to try. They belong in a court of equity. (Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 454; Dean v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 473; Wickersham v. Comerford, 96 Cal. 433, 31 Pac. 358.) Nor are we here called on to anticipate the decision of any such question which may in future arise. It is sufficient on this appeal to say that it was proper for the probate court to establish the last will of the deceased to the end that those entitled to take under that will might be in a position to prosecute their rights in equity."

"The questions presented by this proceeding in equity could not have been determined by the probate court. That court has no power to determine disputes between heirs or devisees and strangers as to the title to property. (Buckley v. Superior Court, 102 Cal. 6; Estate of Vance, 141 Cal. 624; Estate of Strong, 119 Cal. 663; Title Ins., etc., Co. v. Cal. Development Co., 171 Cal. 173; In re Burton, 93 Cal. 459; Dean v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 417; Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 454.)"

The Estate of Jane Simonton, supra, is cited by respondents as an authority in their favor. That case is not in conflict with any rule announced here. In fact, it expressly recognizes the rule that equity will intervene in cases where property is withheld by an executor from his account fraudulently or by mistake. There was no claim in that case, as here, that the executrix failed to account for the property in question through fraud or mistake. No such showing was attempted or would have been proper in that proceeding.

Counsel for respondents have requested us to express ourselves in advance of the presentation of certain questions of law and fact which they assert are certain to arise during the trial of the cause. This, we think, would be ill-advised, as any intimation from us in advance of the actual presentation of said matters would be premature and without binding force. We think we have gone as far as it is necessary for us to go in passing upon the merits of a general demurrer.

The judgment of the lower court is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer, with leave granted to respondents to answer if they so elect.

ROYAL INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.
(L. A. No. 7697.)

Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1924.)

Master and servant — 373—Death of chauffeur, shot by cook, held not compensable as "arising out of employment."

Where a chauffeur, directed by his employer to investigate noises in the lower part of the house, was killed by the cook from motives of private revenge or some other reason not "arising out of employment," and circumstances showed that the cook had no intention of killing his employer or molesting property, the injury was not compensable as "arising out of employment."

Lawlor, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Application by the Royal Indemnity Company against the Industrial Accident Commission and others for certiorari to review an order awarding compensation, to Mrs. George R. Ingalls and Cornelia M. Ingalls.

Rehearing denied; LAWLOR, J., dissenting. Award annulled.

Willis I. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner and Warren H. Pillsbury, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. The Industrial Accident Commission made an award in the above-entitled case, after having first decided the matter in favor of the employer and the insurance carrier, and after having granted a rehearing. The finding of the Commission in regard to the happening of the injury is as follows:

"Said injury occurred in the following manner: Said George R. Ingalls was employed as a chauffeur, and immediately prior to the injury was reporting to his employer on the condition and expenses of operation of the employer's automobiles, in an upper room of her residence. During such report she heard suspicious noises in the lower part of the house, and asked him to investigate. On second thought she asked him to wait, and she would accompany him, which she did, taking with her a revolver, and upon reaching the living room, the Chinese cook stepped from behind a curtain in the dining room, and the employer said, 'Lim you frightened me so, I thought there was a burglar,' whereupon said Chinese cook shot and killed said employee, and thereafter immediately went to his own room and committed suicide. From the foregoing circumstances it is the conclusion of this Commission that the employee was exposed to the risk of this particular injury by the request of his employer to protect her and her property from possible marauders, and that said Chinese cook was at said time such a marauder, although his specific purpose in appearing armed at that time and place is unknown, and that said injury, therefore, also arose out of said employment, and was proximately caused thereby."

In addition to the foregoing statement of facts it may be added that the Chinese cook had been employed by Mrs. Garvey for two years, and that the deceased had also been employed for about ten months, and that they were well acquainted and apparently friendly. There is no showing of any trouble between them, except that there was evidence that about six weeks or two months previous to the killing the deceased had been skylarking with the cook, and in the course of the skylarking the cook had been somewhat bruised, and had been shut in a closet. Apparently after that time the relations between the two had been friendly. There was also evidence that Mrs. Garvey, the employer, first saw the cook as he came out from behind the curtains immediately before he shot the deceased. She noticed a very peculiar wild look on his face. Nevertheless, she was satisfied, and turned away, and "gave it no more thought." Two shots were immediately fired by the Chinese cook in killing the deceased. The Chinaman then repaired to his room, and killed himself with the same weapon. Under these circumstances, it is clear that the Chinaman intended to kill the deceased, and that he had no intention of killing his employer or molesting her property.

Assuming that the direction by the employer to the chauffeur to accompany her downstairs to repel suspected burglars brought the transaction within the course of his employment, so that, if he had been killed or wounded in preventing a burglary, the injury would have been compensable, because arising out of his employment, it is clear that the death of the deceased did not arise out of such employment, but that he was killed from motives of a private revenge or for some other reason pertaining to him individually and not arising out of the employment. The employer would never have directed the deceased to accompany her for the purpose of overcoming the Chinese cook, and immediately upon discovering his presence she was satisfied that their errand had been unnecessary and fruitless. Neither the employer nor the deceased anticipated the tragedy which immediately followed. The award must be annulled.

In view of our conclusion, it is unnecessary to pass upon the question raised by the petitioner, Royal Indemnity Company, which claims that the award was unauthorized, because of the fact that the notice of the application for rehearing after the first finding of the Commission was not served upon it, and that for that reason the Industrial Accident Commission had no jurisdiction to vacate the original decision and make the award.

Award annulled.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; MYERS, J.; WASTE, J.

LAWLOR, J. I dissent.

The majority opinion assumes that the killing occurred in the course of the employment, and I cannot escape the conclusion that it also arose out of it. When the deceased started down the stairs it cannot be doubted that his mission continued until the occasion of the suspicious noise was ascertained and the situation dealt with. The discovery and the killing were simultaneous. In such an undertaking how can it be held that both elements of the employment did not concur with the shooting? It is apparently conceded that, if a burglar, and not Lim Foon, had caused the killing, it would have been compensable. In my view, under the evidence, no clear reason appears why the injury is not compensable because it was inflicted by Lim Foon.

The risk of the employment continued up to the time of the shooting. According to the other view, the risk ceased with the discovery of Lim Foon, and from that moment the deceased would be without the protection of his employment. He came to the spot, where he lost his life, upon the express directions of Mrs. Garvey. That she realized he was entering upon a dangerous expedition is evidenced by the circumstances that she armed herself, and accompanied him to what proved to be his death. As I have pointed out, the risk of the employment attached when the mission was entered upon, and continued until it ended. Meeting the situation as it arose was a part of the undertaking, and what actually occurred when the occasion for the noise was discovered was just as much a part thereof as the investigation itself. The deceased exercised no volition in obeying Mrs. Garvey's directions; he simply complied with her orders, and in such circumstances the risk of the employment is as broad as the service rendered. The service rendered in this case is the proximate cause of the killing.

The majority opinion reasons that "under these circumstances it is clear that the Chinaman intended to kill the deceased, and that he had no intention of killing his employer or molesting her property." This conclusion necessarily involves a pure question of fact, which it is exclusively within the province of the Commission to decide. The rule has been declared that "this court, in reviewing awards of the Commission, is not acting as a court of appeal. It has no power to weigh the effect of positive evidence. It must assume that the Commission believed all the evidence which tends to sustain the award made." Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 378, 170 Pac. 822.

According to Mrs. Garvey, she knew nothing of a feud between the deceased and Lim Foon, notwithstanding she witnessed the scuffle which she testified appeared to be friendly, and in which another chauffeur of the family took part. Mrs. Garvey testified she thought he blamed the other chauffeur, who picked him up, and put him in the closet. The deceased merely stood by while this was being done. In view of this evidence is this court to decide against which one of the chauffeurs, if either, Lim Foon nursed a grievance? He had been with the family for two years, was "a model servant," "very quiet and gentlemanly," and "absolutely trustworthy." The scuffling occurred six weeks or two months before the shooting, and that incident is the only reason suggested for any animosity on the part of Lim Foon. Moreover, there is evidence that on the morning preceding the killing he exhibited a friendly spirit toward the deceased. But Lim Foon's action may have been inspired by causes entirely independent of the deceased. The housekeeper testified that when Lim Foon was leaving the house that morning, in answer to her usual injunction, "Lim, be a good boy," "he looked at me kind of funny, and said: 'I am not going to be a good boy, I am going to be bad.' He came back, and said goodbye to Mr. Garvey and me, and I walked to the door with him, and said, 'Lim, at least try and be a good boy, or we'll have to send you to Sunday school.' He went off laughing. I called to him from the window and said, 'Goodbye, Lim, be good.'" This was his day off, and he left at 10:45 a. m. It was his custom to return early in the evening. The gardener testified the deceased entered the house from the garage from 10 to 15 minutes before the shooting, and that, returning from downtown, Lim Foon followed him into the house from 5 to 7 minutes later. It would appear from the evidence that Lim Foon was not aware the deceased had preceded him into the house. He urged his employer to go out riding that afternoon, which was an unusual suggestion for him to make. It is in evidence that Mrs. Garvey did not expect to find him in the house at the hour in question. Respondents argue that the strange look on his countenance at the time of the shooting might not be due to an intention to kill, but to some other wrongful act in the contemplation or execution of which he was interrupted. It was also suggested the act of killing may have been due to insanity, but this, like the other theories, is found by the Commission to be purely conjectural.

Notwithstanding the finding of the Commission that the specific purpose of Lim

Foon appearing armed is unknown, the main opinion assumes to decide that precise question of fact by holding that he killed the deceased either "from motives of a private revenge or for some other reason pertaining to him individually." This, it seems plain, is invading the province of the Commission, and determining a question of fact which it was unable to decide. The Commission, no doubt, took into account the circumstance that Lim Foon appeared friendly to the deceased on that morning. If the Commission, with the witnesses before it, could not discover the motive for his action, this court could hardly solve the question of fact. In all probability it can never be satisfactorily determined. The question of motive or want of it is hopelessly involved in conjecture, and is beyond the finite mind to solve. If Lim Foon suddenly became insane, the law would not impute a motive to him. Nor do I find warrant for the further statement in the majority opinion as to what Mrs. Garvey would have done, if she had known Lim Foon caused the suspicious noise, or that, discovering his presence, she was satisfied the errand was unnecessary or fruitless.

In my opinion, a prima facie case was made out by the claimants, and the award should therefore be affirmed.

FRANCISCO et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 10841.)

1. Master and servant § 398—Want of timely application for compensation held not excused by disability.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11, requiring application for compensation to be made within six months but excepting those totally disabled and bedridden, evidence that applicant, about a week after his injury, traveled some distance for medical assistance, visiting doctors and a hospital either on crutches or in taxicabs, returning to his home when his money gave out, held to show he was not totally disabled and bedridden.

2. Master and servant § 398—Indian living on reservation held not "incompetent" within limitation in Compensation Act.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11, requiring filing of applications within six months from date of injury, but in subsection (d) excepting those incompetent, an Indian not belonging to any well-known tribe held not under "incompetency" merely because he was an Indian and lived on a reservation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Incompetent—Incompetency.]

3. Master and servant § 398—"Incompetent" within limitation in Compensation Act defined.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1767, defining "incompetent" as any person who, though not insane, is by reason of old age, disease, weakness of mind, or from other cause, unable, unassisted, to properly manage and take care of himself or property and by reason thereof would be likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons, applies to that word as used in Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11, excepting those who are incompetent from its requirement as to the time for making application.

4. Master and servant § 398—Indian held not incompetent within limitation in Compensation Act.

An Indian employee 46 years old, who was healthy physically and had attended school for 13 years, becoming a good carpenter, a fair farmer, shoemaker, and teamster, speaking Spanish, English, and Indian, and earning $32 a week, the highest wages paid teamsters in his region, held not incompetent within Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11, subsec. (d), excepting incompetents from the requirement that applications be filed within 6 months.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by John Mack, claimant, for injuries to himself, opposed by Herb H. Francisco, employer, and the Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, Limited, insurance carrier. Compensation was awarded, and defendants apply for writ of review. Order annulled.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. The petitioners herein apply for a writ of review whereby they seek to have reviewed and annulled an award of the Industrial Accident Commission to one John Mack, who was injured while in the employ of the petitioner Herb H. Francisco while the petitioner Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation was the latter's insurance carrier. The sole question presented for our consideration upon this application is as to whether John Mack, the applicant for relief before the Commission, had filed his application for an award too late to give the Commission jurisdiction to consider the same or to grant the relief prayed for therein.

John Mack received the injuries for which he sought the award in question, on April 13, 1921, while in the occupation of a teamster in the employ of the petitioner Francisco. He filed his application for said award, based upon his aforesaid injuries, with the Industrial Accident Commission on November 28, 1921, claiming total disability ing from no disease; that as to his mental equipment he had received the advantages of education much beyond those open to and accepted by the ordinary individual of his race; that he had attended various schools during a period of 13 years, among which was the Haskell Institute, at Lawrence, Kan., where he remained 3 years; also a Catholic school at Banning, where he spent from 3 to 4 years; and an Indian school at Phoenix, where he attended for 3 years. It is true, as the testimony discloses, that he did not advance as rapidly as youths of the white race would do, and that on the whole his 13 years of schooling took him about as far up the ladder of education as pupils in the seventh grade of grammar schools ascend. Nevertheless, he received, during these years of school attendance, training in several trades. He became a good carpenter, a fair farmer, a shoemaker, and a first-class teamster. In fact, he stood at the head of his class in this latter vocation, testifying somewhat proudly that he received the highest wages paid to teamsters by the various persons by whom he was employed in that capacity, including Francisco, who was his employer at the time of his injuries. He speaks the English language fluently and correctly in the main, as the record of his testimony shows. He also speaks Spanish, though not so well as English, and is fluent in his native Indian language. At the time of his injuries he was earning $32 a week, the highest wages paid teamsters in that region. While it is true that John Mack displayed in his character and conduct the simple, trustful, and even childlike qualities typical of the California Indian, it is impossible, in the light of the foregoing undisputed evidence, to arrive at the conclusion that he was possessed of any such weakness of mind as to be unable, unassisted, to properly manage and take care of himself or his property so as to come within the designation of an incompetent person within the intent and meaning of the foregoing section of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decision of the Commission was evidently based upon a misconception of his status because of the fact that he was an Indian, living upon unallotted lands in a federal reservation. As such he had become the employee of an employer, and being injured in that capacity, came within the beneficent provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act of this state, and has chosen to make application for relief within its terms; but having thus sought its benefits, he must be held also to an assumption of its burdens, one of which was the requirement that he should file his application for relief within 6 months from the date of his injuries. Not having brought himself within the designated exceptions to the operation of this limitation, he must be held to be subject to it, and the lapse of 7½ months between the date of his injuries and the filing of his application for relief must be held to have deprived the Commission of jurisdiction to entertain his application or grant him an award.

The order is annulled.

GETT v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO.
(Sac. 3342.)

1. Appeal and error ⚡930(1)—Appellate court will construe evidence most favorably to respondent.

The appellate court, in considering appellant's claim of the insufficiency of the evidence, should construe the evidence to support the contentions of respondent, to the extent that it is fairly susceptible of such construction, and in cases of conflict, to accept as true that evidence which tends to sustain the verdict, unless it is so improbable as to be palpably false.

2. Street railroads ⚡102(1)—Sudden stopping of street car causing truck to swerve and strike deceased held negligent and proximate cause of injury.

The act of defendant's motorman, while proceeding at a speed of seven to nine miles an hour, in bringing his car to a sudden stop on a street intersection, thereby violating an operating rule of the company, and forcing a truck approaching from the side to suddenly turn to the right and strike deceased, justified a finding of negligence which was the proximate cause of the injury.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡706(7)—"Jay walking" not negligence per se.

Where there is no rule of statute or ordinance which prohibits "jay walking," it is not negligence per se, and whether it is negligence under a given state of facts is a question of fact for the jury.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡706(7)—What constitutes ordinary care in crossing street by pedestrian for jury.

While the law requires a pedestrian in crossing a busy street intersection to exercise ordinary care, what constitutes ordinary care is usually a question of fact for the jury.

5. Street railroads ⚡102(2)—Finding that deceased's negligence was not the proximate cause of his injury held sustained.

Evidence that a truck which struck decedent had been forced to suddenly turn, due to the negligence of defendant's motorman in stopping its street car suddenly on an intersection, thereby creating a trap from which it would have been impossible for decedent to escape, even though he had exercised due care, justified the jury in finding that decedent's contributory negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury.

6. Negligence ⇨ 122(1)—Burden on defendant to show contributory negligence.

In an action for death the burden is on defendant to prove that plaintiff's decedent was guilty of contributory negligence and that such negligence was a proximate cause of the injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Ema Gett against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John P. Coghlan and Thos. J. Straub, both of San Francisco, V. L. Hatfield and W. H. Hatfield, both of Sacramento, and Stanley Moore, of San Francisco, for appellant.

O. F. Meldon and Downey, Downey & Seymour, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

MYERS, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment upon verdict in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for the death of plaintiff's husband, resulting from his being struck and run over by a motortruck. Plaintiff's contention was that the defendant was negligent in suddenly stopping its street car in such manner as to block the passageway of the oncoming truck, thus compelling the latter to turn suddenly to the right and to collide with the decedent. This appeal is upon the grounds of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the implied findings of defendant's negligence, and of decedent's freedom from contributory negligence, and errors of law in the giving and refusal of instructions.

[1] In considering appellant's claims of the insufficiency of the evidence, it is our duty to so construe the evidence as to support the contentions of respondent to the extent that it is fairly susceptible of such construction, and in cases of conflict to accept as true that evidence which tends to sustain the verdict, unless it is inherently so improbable as to be palpably false. Applying this method to the evidence herein, we glean therefrom the following facts:

The accident occurred at about 11 a. m. at the intersection of Seventh and I streets, two important and busy thoroughfares in the city of Sacramento. I street runs east and west and is intersected by Seventh street, running north and south, upon which there is a double track street car line of the defendant. A north-bound street car approaching the intersection slowed down to a speed of three to five miles an hour, then proceeded to cross the intersection, gaining speed as it went, until it had attained a speed of seven to nine miles an hour, and its rear end had nearly cleared the south line of I street, when the motor-man suddenly applied his brakes, bringing the car to a stop almost instantly and within a space of five feet. He gave no signal or notice of his intention to stop the car other than such as was afforded by the movements of the car and the sound of the brakes. The car was brought to a stop in such a position that its rear end was blocking the line of the south sidewalk of I street across the intersection of Seventh street (referred to in the evidence and the briefs herein as the "pedestrian right of way"), and its northerly end extended some distance northerly of the center line of I street. At the same time a one and a half or two ton truck, carrying a load of four or five tons, was proceeding at a speed of from twelve to fifteen miles an hour easterly along I street, approaching this intersection. It was the driver's intention not to turn at the intersection, but to proceed easterly along I street. He was just coming on the intersection when the street car was suddenly stopped in such manner as to entirely block his passageway. He immediately applied his foot brake and almost at the same time his hand brake, and pulled his whistle cord. There was not sufficient space available to enable him to stop his truck before colliding with the car, and, if he had turned to the left, such collision would have been inevitable. So he did the only thing remaining, and turned sharply to the right in the hope of being able thus to clear the rear end of the street car. At the same time, the decedent was proceeding easterly across Seventh street upon or in the vicinity of the "pedestrian right of way"—the southerly sidewalk line of I street—and had reached a point about five or ten feet from the street car to the west thereof. The truck driver sounded his whistle, which made but "very little noise" owing to the slowing down of the engine, and then shouted at decedent, who did not appear to hear him. The left front fender of the truck struck decedent, knocking him down, and the rear wheel thereof dragged him some distance and ran over him, causing injuries from which he died a few hours thereafter. Immediately after striking the decedent, the truck struck the rear left portion of the street car, then passed to the rear thereof and was brought to a stop.

[2] Appellant earnestly argues that the motorman cannot be held chargeable with negligence by reason merely of his stopping his car, and that he was under no legal duty to see or heed the approach of the truck upon the cross street. In view of the fact that the street car was entitled to the right of way over that portion of the street occupied by its tracks, and of the circumstance that it was the first of the two vehicles to reach and enter upon the intersection, it may be conceded that, if the motorman had proceeded on across the intersection in the customary manner, he could not be justly chargeable with negligence under those circumstances in failing to observe the approach of the truck. But in suddenly stopping the car, as he did, in such a manner as to blockade the cross street, he created a situation of exceptional danger to such vehicles as might be proceeding upon that street. Under these circumstances we cannot say as a matter of law that the jury was not justified in concluding that he was negligent in so doing. Furthermore, his act in so doing was in violation of an operating rule of the defendant, forbidding its employees to stop the cars so as to block cross streets or crosswalks. The existence of this rule, of course, did not render its violation by defendant's employees negligence per se, but it was a circumstance proper to be considered by the jury in determining whether or not they were negligent.

Appellant further contends that the evidence is insufficient to show that the stopping of the street car was a proximate cause of the injury to decedent. The truck driver testified that, if the street car had proceeded on its way at the speed at which it was going, it would have cleared a space amply sufficient to enable him to proceed on his way in safety, and that, if he had proceeded in the course in which he was going, he would have cleared the decedent by at least six or eight feet. The jury might well have inferred both of these facts from the other facts in evidence without such testimony. The issue as to whether the stopping of the street car was the proximate cause of the injuries to decedent, or whether the conduct of the truck driver was in the nature of an independent intervening agency, was submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions, and the evidence was amply sufficient to justify its conclusion thereon. To say that the evidence is also sufficient to support a finding that the defendant was not negligent and sufficient to support a finding that its negligence if any, was not a proximate cause of the injuries to decedent, is but to say, in effect, that there was a substantial conflict of evidence upon each of these issues.

Upon the question of decedent's negligence, there is much evidence to support appellant's contentions. There is evidence that the decedent was not upon the pedestrian right of way, but was "jay walking"—proceeding diagonally across the intersection. There is evidence that he was looking neither to his right nor to his left, nor even in front of him, but was proceeding with bent head, looking to the ground. There is evidence that he apparently failed to hear the noise of the truck or the sound of its whistle or the shouted warnings of its driver, although all of these were heard by persons who were further away. There is evidence that, shortly after the accident, the decedent admitted that he had been "jay walking" and that the accident was due to his own fault. In the language of appellant's counsel,

"the picture is one of a busy and hurried man walking across a crowded, congested street intersection, with his head lowered and his mind preoccupied, looking neither to the right nor to the left, and going down before a vehicle which he could have seen had he looked and could have heard had he listened, and having seen or heard could have escaped by merely stepping to one side."

But the evidence is not without conflict upon these points. Counsel for respondent reply that—

"deceased was on the pedestrian right of way, walking across the street, with his back to the approaching truck, and not in its course. He appeared to be waiting for the car to pass or about to get on the car. His attention was concentrated on conditions as they existed in front of him, to wit, the operation of the street car, as they should have been under the law. There was nothing to warn him that the street car would suddenly stop with a bang and in the path of an oncoming truck and cause the truck in the fraction of a second suddenly to change its course and swerve across and over the pedestrian right of way. He was not required to look to the rear, and even if he had done so he would have been advised of no danger until the truck had actually commenced to alter its course. Then it would have been too late to save himself."

There is some evidence tending to support each of these asserted facts. Two witnesses testified that decedent was upon the pedestrian right of way. One witness testified that before the accident decedent, with several other pedestrians, was "waiting for the street car to pass—about to cross the street." The truck driver testified—

"he seemed to be looking across to determine to stop; he stopped just an instant before I hit him; stopped and stepped back. He seemed to be looking down to stop the car."

The testimony as to the alleged admissions of decedent was contradicted, but even if it were not it would be in no way conclusive.

[3] There is no rule of statute or ordinance which prohibits "jay walking," and it therefore is not negligence per se. Whether or not it would be negligence under a given state of facts is a question of fact for the jury. The question whether or not such admissions of decedent would be competent as against the plaintiff in this action has not been raised herein and need not be here considered. See Marks v. Reissinger, 35 Cal. App 44, 169 Pac. 24; Mah See v. North Am. Ins. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 213 Pac. 42, 26 A. L. R. 123.

own protection during all of the time that he is so engaged, but what constitutes ordinary care in these respects is usually a question of fact for the jury. Burgesser v. Bullocks (Cal. Sup.) 214 Pac. 649, though there may be circumstances under which it can be said that the pedestrian is negligent as a matter of law. The law does not require of such a pedestrian that he must look in every direction during every instant of his progress. It does require that he must look at least in those directions from which danger may reasonably be apprehended, as often and as carefully as would a person of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. These directions in decedent's case were in front of him and to his left. It was clearly incumbent upon him to look ahead where a street car was in the act of passing within a few feet in front of him, and to look to his left from which direction other vehicles might be approaching. If he had looked to his left a second before the truck commenced to turn, he would have seen nothing to excite apprehension of danger. If the truck was proceeding at twelve miles per hour, the injury must have been accomplished within the space of about one second after the truck commenced to turn. Can it be said that he was negligent as a matter of law in failing to look to his left during that particular space of time? As to the matter of his listening, the evidence is without substantial conflict that he either failed to listen, or that if he did listen he failed to hear that which was heard by several others. But he was within a few feet of a street car which was in the act of coming to an emergency stop. Can it be said with certainty that to one in his position the noise of the truck was not drowned in the grinding of the street car brakes, even though he was listening with ordinary care?

[5] It is not necessary to here definitely determine whether or not the evidence herein establishes the negligence of decedent, as a matter of law. It is respondent's contention that the negligence of decedent may be conceded, yet, if the evidence is sufficient to justify the jury in finding that such negligence was not a proximate contributing cause of the injury, it is sufficient to sustain the verdict as to this issue, and this contention must be upheld. We shall assume, therefore, that decedent was negligent in one or more of the respects claimed by appellant, and proceed to consider whether or not under the evidence such negligence was necessarily a contributing factor which helped to bring about the accident and the resulting injuries, and without which the latter would not have occurred. It is respondent's contention that it may be conceded that decedent was negligent in all the respects claimed, namely, that he was "jay walking," and that he was neither looking nor listening with any care whatsoever, yet, they assert, the coincidence of the stopping of the street car with the arrival of the truck was such as to create a trap of such a nature that decedent could not have escaped from it if he had been exercising due care in every respect. They say:

"He could not step north. The truck was coming into Seventh street from the north. He could not step south. The truck was going to the south. He could not step to the east. The rear end of the street car blocked him there, and it is to be remembered that the truck struck the rear portion of the street car, showing the absence of space between the car and the truck. He might have gone to the west and back to the sidewalk at the Irish Tavern, but that would have been a good many 'mere steps.' It was the left or east fender of the truck which struck decedent. Hence the impossibility of retreating to the west after the truck had commenced its turn into Seventh street is obvious."

We are of the opinion that each of the conclusions thus stated is fairly deducible from the evidence. If the decedent was not upon the pedestrian right of way he was but a few feet northerly therefrom, which would place him still within the course traversed by the truck. If he had heard the whistle of the truck or the shouts of its driver, the truck was then almost upon him, and but a fraction of a second remained in which to escape it. If he had looked around at the very instant the truck commenced to turn, it is not certain that he would have escaped it, even by the exercise of all of the presence of mind, strength, and agility to be expected of a man of his years (fifty-seven). The space between the street car and the west curb was not over twenty-five feet, and when we consider that the truck, which was about eighteen feet long and eight feet wide, traversed this space diagonally from northwest to southeast, or upon a curve, it is apparent that the margin of space remaining was extremely narrow. We are convinced that, under the evidence, the jurors would have been justified in finding that the decedent was negligent in some or all of the respects claimed, and also in finding at the same time that he would have been equally injured if he had used due care in all of those respects. Such findings would have been wholly consistent with the general verdict for the plaintiff, and therefore it cannot be said that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence.

The conclusion just stated disposes, in effect, of the contention chiefly relied upon by appellant at the hearing before this court, namely, that the trial court erred in giving to the jury an instruction which told the jurors, in effect, that, even though they should find that decedent was negligent, such negligence would not bar a recovery by plaintiff if she had otherwise made out a case, unless they should also find that it proximately caused or contributed to the death of decedent. Appellant concedes that the instruction as given embodies in the abstract a correct statement of the rules of law, but asserts that it was error to give the same in this case, for the reason that, if the decedent was negligent, as here claimed, it was such negligence as "is in the eyes of the law necessarily concurrent and proximate and precludes recovery." Appellant cites numerous cases as supporting this contention. They are of little value to us, because each case must be governed upon this point by its own particular facts. There are many cases wherein it appears from the evidence, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the plaintiff's conduct did contribute proximately to produce his injuries. In such cases, if such conduct was in fact negligent, it inevitably follows that it constituted contributory negligence. For example, in the cases wherein the plaintiff attempted to beat an approaching railway train across a crossing and failed to do so and was injured in the attempt, there may be a question as to whether or not his conduct in so doing was negligent, but there can be no question that it contributed proximately to his injuries. So, also, in the case of a pedestrian who attempts to cross in front of a rapidly approaching street car or automobile so close thereto as to be struck in the attempt. So, also, in the case of a person who is injured in the attempt to board or alight from a moving street car. In such cases there may be a question whether or not the plaintiff's conduct was negligent, but the fact that such conduct was a proximate contributory cause of his injuries is not open to question. Therefore, in such cases, it would not be proper to give to the jurors an instruction calling upon them to determine whether or not plaintiff's negligence under such circumstances was a proximate cause of the injuries. The cases cited by appellant in this connection are of this character. But, in the case at bar, if we assume that the decedent was negligent in not being upon the pedestrian right of way at the time of the injury, it does not follow with certainty that he would have escaped injury if he had been upon the pedestrian right of way. If we assume that he was negligent in failing to look or listen, still we cannot say with confidence that he would have escaped injury if he had looked and listened. Therefore, the question whether or not decedent's negligence, if he was negligent, was a proximate contributory cause of his injuries, was in this case a question of fact to be submitted to and determined by the jury. It was not only proper, but it was the duty of the trial court to give the requested instruction or the equivalent thereof.

[6] Appellant objects that the giving of the instruction was an invitation to the jury to enter the domain of surmise and conjecture, and asserts that the evidence herein was such that the jurors could not, except by resort to surmise and conjecture, determine whether or not decedent's negligence contributed to his injuries. If this is correct, appellant has no cause for complaint. If it is true that the jurors could not, in this case, determine whether or not decedent's negligence contributed to his injuries, it follows that the trial court might well have instructed the jurors that defendant had failed in its defense of contributory negligence. Contributory negligence is in this state an affirmative defense by way of confession and avoidance. By pleading it, the defendant, in effect, confesses his own negligence and pleads by way of avoidance thereof that plaintiff's own negligence helped to produce his injuries. In this defense the burden is upon the defendant to prove two things: (1) That the plaintiff was negligent; (2) that such negligence was a proximate cause of the injuries complained of. If he fails to prove either of these things, this entire defense falls. Therefore, when appellant asserts that the evidence herein is such that it cannot be determined therefrom, except by resort to surmise and conjecture, whether or not decedent's negligence contributed to his injuries, it thereby concedes, in effect, that its affirmative defense of contributory negligence has failed, and that the jurors were bound to find against appellant upon this issue. We are not so holding herein, but hold that the question was properly submitted to the jury as a question of fact under the evidence.

Without unduly prolonging this opinion by discussing in detail the numerous claimed errors in the giving and refusal of instructions, it must suffice to say that we have examined all of the instructions given and the instructions refused; that the instructions given were wholly fair to the appellant and covered all of the points of law upon which it was the duty of the trial court to instruct; that the only errors therein are of slight importance and operated wholly to the advantage of the appellant. Some of the rejected instructions contained erroneous statements of law, and those which did not were fully and fairly covered in the instructions given.

Warren H. Pillsbury and A. E. Graupner, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. This is an original proceeding to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, allowing compensation to one C. M. Kelly for an injury suffered while in the employ of petitioner. It is claimed that such injury did not arise out of the employment, and that it was not proximately caused thereby as required by the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), so as to entitle the employee to compensation.

Kelly was employed by the Warren Construction Company as a timekeeper, and was so employed on the 17th day of November, 1922. At that time the company was insured against liability under the Insurance and Safety Act; the Globe Indemnity Company being its insurance carrier. On the day last mentioned Kelly and a fellow employee, one Randall, had an altercation concerning the payment of the wages due Randall, who had terminated his employment with the company. In the performance of his duties, Kelly kept account of the time the different employees worked, and he delivered to them their pay checks. Kelly refused to deliver Randall his check until such time as he was ready to leave the camp. In doing so he was carrying out the express orders of the company, which had adopted this rule for the reason that the company had lost money in consequence of employees remaining around the camp and obtaining meals without paying for them after they had severed their connection with the company.

The testimony is in conflict as to who was the aggressor in the altercation. As a result thereof, however, Kelly fell, and his left shoulder was injured in consequence of the fall, and the injury formed the basis of these proceedings.

The Commission found that the injury sustained occurred in the course of and arose out of the employment, and that there was no serious and willful misconduct on the part of the employee. It further found that the injury caused temporary total disability continuing from the date thereof, entitling the employee of the sum of $20.83 a week during such time, exclusive of the waiting period of 7 days; that the amount accrued to February 14, 1923, inclusive, was $244, the benefit being based upon the maximum wages allowed by law as a basis of compensation. Medical expenses were also provided for, to be fixed by the Commission upon the filing of itemized bills, and the further sum of $20.83 weekly, beginning with February 15, 1923, until the termination of disability or the further order of the Commission.

It is claimed by the petitioner that the Commission, in making the award, acted without and in excess of its powers, and that the evidence does not justify the findings of fact.

In support of this contention it is argued that the accident was not one reasonably incident to the employment. We are cited to numerous decisions, both in this and other jurisdictions, upon the question as to the right of compensation in this class of cases, but so much has been said upon the subject that we do not think the instant case requires an elaborate discussion and review of the authorities. The difficulties that confronted courts when the question of liability or nonliability for assaults originally arose have been settled and made clear by the authorities; and, while courts are not in complete accord upon the subject, we do not think that a résumé of the authorities would answer any useful purpose. It is conceded that in this state the decisions are to the effect that injuries sustained by reason of "horseplay" are not compensable, and that they have no application to the present case.

As is pointed out in Lumber Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 41 Cal. App. 131, 182 Pac. 315, the general rule on nonliability of the employer for injuries resulting from either the playful acts or intended assaults of fellow employees is fully discussed in Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164. Cases are there cited which aptly illustrate the rule that intended assaults are compensable only when they result from risk reasonably incident to the employment.

In Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 Pac. 398, it was held that a personal injury inflicted upon a foreman by inferior employees in an altercation between them, which grew out of the foreman's justifiable efforts to maintain his authority as foreman, was an "accident" arising out of the foreman's employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Here, while Kelly was not a foreman, he certainly was a superior employee; and the altercation having arisen over the carrying out by Kelly of his orders, we are of the opinion that the reasoning in the case last cited is controlling here, for he was undertaking to do something in the line of his duty by reason of which he received his injury. It must therefore follow that there is a causal connection between the employment and the injury. It resulted from an incident connected with the employment, and must therefore be held to have arisen out of the employment, the injury being fairly traceable as an incident of the work. The assault was not the result of a personal grievance between workmen, or to excitement over verbal altercations unconnected with the employment of the parties. In such a case, under the authorities of this state, an injury is not compensable, if it cannot be traced to the employment as a contributing cause. See Coronado Beach v. Pillsbury, supra. The rule is otherwise where, as here, the injury can fairly be traced as an incident of the work, in which case it must be held to have arisen out of the employment.

The award is affirmed.

FREDERICKA HOME FOR THE AGED
v. SOUTHERN TRUST & COMMERCE BANK, COUNTY OF SAN DIEGO, et al.
(Civ. 4333.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 23, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 20, 1923.)

1. Wills $\Leftrightarrow$ 487(1)—Findings that alleged codicil was intended as such by testatrix sustained.

Evidence held sufficient to support findings that an alleged codicil was intended as such by testatrix.

2. Wills $\Leftrightarrow$ 125—Codicil held sufficiently signed by testatrix.

A codicil, so denominated, commencing at the foot of a formally executed will, and containing testatrix's name for the second time, not as part of a recital, as in the first instance, but by itself, on a "Continuation of the codicil to my will" on a separate sheet, held sufficiently signed, though not at the close.

3. Wills $\Leftrightarrow$ 125—Codicil in two parts on separate sheets held not incomplete; "over."

A codicil in two parts, plainly connected with each other, and making a consistent whole, held not incomplete because on separate sheets, at the end of the first of which was the word "over," which is frequently employed to indicate a continuation of matter on a separate sheet.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Over.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Proceedings by the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank and others to probate a codicil to the will of Susan Mary Gowan Johnston, contested by the Fredericka Home for the Aged. From an order admitting the codicil to probate, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward, of San Diego, for appellant.

WORKS, J. In addition to leaving a will, concerning the authenticity of which no question is made, the decedent left behind her certain written matter which was by the trial court admitted to probate as a codicil to the will. Fredericka Home for the Aged was a beneficiary under the will, but the bequest to that institution was revoked by the alleged codicil, if it shall be determined that the trial court properly admitted it to probate. The Zoological Society of San Diego and the San Diego County Hospital are named as beneficiaries in the codicil. The Fredericka Home appeals from the order of the trial court admitting the codicil to probate as a part of the last will and testament of decedent.

Several points are stated in the brief of appellant, but the determination of all of them depends upon the settlement of but one question: Was the evidence sufficient to support certain findings of the trial court to the effect that decedent intended and executed the alleged codicil as a codicil to her will?

The matter held by the trial court to be a codicil is altogether in the handwriting of decedent. It is written in ink. It commences immediately after the signatures of the witnesses to the will proper, on the last page of that instrument, occupies the entire space on that page below the signatures, but is not there concluded. A photographic copy of the will, as well as of the alleged codicil, is before us. We reproduce first the matter at the bottom of the concluding page of the will proper, together with its arrangement, in so far as arrangement seems to be material to the question now to be decided:

"Codicil — La Mesa, San Diego Co., Calif.
"June 26th—1922—

"I, Susan Mary Gowan Johnston hereby revoke and cancel the bequest to the Fredericks Home for the Aged as written herein, and all relating to it.

"And I bequeath to the Zoological Society of San Diego the sum of two thousand dollars — (over)"

The remainder of the codicil admitted to probate was found on a separate sheet of paper, which had been severed into parts by a jagged tear running across the written matter in such a way as to separate the last line and a part of the line preceding from the remainder. The sheet was found in this condition after the death of the testator, but it has since been pasted together, and so appears in the photographic copy. The bottom of the sheet below the handwriting did not show a straight edge, but was torn diagonally across the page, the remainder of the paper not being produced. The matter on this separate piece of paper was as follows, both as to context and arrangement:

"Continuation of the Codicil to my Will June 26/22—

"Susan Mary Gowan Johnston.

"And I further name and appoint the San Diego County Hospital as Residuary Legatee under this Codicil of June 26/22—and direct that the funds obtained from the residue of my estate be used for the purpose of a special Ward or building for the necessary care and treatment of patients who prefer to pay for Hospital services rather than accept charity—the fees to be" (here are one or two unintelligible words, illegibility apparently caused by tear) "and within the means of working people to pay—while the care and treatment of such patients to be of the best."

The will proper, together with the matter written at the bottom of its last page, was found in the bedroom of the testator. The paper containing the second part of the alleged codicil was in two pieces, separated by the tear already mentioned, and was discovered in a writing desk in another room in testator's place of residence, a place which appellant calls her "literary workshop."

[1] The contention of appellant as to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings may be separated into several parts. It is said that the discovery of the opening portion of the codicil in one room and the remaining portion in another, together with the fact that the paper containing the second part had been severed by a tear, shows that the testator never intended that the matter thus found should be operative as a codicil to the will. If we concede for the sake of argument that the circumstances just mentioned, taken alone, do not show an intention to leave a codicil, we are at once to observe that other evidence in the record indicates such an intention on the part of the testator. Three days after the execution of the original will she wrote her counsel, the draftsman of the will: "I wanted to know," referring to a visit to his office at a time when she had been unable to consult him, "If a special form would be necessary for a codicil or if I could write in my own hand what might be needed if I tried to help some worthy object, and would it need to be attached to the main will to be legal?" We have already remarked that the alleged codicil was written in ink, a circumstance tending in some degree toward the showing of an intent to leave a memorial of a permanent and final character. This circumstance is aided materially when we consider that the codicil was commenced on the last page of the will proper, which was a typewritten document of nearly three pages in length, carefully and formally executed and witnessed. The fact that the testator could inscribe the codiciliary matter in such an enduring form in such a place strongly indicates that her mind had finally crystallized in an intention to alter her will as originally executed. The finding of the two parts of the codicil in different rooms, and the fact that the paper containing the second part had been severed into two portions by a tear, are strong circumstances, it must be conceded, but the other matters we have mentioned are of a substantial character, and we are bound to say that we can see nothing more than a conflict of evidence upon the question.

[2] It is insisted that the codicil is not sufficiently "signed." In it the name of the testator appears twice, first, at the beginning of the document, thus, "I, Susan Mary Gowan Johnston"; second, near the commencement of the second part. It is probable that the writing of the name the first time is to be considered merely as an identification of the person. Estate of Manchester, 174 Cal. 417, 163 Pac. 358, L. R. A. 1917D, 629, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 227. Such appears to us, however, not to be the case as to the use of the name the second time. The use in that instance was not a part of a recital, as was the case in the first instance. The name stands by itself, and is at the right end of a line upon which nothing else appears. It is followed by a period, and the line next succeeding it is commenced with a capital letter. It is true that the second appearance of the name is not at the close of the codicil, but it is not necessary that it be found there in order to constitute it a valid signature to the document. The rule on this subject is stated in the opinion in Estate of Manchester, supra:

"The true rule, as we conceive it to be, is that, wherever placed, the fact that it was intended as an executing signature must satisfactorily appear on the face of the document itself. If it is at the end of the document, the universal custom of mankind forces the conclusion that it was appended as an execution, if nothing to the contrary appears. If placed elsewhere, it is for the court to say, from an inspection of the whole document, its language as well as its form, and the relative position of its parts, whether or not there is a positive and satisfactory inference from the document itself that the signature was so placed with the intent that it should there serve as a token of execution. If such inference thus appears, the execution may be considered as proven by such signature."

What, in elucidation of the problem now before us, may we gather from an inspection of the codicil itself, under the rule just stated? As we have already observed, it is written in ink and commences at the foot of the formally executed will. It begins with the word "Codicil." The second part commences, "Continuation of the Codicil to my will," followed by a date. Then appears the second writing of the name, set down in the manner which we have already described. We are of the opinion that the face of the codicil itself thus shows an intent upon the part of the testator to execute the paper by the use of her name in the second place in which it occurs. We find support for these views in Estate of McMahon, 174 Cal. 423, 163 Pac. 669, L. R. A. 1917D, 778, and in Estate of Streeton, 183 Cal. 284, 191 Pac. 16, although it must be confessed that the facts in each of these cases, while similar in some respects to those we now consider, are different in others. We are convinced that by the second use of her name, at least, the testator intended to execute the codicil at the time she wrote it. We have already determined in effect, under another head, that she did not afterward change her mind.

It will be observed that we have said above that Estate of Manchester, supra, "probably" compels the views that the first use of the testator's name in the codicil here in question must be regarded solely for purposes of identification. We have employed that expression, for the reason that in that case the instrument before the court was a will, as distinguished from a codicil. Whether the Supreme Court itself will regard that case as positively controlling in the instance of a codicil penned at the foot of a will by the testator identified in and by the will is for that tribunal to determine upon due occasion. In view of the construction which we place upon the second use of the name of the testator here, we do not find it necessary to do more than suggest this question as to Estate of Manchester. There is surely some difference between the facts in that case and in this. Whether there is a difference in the law to be applied to those facts we do not venture an attempt to decide.

[3] One of the appellant's contentions is that the codicil is incomplete, for the reason that the second part is not connected with the first, and therefore may not be considered with it. Appellant says that the use of the expression "(over)" at the end of the first part requires that we look only at the other side of the sheet on which the first part occurs to find what is to follow. It is true that the term is sometimes, perhaps usually, employed to indicate a continuation of written or printed matter on the reverse side of a paper upon the obverse side of which the matter is commenced. It is, however, frequently employed to indicate a continuation of matter upon a separate sheet. We are furnished with no citation of authority upon this point, and have found none, but we do not hesitate to assert that the term in question is not to be given the limited meaning contended for by appellant. The second part of the codicil plainly connects with the first part, and all the circumstances of the case demonstrate that the two parts together make a consistent whole. No more is required to satisfy the testator's use of the expression "(over)."

Appeal and error — 1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence not disturbed on appeal.

A finding of fact by the trial court that a deed absolute on its face was made without any reservation or condition of any sort, and being reached on a consideration of conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action to quiet title by G. Albert Smith against Rhoda Park Flynn and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. G. Park, of Los Angeles, Collins & Collins, of Fresno, and Levin Aynesworth, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff above named began two actions in the trial court numbered, respectively, 4711 and 4712, to quiet title to a tract of land situated in Kings county embracing 240 acres. The actions were consolidated for the purpose of trial. Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals. The testimony shows an unbroken chain of title from the patent issued for the premises in controversy down to and including the deed thereto now held by the plaintiff. One of the deeds, however, is in controversy, to wit, a conveyance executed by the defendant, then Rhoda Park, now Rhoda Park Flynn, in 1905 and by her delivered to her father, Andrew G. Park. This deed upon its face purports to be an absolute deed and is in the form of an ordinary grant, bargain, and sale instrument.

The complaint is in the ordinary form of an action to quiet title, alleging ownership in the plaintiff. The answer, after denying ownership in the plaintiff, alleges in paragraph 3 thereof, in substance, that in the year 1905 defendant executed and delivered to one Andrew G. Park, her father, a deed purporting to convey to him the fee to the premises in dispute, but that it was understood and agreed between the defendant and said Park that he would have but a life estate therein; that he should have the full and free use and occupation of said premises; should enjoy the income thereof during his natural life, and that upon his death the title to said premises should vest in his living children share and share alike, and that the said Andrew G. Park should not have the right to sell or dispose of said real property or any part thereof.

At the conclusion of the trial the court, among others, made the following finding of facts:

"That on or about July, 1905, the defendant executed and delivered to her father, Andrew G. Park, a deed to said premises, but that said deed was made for a valuable consideration and that there was not any promise, understanding, or agreement of any kind between the defendant and her father that said premises should be held upon any term or condition whatever, or that the said Andrew G. Park should have but a life estate. That said conveyance was made without any reservation or condition of any sort. That the plaintiff purchased said premises and paid therefor a good and valuable consideration without notice of any right of defendant in or to said premises."

The question before the court upon this appeal is whether there is any testimony to support this finding. The defendant's testimony is in line with the allegations of her answer. To the contrary, however, is the testimony of her father, Andrew G. Park, her sister, Clara Park Oliver, and her brother, Theodore Park. These three witnesses testified to the effect that there was no such agreement or understanding. Theodore Park in his testimony states facts and circumstances showing that a 320-acre tract of land, which tract included the 280 acres in dispute, and 40 acres belonging to the defendant, were reclaimed by Andrew G. Park, who paid all the expenses of reclamation, building levees, etc., and that the 40-acre tract belonging to the defendant was reclaimed without any expense to her; the costs and expenses being borne by Andrew G. Park. The testimony of Andrew G. Park and also of Clara Park Oliver (a daughter of Andrew G. Park) all goes to the effect that on and after 1905 the title to the 280 acres was absolutely vested in Andrew G. Park without any limitations whatsoever. Upon this testimony the learned trial court made and entered the finding of facts referred to, holding that the conveyance from the defendant to Andrew G. Park was for a valuable consideration.

As said in Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 375, 39 Pac. 797:

"This issue is purely one of fact, and is to be determined by the trial court, and to the extent that its determination rests upon the mere preponderance of evidence, or upon the consideration of conflicting or contradictory evidence, the finding of the trial court is not open to review in this court."

Also it is stated in Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 Pac. 543:

"The authorities are uniform to the point that to justify a court in determining from oral testimony that a deed which purports to convey land absolutely in fee simple was intended to be something different, * * * such testimony must be clear, convincing, and conclusive—something more than that modicum of evidence which appellate courts sometimes hold sufficient to warrant a finding where the matter is not so serious as the overthrow of a clearly expressed deed, solemnly executed and delivered."

The judgment of the trial court should be affirmed and it is so ordered.

NEWMAN v. NEWBY. (Civ. 4429.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 30, 1923.)

1. Account stated §19(3)—Set-off against account stated held not sustained by the evidence.

Evidence held to show that an account stated between an attorney and client represented the amount due and that a claim of set-off by the attorney was not sustained.

2. Attorney and client §128—Attorney asserting set-off against client's money in his hands must produce vouchers of his expenditures.

Where an attorney, acting for a client, makes expenditures in carrying out his client's business, but fails to obtain vouchers of such expenditures and to turn them over to his client with his accounts, he fails to meet the burden of proof resting upon him, to show that he is entitled to a set-off against money of his client in his hands.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Mary E. Newman against W. L. Newby. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles H. Seccombe, of Oakland, for appellant.

H. Raymond Hall, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover a judgment for a balance of $350 alleged to be due on a stated account; the defendant appeared and answered. In his answer he denied the material allegations of the complaint and pleaded counterclaims and offsets. The trial court made findings in which it found that all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are true, and that the denial and allegations in the defendant's answer are not true. The defendant moved for a new trial, his motion was denied, and thereafter the defendant appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] In his brief the appellant contends that no account stated was proved, and that the counterclaims set forth in the defendant's answer should have been allowed. Both of these points involve the sufficiency of the evidence. In the record there is evidence showing that prior to the month of July, 1919, the defendant was an attorney at law practicing his profession and engaged in some other lines of business. That some months prior to that date the plaintiff, an unmarried woman of the age of 70 years, or thereabouts, commenced her dealings with the defendant. She accepted the defendant's offer to occupy a room attached to the defendant's offices, and that room she occupied for small housekeeping purposes. From time to time she performed some services for the defendant, such as serving papers, etc. She had some moneys, and at least one piece of real estate. From time to time she loaned to the defendant small sums of money. On one occasion she employed the defendant to negotiate an exchange of her real estate for a piece of property known as the Judd property. The values of the two properties were such that the plaintiff was to pay the difference in value. At the time the transaction was taken up the plaintiff owned some United States bonds of the value of $350. Those bonds she turned over to the defendant to be applied on the exchange of her property for the Judd property. The exchange was never consummated. The plaintiff in her testimony claimed that the deal fell through by reason of non-action on the part of the defendant. The defendant testified that the deal fell through because the plaintiff changed her mind and would not consummate the deal. On or about July 9, 1919, the defendant had converted the bonds into cash. On the date last stated the plaintiff went to the defendant and asked him for the $350—the proceeds obtained from the sale of the bonds. According to her testimony, he said he did not have it at that time, but he would get it, or he would give her a receipt for it, saying that he owed it. Thereupon he wrote a receipt:

"7/9/1919 Prior to above date I received from M. E. Newman $350 of Vic. Loan bonds to be converted into cash to be used in Judd purchase in exchange of property."

In rebuttal of the foregoing testimony, the defendant did not claim that he had actually consummated an exchange of the plaintiff's property for the Judd property, nor did he state facts showing her to be in default, or that the owners of the Judd property had received the proceeds of the bonds above mentioned. He vaguely testified that he caused a search to be made, and that he expended moneys therefor; but he did not produce any vouchers showing the expenditures nor the amounts thereof, nor did he produce any evidence that the search was ever made excepting his own uncorroborated testimony. In this behalf he testified:

"I have paid out about $99—$95, I believe. The searches on the property came to, I think, $47.50, but the expenses of Mr. Garafola being removed from the premises under the terms of the written lease that Miss Newman had entered into with him was about $47.50, as I remember it. That money was paid for the purchase of his lease and the paying of the draymen for his removal, as near as I remember it just at this date. It is not very far from that. I promised in writing to pay Mr. S. L. Fish $100 commission, made that promise as her attorney and agent under her written instructions. * * * My attorney fees for services rendered to Miss Newman in this matter and other matters, prior to this time, up to the first of December, 1919, were $200, and part of this service was rendered after July 9, 1919, and was the completion of the loan—I mean I went to Walnut Creek, made some three different trips over there trying to get some one to make the loan on this property."

As in surrebuttal of the foregoing testimony, the plaintiff testified that the defendant had agreed to conduct the real estate exchange without charge to her because of the fact that she had theretofore loaned him various sums of money and had performed services for him without charge.

[2] The claim of the appellant based on the counterclaim and offsets grew out of the purported expenditures and the service rendered by the defendant in the real estate deal. The appellant claimed that he had acted as the trusted attorney of the respondent. As such trusted agent, he was bound to obtain vouchers and deliver them to the respondent with his accounts. He never did so. Herein he failed to meet the burden of proof which rested on him. Metropolis, etc., Sav. Bank v. Monnier, 169 Cal. 592, 598, 599, 147 Pac. 265. Moreover, the story told by the appellant does not show on its face that he consummated the exchange and thus earned a commission, nor that he fully performed on his part, and that the exchange was not completed solely because of the arbitrary refusal of the respondent to perform on her part. Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 517, 522, 137 Pac. 254.

On his motion for a new trial the appellant claimed he had found the original papers and offered to bring them forward. His offer was refused. The refusal was proper, because the papers which he thus offered to produce showed on their face that the respondent had not repudiated the contract of exchange but had, in fact, fully performed by executing and delivering to appellant a deed in favor of the Judds. Moreover, the record shows that the evidence tendered by the appellant was not free from suspicion, and that the trial court did not accept it as true. We cannot say that the trial court erred in taking this view of the evidence.

As to the main issue, the appellant argues that there is no stated account unless the evidence shows that it was intended to be a final settlement up to date, and he cites Fee v. McPhee Co., 31 Cal. App. 295, 160 Pac. 397. We call attention to the facts of that case, and in particular to the testimony quoted on page 307 of 31 Cal. App., on page 397 of 160 Pac., and state that we consider that the case cited rules the point, under the facts of this case, in favor of respondent instead of in favor of the appellant.

We have not overlooked the fact that the appellant claims that the real estate transaction had not been terminated July 9, 1919, the date of the receipt and the date of the conversation, which respondent relies on. But it will suffice to say that the evidence introduced by the appellant at the trial, and that which he offered to produce in his affidavit made in support of said motion, is not of such convincing force as to warrant us in holding that the trial court erred in disbelieving it.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. WHYERS. (Civ. 4667.)

1. Landlord and tenant §290(5) — Tenant sued in unlawful detainer cannot file cross-complaint.

Tenants withholding premises in violation of their covenants cannot frustrate lessor's extraordinary remedy in unlawful detainer by a cross-complaint or counterclaim as to unpaid rent sued for.

2. Landlord and tenant §290(4)—Tenant not in possession cannot set up fraud in unlawful detainer.

The rule that a tenant fraudulently induced to execute a lease while in possession may set up the fraud in an action in unlawful detainer does not apply where he was not in possession when the lease was executed and his only right to possession is the lease claimed to be void.

3. Landlord and tenant §290(4) — Tenant setting up fraud cannot remain in possession.

The unlawful detainer statute being intended to provide a summary remedy for restitution of realty, a defendant claiming to have entered under a lease void for fraud cannot remain in possession thereunder while its validity is being litigated.

4. Appeal and error §1039(13)—No reversal merely to require plea of former adjudication of issue.

A judgment for plaintiffs in an unlawful detainer suit will not be reversed merely to require them to plead a former adjudication against defendant on the issue of fraud in execution of the lease.

5. Appeal and error §843(2) — Issue not raised by pleadings at time of trial not discussed.

Where the only issues under the pleadings at the trial of an action in unlawful detainer were plaintiffs' right to restitution of the premises and unpaid rent, the appellate court, on defendant's appeal, will not discuss the question whether a deed of trust deposited as security for payment of the rent should have been offset against the amount thereof.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1151(2)—Judgment modified by striking out concededly erroneous award.

A judgment for plaintiffs in unlawful detainer modified by striking out a concededly erroneous award for each day's occupancy by defendant after the date of judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Grace L. Smith and another against Alida I. Whyers. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed as modified.

Elmer E. Robinson, of San Francisco (Frank A. Duryea, of Marysville, of counsel), for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs commenced this action in unlawful detainer to obtain possession of an apartment house which the defendant held under a lease from the plaintiffs. The complaint was in the ordinary form demanding restitution of the premises and recovery of the unpaid rent. The defendant answered admitting the lease and setting up a special defense, counterclaim, and cross-complaint; each alleging that she had been fraudulently induced by the plaintiffs to enter into the lease and that she had rescinded it and was then ready to restore everything of value which she had received from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs demurred to and moved to strike out the cross-complaint and the counterclaim and also moved to strike out all that portion of the answer containing the allegations of fraud on the part of the plaintiffs. All these motions to strike out were granted. The action was thereafter tried and judgment went for the plaintiffs awarding them restitution of the premises, the full amount of the rent found to be due up to the date of the judgment, and also the sum of $$8\frac{2}{3}$ per day for each day's occupancy of the premises after the date of the judgment.

On this appeal the appellant assigns as error the order of the trial court granting respondents' motions to strike out the cross-complaint, counterclaim, and the special defense contained in the answer. It is also urged that the judgment is erroneous in that it did not give to appellant the right to offset against the judgment a deed of trust which had been deposited as security for her payment of the rent, and also that the judgment should not have contained an award for occupancy of the premises by the appellant after the date of the judgment.

[1] On the first point it is argued that both under the Code of Civil Procedure and under the authorities relating to cross-complaints and counterclaims the appellant was authorized to plead both a cross-complaint and a counterclaim in this action in so far as the issue related to the recovery of money by way of unpaid rent. It is unnecessary to discuss the point. It is not a new one. The authorities all hold that in an action in unlawful detainer for the restitution of premises withheld by tenants in violation of the covenants of their lease they cannot frustrate the extraordinary remedy provided by the statute through the means of a cross-complaint or counterclaim. See Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, 527, 528, 126 Pac. 512; Arnold v. Krigbaum, 169 Cal. 143, 146 Pac. 423, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 370. What the rule would be if the tenant should relinquish possession and join issue solely on the rent money need not be determined, because the appellant here was not satisfied to make that issue, but insisted upon retaining possession throughout the litigation.

[2, 3] Appellant does not seriously argue that she should have been permitted to set up the special defense of fraud, but apparently concedes that she could not defeat respondents' right to immediate possession of the property by withholding the payment of the rents and offsetting her monetary claims against those of the respondents. Reference is made to cases holding that a tenant who, while in possession, is fraudulently induced to enter into a lease, may set up the fraud in an action in unlawful detainer. This rule does not apply to a case where the tenant was not in possession at the time the lease was executed, but where her only right to possession is the lease which she claims to be void by reason of fraud in its execution. It must be evident that, as the statute prescribing the proceedings in unlawful detainer was intended to provide a summary remedy for the restitution of real property, the very purpose of the statute would be defeated if a defendant who claimed that she entered under a void lease through the fraud of the plaintiff should be permitted to remain in possession under the lease while the validity of the lease was being litigated.

[4] There is some authority to the effect that in a case of this nature a defendant should be permitted to set up equitable defenses by way of answer. See Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, 525, 126 Pac. 512. In that case the defense went directly to the issue of forfeiture raised in the complaint. Here the defense was a special plea of rescission of the lease and a claim for damages for fraud in its execution. It is conceded in the briefs that prior to the trial of this action the appellant had commenced an action for rescission based upon the same ground set up in her answer in this case. Judgment had been entered against her ad-judging that there was no fraud and no ground for recovery of damages. Though this judgment was not pleaded in this proceeding, because it was not deemed to be final at that time, it is now conceded that it has become a final adjudication of the issue of fraud. Though it may be true, as urged by appellant, that we should not take notice of this fact in the absence of a proper pleading, the admissions of counsel are sufficient to satisfy us that we should not reverse the judgment merely to require the respondents to plead a former adjudication.

[5] The further point is made that the trial court erred in rendering judgment for the full amount of unpaid rent and in not allowing appellant to offset the deed of trust which she had deposited as security for the payment of the rent. The only issue before the court as the pleadings stood at the time of the trial was the right to restitution of the premises and the payment of the rent which was then due. If the appellant had asked for an adjustment of the security which had been deposited for the payment of the rent and the court had refused to allow any adjustment, then the question would be properly before this court on appeal. But the issue not having been raised, it is not incumbent upon this court to discuss the academic question as to whether an offset should be allowed in cases of this nature.

[6] The final point has been made that the trial court erred in awarding judgment for each day's occupancy of the premises after the date of judgment. The respondents concede that this award should not have been made. For this reason the judgment is modified by striking out the portion thereof awarding the sum of $8²/₃ per day for each day's occupancy of the premises mentioned after the 7th of October, 1921, and as so modified the judgment will stand affirmed; the respondents to recover their costs.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

PEOPLE v. HADLEY. SAME v. HADLEY et al. SAME v. ERNSTING. (Cr. 1031-1033.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 25, 1923.)

Criminal law — 1023(8)—Order sustaining demurrer not final and appealable.

Under provisions of the Penal Code, an order sustaining a demurrer to an indictment or information does not amount to a final judgment from which an appeal by the state will lie.

Appeals from Superior Court, Imperial County: M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Three prosecutions by the People against O. D. Hadley, O. D. Hadley and others, and Frederick Ernsting. Appeals by the People from order sustaining demurrers to informations. On motion to dismiss appeals. Motion granted.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

Robert G. Hill, of El Centro, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. On motions to dismiss appeals.

Counsel have informed us that these motions and records are identical in their terms so far as the motions are concerned. Therefore we shall state the first case only (No. 1031), and allow the decision of the other cases to follow the decision in the stated case.

The notice of motion to dismiss announces respondent's intention to move for a dismissal of "the appeal of the plaintiff from an order made and entered by the superior court of the county of Imperial" in said action, and states that the motion will be made on a certified copy of the record and the order from which the appeal is taken.

Respondent also filed a written motion which by its terms and its statement of the grounds of motion shows that it is directed solely to an appeal attempted to be taken from an order sustaining the demurrer of defendant to the second amended information filed in said action for the purpose of prosecuting the defendant for the commission of an alleged misdemeanor.

The said certified copy of the record as filed by respondent for use on his motion to dismiss the appeal shows by the court's minutes that said demurrer was sustained and that at the time of announcement of the ruling there was given "notice of appeal by district attorney in open court." The said copy of the clerk's transcript was certified by the county clerk under date September 11, 1923, and contains nothing to indicate that judgment of dismissal or any judgment has been rendered by the superior court.

In People v. Apple, 57 Cal. App. 110, 206 Pac. 487, it was held that, by reason of stated provisions of the Penal Code as the same now exists, an order sustaining a demurrer to an indictment or information does not amount to a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken; that the appeal in such instances should be from the judgment when entered upon the order sustaining the demurrer and not from the order itself. Following that decision of the third district, which appears to be well reasoned, we conclude that the motions here presented should be granted.

To prevent misunderstanding by counsel, we will add that our attention has been drawn to the fact that in each of these cases the clerk's transcript on appeal has been filed on the 13th day of October, 1923. In each case the transcript shows that the court on sustaining the demurrer dismissed the case, and that the notice of appeal given in open court was a notice of appeal "from order sustaining demurrer and judgment of dismissal." Therefore the orders now to be made will not affect the pending appeals from the judgments.

In each of the above-entitled cases it is ordered that the respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal from the order sustaining demurrer to second amended complaint is granted.

Ex parte FLAHERTY. (Cr. 1015.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 24, 1923.)

Receiving stolen goods §9(3)—Verdict held sufficient.

A verdict finding the defendant guilty of receiving stolen property "as charged in the information" is sufficient without finding defendant's knowledge of the theft or her receipt of the goods for her own gain, or to deprive the owner thereof.

Habeas corpus by Annette Flaherty to secure release from custody after conviction for receiving stolen goods. Writ denied.

James Donovan and Edgar L. Bishop, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Petitioner claims that she is illegally imprisoned and restrained of her liberty by the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles. She bases the illegality of her imprisonment upon the following state of facts: Petitioner was accused by information in proper form of the crime of receiving stolen property. Upon trial the jury rendered the following verdict:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, find the defendant guilty of receiving stolen property as charged in the information."

Petitioner thereupon moved the court for her discharge, which was denied. Thereafter said court rendered a judgment of conviction against her upon said verdict.

It is now urged on behalf of petitioner that the verdict is not sufficient to support the judgment of conviction, in that, while it finds her guilty of receiving stolen property, it fails to find the truth of the other necessary elements of the crime charged in the information—the defendant's knowledge of the theft, and that the property was received by her for her own gain or to prevent the owner from again possessing it. Petitioner argues that the receiving of stolen property is not a crime without the person receiving it knew at the time of its receipt that it had been stolen and received it either for his own gain or to prevent the owner from again possessing it, and that as the jury only found her guilty of receiving stolen property it had not found her guilty of any crime whatever.

Petitioner relies upon the case of People v. Tilley, 135 Cal. 61, 67 Pac. 42, as sustaining her contention. In this case the verdict was:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled case, find the defendant, Charles H. Tilley, guilty of receiving stolen property."

And the Supreme Court, in reversing the case and discharging the defendant, held as follows:

"It cannot be said, therefore, that the verdict unequivocally finds the defendant guilty of the offense charged, or that it expresses an intent to do so."

It will be observed that the verdict in the case of People v. Tilley, supra, made no reference to the information or indictment, while the verdict against petitioner contains the words "as charged in the information." The difference in these two forms of verdict appears to be a matter of some consequence. In the case of People v. Cornell, 29 Cal. App. 430, on page 443, 155 Pac. 1026, 1032, this distinction is commented on in the following language:

"In State v. Schweitzer, 18 Idaho, 609 (111 Pac. 130), the verdict read: 'We, the jury in the above-entitled case, find the defendant, George Schweitzer, guilty of selling by short weights, as charged in the complaint.' This was held sufficient, as the intent of the jury was clear in that it found the defendant guilty. The words, 'selling by short weights,' might be treated as surplusage, and still the verdict held good, for then it found the defendant guilty as charged in the complaint. This case distinguishes the general current of authority from the case of People v. Tilley, 135 Cal. 61 (67 Pac. 42), where it was held that a verdict in these words, 'We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, find the defendant, Charles M. Tilley guilty of receiving stolen property,' was insufficient, as it must, in order to constitute a crime, include the knowledge that the property was stolen, and also the intent to deprive the owner of the same. It may be stated, also, that the verdict in the Tilley Case did not refer to the indictment or information, which also distinguishes that case from the one at bar, where the indictment is clearly and distinctly referred to."

The form of verdict in the case of People v. Cornell, supra, was in many respects similar to that in the case in which petitioner was found guilty, and the District Court of Appeal for the Third District affirmed the judgment in that case. Judgments based upon verdicts similar to the one under attack have been sustained in the following cases: People v. Morley, 8 Cal. App. 372, 97 Pac. 84; People v. Higuera, 122 Cal. 466, 55 Pac. 252.

Petitioner has cited a number of well-considered authorities from other jurisdictions which support her contention that the verdict in this case is vitally defective and not sufficient to support a judgment of conviction. These authorities, however, appear to be in conflict with those of our own state which we have heretofore referred to.

The verdict in this case, in our opinion, was a valid verdict and sufficient to support the judgment of conviction rendered by the court against petitioner. It follows that the writ must be denied and the petitioner remanded, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. RABBIT. (Cr. 1005.)

1. Rape §54(1) — Prosecutrix's testimony need not be corroborated.

It is not essential to a conviction of statutory rape that prosecutrix's testimony be corroborated.

2. Witnesses §397—Prosecutrix's contradictory statements affect only weight and credibility of her testimony.

Contradictory statements by prosecutrix, before or during the trial of a rape case, affect only the weight and credibility of her testimony.

3. Criminal law §1159(4)—No reversal of conviction because appellate court might not have believed testimony on which based.

A conviction of rape will not be set aside because the appellate court might not have believed prosecutrix's testimony, on which it was based.

4. Criminal law §404(1)—Exhibition of child born of acts committed before that charged held not error.

In a prosecution of a negro for rape, where prosecutrix, a negress, testified that she had never had relations with any one except defendant, who testified that he found her in an automobile with a white man at about midnight on a date prior to that of the act charged, the court did not err in permitting exhibition of a child born of acts committed before that charged and admitted in evidence to establish guilty knowledge and criminal intent.

5. Witnesses §40(1)—Testimony of six year old child held properly admitted.

In a rape prosecution, the court did not err in permitting a six year old boy to testify as to an act committed before that charged, though he was unable to fix the date, where he clearly and intelligently stated the circumstances as observed by him; it being for the judge to determine whether he was capable of receiving just impressions of facts or relating them truly. Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 2.

6. Criminal law §656(5)—Court's statement that he examined boy witness as to whether he would answer truthfully held not prejudicial error.

The court's statement, in the jury's presence, that he examined a six year old boy offered as a witness "particularly with a view as to whether he was competent to testify as to what he saw and as to whether he would answer intelligently and truthfully," held not prejudicial error, where the court disavowed any intention to state whether the jury should believe the boy, made it clear that he was ruling only on his competency, and particularly instructed the jurors that they were the sole judges of the facts and the testimony of such witness.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Burr Rabbit was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. C. Dorris, of Bakersfield, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. By information the defendant was charged with the crime of felony, to wit, rape, in that on or about November 16, 1922, in the county of Kern, he committed an act of sexual intercourse with and upon a certain named female person under the age of 16 years, and not then and there the wife of the defendant. Having been convicted and sentenced upon that charge, he appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed because the only evidence of the commission of the offense on the day charged is that of the complaining witness, and because there is no evidence of penetration, and because there is no evidence to show that no marriage ceremony had been performed between the defendant and the prosecuting witness. We have read the evidence. We deem it not necessary to set it forth in this place. The prosecuting witness, a girl 15 years old, testified in general terms that, at the time and place stated, sexual intercourse between herself and the defendant did occur, and that she herself was not and never had been married. Sufficient details were shown in the testimony, and there was no contention that the statements of the witness did not cover the essential facts of sexual intercourse.

[1-3] It was not essential to a conviction that the testimony of the prosecuting witness be corroborated by other evidence. People v. Akey, 163 Cal. 54, 124 Pac. 718; People v. McMillan (Cal. App.) 212 Pac. 38. The fact that she made contradictory statements at other times prior to the trial and even during the course of the trial affects only the weight and credibility of her testimony. Nevertheless, since the jury believed that part of her testimony upon which the conviction rests, it is not for this court to take the place of the jury and set aside the verdict because, perchance, we might not have believed the testimony of the witness.

[4] Appellant contends that the court erred in allowing the illegitimate child of the prosecuting witness to be exhibited to the jury; and that the court erred in permitting her six year old brother, Albert Rabbit, to testify. The evidence established the fact that the illegitimate child was born in March, 1923. The prosecutrix had testified that a series of acts of intercourse had occurred between herself and the defendant beginning in July, 1922. At another time she said that they began in June, 1922, fixing the date by the fact that it was before the close of the school term in June. The evidence of these acts prior to November 16, 1922, was received only for the purpose of establishing a guilty knowledge and criminal intent, and the jury was so instructed. Upon the point that the court erred in permitting the district attorney to exhibit the said child before the jury, counsel relies upon People v. Soto, 11 Cal. App. 436, 105 Pac. 422, where the court expressed the opinion that the rule permitting the admission of evidence of other acts as tending to sustain the main allegation in a case of this kind, should not be extended so as to include the right to "produce and exhibit before the jury a child born of someone of the collateral acts of intercourse six or more months removed from the act constituting the offense."

The record does not directly show the basis of the court's ruling in this matter in the present case. We infer that it was allowed because the prosecutrix had testified that she never had such relations with any person other than the defendant, whereas the defendant had testified that along about July he had found the prosecuting witness in an automobile with a white man at about 12 o'clock at night. He did not produce any further evidence in support of that apparent innuendo. He further stated that that was both the first and the last time that this man took the girl out, "because he left here the next morning." The defendant and his step-daughter, the prosecuting witness, were of the colored race. On this state of the record, we are of the opinion that the court did not err in permitting the child to be exhibited to the jury. Moreover, there is nothing to show that the defendant was prejudiced thereby.

[5] The court did not err in permitting the six year old child Albert to testify, or in refusing to strike out his testimony, which related to one of said acts of intercourse which occurred prior to November. The fact that the child was unable to fix the date is not sufficient to exclude such testimony. He clearly and intelligently stated the circumstances as observed by him. It was the proper province of the judge to determine whether the child was capable of receiving just impressions of the facts or of relating them truly. Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 2; People v. Stouter, 142 Cal. 146, 151, 75 Pac. 780.

[6] Finally, it is claimed that the judge of the trial court committed prejudicial error in that he stated in the presence of the jury that he had examined the boy Albert quite carefully, "particularly with a view as to whether he was competent to testify as to what he saw and as to whether he would answer intelligently and truthfully." Thereupon, counsel having taken exception to the remarks of the court "on the proposition that you examined him and found him to be truthful," the court disavowed any intention to state whether the jury should believe the boy or not and made it clear that he was ruling only on the matter of his competency. He then particularly instructed the jurors that they were the sole judges of the facts and of the testimony of said witness. Under these circumstances, we are satisfied that the point attempted to be made by appellant with reference to this matter is without merit.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨705(2)—Rule of right of way at street intersection stated.

The question of right of way of vehicles at a street intersection under the statute is to be determined when the vehicle approaching from the right enters the intersection or crosses the curb line, and at that point such vehicle has the right of way unless the vehicle approaching from the left is nearer the point at which the collision would occur.

2. Appeal and error ⇨882(12)—Erroneous instruction held not ground for complaint.

Error in an instruction cannot be complained of where the same error is present in an instruction given at the request of the complaining party.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Percy Vickerson against the Standard Auto Sales Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Sloss, Ackerman & Bradley, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Jesse H. Miller and Walter H. Linforth, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff was injured in an automobile collision at the intersection of Polk and Ellis streets, in San Francisco. The jury brought in a verdict in his favor, and from the judgment the defendants have appealed, bringing up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

At the time of the accident, on the 24th day of February, 1921, the plaintiff was in an automobile approaching from the left, traveling easterly on Ellis street, and the defendant Thomas C. Robinson, as agent of his codefendant, was operating an automobile on the right, going north on Polk street. The collision occurred in the intersection of the two streets mentioned. The only question involved in the record is as to the correctness of the court's instructions relating to the right of way at the point where the accident occurred. The court gave, acting on the request of the plaintiff, four instructions, which we have numbered consecutively, and which are as follows:

I. "The law of this state also provides that the operator of an automobile shall yield the right of way at the intersection of their paths to an automobile approaching from the right, unless such vehicle approaching from the right is further from the point of the intersection of their paths than such first named automobile."

II. "If, therefore, you find that plaintiff's automobile was nearest the point of such intersection, then the plaintiff was not required in law to yield such right of way to the driver of the Chevrolet automobile, but in the law it was the duty of the driver of the Chevrolet automobile, under these conditions and circumstances, to have yielded the right of way to the automobile being driven by plaintiff."

III. "You are instructed that the rule of the right of way has application only to cases where automobiles reach the crossing at substantially the same time."

IV. "If you find from the evidence that the automobile driven by plaintiff reached the intersection of Ellis and Polk streets, substantially in advance of the Chevrolet automobile, then I instruct you that the plaintiff had the right of way over the intersection of said streets, and that the driver of the Chevrolet automobile should have yielded the right of way to him."

And, acting on the request of the defendants, the court gave another instruction, which we have numbered 5, and which is as follows:

V. "You are instructed that if defendant's automobile reached the intersection of Ellis and Polk streets substantially in advance of the automobile which plaintiff was driving, that defendants had the right of way over the intersection of the streets, and plaintiffs should have yielded the right of way to defendants."

[1] The instruction numbered I is a quotation from the statute and is conceded to be correct. The instruction numbered II is not necessarily incorrect. As the respondent argues the language therein used, "such intersection" refers back to, and adopts "intersection" as that word is used in No. I; that is, in the statute. The instruction numbered III is not only incorrect, but conflicts with the first instruction given. The statute does not specifically fix the point at which the right of way is determined, for, obviously, if two machines are approaching a point of intersection at different rates of speed, their relative distances from that point would be constantly changing. We think the true construction of the statute is that the question as to who has the right of way is to be determined when the vehicle approaching from the right enters the intersection of the street, or crosses the curb line. Up to that point there is no possible danger of collision. At that point the vehicle approaching from the right has the clear right of way, unless the vehicle approaching from the left is nearer the point at which the collision would occur. Whitworth v. Jones, 58 Cal. App. 492, 209 Pac. 60.

Where the intersection is square, that is to say, where the two intersecting streets are of the same width, under the rule as we have stated it, the vehicle approaching from the right would have the right of way unless the vehicle approaching from the left had passed the center of the intersection before the vehicle approaching from the right entered the intersection, or passed the curb line. The rule announced by the trial court that the vehicle first entering the intersection has the right of way would mean that the vehicle approaching from the right would have to wait for one approaching from the left, although the vehicle approaching from the left in the case of a square intersection would be three times as far away. Or, in the case of an intersection like that of Post and Van Ness, the vehicle traveling north on Van Ness would have to wait for the vehicle traveling east on Post, although the vehicle traveling north was, perhaps, within 10 feet of the point of a possible collision, and the vehicle traveling east was, perhaps, 75 feet away. This, of course, would be an absurdity, and it would be impossible to regulate traffic under any such rule, particularly as each vehicle approaching an intersection has to consider conflicting rights of way. And bearing in mind the rule that requires a driver to travel on the right-hand side of the street, each vehicle having the right of way in the first half of the street is compelled to yield the right of way in the second half of the street as it crosses. From the last consideration it is also obvious that the question of the right of way only relates to the quarter of the intersection in which the paths of approaching vehicles intersect.

[2] Appellants also challenge the soundness of the instruction which we have numbered IV. In reply, the respondent states that the same rule is declared in the instruction numbered V, which was given at the request of the appellants, and, therefore, whether the proposition therein stated is sound or unsound, the appellants may not complain. Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Hudson, 182 Cal. 48, 51, 186 Pac. 772. That reply is well founded.

For the errors contained in instruction numbered by us III, the judgment is reversed.

CURTIS, J. The defendant was found guilty of the crime of perjury. On April 19, 1922, in the trial of a criminal action entitled "People of the State of California v. James Wheaton and Calvin Rowell," in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, appellant testified on behalf of defendant Wheaton in said action. The defendants Wheaton and Rowell were on trial for the crime of the murder of two policemen of the city of Los Angeles, alleged to have been committed in said city on the night of December 6, 1921, between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock of said night. The defendant testified in said action that Wheaton, one of said defendants in said action, was at the home of said defendant Patterson in the city of Los Angeles on the night of December 6, 1921, from about the hour of 7 o'clock until the hour of 11 o'clock of said night. On the trial of the defendant Patterson for the crime of perjury, his testimony, given in the Wheaton-Rowell Case, was introduced in evidence. The prosecution then called as a witness Harry C. Hickok. Hickok testified that he was a police officer, and that he was present at a conversation between the defendant Patterson and a deputy district attorney of the county of Los Angeles, which conversation took place shortly after the arrest of the defendant, on the 19th day of April, 1922, immediately following the giving of his testimony in the Wheaton-Rowell Case. The witness Hickok further testified that the deputy district attorney on this occasion asked the defendant Patterson if he realized what a serious situation he had gotten himself into by testifying before the superior court, under oath, to facts which he did not believe to be true; that the deputy district attorney then read to the defendant purported confessions of Wheaton and Rowell, in which each stated that on the night of December 6, 1921, they were present at the scene of the murder, and were in a Ford car with three other men, who killed the two policemen. After the witness Hickok had testified to the reading of these confessions to the defendant by the deputy district attorney, the prosecution then offered them in evidence, stating that "They are offered in connection with the statements made by the defendant, and for the light that they throw on what he subsequently said." Over the objections of the defendant, the court ruled that the witness Hickok might read these confessions to the jury as a part of the conversation between the deputy district attorney and the defendant. The witness Hickok then read to the jury two purported confessions signed by Wheaton, and one signed by Rowell. These confessions of Wheaton and Rowell contained statements, which, if true, tended strongly to show that Wheaton was not at the defendant's home on the evening of December 6, 1921. After the reading of each of these documents, the defendant moved to strike them out on the ground that they were not binding upon the defendant, and that, as against him, they were incompetent. These motions the court denied.

No attempt is made by the Attorney General, in his brief in this case on behalf of the respondent, to justify the ruling of the court in permitting these confessions to be read to the jury upon the ground that they were admissible as parts of the conversation had with the defendant. In fact, it would be a difficult matter, from the evidence before us, to justify the admission of these confessions for such purpose. They could not, of course, explain anything said by the defendant prior to their being read to him, as there is no evidence that he had any knowledge of their contents before he heard them read. As to explaining statements made by the defendant after the confessions were read to him, they are equally unavailing, as the testimony in the case shows that, in response to a question made by the deputy district attorney immediately after the reading of the confessions, the defendant stated, "I have told you the truth about it." It is true that the witness Hickbk testified that the defendant had said, both before and after the reading of the confessions to him, that he knew he had done wrong, and only trouble could come out of it. Just what defendant may have meant by this statement may or may not be apparent, but the confessions shed absolutely no light upon the meaning which the defendant intended to convey by this statement.

[1] It is attempted to justify the reading of these confessions, on the ground that they contradicted the testimony of the defendant, and showed that he testified falsely. They undoubtedly had this effect upon the jury, and in a marked degree. Between the testimony of defendant that Wheaton was at his home, and the admissions of Wheaton and Rowell that they participated with others in the killing of the two policemen on the night of December 6, 1921, the jury would, in all probability, accept the statements of the latter, and, believing that the defendant had falsified in his testimony in this important respect, they would accept with reluctance his evidence in other matters. In other words, the reading of these confessions to the jury tended to impeach the defendant as a witness upon his own trial. The consequences, therefore, to him of the action of the court in permitting the reading of these confessions to the jury, were of a most serious nature. This result, however, would not make the confessions competent evidence. Their effect upon the jury would go to their materiality, and not to their competency. Their competency as against the defendant would be determined by the well-established rules of evidence. No rule of evidence is better established or more frequently applied than that which forbids the admission, as against the defendant, of statements or conversations made without his hearing or presence. It is not claimed that the defendant was present at the time Wheaton and Rowell made their purported confessions, nor that the defendant was in any way responsible for the acts or statements of Wheaton and Rowell at any time, nor that he ever knew, before the documents were read to him, that these men had ever made any statements regarding their part in the murder of the two policemen. These confessions, therefore, as against the defendant, were incompetent evidence, and the reading of them to the jury, in our opinion, greatly prejudiced the defendant in his defense. We have already alluded to the serious consequences, which, in our opinion, would naturally follow the reading of these confessions to the jury. So serious were these consequences that we feel that the defendant was thereby deprived of his right to a fair and impartial trial, and for this reason the judgment should be reversed.

Outside of these confessions there is no evidence in the case that Wheaton was not at the defendant's house on the night of December 6, 1921, at the time defendant testified in the Wheaton-Rowell Case that he was there, and therefore there was no evidence that the defendant had falsified in his testimony as to the whereabouts of Wheaton on this night. The jury undoubtedly, in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the charge of falsely testifying to Wheaton's presence at his house on the night of December 6, 1921, took into consideration the statements contained in the confessions of Wheaton and Rowell. This was greatly to the prejudice of the defendant, and furnishes an additional reason why a new trial should be granted defendant on account of the error committed in permitting these confessions to be read to the jury.

[2] The information charges that the defendant falsified in his testimony given in the Wheaton-Rowell Case in three particulars: First, when he testified that Wheaton was at the home of defendant on the night of December 6, 1921; second, when he testified that defendant was playing a phonograph on the evening of December 6, 1921, when Wheaton came to his house; and third, when he testified that Wheaton spent the evening of December 3, 1921, at defendant's house. The fact that Wheaton spent the evening of December 3d at defendant's house was brought out on cross-examination presumably for the purpose of testing the recollection of the witness of events transpiring on or about December 6, 1921, and on cross-examination defendant testified that Wheaton spent the evenings of December 3d, 4th, and 5th at defendant's house. Defendant's testimony relative to the playing of the phonograph on the evening of December 6th was substantially as follows:

"I was playing the phonograph when the defendant (Wheaton) came in, and was sitting down reading a book. I had commenced playing the phonograph when he came in. The phonograph was playing when he rapped on the door. After we played a piece on the phonograph, we played another, and then talked a while."

It is now claimed by appellant that his testimony relative to the playing of the phonograph on the evening of December 6th, and that Wheaton spent the evening of December 3d at defendant's house, was upon collateral matters in the Wheaton-Rowell Case; that this testimony was not material to the charge involved in the Wheaton-Rowell Case, and therefore no charge of perjury could be based upon such testimony. The rule upon this subject is given in Ruling Case Law as follows:

"While it is necessary that the false testimony be material to the issue being tried or to the point of inquiry, it is not necessary that it be material to the main issue. The test is whether the statement made could have influenced the tribunal on the issue before it. It is sufficient if it is material to any proper matter of inquiry, and is calculated and intended to prop or bolster the testimony of a witness on some material point, or to support or attack the credibility of such a witness. It may be laid down as a general rule that any testimony which is relevant in the trial of a case, whether to the main issue or some collateral issue, in so far material as to render a witness who knowingly and willfully falsifies in giving it guilty of perjury. It is but common knowledge that it frequently occurs in the trial of causes that inquiries are made of witnesses touching matters which do not directly concern the commission of the acts which constitute the offense, yet such inquiries and answers may be material and highly important to the end that the triers of the fact may properly and intelligently weigh the testimony in the cause. If it is so connected with the matter at issue as to have a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove some fact that is material by giving weight or probability to, or detaching from, the testimony of a witness thereto, it is sufficient and makes the testimony material." 21 R. C. L. p. 259.

The courts of our own state have expressed this rule in the following language:

"The matter sworn to need not be directly and immediately material. It is sufficient if it be so connected with the fact directly in issue as to have a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove such fact by giving weight or probability to the testimony of a witness testifying thereto, or otherwise." People v. Barry, 63 Cal. 63; People v. Senegram, 27 Cal. App. 302, 149 Pac. 786; People v. Phillips, 56 Cal. App. 291, 205 Pac. 40.

Measured by the rule laid down by these authorities, we are of the opinion that the testimony of the defendant relative to the playing of the phonograph and to the whereabouts of Wheaton on December 3d were upon material issues raised in the Wheaton-Rowell Case, and therefore it was sufficient upon which to base a charge of perjury.

For the error in permitting the confessions of Wheaton and Rowell to be read to the jury, the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial are reversed.

GORNSTEIN v. PRIVER. (Civ. 4251.)

1. Carriers ⇐235—One renting freight trucks for carriage of passengers held not common carrier.

One occasionally renting motor trucks, used by him in his general transfer business for transferring freight, to carry passengers to and from picnic grounds on Sundays and holidays, held not a common carrier of passengers, but a private carrier for hire.

2. Carriers ⇐280(1)—Care required of private carrier for hire stated.

A private carrier for hire is not bound to exercise the highest degree of care for the safety of his passengers, as in the case of a common carrier, but must exercise ordinary care and diligence.

3. Master and servant ⇐301(4)—Private carrier liable to passengers for injuries by driver's negligence.

One letting a vehicle for hire in charge of a driver in his employ to persons who control the movements thereof, only in so far as to direct the driver where to go, is liable to passengers for injuries due to the driver's negligence, though he exercised due care to employ a careful and prudent servant.

4. Municipal corporations — 706(3)—Running down vehicle ahead evidence of negligence.

The mere fact that a truck driver runs down a vehicle ahead of him on a highway crowded with other vehicles is some evidence that he was driving at too high a rate of speed, or was following too closely the machine ahead.

5. Municipal corporations — 706(6)—Negligence of driver of truck colliding with truck ahead question of fact.

Whether the driver of a truck colliding with a truck ahead was negligent depends on the circumstances, and is almost invariably a question of fact for the jury, or trial judge sitting without a jury.

6. Carriers — 318(7)—Finding that driver of truck colliding with truck ahead was negligent held warranted.

A finding that the driver of a truck, rented for transportation of passengers, and colliding with one ahead, which suddenly stopped, was negligent, held warranted, in the absence of evidence that the collision was due to the negligence of the other driver; the driver of the rear truck being bound to anticipate that the other might be obliged to stop suddenly and to have his machine under control.

7. Appeal and error — 1071(6)—Failure to find that defendant was not common carrier held not injurious.

Where the court, on sufficient evidence, found that the driver of one of two trucks rented out by defendant for carriage of passengers was negligent and that injured passenger was not contributorily negligent, thus necessitating a judgment for plaintiff, defendant was not injured by the court's failure to find expressly that he was not a common carrier, though plaintiff alleged that such was defendant's status.

8. Appeal and error — 1071(6)—Failure to find on issues not reversible error, where findings made controlling.

Where findings on certain facts necessarily control the judgment, failure to find on other issues is not reversible error.

9. Negligence — 82 — Contributory negligence defeats recovery.

Plaintiff cannot recover for defendant's negligence, if his own negligence contributes in any degree to the result.

10. Master and servant — 301(4)—Knowledge and acts of drivers of rented truck are those of owner.

The owner of motor trucks rented for the carriage of passengers must be held to have been present, at the time of an injury to a passenger, in the persons of his servants, whose knowledge and acts are his.

11. Carriers — 336—Passenger on truck held not contributorily negligent in sitting with legs hanging over end with driver's permission.

One of several passengers on a truck, rented for the carriage of passengers, permitted to seat themselves with their legs dangling over the end, from which the staves were taken out, with the knowledge of the driver, who gave no warning of danger, held not guilty of negligence contributing to her injury, when another rented truck, which was following collided with that on which she was riding.

12. Carriers — 331(6)—Truck passenger sitting with legs hanging over end held not to have assumed risks of danger created by negligence.

One seating herself on a truck, on which she was a passenger, with her legs hanging over the end, with the owner's tacit approval and consent, did not assume the risk of danger created by the negligence of the owner's drivers in a collision, though she assumed the risks ordinarily incident to such position; the contract of carriage not being dissolved, so as to relieve the owner, as a private carrier for hire, from his duty to exercise ordinary care for her safety.

13. Carriers — 305(4)—Negligence of truck driver held sole proximate cause of injury to passenger on truck ahead.

Failure of the driver of a passenger carrying truck colliding with a truck ahead to exercise such reasonable care in regulating the speed of his vehicle and its proximity to the other as was necessary to protect a passenger seated on the latter with her legs hanging over the end, held the sole proximate cause of her injury; her perilous position being only the condition or remote cause.

14. Negligence — 68—Care required as against negligence.

That certain conduct is customary or usual does not necessarily absolve one so acting from a charge of contributory negligence; the test being what an ordinarily cautious, prudent, and careful person would have done under the same circumstances.

15. Negligence — 68—Duty to look out for danger.

It is not contributory negligence to fail to look out for danger, where there is no reason to apprehend any.

16. Carriers — 331(6)—Passenger seated on truck with legs hanging over end held not contributorily negligent in not observing imminence of collision with another truck.

A passenger seated on one of two passenger carrying trucks, with her legs hanging over the end, held not contributorily negligent in permitting her attention to be diverted while conversing with a fellow passenger, with the result that she did not see the imminence of a collision with the other truck; she not being required to exercise extraordinary precaution to anticipate negligence, but only such ordinary precaution as persons of reasonable care and prudence usually exercise.

17. Negligence — 67—One may assume performance of duty owing by another.

One to whom a duty of care is owing by another may assume that the latter will perform it, and, in the absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise, is not negligent in assuming that he will not be exposed to a danger, which can arise only by violation of such duty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Edna Gornstein against Max Priver. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Baird and J. A. Adair, both of Los Angeles (Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Will H. Light and Wm. T. Blakely, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through the negligence of defendant while plaintiff was a passenger on an auto truck owned by defendant and operated by one of his servants. The answer denies the allegation of negligence on defendant's part, and pleads contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. The case was tried by the court without a jury. Findings upon all the material issues were in favor of plaintiff, and judgment was entered for her accordingly. From that judgment the defendant appeals.

Defendant, who was engaged in the general transfer business in the city of Los Angeles, owned motor trucks which were used by him in that business for the transfer of freight. Occasionally, on Sundays and holidays, he would rent one or more of the trucks to carry passengers to and from picnic grounds. Plaintiff was a member of the Sinai Chapter of Young Israel. On June 6, 1920, she and certain other members of that religious organization were passengers on two of defendant's trucks, which had been hired of defendant for the purpose of carrying plaintiff and her companions to and from a place called Fish Canyon, where a picnic was to be held. Defendant furnished the driver for each truck. At the request of the person who was in charge of the arrangements on behalf of the picnickers, defendant's servants took the staves off the sides of the trucks, and a number of the passengers, including plaintiff, sat on the floor in such a manner that their legs hung over the sides or end of the truck on which they were riding. They sat thus both going to and returning from the picnic grounds. Plaintiff and three others sat in this manner on the rear of the truck on which they were riding—their legs hanging over the end. On the return trip one of the trucks followed the other; the rear truck being at times a block behind the one ahead and at other times in closer proximity to it. Plaintiff was seated on the foremost truck. As the two vehicles entered the city of Los Angeles, they proceeded along North Broadway, a much-traveled thoroughfare along which electrically propelled street cars are operated. The truck on which plaintiff was seated proceeded for some distance behind a street car traveling in the same direction. As the street car approached College street it stopped to discharge passengers. As it came to a stop the foremost truck, the one on which plaintiff was seated, stopped suddenly. Its driver testified that he came to a stop "quite snappy"—to use his own language; that he stopped to permit persons to get on and off the street car; that he gave the usual signal of his intention to stop, but that he didn't know whether anybody behind him saw it; that he traveled a distance of about 20 feet from the time he started to stop his truck until it came to a full stop; that a truck as large and as heavy as the two which were that day hired of his employer cannot ordinarily be stopped in a distance short of this length; that the length of each truck was about 20 feet; that a second or two after his truck came to a standstill it was bumped into by the one behind it. The driver of the rear truck was not produced as a witness. It seems he could not be found at the date of the trial. In the collision plaintiff received injuries to her feet and legs before she could raise them to a place of safety. The part of the floor of the foremost truck which plaintiff occupied was close to that side of the truck, which was on her right as she faced the rear. Three of her companions who sat with her on the rear of the truck were seated on the floor to her left. Just prior to the impact plaintiff was leaning over the lap of the person seated next to her, talking to the second person to her left. As she finished her conversation with that person she turned her head toward the direction from which the second truck was coming, and then observed for the first time that it was about to collide with the truck on which she was seated—too late, however, to enable her to draw up her legs and avoid the injury.

Appellant's principal contentions are: (1) That there was no showing of negligence on his part; and (2) that the evidence affirmatively and indisputably shows that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

[1-3] Taking all the evidence together, it clearly is sufficient to sustain the finding that the driver of the second truck—a driver who was furnished by defendant for the occasion—was guilty of negligence, in that he failed to exercise ordinary care to avoid the collision. Defendant, it is true, is not a common carrier of passengers, and his liability, therefore, is not that of a common carrier. He was, however, on this occasion a private carrier for hire. Hutchinson on Carriers, vol. 1, § 35. While a private carrier for hire is not bound to exercise the highest degree of care for the safety of his passengers, as in the case of a common carrier, he is bound to exercise ordinary care and diligence to carry his passengers safely. Hutchinson on Carriers, vol. 1, § 37; Forbes v. Reinman, 112 Ark. 417, 166 S. W. 563, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1164. And if he lets a vehicle for hire, in charge of a driver in his employ, to persons who control the movements of the machine only so far as to direct the driver where to go, he is liable to the passengers for injuries due to the driver's negligence, although he may have exercised due care to employ a careful and prudent servant. Forbes v. Reinman, supra; Meyers v. Tri-State Automobile Co., 121 Minn. 68, 140 N. W. 184, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 113.

[4-6] The driver of the truck which was following the one on which plaintiff was seated, and who unquestionably must have seen the street car which the truck ahead of him was following, as well as the manner in which plaintiff was seated on the foremost truck, was bound to anticipate that the truck which he was following might be obliged to come to a sudden stop if compelled to do so by the street car or by any of the numerous other vehicles which were using the highway in common. Observing the manner in which plaintiff and her companions were seated on the truck ahead of him, it was his duty to have his machine under such control that he would be able to avoid a collision if the foremost truck were obliged to come to a halt by reason of the stopping of the street car which it was following. It must be apparent that in operating an auto truck over a public street the driver, under ordinary circumstances, cannot run down a vehicle proceeding in the same direction without having been negligent in the operation of his own vehicle, unless it appears that the collision was due to the negligent conduct of the driver of the other vehicle, which is not the case here. The mere fact that he does run down the vehicle ahead of him furnishes some evidence that he either was traveling at too high a rate of speed for a highway crowded with other vehicular travel or that he was following too closely the machine ahead of him. See O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 47, 141 Pac. 809. True, the mere fact that a vehicle is moving in close proximity to another one ahead of it, and keeping up with it, does not of itself constitute negligence per se; but whether in any particular case the operator of the rear vehicle is negligent if he drives his machine so as to cause a collision with the one ahead depends upon all the circumstances surrounding the happening of the accident, and almost invariably presents a question of fact for the decision of the jury or of the trial judge where, as here, the case is tried without a jury. Our conclusion is that the lower court was warranted in finding that defendant's driver was guilty of negligence.

[7, 8] Appellant was not injured by the court's failure to find in so many words that he is not a common carrier—even though plaintiff did allege in her complaint that such was defendant's status. As a private carrier for hire, defendant was liable for injuries to his passengers proximately caused by his own or his servant's ordinary negligence. Upon evidence sufficient to justify it, the court found that defendant's driver was guilty of negligence—that is, that he failed to exercise ordinary care. This finding of negligence, coupled with the finding that there was no contributory negligence, necessitated a judgment for plaintiff; and the rule is that, where the findings on certain facts necessarily control the judgment the failure to find upon other issues does not constitute reversible error. Southern Pacific R. Co. v. Dufour, 95 Cal. 615, 30 Pac. 783.

[9-11] Appellant's theory of contributory negligence is based upon the claim (1) that plaintiff placed herself in a position of danger by sitting with her legs hanging over the edge of the truck, and (2) that, because she leaned over and talked to the person seated near her on the rear of the truck, she negligently failed to use her senses to perceive the impending danger.

The general rule that a plaintiff cannot recover for the negligence of the defendant if his own want of care or negligence has in any degree contributed to the result is of course indisputable. But we do not think the circumstances here indicate any want of ordinary care on the part of plaintiff. In disposing of this question, we must keep in mind that as to the passengers on the trucks defendant must be held to have been present in the persons of his servants, and that what the latter knew and did he knew and did. Defendant's bookkeeper testified that it is his employer's custom to furnish the trucks with the staves taken out, when that is the wish of the persons hiring them. Defendant's servants not only knew that the staves were taken off these trucks, but, without giving any warning, admonition, or suggestion of danger, they permitted plaintiff and the other members of the picnic party to seat themselves on the edges of the trucks with their legs and feet dangling over the sides. By their silence, as well as by their acts, defendant's servants threw plaintiff and her fellow passengers off their guard and gave them reason to believe that their positions on the trucks were not perilous. The effect of the conduct of defendant's servants is the same as if they had expressly invited plaintiff to ride on the truck in the manner that she did, and had assured her that it was a suitable and safe way for her to seat herself. Clark v. Eighth Ave. Ry. Co., 36 N. Y. 135, 136, 93 Am. Dec. 495.

[12] If plaintiff was imprudent in seating herself as she did, then, while she may be deemed to have assumed all the risks of danger ordinarily incident to such position of peril, she did not assume the risk of danger created by the negligence of defendant's drivers in their operation of the trucks. Her position on the truck, however perilous it may have been, was taken with defendant's tacit approval and consent, and it did not dissolve the contract of carriage. It did not sever plaintiff's relation of passenger to defendant as a private carrier for hire. Nor did it relieve defendant from that duty of protection which he owed plaintiff as a passenger on one of his trucks. For her safety while she was such passenger, defendant owed plaintiff the right to ordinary care on the part of his servants; that being the degree of care which is due by a private carrier for hire and was the degree of care which plaintiff was entitled to demand and to expect. In other words, though she assumed all the risks ordinarily incident to the position in which she seated herself on the truck, whether it was known to her to be dangerous or not—such risks, for example, as might be due to the ordinary and usual swaying of the truck or its ordinary and usual movements—still she did not forfeit her right to exact from defendant and his servants the same care to which she would have been entitled had she taken the safest seat on the vehicle. See Willmott v. Corrigan, etc., Ry. Co., 106 Mo. 535, 17 S. W. 490. Had plaintiff sustained injury solely because of the position in which she had seated herself, and without any negligence on the part of defendant's drivers in their operation of the trucks, she probably could not have recovered any damages from defendant. Thus, for example, if, during the usual and ordinary movements of the truck on which she was riding and without any negligence on the part of defendant's drivers in their management of the machines, plaintiff, solely by reason of the position which she had taken, had been bounced off the truck, she probably would have had no remedy against defendant, for the very good reason that in that case she would have to attribute her injury solely to her own voluntary conduct. That would be one of the risks ordinarily incident to plaintiff's position on the truck. But, while assuming risks of that character, plaintiff did not assume the risk of danger created by the negligent misconduct of defendant's drivers; and for injury caused by such misconduct defendant is liable.

[13] As we have stated, plaintiff's position must have been observed by the driver of the rear truck. The care which the law demanded of him was commensurate with the peril incident to the position in which he knew that plaintiff had placed herself, and it was his duty to exercise such reasonable care in regulating the speed of his vehicle and its proximity to the truck ahead as might be necessary to protect plaintiff from injury during all the time that she was a passenger on the foremost truck. His failure to exercise such reasonable care in the operation of his truck must be considered the sole proximate cause of the injury, notwithstanding the perilous position in which plaintiff, with defendant's permission, had placed herself. Her position on the truck was only the condition—the remote cause of the injury. See Willmott v. Corrigan, etc., Ry. Co., supra—a case the reasoning of which is applicable here, notwithstanding the defendant in that case was a common carrier; for the only difference between the duty owing to his passenger by a common carrier and the duty owing by a private carrier for hire is in the degree of care which each must exercise, the one owing to his passenger the utmost care and diligence, the other owing but ordinary care and diligence, each being liable, however, for injuries proximately caused by his failure to exercise that degree of care which his passenger may rightfully demand and expect of him.

This action bears no resemblance to those cases in which it is held that a passenger on a railroad car is guilty of contributory negligence if he places his arm or head or some other part of his body outside of the car window and is injured by being struck by some obstacle which is properly near the railroad tracks—such, for example, as a woodpile situated near the rails. In those cases it is held that the passenger has no remedy for the reason that his injury is attributable solely to his own voluntary act. By his conduct he assumes all such risks as arise from the usual and ordinary movements of the car. In the instant case it was not the usual and ordinary movements of the truck, but the active negligence of defendant's driver which caused the injury. And that, as we have seen, was a risk which plaintiff did not assume. On the contrary, the relation of carrier and passenger, with all that those terms connote, continuing up to the time of plaintiff's injury, she was entitled to rely upon the assumption that no harm would come to her through any negligent misconduct on the part of defendant or his servants.

ter of law, that her inattention was contributory negligence. It is not contributory negligence to fail to look out for danger where there is no reason to apprehend any. Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1, 46 N. W. 21, 21 Am. St. Rep. 549. Here the defendant owed plaintiff a particular duty. He and his drivers were in duty bound to exercise ordinary care not to injure plaintiff, who had the right to expect that reasonable care and caution would be exercised by the drivers to avoid a collision of one truck with the other. She was not required to exercise extraordinary precaution to anticipate the possibility of negligence on the part of defendant or his servants. She was required to use only such ordinary precaution as persons of reasonable care and prudence usually exercise under the same circumstances.

[17] The general rule is that one to whom a duty of care is owing by another has the right to assume that the person who owes such duty will perform it; and, in the absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise, it is not negligence on the part of the one to whom the duty is owing to assume that he will not be exposed to a danger which can come to him only through a violation of that duty by the person owing it. 29 Cyc. pp. 516-517. See, also, Robinson v. Western Pacific R. Co., 48 Cal. 421; Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 58, 161 Pac. 1155, L. R. A. 1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560. A like principle is stated in Ruling Case Law as follows:

"While a person who asserts a right of recovery on the ground of negligence must be prepared to show that he exercised vigilance to discover and avoid the danger embodied in the offending instrumentality, he excuses himself for an omission to take active measures—such as looking, listening, and making inspections—by proof that the defendant owed to him a duty of care, and that he relied upon the performance thereof. The presumption is that duties fixed by law or custom will be discharged in due form; and every one to whom a duty is due has a right to assume that it will be performed—he need not anticipate negligence on the part of his obligor, even though the latter has been negligent on other occasions." 20 R. C. L. title Negligence, § 101.

The authorities cited by appellant are not in point. Most of them are cases involving the application of the universally recognized doctrine that where no special duty of care is owing by the defendant upon which the plaintiff is entitled to rely, ordinary prudence requires the plaintiff to make use of his faculties of seeing and hearing before attempting a dangerous act or operation, such, for example, as crossing the tracks of a steam railroad. But that is not this case.

One or two other points are suggested by appellant. Suffice it to say that we have examined them with care, but do not think they possess sufficient merit to be entitled to any special discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARSHALL et al. v. BERNHEIM et al.
(Civ. 4565.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 30, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 27, 1923.)

Evidence ~~to~~ 418—Principal and agent ~~to~~ 145 (4)—Principal liable for contracts in agent's name where third party does not elect to hold agent alone; parol evidence admissible to show purchases from agent under written contract intended to hold both agent and principal.

Though a written contract for sale of an automobile was made by agent in his own name in principal's presence, if purchaser intended to take both principal and agent as obligors, there was no election to hold the agent alone, thereby releasing principal, and such intention may be shown by parol.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by V. L. Marshall and another against J. H. Bernheim and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Brownstone & Goodman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. S. Newburgh and E. J. Mooslin, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Defendant Bernheim appeals from a judgment rendered against him and defendant Taylor in the sum of $2,833.19. Defendant Taylor failed to appear in the action, and judgment went against him by default. Defendant Bernheim concedes that the sum of $472.30 was due from him to plaintiffs, and on the trial offered to have judgment entered against him for that amount.

The complaint is in two counts. The first is for the recovery of money paid under a written agreement for the purchase of an automobile upon the ground that the vendors therein did not have title and the consideration for which the money had been paid had wholly failed. The second is for money had and received. The automobile which was the subject of the contract was stolen from its lawful owner in Chicago on May 29, 1920, and taken to San Francisco, where it was sold to defendant Taylor, a jewelry salesman. Thereafter, and on July 10, plaintiffs purchased the automobile under a written lease or conditional sale contract with Taylor, and it was delivered to them. The following October it was taken from them in a replevin action brought by the owner against the plaintiffs and defendants here, and in May, 1921, plaintiffs instituted this action for recovery of the money paid on account of its purchase. The complaint alleges that on the 10th day of July, 1920, "the defendant Verne Taylor, acting for himself and as the agent for the defendant J. H. Bernheim, entered into a written agreement with plaintiffs, wherein and whereby defendants agreed to sell plaintiffs said automobile" for $4,250, $2,250 to be paid upon the execution of the agreement and the remainder in ten monthly installments of $200 each; plaintiffs to have the use and possession of the automobile, but title to remain in seller until fully paid for. Bernheim's answer denies that he was a party to the agreement alleged in the complaint, or that defendant Verne Taylor, as agent for him, or in any other capacity on his behalf, entered into an agreement with plaintiffs, but admits that defendant Taylor and plaintiffs entered into such an agreement. He also, by way of separate defense, alleges the payment by plaintiffs to Taylor at the time of the execution of the agreement of the sum therein provided for as a first payment; that the contract and automobile were thereafter on said day assigned by Taylor to him; and that on the 12th day of August and the 10th day of September following plaintiffs made payments to him on account of the contract. These two latter payments are the amounts for which he admits liability. The trial court found, in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, that "defendant Verne Taylor, acting for himself and acting for and on behalf and as agent of the defendant J. H. Bernheim," entered into the said agreement with plaintiffs, that defendant Bernheim delivered the automobile to plaintiffs, and that all the payments were made to him. The contract was introduced in evidence by plaintiffs. It is executed in the names of defendant Taylor, as lessor, and plaintiffs as lessees, and bears on the back an assignment of the same date to Bernheim & Levy. There is nothing on the face of the instrument to indicate that Taylor was acting for Bernheim or for any one other than himself. But to support their claim that the contract was made with Taylor as the agent of Bernheim, plaintiffs introduced evidence over the objection of defendant that Bernheim represented to them before the contract was made that he owned the automobile. The evidence discloses that Bernheim's connection with Taylor and the automobile began about July 1, 1920, when he (an automobile finance broker), through the agency of one Stackhouse, loaned Taylor $1,500 and took as security a lease contract on this automobile. Later in July Stackhouse (who was treated by the trial court as the agent of Bernheim) entered into negotiations with plaintiffs for the purchase of the automobile by them. As a result, on July 10th, Stackhouse, plaintiff Marshall, and defendants Bernheim and Taylor all met at the store where Taylor was employed, and the contract referred to between Taylor and plaintiffs was entered into.

Appellant argues that, as the respondents entered into the contract with Taylor in the presence of Bernheim, and with full knowledge that Bernheim was the principal, they cannot now hold Bernheim liable under it. The case of Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 73, 27 Pac. 518, 14 L. R. A. 65, is cited as authority for this position. There can be no doubt that this case fully supports the rule on which appellant relies. The theory of the Ferguson Case was that to permit a party to change his written contract in order to hold a known but unnamed principal would violate the parol evidence rule. Though the rule is not accepted generally in other jurisdictions, it has been followed in this state until the recent case of Geary Street, etc., R. R. Co. v. Rolph, 189 Cal. 59, 207 Pac. 539, where the Supreme Court implied that it should be qualified to the extent that it must appear that the contracting party elected to hold the agent instead of the principal. The Geary Street Case involved an oral contract and the Supreme Court has left uncertain the application of the rule in a case involving a written contract. Unless the execution of the contract with the agent when the principal is known and present is in itself evidence of an election to hold the agent, we cannot imagine a case in which the election could be proved by other than parol evidence. Here the trial court admitted parol evidence to show that the respondents dealt with Taylor as the agent of the appellant, and it found that Taylor executed the contract "acting for himself and acting for and on behalf and as the agent of the defendant J. H. Bernheim."

The case at bar is on all fours with the Ferguson Case and ordinarily we would feel bound to follow that decision, as we did upon the original hearing. That case has not been overruled by the Supreme Court, but the decision in the Geary Street Case is of such a character that we cannot but conclude that, if the Supreme Court were disposed to pass on the question directly, it would disapprove the rule announced in the Ferguson Case.

In the Geary Street Case the Supreme Court say (189 Cal. 66, 207 Pac. 542):

"That the principal is not liable in such a case if the circumstances, or the terms of the contract, or the two combined, show an intent by the other party to take the agent as his debtor or obligor, in preference to the principal, is, as we have said, well established, and it is manifestly in accordance with reason and justice. In such a case the election takes place at the time of the making of the contract."

From this we assume that, if the trial court should find, upon substantial evidence, that the obligee, at the time the contract was made, elected to hold the agent rather than the principal, the appellate court would be bound by the finding; but where, as here, the trial court found that the obligee took both the agent and the principal, there was no election at the time the contract was made, and, of course, we are bound by that finding. Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BETTENCOURT. (Cr. 728.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 26, 1923.)

1. Indictment and information $\S$ 41(1)—Failure to file commitment until after information held not ground for setting aside information.

Failure to file a commitment of magistrate with the clerk of the Supreme Court or to deliver it to the officer having custody of accused until after the information had been filed in the superior court, as required by Pen. Code, $\S$ 876, was not ground for setting aside the information, where the commitment had been duly made.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 511(6)—Larceny $\S$ 64(1)—Proof of possession of stolen goods sufficient corroboration of accomplice's testimony, though not alone sufficient to support conviction.

Proof of possession of stolen articles by accused a few days after the commission of a theft with which he was charged is sufficient corroboration of testimony of an accomplice to satisfy Pen. Code, $\S$ 1111, and sustain conviction, though such possession alone is not sufficient.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 829(1)—Denial of requested charges covered by others given not error.

Denial of requested charges covered by others given not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

J. J. Bettencourt was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James T. Matlock, of Red Bluff, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was accused by the district attorney of Butte county of the crime of grand larceny, in that, on the 1st day of May, 1923, he did then and there "wrongfully, willfully and feloniously steal, take and carry away one magneto of the value of $90, * * * the personal property of Cal Jackson," etc. The jury convicted him of the charge so made, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The points urged for a reversal of the judgment and the order appealed from are: That error was committed in the order denying the defendant's motion to set aside the information on the ground that he was not legally committed by a magistrate, "and that no commitment was on file or in the clerk's office at the time the information was filed against the defendant"; that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict; that error was committed in the act of the court in refusing to give certain instructions preferred by the defendant.

[1] The motion to set aside the information was properly denied. The showing made on the motion was that the defendant was given a preliminary hearing on the charge stated in the information before the justice of the peace of Oroville township, Butte county, acting as a committing magistrate, on the 17th day of May, 1923; that, upon the conclusion of the taking of the depositions, the magistrate made an order committing the accused for trial in the superior court for the crime with which he was charged in the complaint filed with the magistrate; that on said day the magistrate entered the order of commitment upon his docket and indorsed the same on the complaint. It was further shown at the hearing of said motion that the depositions were filed by the phonographic reporter who took them with the clerk of the superior court. It was made to appear, however, that it was not until after the information against the defendant was filed in the superior court that the commitment was either filed with the clerk of said court or even delivered to the sheriff, to whose custody a person held for trial on a felony or a high misdemeanor charge must, together with the commitment, be delivered (Pen. Code, $\S$ 876), and it is for this reason that the attorney for the defendant made the claim in the court below, in support of his motion to set aside the information, and which he renews on this appeal, that the district attorney prematurely filed the information, or, in other words, filed it before there existed the legal groundwork therefor, and that therefore the filing of said accusatory pleading was a futile and nugatory act. Practically the same point has been before the higher courts on several different occasions in the past, and it has in each instance been held, and we doubt not properly so, that it possessed no merit.

In People v. Wallace, 94 Cal. 499, 29 Pac. 950, it is said, in reply to the proposition that the district attorney was without authority to file the information because the commitment was not indorsed "upon the complaint" or upon any of the other depositions taken before the magistrate:

"It is doubtless true that the order holding to answer must be in writing, * * * but when, as a result of an examination, such an order has in fact been made and entered upon the docket of the justice, it would seem that no further action upon his part is necessary to authorize the district attorney to file an information against a defendant for the offense named in the order."

In People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896, the information was filed in the superior court on March 9, 1896, and the depositions, transcript, and order of commitment were not returned to the superior court by the examining magistrate until March 10, 1896. The defendant moved to set aside the information upon the same ground as the motion by the defendant here is based upon, said motion being urged for precisely the same reason as that by which it is sought to support the motion here. The Supreme Court in that case disposed of the point as follows:

"The question arising under the first subdivision above stated [subdivision 1, § 995, Pen. Code] is, When is the defendant legally committed? We think that occurs when the magistrate has acted judicially, and has made and signed the order of commitment. His judicial functions then cease, and the return of the depositions and order of commitment is a mere ministerial duty."

The court in that case then quotes approvingly the above excerpt from the case of People v. Wallace, supra. See, also, People v. Sac. Butchers' Ass'n, 12 Cal. App. 471, 479, 480, 107 Pac. 712.

[2] The contention that the jury was not justified in arriving at and returning a verdict of guilty upon the evidence before them is based upon the proposition that the chief inculpatory testimony introduced against the accused was given by an accomplice of the latter in the crime charged, and that said testimony was not corroborated as is required by section 1111 of the Penal Code.

It appears that during the night of the 1st day of May, 1923, the magneto of a tractor belonging to Calvin Jackson, a farmer living about two miles south of Palermo, in Butte county, was removed and taken away by some party or parties unknown to said Jackson, and without his consent. The magneto was of the value, approximately, of $85, according to the testimony of Jackson. The theft was reported to the sheriff of Butte county, who immediately proceeded to investigate the matter, and, finally, and on the 8th day of May, 1923, armed with a search warrant, and accompanied by a deputy, went to the rooms occupied by the defendant at 106 Washington avenue, Oroville, and, after making a search found the magneto among other articles under a bathtub in one of his rooms. The defendant was at the house at the time the officers called there, but remained in a room adjoining the one in which the sheriff found the magneto while that officer was searching said room. The defendant said nothing and made no explanation to the officers as to how he acquired possession of the stolen article. He was arrested at the time the magneto was found and taken to and confined in the county jail.

At the trial Jackson identified the magneto by the number of the same. He testified that he had had considerable experience in the use of magnetos, and that he knew that each magneto bore a different number.

A young man by the name of Cowan, who stated that he was 20 years of age, testified that he had known the defendant for some time, having first made his acquaintance in 'Red Bluff'; that late in the afternoon of the 1st day of May, 1923, he visited the defendant at his rooms at 106 Washington avenue, in Oroville; that the defendant remarked to him that he (defendant) had been out in the country and had seen the magneto on Jackson's tractor and suggested that "we would go and get it that night"; that he, upon the request of the defendant, accompanied the latter in his automobile during said night to the place on Jackson's farm where the tractor had been left by its owner that day. He stated that when they arrived at the spot where the tractor was standing the defendant told him to get out and secure the magneto, and that he got out and proceeded to the tractor and to remove the magneto therefrom; that the moment that he alighted from the automobile the defendant drove on some distance and waited for a few minutes, when he returned to where the tractor was, but the witness had not then succeeded in removing the magneto; that the defendant again drove away from where the tractor was, and a short while thereafter returned, the witness by that time having removed the magneto; that he passed the magneto over to the defendant, who threw it into the back part of the automobile, and they then started on their return to Oroville. Arriving at Oroville, the defendant went to his rooms and therein left the magneto. The witness identified the magneto which was offered in evidence as the one which had been taken by him from the Jackson tractor.

The defendant did not take the witness stand.

We think that the fact that the defendant had possession of the stolen article within a few days after the commission of the larceny is sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice to measure up to the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code. The rule is that, the crime having been proved, the corroboration of an accomplice must be such only as will tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. The defendant, as seen, did not testify in his own behalf, and neither at the time of his arrest nor at any time thereafter did he explain or attempt to explain how he secured possession of the magneto. It is true that the unexplained possession of stolen property by a party within a short time after the larceny has been committed is not by itself or alone sufficient to warrant a conviction of the accused of the asportation thereof; but it has never been held that the unexplained possession of stolen property does not afford an inference, slight though it may be, of the guilt of the accused. It is an incriminating circumstance which may be considered with any other incriminating facts and circumstances introduced in the case for the purpose of determining whether the defendant was guilty of the larceny of the property so possessed, and therefore is sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice in this case as to the defendant's connection with the commission of the crime. See People v. Grundell, 75 Cal. 301, 305, 17 Pac. 214; People v. Wagner, 36 Cal. App. 41, 171 Pac. 699.

[3] The instructions submitted by the defendant which the court refused to read to the jury, and which refusal it is here contended involved prejudicial error, were based upon section 1111 of the Penal Code, containing the statement that a person charged with crime cannot be convicted of the offense upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice in the commission of the crime charged. The court in its charge fully instructed the jury upon that subject. In fact, the court used, substantially, the language itself of section 1111. The court further instructed the jury, in accordance with said section, that an accomplice was one "who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given." There was no necessity for repeating these instructions, and, therefore, the refusal to give the instructions upon the same subject preferred by the defendant did not involve error. No other points are presented.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 1013.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Nov. 5, 1923.)

1. Criminal law §1186(4)—Admitting evidence of similar offenses held prejudicial error.

In prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, where evidence was admitted showing defendant's offenses of the same character, on days other than the one charged, and defendant objected to such admission and made motion to strike, which was followed by his own denial of the alleged transactions, and by independent evidence tending to establish his innocence, an instruction that the testimony was received merely as a circumstance indicating the probabilities as to whether defendant did make the sale charged, did not remove the prejudice created, so that an affirmance could not be had under Const. art. 6, § 4½, on the ground that there was no miscarriage of justice.

2. Criminal law §1134(8)—Appellate court may review any question of law involved at trial, affecting substantial rights of defendant.

Pen. Code, § 1259, providing that on appeal by defendant the appellate court may review any question of law involved at trial, which affects substantial rights of defendant, on appeal from the judgment only, it may consider whether, in prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, admitting evidence of other offenses, under instruction that they were received as a circumstance indicating whether defendant made the sale in question, was prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Hugh Smith was convicted of selling intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Reversed.

Shreve, Dorn & Shreve and B. F. Tyler, all of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant was convicted of the offense of selling intoxicating liquor contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided. He appeals from the judgment only.

[1] On the trial, over the objection of defendant, evidence was introduced showing the commission by defendant of offenses of the same character as that with which he was charged and occurring on separate days from the one specified in the information. This evidence was rebutted by several witnesses on behalf of defendant. A motion by defendant to strike out the testimony to which he had objected was denied by the court. In connection therewith and at the close of the case, among other instructions, the jury was charged that—

"That testimony was received, not for the purpose of establishing a separate misdemeanor or offense, but merely as a circumstance indicating what the probabilities are as to whether or not he did make the sale in question. * * * This is, as I say, that testimony as to those other sales or that other sale is merely for the purpose of helping you determine whether or not he did sell on the 4th day of February."

In the case of People v. Morales, 45 Cal. App. 553, 188 Pac. 58, the charge contained in the information was that on a certain date defendant had illegally sold alcoholic liquors. On the trial of that case, as here, evidence of sales of alcoholic liquor on other days than that specified in the information was admitted over defendant's objection; and the court, after citing California authorities bearing upon the matter, reached the conclusion that the error was so prejudicial to defendant's rights as to require a reversal of the judgment. The cases of People v. Amort (Cal. App.) 212 Pac. 50, People v. Clark, 28 Cal. App. 670, 153 Pac. 719, and People v. Dial, 28 Cal. App. 704, 153 Pac. 970, uphold the same principle, although in the latter case (in which the authorities generally are reviewed), where it appeared that there was no denial by defendant of the commission of the offenses other than the one of which he was accused in the information, and that defendant's guilt was clearly established, under the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, the judgment was affirmed on the ground that there had been no miscarriage of justice. The "saving grace" of the constitutional provision cannot be here invoked. Defendant used every means within his power in the way of objections to the admission of the evidence regarding other offenses, as well as by making a motion to strike the evidence, which was followed not only by his own denial of the alleged transactions, but also by independent evidence tending to establish his innocence thereof. Neither did the instructions given by the court to the jury remove the prejudice against defendant which must have been created by the reception of the objectionable evidence of such former sales of liquor by defendant. While it may be that without such evidence of other sales the case made out against defendant is strong enough to support the judgment, the great probabilities are that the evidence of other violations of the statute contributed to the verdict, if such evidence was not the controlling factor in its inducement. It is a dangerous practice, and one which is not in keeping with American ideals, to charge a man with one offense and on his trial therefor either to prove, or offer to prove, that he has at other times and places committed offenses of a nature similar to the one of which he is accused. There are certain cases in which the courts have held that, where the evidence of other offenses tends to establish a motive, or a system, or the inclination of the accused to commit a particular crime, or even for the purpose of establishing a fact material to the offense charged, such evidence is admissible; but, if such principle be once extended to cases which do not include anything involving the characteristics to which reference has been made, rights of persons may be placed in jeopardy by reason of the temptation on the part of prosecuting officers, where they may be entirely and honestly, although perhaps erroneously, convinced of the guilt of a defendant, to use evidence tending to show the commission by the defendant of other crimes, for the purpose of assuring a conviction in the case on trial. To charge a man with murder, and on his trial to be permitted to prove the commission by him of a long line of other disconnected offenses, which course has been unanticipated by the defendant and regarding which he is utterly unprepared to make defense, might, and in many cases would, result in unjustly exacting the supreme penalty on slight evidence of guilt, or, on an accusation of a lesser offense, bring about an entirely undeserved punishment.

[2] Respondent's contention that the matter to which we have referred cannot be considered by this court on an appeal from the judgment is not well founded. Section 1259 of the Penal Code, among other things, provides that upon an appeal taken by the defendant—

"the appellate court may, * * * review any question of law involved in any ruling, order, instruction, or thing whatsoever said or done at the trial or prior to or after judgment, which thing was said or done after objection made in and considered by the lower court, and which affected the substantial rights of the defendant."

Without considering other reasons urged by appellant, it is ordered that the judgment herein be, and the same is, reversed

ROSE v. PETALUMA & S. R. RY. CO. et al.
(Civ. 4749.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 25, 1923.)

1. Master and servant — 403—Burden of proof on compensation claimant invoking saving clause of limitations.

A claimant under the Workmen's Compensation Act who invokes the saving clause of section 11, subd. (c), in aid of his claim, which would otherwise be barred by limitation, has the burden of bringing himself within such provision.

2. Master and servant — 398—Compensation claimant held not within provision suspending limitations; "totally disabled and bedridden."

A showing that claimant after injury was able to be about for some weeks, and that later, while at a hospital, he was up from one to three hours a day, precluded him from taking advantage of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11, subd. (c), suspending the running of limitations in case of an employee who is "totally disabled and bedridden" as a result of his injury during the continuance of such condition, since the statute commenced to run and would continue to run notwithstanding he may subsequently have become totally bedridden.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Totally Disabled.]

3. Limitation of actions ⚡76(1)—Statute, having commenced to run, not suspended by subsequent disability.

Generally, when the statute of limitations has commenced to run, it will continue, notwithstanding subsequent disabilities, in the absence of a saving clause.

4. Limitation of actions ⚡76(1)—Disability to toll running of limitations must be continuing from first.

One seeking to establish that he has been laboring under a disability which tolled the running of limitations against him must prove that the disability was a continuing one from the first, for the statute, having commenced to run, is not suspended by a subsequent disability.

5. Limitation of actions ⚡78—Succession of disabilities cannot be relied upon to toll running of limitations.

One disability cannot be tacked to another or a succession of disabilities relied upon to prevent the running of limitations against a claim.

Application by Frank Rose for a writ of certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission in proceeding against the Petaluma & Santa Rosa Railway Company and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, denying him compensation. Award affirmed.

Emil G. Buehrer, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

Frank J. Creede, B. E. Pemberton, and Daniel W. Burbank, all of San Francisco, for respondent State Compensation Insurance Fund.

TYLER, P. J. This is a petition for a writ of review to determine the lawfulness of an original award made by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of respondent railroad company and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, denying petitioner relief for an injury claimed to have been sustained while he was in the employ of respondent company. It is also sought by the petition to determine the lawfulness of an order denying an application for a rehearing in the matter of said award and the finality resulting from such denial.

Petitioner was employed by defendant company as a stevedore for about four years prior to December 13, 1921. On the last-named day, while loading freight on a steamer in San Francisco, he felt a sharp pain, so he claims, in his left side just below the ribs. Shortly thereafter he reported the matter to the captain of the vessel, but continued in his work for the day. On January 9, 1922, he visited the office of defendant company and reported that he was not able to work, and demanded treatment for his injury. The superintendent of the floating equipment of the company had him removed to the Marine Hospital in an ambulance. On January 24, 1922, he was transferred from there to the Palo Alto Base Hospital, where he remained until February 28, 1922, when he was discharged. During the time he was at the Palo Alto hospital his limbs were paralyzed. Upon the day of his discharge he was using a wheel chair, and was brought to his home in San Francisco in an automobile.

The evidence shows that within a few weeks after his injury petitioner presented to a druggist a prescription dated December 27, 1921, calling for salve composed of oxide of mercury, ammoniated mercury, and zinc oxide, and a large piece of gauze, to be applied externally. The medical testimony indicates that petitioner was suffering from locomotorataxia, brought on through a venereal disease. It also appeared in evidence that during the entire term of his employment petitioner was delicate in health, and had often and from time to time left his work on this account. Other evidence contradicted petitioner's statement that he had complained of having been injured prior to the time he applied for compensation, it being admitted, however, that he had complained of stomach trouble.

The Commission made no finding upon the fact as to whether the applicant was or was not injured in the course of his employment, that body being of opinion that petitioner was barred in his claim by section 11 of the Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), relating to the limitation of time within which proceedings for the collection of benefits might be instituted.

There is no substantial conflict as to the facts upon this question, and the present writ is brought to review the findings of the Commission upon this subject, and to obtain a judicial construction of the limitation provisions in the Workmen's Compensation Act. These provisions are found in section 11 thereof. Subdivision (b), subsec. 1, provides:

"Proceedings for the collection of the benefit provided by subsection (a) of section nine or for the collection of the disability payment provided by subsection (b) of said section nine must be commenced within six months from the date of the injury, except as otherwise provided in this act."

The application was not filed within the time there provided for, but petitioner seeks to bring himself within the exception found at the end of subdivision (c) of section 11 of the act, which reads as follows:

"Provided, further, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to an employee who is totally disabled and bedridden as a result of his injury, during the continuance of such condition or until the expiration of six months thereafter."

The petition on its face shows that the claim was barred by the statute; and unless it can be said that the facts bring the case within the exception relied upon, the finding of the Commission must stand, the statute of limitations having been specially pleaded as a defense.

It will be noticed that the qualification to the limitation here relied upon provides that the statute is tolled against one who is totally disabled and bedridden. The findings of the Commission upon this subject are as follows:

"(2) The employee claims to have been injured on or about the said 13th day of December, 1921. The application was filed on the 24th day of January, 1923, more than six months thereafter. The claim is barred by the provisions of section 11 of the Compensation Act, relating to limitation of time to make claim, paragraph (c) of said section not rendering said section of the act inoperative, as the employee was not bedridden immediately after the time of the alleged injury."

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that the finding on the subject is fully supported by the evidence. Having invoked the exception to the statute, the burden was upon the applicant to show that he came within its provisions. Wood on Limitations, § 252. There is positive evidence to the fact that after applicant had received the claimed injury he was able to be about, and that in the month of January, 1922, some few weeks thereafter, he called at the office of the defendant company on crutches, at which time he was sent to the Marine Hospital. Other testimony shows that during the time he was confined at the hospital at Palo Alto he moved about and sat by the fire sometimes an hour and sometimes three hours a day. Under these circumstances the statute must be held to have commenced to run; for, even if it be conceded that the evidence shows that at some period during his illness petitioner was bedridden, it certainly does not show that he was so immediately after the accident.

[3-5] Petitioner makes the contention that, admitting that the statute had commenced to run, it was immediately tolled when he became bedridden, and, having been thus arrested, it was suspended until six months after the intervening disability had terminated. The general rule upon this subject is that, when the statute of limitations has commenced to run, it will continue unless there is a saving qualification in the statute. When a right of action has accrued and there are parties competent to sue and be sued at that time, the period of limitations begins to run, and it will continue to run notwithstanding any subsequent disability. 25 Cyc. 1267. The invariable construction which has been given to a saving clause is that, where it is incumbent upon a plaintiff to prove that he labored under any disability, he must show that it was a continuing one from the first, for, as stated, when the statute has once commenced to run, no subsequent disability will arrest it. Angell on Limitations, §§ 196, 197. It is a settled rule of construction that the exemption period cannot be extended by the connection of one disability with another; in other words, a succession of disabilities cannot be tacked upon the first disability so as to prevent the operation of the statute.

One of the purposes of the time limit imposed by the act is to cause an early submission to the Commission of the claim of the employee growing out of his injuries, so that by the observation of its members and with the aid of expert testimony the Commission may determine not only the condition of the applicant at the time, but the probable future results of the accident. Another object is to give the responsible employer a chance to alleviate the condition of his servant, to the end that the latter may the sooner be restored to full capacity for labor and the former relieved of the duty of paying indemnity. Ehrhard v. Ind. Acc. Com., 172 Cal. 621, 158 Pac. 193, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 465. Here petitioner presented his claim more than 13 months after the alleged injuries, and the evidence conclusively shows that he was not totally bedridden immediately after the accident, even conceding that at some period during the illness he might be considered so.

There is abundant evidence in the record to show that petitioner's case does not come within the saving clause of the act in question.

The award is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MILLER. (Cr. 1001.)

1. Larceny ⚡68(2)—Whether one obtaining property intended to pay therefor question for jury.

Where defendant at the time he obtained possession of property had no intention of paying for it, he is guilty of larceny, and the existence or nonexistence of that intention is for the jury.

2. Larceny ⚡57—Evidence justified finding that defendant did not intend to pay for hay purchased for cash.

In prosecution for larceny, evidence held to justify a verdict that defendant at the time he made purchases of hay for cash had no intention of paying for it.

3. Criminal law ⚡1152(1)—Requiring witness to answer through interpreter not reviewed unless there was abuse of discretion.

In prosecution for larceny where the court concluded that witness was unable to understand and express himself in the English language and that an interpreter was necessary, denial of defendant's request that witness answer certain questions directly in English will not be reviewed; there being nothing in the record indicating an abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

J. Miller was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse R. Shafer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CURTIS, J. The defendant was found guilty of grand larceny upon two counts: One charging him with the larceny of 63 tons of hay of the value of $1,008, the personal property of Sebastian de Costanze; and the other with the larceny of 128 tons of hay of the value of $2,048, the personal property of Tomatis and Pizzo.

The testimony under the first count was that on August 15, 1922, the defendant verbally bought 63 tons of hay from Costanze at $16 per ton, and agreed to pay therefor in cash as soon as the hay was weighed. Immediately thereafter defendant sent trucks to the premises of Costanze and hauled all of the said hay from said premises prior to August 30, 1922. On August 30th Costanze called upon defendant at his office in the city of Los Angeles and requested payment for the hay, and was informed by defendant that he could not pay him that day but would pay him on the 6th or 7th of September. About September 8th Costanze again called upon defendant at his office. The office was closed, and Costanze then went to the barn of defendant on Aliso street, and later, on the same day, to defendant's mill at Perry station near Redondo Beach. Both the barn and the mill were closed, and Costanze found neither the defendant nor any other person at either of these places. A few days later he called at defendant's house and was informed by defendant's wife that the defendant was not at home and would not be back until the following Sunday and for him to call again Monday. On Monday Costanze again called to see defendant at his house. He was told by defendant's wife that the defendant had not yet returned, but would return that night. Costanze did not meet the defendant again, and the latter has never paid him anything for said hay.

The testimony under the second count was that on August 19, 1922, by written agreement, defendant purchased of Tomatis and Pizzo 100 tons of hay at $16 per ton. The agreement is silent as to the time of payment. Tomatis and Pizzo both testified that it was to be paid for in cash as soon as the hay was weighed. Defendant removed the hay from the premises of Tomatis and Pizzo, amounting to 128 tons, about the 21st and 22d of August. Two days later Tomatis and Pizzo called upon the defendant at his place of business on Aliso street and asked payment for the hay. Defendant replied that he had not yet received the tags showing the weight of the hay and therefore could not pay them, and asked them to return two or three days later. They returned at the appointed time, and defendant informed them that they would have to wait until Saturday as the person to whom he had sold the hay had not yet paid him for the hay. They returned on the following Friday and again found the defendant at his place of business. The latter told them that the bookkeeper was sick and he could not make out a check and for them to wait two or three days longer. The next Saturday they returned and found defendant and his bookkeeper in an automobile near defendant's place of business. Defendant told them that he could not pay them and for them to come back in five or six days. They might have seen him on one occasion thereafter. The defendant has never paid them any part of the purchase price of the hay.

A witness by the name of W. M. Hilliker also testified that he lived in the San Fernando valley, and on August 5, 1922, he sold to the defendant a lot of hay, amounting to about a hundred tons, for which the defendant agreed to pay him in cash as soon as the same was weighed, $17.50 per ton for the alfalfa hay, $18 per ton for the barley hay, and $19 per ton for oat hay. Defendant also agreed to send him a check for $150 by the first driver who came to haul the hay. The defendant immediately sent trucks to haul the hay from the Hilliker place. He failed to send his check for $150, but on August 11th, and after a large portion of the hay had been hauled from the premises by the defendant, Hilliker called upon defendant at his office in the city of Los Angeles and demanded payment on account of the hay. The defendant thereupon paid him $200. He never paid Hilliker anything more for the hay sold.

The defendant took the stand and denied that he agreed to pay cash for the hay, but, on the other hand, stated that he was to have from 10 to 30 days in which to pay for the same, and in other respects he contradicted the testimony given in behalf of the prosecution. He testified that he sold 35 tons of the hay to a person who paid him a small cash payment and gave his note for $500 in settlement of the balance. He made no further explanation as to why he had not paid for the hay purchased from the several parties. The jury, however, having found the defendant guilty, it is presumed that they accepted the statements of the witnesses on behalf of the prosecution and found against the defendant upon all issues where the evidence was contradictory.

Appellant now contends that the evidence is not sufficient to justify a verdict against the defendant upon the charge of grand larceny.

A case very similar to the case at bar was before the court in People v. Sing, 42 Cal. App. 385, 183 Pac. 865, in which case the court said as follows:

"Where a sale is a cash sale, delivery of the goods and payment of the purchase money are concurrent acts, and the vendor, though he has made delivery, supposing that he would immediately receive the purchase price, may reclaim the property from the purchaser if the purchase money be not paid according to the terms of the sale, provided he has not waived the cash payment or been guilty of laches or such conduct as would estop him. If the condition of cash payment is not waived, the title does not pass until the price is paid. * * * It frequently happens that the seller will deliver the goods notwithstanding the failure to fulfill the condition of payment. In such cases, the question whether the delivery is to be considered a waiver of the condition that payment shall be made before the title passes may depend upon the attendant circumstances; for whether the condition has been waived or not is a question of intention. An absolute delivery of property to the buyer without a demand of the purchase price is presumptive evidence of a waiver of the condition of present payment and of a willingness to give credit to the buyer. This presumption, however, may be rebutted by the acts and declarations of the parties, or by the circumstances of the case. Whether the delivery without payment is absolute, so as to pass the title, or conditional, so that the title does not pass, depending as it does upon the intention of the parties, the intent that the delivery before payment shall be conditional and not absolute may be inferred from the acts of the parties and the circumstances of the case, and is a question of fact for the jury."

In an early case, People v. Smith, 23 Cal. 280, the facts were as follows:

"The defendant was indicted and convicted of the crime of grand larceny, in stealing a horse. The evidence showed that the defendant hired the horse of the keepers of a livery stable and in that way obtained possession."

A judgment of conviction in this case was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

[1] The rule appears to be that if the defendant, at the time he obtained possession of the property, had no intention of paying therefor, he is guilty of larceny, and that the existence or nonexistence of this intention is a fact for the jury to decide.

[2] In the case at bar the jury, by its verdict of "guilty," has found that the defendant, at the time he made the purchases set forth in the information, had no intention of paying for the hay purchased, and we are of the opinion that the evidence warranted the jury in arriving at this conclusion.

Two other points are raised by the appellant as grounds for reversing the judgment. Appellant contends that the court erred in failing to excuse the juror Dewey H. Burden, challenged by the defendant on the ground of actual bias. We have examined the evidence of this juror taken upon his voir dire, and we find nothing therein that would have justified the court in sustaining defendant's challenge.

[3] Neither do we find any error in the ruling of the court denying appellant's request that the witness Pizzo answer certain questions propounded to him directly in English and not through an interpreter. This witness had attempted to give his testimony in English. During his examination the court came to the conclusion that an interpreter was necessary on account of his inability to understand, and express himself in, the English language. It was while he was giving his testimony through an interpreter that the defendant's attorney requested that he be directed to answer certain questions in English. The questions related to a conversation that the witness stated he had overheard between the defendant and Tomatis which was in English. The court refused this request and also the request of appellant to examine the witness regarding his knowledge of the English language and his ability to speak the same. In denying defendant's request the court stated that he did so under authority of People v. Avila, 50 Cal. App. 228, 194 Pac. 768, and that it satisfactorily appeared to the court that the witness, under the rule laid down in that case, should be permitted to give his testimony through an interpreter. The action of the court in this respect will not be disturbed by this court. "In each case the question is one for the judicial determination of the trial court; its ruling thereon will not be disturbed unless the record clearly shows an abuse of discretion." People v. Avila, supra. There is nothing in the record before us that would indicate in the slightest degree that there was any abuse of discretion on the part of the court in denying appellant's request.

The judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial are affirmed.

In re GRAVES. (Cr. 984.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 19, 1923.)

1. Attorney and client — 43—Unjustified assault on judge's character and conduct "moral turpitude" and violation of oath.

An unjustified assault upon the character or official conduct of a judge, consisting of the publication of charges which, if true, constituted misuse of judicial office or misconduct in office, is "moral turpitude" within Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 5, and a violation of the attorney's oath, section 282, subd. 2.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Moral Turpitude.]

2. Attorney and client — 43—Libel of judge concerning official acts ground for disbarment.

Libel of judge concerning his official acts by an attorney constitutes a ground for suspension or disbarment.

3. Attorney and client — 53(1)—Showing held prima facie case for disbarment imposing burden of establishing defense on defendant.

Where the publication by an attorney of charges against a judge of such a character, if true, as to constitute a misuse of judicial office and misconduct in office has been established, a presumption of falsity arises imposing the burden on defendant to establish their truth or show good faith or justification.

4. Attorney and client — 53(2)—Refusal to testify held evidence of malice and absence of good faith.

Defendant's refusal to testify in explanation or justification of charges against a judge may be considered as evidence of malice or lack of good faith.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Disbarment proceedings against M. O. Graves. From a judgment of disbarment, he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 216 Pac. 386.

M. O. Graves, of Los Angeles (Kimball Fletcher, Dudley Robinson, James Westervelt, and Henry E. Carter, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Frank C. Collier and Edwin A. Meserve, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. Appellant was charged in the superior court by the Los Angeles Bar Association with violations of subdivisions 2 and 6 of section 282, and subdivision 5 of section 287, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provide as follows:

"282. Duties. It is the duty of an attorney and counselor: * * * (2) To maintain the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers. * * * (6) To abstain from all offensive personality, and to advance no fact prejudicial to the honor or reputation of a party or witness, unless required by the justice of the cause with which he is charged."

"287. An attorney and counselor may be removed or suspended by the supreme court, or any department thereof, or by any district court of appeal, or by any superior court of the state, for either of the following causes, arising after his admission to practice: * * *

(5) For the commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, whether the same be committed in the course of his relations as an attorney or counselor at law, or otherwise, and whether the same shall constitute a felony or misdemeanor or not; and in the event that such act shall constitute a felony or misdemeanor, conviction thereof in a criminal proceeding shall not be a condition precedent to disbarment or suspension from practice therefor."

The specific grounds of these charges were that appellant caused to be printed and distributed through the mails among citizens of Los Angeles county circulars attacking the official and personal acts and conduct of Charles Monroe, a judge of the superior court of said county, certain portions of which circulars were selected and quoted in the accusation. The case was predicated principally upon the quoted excerpts, and those only are here reproduced, to the exclusion of remaining portions of a similar import, all of which constituted a somewhat lengthy article:

"Recall Judge Charles Monroe and Save the Jury System.

"* * * In Case B-S4060, Margaret Clark, a check clerk at the Alexandria Hotel, sued the hotel company to recover tips which she had been given by patrons and had been forced by the hotel company to turn over to its treasurer. Judge Monroe personally secured the transfer of this case from Department II, where it was set for trial, to his department; on hearing the testimony he expressed the utmost disgust with the greed of the hotel company in exacting its tribute in tips from patrons and employees, but refused to allow the jury to pass on the question and ordered judgment in favor of the company. The young lady was not financially able to appeal.

"* * * It is also his custom to talk with prospective jurymen and women, practically to exact from them promises to do as he says. It is also common practice for him to pry into the secrets of the jury room and find out how each juror voted. He is said to keep a list from which he can determine how every jurymen voted, who ever sat in his department.

"In Metcalfe v. Pacific Electric Railway. No. B-87332, Judge Monroe refused to set aside a verdict in favor of the defendant and grant a new trial, which judgment had been entered by mistake on a verdict to which only eight jurors agreed. See affidavits in the office of the clerk of the superior court.

"Query: Would he have set it aside if the judgment had been for the plaintiffs. The answer is, that he has never failed to set aside a judgment against a railroad; if the slightest flaw could be found in any stage of the proceedings."

The parties stipulated that said Charles Monroe at the times mentioned in the circulars, and at the time of the trial, was a judge of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles; and that M. O. Graves, at all of said times, was a member of the bar, duly admitted and licensed to practice in all courts of the state.

Respondents alleged that the statements italicized herein were and each of them was false and untrue, and known by appellant to be untrue when said communication was published, and that the publication of them was libelous and dishonest, and in violation of those provisions of the Code which require attorneys and counselors to maintain the respect due to courts of justice and judicial officers, and to abstain from all offensive personalities; and, also, that it constituted dishonesty and moral turpitude in the course of appellant's relations as an attorney or counselor at law, or otherwise.

Appellant asserts in his brief that he entertained the highest motives in anything which he may have said about the judge or his official conduct, asserting that as a citizen and attorney he harbored the noblest ideals, and cherished due respect for all tribunals before which he was privileged to appear; but that faithfully and honestly relying upon an abiding consciousness that justice was being besmirched by the practices which he denounced, he deemed it a sacred right and solemn duty to warn the public, and correct the asserted evil. He contends that his incentive entitled the questioned publication to privilege, and that any curtailment of his right of free speech in this regard infringed prerogatives guaranteed by the Constitutions of both state and nation. He quotes eminent authorities in support of the right and duty of electors to comment upon and criticize the acts and conduct of candidates for public office.

At the trial appellant was called to the stand by his accusers. His counsel objected that the usual rights, immunities, and presumptions which abide with a defendant in criminal proceedings dwelt with him throughout the trial, and when overruled in this he refused to answer questions on the ground that his evidence might tend to incriminate him, declaring that the published circulars might be stretched into criminal libel. He introduced no evidence as to the truth of any assertion embodied in his circular, or to refute any charge made against him in the accusation. Evidence was offered tending to show that appellant composed and wrote the alleged documents, and several members of the bar and judges testified to having received them from the postoffice.

[1] The acts charged against Judge Monroe would, if true, clearly constitute misuse of his judicial office and misconduct in office. If these charges were false, the conclusion is equally impossible of escape that to have made them was an act of injustice and dishonesty. It is unfair, unethical, and immoral to falsely assail the character or official conduct of any officer. Such an assault as that contained in the attack here made upon Judge Monroe, if not justified by the facts, was therefore an act of moral turpitude. Bouvier's Law Dictionary, p. 2247. It was also a violation of the attorney's oath, as provided by section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "to maintain the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers." When the facts heretofore recounted had been placed before the trial court, a prima facie case against the accused was established. It was then incumbent upon him, if he would successfully defend himself against the accusations, to have shown the existence of privilege, or to have defended upon the ground that the statements made were true. He did neither. There is nothing contained in the record to show that any election was imminent, or that the magistrate attacked had invited discussion or criticism as to his qualifications for any office, through having announced an aspiration to be elected thereto, or otherwise.

[2] It is unnecessary here to attempt the establishment of limitations within which one may be confined in casting aspersions upon an incumbent of the judiciary during a heated campaign for re-election. Judge Monroe was not running for office, and no such occasion was presented. However, there are such limitations, and these questions have been settled by the Supreme Courts of this and most of the other states. In the Matter of Humphrey, 174 Cal. 290, 163 Pac. 60, it is declared that even though the subject of attack was at the time a candidate for re-election to judicial office, an attorney at law was not privileged to falsely accuse the magistrate of acts amounting to misuse of his office. It must be remembered and recognized that the language alleged to have been used by appellant contained charges of specific conduct which, if warranted by the facts, would amount to an abuse of official authority. We have in these accusations not a criticism in the way of fair comment, or of expression of opinion, but definite charges amounting to misuse of office. Such charges can only be justified by proof of their truth; if they were untrue their publication constituted libel, and for an attorney to libel a judge concerning his official acts is certainly ground for suspension or disbarment. Dauphiny v. Buhne, 153 Cal. 757, 96 Pac. 880, 126 Am. St. Rep. 136; Jarman v. Rea, 137 Cal. 339, 70 Pac. 216. In a disbarment proceeding, upon the question of proof, both as to the truth of the charges made, and also the good faith of an attorney making them against a judge, the law is clearly and unequivocally stated by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Cobb v. U. S., 172 Fed. 641, 96 C. C. A. 477. We quote from that decision:

"The plaintiff in error admitted in his answer that he wrote the communication and sent the same to the publisher, but he denied that he did so willfully or maliciously, or that the article was willfully or maliciously or otherwise false or untrue, or that he had any intent to scandalize or traduce or disgrace the court. Upon the issue so raised, the plaintiff in error might, had he so chosen, have adduced testimony to sustain his denials, but upon the refusal of the court to refer the case to a committee of three members of the bar the plaintiff in error by his counsel announced in open court that he would not further appear in the case, or have anything further to do with the same. The burden was upon him to show that statements made in the communication which were scandalous upon their face were not maliciously or willfully published, or were not false, and he cannot complain that upon his refusal to sustain such burden of proof, or to adduce any testimony whatever, the court took the information to be true."

[3, 4] In the instant case the burden was upon appellant to show the truthfulness of his published statements, and under the circumstances evidence in the nature of a presumption of falsity arose which appellant was called upon to meet; he was not clothed with any presumption as to the verity of his printed accusations, or of his own justification in broadcasting the alleged defamatory assaults upon the official or personal character and conduct of a magistrate. In addition to the presumption that the communication containing charges on their face libelous were maliciously and willfully published, the fact that the appellant refused to testify is evidence entitled to weight as showing the existence of malice and the absence of good faith. That his refusal to testify may be so viewed is expressly decided in Re Wellcome, 23 Mont. 450, 59 Pac. 445, which holding our Supreme Court quotes with approval in Re Vaughan, 189 Cal. 491, 209 Pac. 353, 24 A. L. R. 858.

A demurrer was interposed to the accusation herein, and appellant contends that it should have been sustained on the grounds that the publication of the circular was within his constitutional rights, that it was privileged and that he was performing his duty as a citizen and as a lawyer. These questions have been passed upon in this opinion. The demurrer was properly overruled.

Exception was also taken to the adverse ruling of the trial court upon appellant's motion for stay of the order of suspension pending appellate proceedings, but in view of our holding no ruling upon that question is necessary.

The order and judgment appealed from are therefore affirmed.

2. Criminal law ⚡304(16)—Court does not take judicial notice of files on plea of former jeopardy and conviction.

Pleas of former jeopardy and conviction must be supported by evidence, even when both trials have been in the same court, under such circumstance the court not taking judicial notice of what is contained in its files, the records, or the evidence.

3. Criminal law ⚡576(5)—Application for dismissal for failure to try case within 60 days, not made before trial, waived.

The application of Pen. Code, § 1382, subd. 2, for dismissal of a prosecution because defendant was not tried within 60 days after filing of information, must be made in the court where it is pending, and, if not made therein before trial is begun, the right is waived.

4. Criminal law ⚡576(1)—No statutory requirement of time within which arraignment takes place.

There is no statutory or other requirement fixing the time within which arraignment shall take place after filing of information.

5. Criminal law ⚡1031(4) — Objection to seasonable arraignment made only in court below.

Objection by defendant that he was not seasonably arraigned after filing of information can be made only in the court below.

6. Criminal law ⚡1044—Objection to failure to file information within 30 days raised only in trial court.

Where relief under Pen. Code, § 1382, subd. 1, is sought because information was not filed within 30 days from time defendant was held to answer, defendant must first apply to the trial court for an order of dismissal, and if this be not done the right will be waived.

7. Criminal law ⚡152—Absence from state tolled limitation.

Where information alleged offense of passing fictitious draft as of January 22, 1919, 3 years and 9 days before its filing, but alleged that defendant fled the state and remained outside from October 5, 1921, to November 28, 1921, which was supported by evidence, Pen. Code, § 800, providing that information must be filed within 3 years was inapplicable.

8. Criminal law ⚡855(7)—District attorney's talk with juror in corridor not misconduct.

In prosecuting for passing a fictitious check, casual conversation between district attorney and a juror in the courtroom corridor, in plain view of bystanders, held not to be misconduct.

9. Criminal law ⚡1166½(12)—Court's statement that there was no difference between witness' evidence at trials not harmful.

In a second prosecution for passing a fictitious check, where, on cross-examination of a witness, his previous testimony was called to his attention, remarks of the court that there was no difference in the testimony as to the point in question, being apparently true, was not harmful, in view of instruction that jury should determine whether there was difference.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1924.)

1. Criminal law ⚡204—Failure to support pleas of former acquittal held waiver.

In prosecution for passing a fictitious draft, where defendant's special pleas of former jeopardy and conviction presented issues of fact, but no evidence was offered in support thereof, such failure was a waiver of the defense.

10. Criminal law §829(7)—Refusing instruction on alibi, covered by instruction given, not error.

In prosecution for passing a fictitious check, where proposed instructions on alibi were substantially given in other instructions, there was no error in their refusal.

11. Criminal law §829(9)—Instruction on burden of proof properly denied, where substantially given.

In prosecution for passing a fictitious check, where propositions in a proposed instruction on burden of proof were substantially covered in instructions given, notwithstanding that proposed instructions should have been added thereto, defendant's rights were not prejudiced.

12. Constitutional law §199 — Information not under amendment to statute, and therefore not under ex post facto law.

In prosecution for passing a fictitious check, where it was not charged in the information that defendant was an agent of the company drawing the draft, or whether it was a copartnership or corporation, but defendant was proceeded against for having personally issued the draft, the prosecution was under Pen. Code, § 476a, before amendment by St. 1919, p. 238, for an offense occurring prior to the amendment, and defendant was not therefore condemned under an ex post facto law.

Hugh H. Newell was convicted of passing a fictitious draft, and he appeals. Affirmed. See, also, 206 Pac. 61; 220 Pac. 425.

T. L. Christianson, of Oakland, and Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rior-dan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LAWLOR, J. The district attorney of Alameda county filed an information against the defendant, Hugh H. Newell, charging him with a violation of section 476a of the Penal Code in making, drawing, uttering, and delivering a bank draft without funds or credit to meet it upon presentation. The draft is in—

"words and figures as follows to wit: 'Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank, San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 25, 1919. 19—. For customer's use only. Pay to the order of Hal Warinack $50.00, fifty dollars...dollars, value received, and charge the same to account of New Ellen Potash and Chemical Company, by Hugh H. Newell. Hugh H. Newell. To Security Savings Bank, Riverside, Riverside, California.'"

The second "Hugh H. Newell" was made with a rubber stamp; the rest of the signature being in handwriting.

It is alleged that neither the defendant nor the company had sufficient funds in or sufficient credit with the Riverside bank, or any credit at all, to meet the draft on presentation, which the company and defendant well knew. It is further alleged that after the draft was drawn by defendant he delivered it to the First National Bank of Oakland, with intent to defraud the said bank. Upon arraignment defendant pleaded not guilty to the charge and interposed two special pleas—former acquittal and once in jeopardy. The defendant was found guilty as charged in the information, and under the instructions of the court the jury found in favor of the prosecution on the said special pleas. In due course defendant interposed, respectively, a motion for a new trial "on all the statutory grounds," and a motion in arrest of judgment, both of which motions were denied, whereupon he gave an oral notice of appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, from the order denying the motion in arrest of judgment, and from the judgment of conviction.

Appellant's brief herein purports to have been prepared by himself, although he was represented on the oral argument in this court by one of the counsel who appeared at the trial. The brief concludes as follows:

"Defendant respectfully submits, therefore, that the order, judgment, and decree of the District Court of Appeal be affirmed, and that the judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Alameda county be reversed, and defendant discharged."

[1] 1. We will first consider appellant's contention that he is entitled to his discharge under his special pleas of former acquittal and once in jeopardy. Appellant relies on an asserted former trial of the action and a verdict of not guilty by reason of variance between the pleading and proof to sustain his pleas. It appears from the record that, when the first witness for the prosecution was about to testify at the last trial, counsel for appellant addressed the court as follows:

"At this time, if your honor please, I wish to make a motion to exclude any testimony in this case on the part of the prosecution on the ground of the plea of once in jeopardy, and I wish to call your honor's attention to the fact that the information which is now filed, under which this defendant is being tried, states in legal terms the same and identical crime for which the defendant was once before tried, and in which a jury found a verdict of 'Not guilty' upon the instruction or advice of the court in the previous trial, and that the question becomes a question of law in this case—while the question of former jeopardy is more a question of fact to be decided by the jury in the case where the evidence is the same, still it becomes also a question purely of law, as held by the Supreme Court of this state. [Cites cases.] The question of former jeopardy becomes a question of law, and one in which the jury is not competent to decide a matter of law, as to whether the informations are the same or are identical, or whether the plea of former jeopardy in regard to the indictment in this case would be decided under the test of former jeopardy, the test of former jeopardy is, if what is set out in the second information has been proved under the first, it would have supported a conviction, and if it would the second cannot be maintained. Now, it becomes purely a question of law for the court itself to determine, if what is set out in the second information, under this present information, has been proved under the first, if it would have supported a conviction, and if it would the second cannot be maintained."

The court ruled as follows:

"The Court. I take it, gentlemen, that the entire argument is based upon the question as to whether or not the information upon which the defendant was tried formerly was a valid information. If it was invalid, a conviction would never have been sustained, and a person tried upon an invalid complaint is, according to the People v. Ammerman, just cited by counsel for the defendant, not once in jeopardy, and the court so rules, and the motion is denied."

When the prosecution rested, and before any evidence was offered on behalf of appellant, his counsel moved as follows:

"The next motion is that we ask the court, as a matter of law to direct a verdict or to advise a verdict of the jury to return a verdict of acquittal of this defendant, upon the ground that the evidence that has been introduced on this trial is the same evidence that was introduced on the former trial of this defendant in this same courtroom, before the same judge and the same court, and that the informations are the same—that the information on the first trial was sufficient in law to sustain a conviction—if this same evidence had been introduced under the first information filed, that that information would have been sufficient in law to sustain that evidence, in view of the fact there has been no demurrer interposed in that case against that information, and that the case was tried without a dismissal of the jury; that the jury heard the prosecution's case, and the case was closed by the prosecution, and after the prosecution's case was closed, the defendant then made a motion and asked the court for a verdict in favor of the defendant on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction, and the court granted the motion on the ground there was a material variance between the information and the evidence, but that the jury, without being discharged, thereupon found a verdict in favor of the defendant of not guilty, which verdict was recorded in this court, and the jury was then and there discharged after the verdict had been rendered, and they had agreed that that was their verdict; and that at no time had the defendant asked for the jury to be discharged, or the case be discharged, and that the verdict was a verdict in favor of the defendant, and he has been once in jeopardy, and the defendant moves on those grounds that the jury be advised to find a verdict of not guilty.

"The Court: Is the matter submitted?

"Mr. Higgins: Submitted.

"Mr. Ewell: Submitted.

"The Court: Motion denied."

The record does not show that any other action was taken on behalf of appellant during the trial in respect to the special pleas, nor does it contain any evidence in support thereof.

The petition of the Attorney General for a hearing herein presents two points on the special pleas—first, that the defendant, not having offered any evidence in support thereof, is deemed to have waived this defense, and, second, that, even if this be not true, the previous verdict of acquittal because of a material variance between the pleading and proof did not operate as a bar to a further prosecution. We will first consider the failure of appellant to present any evidence in support of the special pleas.

It was evidently under the misconception that the determination of the special pleas was confided to the court alone that no attempt was made to sustain these pleas by evidence. Appellant failed to offer in evidence the first information, the minutes of the plea, the minutes of the trial, the proposed instructions, the instructions given or refused, or the judgment. In fact, no part of the judgment roll of the asserted first trial was offered in support of the special pleas. There was no testimony identifying appellant as the defendant in the former action. The evidence purported to have been taken on the former trial was not offered in support of the pleas. Appellant claims the evidence was covered by a written stipulation, but this is denied by the prosecution, and the paper referred to shows it was signed alone by counsel for appellant. Nor is the statement of appellant's counsel that the evidence was the same on both trials the equivalent of proof that it was identical. It is shown by the transcript on appeal that, after certifying to the judgment roll of the second trial, the clerk of the court included in the succeeding pages what purports to be the first information and the verdict of the jury on the ground of variance, and certified to these papers as the judgment roll on that trial. None of these papers had any proper place in the transcript on appeal. If the information and verdict had been received in evidence, they should have appeared with the other proof in the reporter's transcript on appeal, as evidence under the special pleas.

For the purpose merely of illuminating appellant's contentions, we may have recourse to the first information. The only difference in the two informations is that the first alleged that "the said Hugh H. Newell * * * did not have sufficient funds in nor sufficient credit nor any credit at all with" the bank to meet the draft. The second information alleged that "neither the said Hugh H. Newell nor the said New Ellen Potash & Chemical Company * * * had sufficient funds in nor sufficient credit with or any credit at all with" the bank to meet the draft. Referring again to the purported first information, and the verdict on that trial for the same purpose, it may be assumed that the court on the first trial advised the jury, in conformity with sections 1151 and 1165 of the Penal Code, to acquit appellant on the ground of variance. We have already quoted appellant's counsel to the effect that, after the prosecution rested on the first trial, he made a motion for acquittal on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, and that the court then advised the jury to acquit on the ground of variance.

We shall next consider whether the court erred in instructing the jury to find for the prosecution on the special pleas.

"No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." Const. art. 1, § 13.

"No person can be subjected to a second prosecution for a public offense for which he has once been prosecuted and convicted or acquitted." Section 687, Pen. Code.

Upon a review of the authorities it was said in Ex parte Harron (Cal. Sup.) 217 Pac. 728:

"It must be regarded as the law of this state that the constitutional and statutory pleas must be entered specially, and if this is not done they are waived. This is the general rule. L. R. A. 1917A, 1233, note, citing many authorities, including People v. Bennett, supra [114 Cal. 56], and People v. Strickler, 167 Cal. 627, 140 Pac. 270."

Appellant's special pleas were sufficient in form, but it has been held that such pleas present a question of fact which the jury alone has power to pass upon, unless the defendant fails to support such pleas with proof, when it becomes a question of law upon which the court must pass. People v. Bennett, 114 Cal. 56, 59, 45 Pac. 1013; People v. Solani, 6 Cal. App. 103, 91 Pac. 654; People v. McFarlane, 138 Cal. 481, 484, 71 Pac. 568, 72 Pac. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245; People v. Cummings, 123 Cal. 269, 272, 55 Pac. 898; People v. Wilkison, 30 Cal. App. 473, 477, 158 Pac. 1067. See Rebstock v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 308, 315, 80 Pac. 65.

"When the guilt of defendant is in question, he is protected by the presumption of innocence; but when a former conviction or acquittal is in question he has no such presumption to aid him. Therefore, to sustain such a plea, the burden is upon defendant, and he must prove not only the former conviction, acquittal, or jeopardy, but also the identity of the parties and of the offenses, and the jurisdiction of the court." 16 Corpus Juris, 425.

"And whatever be the true course in a case within our next subtitle, it is commonly understood that nothing short of a showing by record of a prior conviction or acquittal will sustain the plea here considered. The burden of proof—to establish this plea, being matter affirmatively alleged by the defendant—is on him." 2 Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, 632, 633.

To the same effect are People v. McFarlane, supra; People v. Preciado, 31 Cal. App. 519, 531, 160 Pac. 1090.

It is just as necessary to support special pleas by proof (People v. Cummings, 123 Cal. 269, 272, 55 Pac. 898) as it is to interpose the pleas, and the failure to do either is to be deemed a waiver of the defense (People v. Strickler, 167 Cal. 627, 140 Pac. 270; People v. McFarlane, supra). It was said, in People v. Stoll, 143 Cal. 689, 696, 77 Pac. 818, 821:

"The right to interpose a plea of once in jeopardy is a personal privilege, of which a defendant may, or may not, avail himself."

The principle was quoted in People v. Bennett, 114 Cal. 56, 59, 45 Pac. 1013, 1014, that:

"The law's methods must be pursued by him who seeks the protection of the law."

The special pleas of appellant presented an issue of fact, and, as no evidence was offered in support thereof, a question of law was presented to the trial court, which that court decided by instructing the jury to find for the prosecution on the special pleas. It was incumbent on the court to so instruct the jury. People v. Cummings, 123 Cal. 269, 272, 55 Pac. 898; People v. Wilkison, 30 Cal. App. 473, 477, 158 Pac. 1067.

[2] It is urged by appellant that because both informations were identical, except in the particular already mentioned, a question of law only was presented which the court should decide, thus ignoring the rule laid down in the authorities we have cited that special pleas must be supported by evidence and determined by the jury, even when both trials have been held in the same court. In such circumstances the court does not take judicial notice of what is contained in its files, the records, or the evidence but proof must be offered by the defendant to sustain the pleas. It is claimed in this connection that during the trial the court caused both informations to be produced, and that, after examining and comparing them, held the first information to be insufficient. We find no warrant for this statement of fact in the record, but, even if both informations were before the court for the purpose stated, this did not relieve appellant from the necessity of making full proof before the jury in support of the special pleas. It follows that the defenses of former acquittal and once in jeopardy were waived. This being so, it becomes unnecessary to determine under this head whether the first information stated facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, or whether the court erred in instructing the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty because of a variance between the pleading and proof, upon the motion of appellant under section 1118 of the Penal Code to advise the jury to acquit because of the asserted insufficiency of the evidence, even if it be assumed the points were properly presented in the court below.

[3] 2. Appellant next contends that he—

“was not tried within 60 days after the filing of the information, nor arraigned within 30 days after the filing of the information, and the information was filed more than thirty days after defendant was held to answer, and more than three years after offense was committed.”

First as to the trial: It is shown by the clerk's transcript on appeal that the information herein was filed on February 1, 1922, and that the trial opened on June 14, 1922—134 days after the filing of the information. But there is no showing anywhere that the relief afforded by subdivision 2, § 1382, of the Penal Code, was sought in the superior court. The application must be made, in the first place, in the court where the prosecution is pending (Ex parte Fennessey, 54 Cal. 101), and, if the application is not made therein before the trial is begun, the right is waived (People v. Hawkins, 127 Cal. 372, 374, 59 Pac. 697). It follows there is no merit in this claim.

[4, 5] As to the question of arraignment, it may be stated that there is no statutory or other requirement fixing the time within which the arraignment shall take place. Appellant was arraigned on April 13, 1922, and according to his assertion this was the second arraignment on the same charge. Moreover, it does not appear it was claimed in the court below that the appellant was not seasonably arraigned, and this alone is a sufficient answer to the contention.

[6] As to the next point, it is not shown that at any time prior to appeal the point was made that the information was not filed within 30 days after appellant was held to answer. Here again it is to be noted, appellant asserts two informations were filed. As has already been stated, the one herein was filed on February 1, 1922, but it nowhere appears when appellant was held to answer. The proper procedure, where relief is sought under the first subdivision of section 1382 of the Penal Code, is to first apply to the court below for an order of dismissal; and if this be not done the right will be deemed to have been waived. There is no merit in this contention.

[7] The next point is that the information was not filed within three years after the alleged commission of the offense, section 800, Pen. Code. It does not appear whether this was made a ground of demurrer or was otherwise brought to the attention of the lower court. However, the information alleges that the offense was committed on January 22, 1919, some 3 years and 9 days before the filing of the information. But the information also alleges that on or about October 5, 1921, appellant fled from the state of California to the republic of Mexico, and that he remained outside of the jurisdiction of the court continuously until on or about November 28, 1921—a period of 1 month and 23 days. Evidence was received tending to support the allegations of absence from the state, and there is no foundation therefore, for appellant's claim that the statute of limitations had run against the charge.

We shall notice some additional points made in appellant's brief in the District Court of Appeal.

[8] One of these is the asserted misconduct of the district attorney in conversing with one of the jurors in the case. It appears from the testimony that the district attorney, in the corridor outside of the courtroom, during a recess, and while he was in plain view of the bystanders, engaged in casual conversation with one of the jurors, whom he had previously spoken to at an improvement club meeting. The district attorney denied that he had mentioned the case or the panel of jurors to the juror. The court afforded appellant the fullest opportunity to support his contention and admitted all the testimony offered by appellant bearing on the incident. Upon the showing made, it is manifest there was no foundation for the asserted misconduct, and the court properly declined to take any action.

Other assignments of error are:

“That the court erred in admitting and rejecting evidence, in striking out and refusing to strike out testimony, in instructions given and refused, and was prejudiced and expressed an opinion of a question of fact before the jury trying this cause.”

It is also urged that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict.

[9] We have examined the record with reference to the assigned rulings on the evidence, and find no substantial error in any of them. It is apparent that the court, in disposing of the numerous objections made by appellant's counsel during the trial, exercised an intelligent care to have its rulings conserve appellant's rights and to render the record free from error. There is no merit in the contention that it expressed an opinion as to a proposition of fact. What happened was that in the cross-examination of a witness his previous testimony was called to his attention, and the remark of the court that there was no difference in the testimony of the witness as to the point in question was apparently true. At any rate, after the objection, the court stated that the jury would determine whether there was any difference.

[10] Appellant complains that his proposed instructions on the subject of alibi were not given. But the indorsements of the court thereon that they were substantially given elsewhere are fully justified by the instructions which the court gave of its own motion. We have carefully examined the charge and the proposed instructions; and perceive no error in the action of the court in respect to either.

[11] Appellant assigns error to the refusal of the court to give a proposed instruction covering the rule of burden of proof. The instruction in question correctly states the law on the presumption of innocence, the measure of proof in a criminal case, and that the burden of proof was on the prosecution. The indorsement is: "Given substantially elsewhere." We do not find in the charge of the court any specific statement as to the burden of proof, but it contains statements of the presumption of innocence; that if the evidence is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of innocence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt appellant must be acquitted; that the evidence must be examined in the light of the presumption of innocence; that mere suspicion or even a strong suspicion would not justify appellant's conviction, not even if the evidence, in the opinion of the jury, preponderated in favor of the prosecution; that they must be satisfied that the facts presented in evidence are incompatible with any reasonable theory of innocence or upon any reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt or he must be acquitted; that if from an examination of the evidence in certain of its aspects they believe him guilty and from an examination of other aspects of the evidence they believe him not guilty, they should adopt the view of the evidence favoring acquittal; that mere probabilities or the greater weight or preponderance of evidence or the doctrine of chances are not sufficient—"he must be proved to be guilty so clearly and conclusively that there is no reasonable theory under the law and the evidence upon which he can be innocent;" that they have no right to disregard the testimony of appellant; and that, even if he stands charged with the commission of an offense, he is presumed to speak the truth. The failure to give the proposed instruction was evidently due to an inadvertence. The propositions embraced in the foregoing instructions were stated to the jury with marked repetition and in varying forms, and, while the proposed instruction should have been added to the numerous other instructions proposed by and given on behalf of appellant, it cannot be held his rights were in any way prejudiced by the omission. The instructions we have referred to inevitably had the effect of conveying to the jury the idea that the prosecution must establish appellant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and that, if the presumption of innocence was not overcome by that degree of proof, the jury is in effect told that the burden of proof rests with the prosecution.

[12] Complaint is next made that the alleged offense properly comes under section 476a of the Penal Code as amended in 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 238), and that, as the amended section did not go into effect until July 22, 1919, six months after the alleged criminal act was committed, appellant was condemned to punishment under an ex post facto law. The amendment consists of the addition of two clauses: The first between the words "who" and "willfully"—"for himself or as the agent or representative of another or as an officer of a corporation," and the second between the words "he" and "has"—"or his principal or the corporation of which he is an officer."

Appellant contends that the amendment was adopted for the purpose of adding a new crime to the Penal Code, and that therefore the information states no valid charge against appellant, and the judgment is void. The position of the Attorney General is that the amendment was definitive on the part of the Legislature and did not create another crime; that one who with intent to defraud issues a check against a bank, knowing there are insufficient funds to meet it, could not exculpate himself by showing that he signed his name as agent for some person, either real or fictitious. In this connection attention is called to the fact that appellant signed the draft in his individual capacity, as well as the agent of the company, and that in so doing he came clearly within the provisions of section 476a as it stood before the amendment. The evidence showed that the company was appellant himself, that he was treated as a principal by the bank; and not as agent of the company, which was merely a fictitious designation under which he was then doing business. The evidence further showed that the account carried by the Riverside bank was in the name of appellant and not the company, that on the date of the drawing of the draft his balance amounted to $3.03, and that neither appellant nor the company had any arrangement for any credit whatsoever.

There is no merit in appellant's contention. He was proceeded against for having issued the draft on a bank in which he had neither funds nor credit. The evidence is clearly sufficient to support the allegations of the information as to him. There was evidence that the company was fictitious, that the company was appellant, and appellant the company. The case, therefore, would not come within the amended portion of the section. It is not charged in the information that appellant was an agent of the company, nor whether the company was a copartnership or a corporation. His individual signature rendered him a drawer of the draft and brought him within the terms of the section as it formerly stood. Therefore, under the allegations of the information and the evidence, the prosecution of appellant does not fall within the amended part of section 476a.

[13] With respect to appellant's final contention that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, it appears that the evidence offered by the parties tended to establish the following among other facts: About 3 p. m. on January 22, 1919, appellant entered the First National Bank of Oakland and endeavored to have N. B. Campbell, assistant cashier of the bank O. K. by indorsement for cashing the draft set forth in the information. The request was denied. While this conversation was in progress, H. L. Anderson, paying teller of the bank, noticed appellant and Mr. Campbell talking together. Shortly after 3 o'clock appellant appeared before Mr. Anderson, apologized for being late, and requested the cashier to indorse for cashing two checks or drafts, including the draft in question. Appellant had been in the bank previously and had cashed checks indorsed by another party. In that way appellant became known to Mr. Campbell and Mr. Anderson, and his name had also been mentioned in connection with a projected business venture in Oakland. Mr. Anderson cashed the draft described in the information. It was sent to the Security Bank of Savings at Riverside for collection, and returned with the indorsement "no account."

Appellant had an inactive account with the Riverside bank, and on January 22, 1919, the account was ordered closed by the bank, and the amount of the credit balance, $3.03, was forwarded to appellant, with a statement of the reasons for closing the account. The company never had an account with the Riverside bank.

Appellant was held in Dannemore State Prison of the state of New York and, in June, 1921, was returned to California by Inspector John S. Dufton of the Oakland police force. While on the train between Albany and Plattsburg a conversation occurred between the officer and appellant concerning the charge. We quote:

"Mr. Higgins. Q. Will you just relate what conversation you had with the defendant upon the occasion we have just mentioned? * * * A. He said to me, he said, 'What did you say I was arrested for?' So I pulled a warrant out of my pocket, and I said, 'For passing a bad check in Oakland, Cal.' He said: 'Well, if a man is acting as the agent for a corporation and passes a bad check, can they hold him for it?' I said: 'Well, I guess they can, if they can prove it on you.' He said, 'Well, I will prove I had nothing to do with that.' I said, 'All right, my boy, if you can prove that, that is all the better for you.'"

Appellant relied on an alibi. He claimed to be in Chicago on January 15 preceding the cashing of the draft, that he left there for Los Angeles on the 16th or 17th of the same month, arriving at his destination about the 20th. He testified he was at the Glenwood Mission Inn, Riverside, on the day the draft was cashed in Oakland. Appellant also testified he gave instructions to Hal Wari-nack, the drawee, to send the draft for collection.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was ample evidence to sustain the verdict. The appeal from the order denying appellant's motion in arrest of judgment is dismissed. The order denying the motion for a new trial and the judgment are affirmed.

In re WELLINGS' ESTATE.

MICHIGAN TRUST CO. v. BRON-
SON et al.

(L. A. 7351.)

1. Wills $\S$ 681(2)—Testamentary trustee entitled to distribution unless expressly disqualified.

A testamentary trustee is a devisee and takes, not under the decree of distribution, but as trustee under the will at testator's death, and, being bound, on accepting the trust, to obtain control of the trust property, should be allowed to act and receive distribution, as in the case of an executor appointed by the will, unless expressly disqualified by law, especially where testator's desire can be fully carried out only through trustees, whose appointment implies a wish by testator that it be so done.

2. Corporations $\S$ 642(1)—Foreign trust company entering state to carry out terms of testamentary trust is "doing business" therein; "to transact business;" "to do business;" "transacting business."

A foreign corporation entering a state to exercise some of the functions for which it was created, as in the case of a foreign trust company asserting ownership of land devised to it as testamentary trustee and assuming to administer the trust, is "transacting business" in the state, within Const. art. 12, § 15, and hence "doing business" therein within Bank Act, § 7, as amended by St. 1917, pp. 598-600, though it acts as trustee in only one case; the phrase "to transact business" being equivalent to "to do business."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Doing Business; Transacting Business.]

3. Corporations $\S$ 639—Act permitting foreign trust companies to act as testamentary trustees held not unconstitutional.

Bank Act, § 7, held not in contravention of Const. art. 12, § 15, as permitting foreign trust companies acting as testamentary trustees to transact business in the state under more favorable conditions than those prescribed for domestic trust companies.

4. Banks and banking — 311—Trusts — 159—Legislature may classify trust companies as banks.

The Legislature, in the exercise of its power under Const. 1849, art. 4, § 34, and Const. 1879, art. 12, § 5, as amended in 1910, to create banks under general laws and regulate the business of banking, may classify trust companies, which frequently do a general banking business, as banks for purposes of regulation, as was done by sections 1 and 2 of the Bank Act, section 7 of which was amended by St. 1917, pp. 598-600, providing that a foreign "trust company," as defined by section 6 (St. 1913, p. 137), may exercise such powers as are permitted to foreign corporations by section 90, and be appointed and act in California as executor or testamentary trustee.

5. Statutes — 109—Reasonably intelligent reference to subject in title sufficient.

Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring that every act embrace but one subject expressed in its title, must be liberally construed, and a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject is sufficient; the details provided for accomplishment of the general purpose declared being regarded as necessary incidents.

6. Statutes — 113(3)—Bank Act authorizing appointment and qualification of foreign trust companies as testamentary trustees held not unconstitutional as embracing subject not expressed in title.

St. 1909, p. 87, entitled "An act to define and regulate the business of banking," section 7 of which was amended by St. 1917, pp. 598-600, authorizes the appointment and qualification of foreign trust companies as executors and testamentary trustees and prescribes the method of administration of trusts committed to them, held not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 24, as embracing a subject not expressed in its title; such provisions being logically germane to and included within the scope of the title.

7. Trusts — 159—Foreign trust company held entitled to distribution of testatrix's realty in state.

A foreign trust company complying with the laws governing the right of foreign corporations to do business in California held entitled, as testamentary trustee, to distribution of testatrix's realty in this state; its status not being that of a trustee appointed by the courts of another state merely to sell property in this state, the courts of which retain jurisdiction of the trust after distribution (Code Civ. Proc. § 1699).

8. Trusts — 160(3)—Higher rate of interest on mortgages in California held insufficient to warrant finding of detriment to mortgagee's estate on appointment of foreign trust company as trustee.

That the rate of interest on mortgages is higher in California than in Michigan held insufficient to warrant a finding that it would be detrimental to mortgagee's estate to appoint a Michigan trust company as trustee; the courts of California retaining jurisdiction after distribution to settle accounts under the trust, and the presumption being, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the trustee will so invest the funds as to produce the greatest revenue.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Petition by the Michigan Trust Company, as testamentary trustee, for distribution of the estate of Myra Josephine Wellings, deceased, opposed by Marion Frances Bronson and another, legatees and devisees. From an order denying the petition, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

Flint & MacKay, William A. Bowen, and Flint, MacKay & Bowen, all of Los Angeles, U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, John W. Maltman, of Los Angeles, James M. Oliver, of San Francisco, and Phelps & Winston, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leland J. Allen and G. A. Gibbs, of Pasadena, for respondent.

Louis P. Boardman, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

WASTE, J. The sole question presented on this appeal is the right of the Michigan Trust Company, a foreign corporation, to act as trustee, and, as such, to have distributed to it the residue of the estate of Myra Josephine Wellings, deceased. The material facts are brought here in an agreed statement. The decedent died on September 6, 1920, in the county of Los Angeles. At the time of her death she was a resident of that county, and left, surviving her, granddaughters, nieces, and nephews residing in California and elsewhere. She left a last will and testament, executed in the state of Michigan on the 20th day of November, 1916, at which time the testatrix was a resident of that state, and by the terms of which she left her entire estate to her husband, James Henry Wellings, provided he survived her. If he should not survive her, she gave, devised, and bequeathed the rest, residue and remainder of her estate, after certain provisions were carried out, in trust to the Michigan Trust Company, this appellant, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Michigan.

The decedent appointed her husband, or, in the event of his death, the Michigan Trust Company, her executor, and appointed appellant trustee under the will, with certain enumerated powers. The husband of the decedent predeceased her, but when the will was filed for probate the appellant, not having the paid-up capital required by the laws of California to permit it to act, did not seek to be appointed executor. The will was admitted to probate, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to George C. Bronson. All of the property of the decedent, valued at $80,784.18, was located in California, and, according to the inventory, consisted of moneys on deposit, stocks, bonds, promissory notes secured by mortgage, household and personal effects, and certain real estate situated in Los Angeles county. Due administration was had, and when the time was ripe for closing the estate the administrator with the will annexed rendered his final account and report, together with his petition for distribution of the residue of the estate to the granddaughters, nieces, and nephews of the decedent. Appellant, having in the meantime increased its capital stock to an amount in excess of the capitalization required in order to entitle it to act as trustee in this state, filed its objection to the petition, and sought to have distribution made to it as trustee under the will. The matter was heard by the probate court on an agreed statement of facts. By stipulation, all objections of the parties were waived, with the single exception of the question of the right of appellant to act as trustee under the will of Myra Josephine Wellings, deceased. The court found that appellant is "not qualified to act as trustee in said estate," and that it would be "detrimental, unnecessary, and not to the best interests of the estate to appoint" appellant such trustee, or to distribute any part of the estate to it. Its petition being denied, appellant has perfected this appeal.

The appeal was first presented on briefs without argument. In a brief, filed by amicus curiæ, the constitutionality of the Bank Act of California (St. 1909, p. 87), was challenged. Because of the importance of the questions involved, the submission was set aside and the case was again placed on the calendar for oral argument as to certain points. On the suggestion of the court, the Attorney General and the attorney for the state superintendent of banks were permitted to join with appellant in the further presentation of the appeal.

[1] An executor appointed by will has the right to act unless there is some express provision of law disqualifying him. Bauquier's Estate, 88 Cal. 302, 309, 26 Pac. 178, 532. A trustee under a will has even a more substantial right to be recognized by the court. He does not become a trustee by virtue alone of the decree of distribution, although his fuller and more complete powers and duties are thus devolved upon him. A testamentary trustee is a devisee under the will and takes as trustee under the will at the death of the testator. Civ. Code, § 1341; Estate of O'Connor, 2 Cal. App. 470, 475, 84 Pac. 317; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Duffill (Cal. Sup.) 218 Pac. 14. He does not derive title from the decree of distribution, which merely declares the title that accrued under and by the will, but from the will itself. Western Pac. Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 166,

Cal. 346, 349, 136 Pac. 284, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 825. When an estate is devised to trustees it becomes their duty, having accepted the trust, to obtain control of the trust property. 3 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (4th Ed.) § 1067. When the desire of a testator can be fully carried out only through trustees, their appointment as such implies a wish on the part of the testator that it be so done. Estate of O'Connor, supra. Therefore, unless some express statutory prohibition be found which will prevent the appellant from acting as trustee in this state under the will of Myra Josephine Wellings, the order of the probate court refusing distribution to it must be reversed.

Appellant claims the right to act as trustee under the will of Mrs. Wellings by virtue of authority conferred by section 7 of the act to define and regulate the business of banking, designated as the "Bank Act," as amended (Stats. 1917, pp. 593-600), which provides, in part:

"That a trust company incorporated in another state may have or exercise in this state such powers as are permitted to foreign corporations by the provisions of section ninety of this act and may be appointed and may accept appointment and may act in this state as executor of or trustee under the last will and testament of any deceased person, upon giving the bond required in such cases of individuals unless waived by the last will and testament making such appointment and by taking and subscribing an oath for faithful performance of such trust by the president, vice president, secretary, manager or trust officer of said corporation; provided, that such superintendent of banks, for the time being, shall be attorney of such foreign corporation qualifying or acting in this state as such executor or trustee, upon whom process against such foreign corporation may be served in any action or legal proceeding against such executor or trustee affecting or relating to the estate or property represented or held by such executor or trustee, or any act or default of such foreign corporation in reference to such estate or property, and it shall be the duty of any such foreign corporation so qualifying or acting to file in the office of said superintendent of banks a copy of its articles of incorporation, or of the statute chartering such corporation, certified by its secretary under its corporate seal, together with the postoffice address of its home office, and a duly executed appointment of said superintendent of banks as its attorney to accept service of process as above provided, and said superintendent of banks, when any such process is served upon him, shall at once mail the papers so served to the home office of such corporation." [Italics ours.]

Respondents challenge the constitutionality of the Bank Act, in so far as it applies to the right of foreign corporations to act as trustees in California, upon several grounds. Their first contention is that if section 7 of the act tends to permit foreign trust companies to do business in this state, it contravenes that portion of the state Constitution (art. 12, § 15) which provides that no foreign corporation shall be allowed to transact business in this state under more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law for similar corporations organized under the laws of the state. The first question for consideration is whether appellant, in merely acting as trustee under the will of Mrs. Wellings, will be doing business within this state. The Michigan Trust Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Michigan, and authorized to transact a trust business, and having capacity to act as executor and trustee. It filed a certified copy of its articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state of California on the 21st day of September, 1901, and a like copy in the office of the superintendent of banks on December 12, 1918. A certified copy of the certificate of increase of its capital stock from $200,000 to $1,000,000, was filed in the office of the secretary of state on February 7, 1921. On January 18, 1921, it made and appointed the superintendent of banks of the state of California, and his successor and successors in office, its attorney, as executor and trustee under the last will and testament of Myra Josephine Wellings, deceased, upon whom process against it may be served in any action or legal proceeding against it as such executor or trustee affecting or relating to the estate or property represented or held by it as such executor or trustee, or any act or default of the corporation in reference to such estate or property. Appellant offered to provide a bond in such amount as the court might require, as a condition for the distribution of the estate to it as such trustee.

[2] Appellant argues that acting as trustee in this one instance would be but a single and isolated act of a foreign trust company in receiving property in this state as a trustee under a will and testament, and would not amount to conducting or doing business within the state. The phrase "to transact business," as used in the Constitution, is equivalent to the words "to do business" found in the statutes of many states prohibiting foreign corporations from "doing business" in such states until they have complied with certain prescribed local requirements. In most jurisdictions it has been held to have reference to the continuance by the corporation, in some form, of business, and not to apply to a single act of business done in the state. But when a foreign corporation enters a state other than that of its creation, for the purpose of doing some substantial part of its ordinary business, or of exercising some of the functions for which it was created, it is transacting business within that state. When such foreign corporation does directly the primary business for which it was organized, it is "doing business" within the meaning of the statute. Conference Free Baptists v. Berkey, 156 Cal. 466, 470, 105 Pac. 411; Bullfrog Goldfield R. R. Co. v. Jordan, 174 Cal. 342, 344, 163 Pac. 40; 14A

Corpus Juris, p. 1270, § 3977; 7 Cal. Jurisp. p. 222, §§ 704-706. The Michigan Trust Company was created and organized to conduct and carry on a trust business. One of the main purposes for which it was formed is to act as executor and trustee under appointment made in last wills and testaments. This function is one of the ends for which the corporation was organized. Its exercise is not merely a means to enable it to accomplish those ends. Neither is it incidental to carrying on the main purposes of the corporation, nor only the exercise of some corporate power, as has been the case in many of the decisions which hold that one single and isolated transaction will not constitute doing business within the meaning of the statute. By the terms of the will of Mrs. Wellings devising her property to Michigan Trust Company, and appointing it trustee of her estate, appellant is given full power and authority to bargain, sell, transfer, and convey, and in any manner dispose of the estate, real or personal, at such times, in such manner, on such terms, and for such purposes as to it may seem proper, and for the best interests of the decedent's estate. It has full power to invest and reinvest any moneys that may come to it as such trustee. When a foreign trust corporation enters a state, under such powers, receives by devise, and asserts ownership of land devised to it, and assumes to carry out the terms of the trust, such foreign company is doing business in the state within the meaning of the statute. Pennsylvania L. Ins. Co. v. Bauerle, 143 Ill. 459, 33 N. E. 166, 170; 14A Corpus Juris, p. 1292, § 3999.

[3] It must therefore be determined whether or not, under the provisions of the Bank Act, a foreign trust corporation, permitted to act as trustee under the will of a decedent in this state, will be transacting business in California under more favorable conditions than those prescribed by law for trust corporations organized under the laws of this state. Section 7 of the Bank Act provides that no foreign corporation having authority to act as executor of or trustee under the last will and testament of any deceased person shall establish or maintain, directly or indirectly, any branch office or agency in this state, nor shall it in any way solicit, directly or indirectly, any business as executor or trustee. For any violation of this enactment the court having jurisdiction of such executor or trustee in any proceeding may, in its discretion, revoke the right of such foreign corporation to thereafter act in such capacity. Domestic trust companies which may act as executors or trustees are not so limited. They are permitted to solicit and to do a general trust business throughout the state, and to accept any and all private trusts without limitation. Unless the will of the decedent appointing a foreign trust company waives the giving of an undertaking, the trustee must give the bond in large or small amount required in such cases of individuals. Domestic trust companies may act as trustees without giving any bond or security, other than the required deposit with the state treasurer. Respondents have attempted to show, by arranging in parallel statements the respective powers and limitations of foreign and domestic trust companies permitted to do business within this state, that the restrictions placed upon foreign trust companies are less rigorous than those imposed upon trust corporations organized under the laws of California. A detailed discussion of the points of comparison insisted on by respondents is unnecessary, for, viewing the whole situation in which the two kinds of trust companies are placed before being permitted to act as trustees, the advantage seems manifestly to rest with those organized under the laws of this state. The provisions of the Bank Act regulating the practice under which both domestic and foreign trust companies are permitted to do business are therefore free from the constitutional inhibition urged by respondents.

[4] When this matter was first considered on appeal, it was suggested in the brief of amicus curiæ, and it is now urged by respondents, that the provisions of the Bank Act relating to trust companies violate article 4, § 24, of the Constitution, which provides that "every [legislative] act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." The title of the Bank Act is "An act to define and regulate the business of banking." Stats. 1909, p. 87. It is contended that trust companies are not to be considered in any way as banks, and that the regulation of the business of trust companies is not germane to the regulation of the business of banking. The point is also made that those sections of the Bank Act which relate to and prescribe the methods of appointment of foreign corporations as executors and trustees under the wills of decedents are unconstitutional in that they are not germane to the subject of the statute expressed in its title. Stated in another way, the contention is that the provisions of sections 7 and 90, and other sections of the act which relate to the appointment, qualification, and administration of executors and trustees, refer to probate matters which have no connection with the business of banking. The Bank Act, as variously amended to and including the legislative session of 1917, will be found in part 1 of Henning's General Laws, 1920, p. 143. Section 1 provides that the act shall be known as the "Bank Act," and shall be applicable to all corporations specified in the next section. It is provided in section 2 that the word "bank," as used in the act, "shall be construed to mean any incorporated banking institution which shall have been incorporated to conduct the business of receiving money on deposit, or transacting a trust business as" defined in the act. The section then provides that "banks are divided into the following classes: (a) Savings banks; (b) commercial banks; and (c) trust companies." The meaning of the term "savings bank" and "commercial bank" are explained in sections 4 and 5 of the act. Section 6, defining the term "trust company," provides:

"The term 'trust company,' when used in this act, means any corporation which is incorporated under the laws of this state for the purpose of conducting the business of acting as executor, administrator, guardian of estates, assignee, receiver, depository or trustee under appointment of any court or by authority of any law of this state, or as trustee for any purpose permitted by law." Stats. 1913, p. 137.

Section 7 of the act, which relates to foreign corporations and prescribes the conditions on which they may transact a banking business in this state, provides that a trust company incorporated in another state may have or exercise in this state such powers as are permitted to foreign corporations by the provisions of section 90 of the act, and may be appointed and act in this state as executor of or trustee under the last will and testament of any deceased person. Stats. 1917, pp. 598, 600, supra. Section 90 of the act provides that a foreign corporation may be authorized to act in this state as trustee for certain designated purposes, none of which is germane to this discussion, for they are powers granted in addition to the right of such foreign trust company to be appointed and act as executor or trustee in this state, which is directly conferred by section 7.

It cannot be disputed that, in the ordinary sense of the term, a "bank" is not a "trust company," nor is a "trust company" a "bank." The Legislature, by merely defining a certain kind of institution as a bank, does not in fact make it a bank in the ordinary commercial meaning of that word. The purpose of the Bank Act is not to change the nature of the business done by any of the corporations which are made subject to the act, but is purely one of regulation. For the purpose of regulation, and to specify what kinds of corporations come within the purview of its provisions, the Legislature has used the word "bank" to mean not only any incorporated banking institution which shall have been created to conduct the business of receiving money on deposit, but also such corporations as are permitted by the act to carry on business which has, by the trend of common understanding and opinion, come to be regarded as being appropriate and relevant to the banking business, functions which, in the judgment of the Legislature, make the business of the banks more successful. The power of the Legislature to do this is, we think, beyond question. It has had the right, since California became a state, to provide for the formation of banks under general laws. Const. 1849, art. 4, § 34; Const. 1879, art. 12, § 5. The last-named provision was amended in 1910 to extend its power in the matter of regulating the business of banking. The right of the Legislature to exercise its judgment as to the necessity for creating banks includes the power to determine the scope and character of the functions which shall be given to them. This discretion vested in the Legislature should not be disregarded or set aside through the exercise of judicial discretion for the purpose of determining whether it was relevant or appropriate to give the banks the particular functions in question. First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., 244 U. S. 416, 424, 37 Sup. Ct. 734, 61 L. Ed. 1233, L. R. A. 1918C, 283, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1169. That the business of banking is a proper and legitimate subject of regulation by the state is well settled. State Sav. & Comm. Bank v. Anderson, 165 Cal. 437, 442, 132 Pac. 755, L. R. A. 1915E, 675. It was held in that case (165 Cal. 449, 132 Pac. 755, L. R. A. 1915E, 675) that the Bank Act, as originally passed in 1909, and which deals with banks and trust companies as does the present act, deals solely with a matter pertaining to the public welfare, and that the regulations provided by the act have a substantial relation to and are reasonably designed to protect and safeguard the state against insecure banking. The precise point we are now considering was not made in that case, but it was there said (165 Cal. 442, 132 Pac. 757, L. R. A. 1915E, 675):

"Under the rapid changes which have occurred in recent years in the industrial and economic world, enterprises and industries which were therefore considered mainly of a private character, have become essentially of a public nature and the changed conditions have called for regulations of a kind different from those that have theretofore sufficed. In that progress, banking, considered in early years as more or less of a private enterprise, has in the commercial development of the world become so incorporated into the business growth and prosperity of the country and so affects the commercial welfare and business interests of the people as to have become a proper and legitimate subject of legislative regulation by the state in the exercise of its police power."

The functions of a bank may be variously regarded. "Originally the business of banking consisted only in receiving deposits, such as bullion, plate, and the like, for safe-keeping until the depositor should see fit to draw it out for use, but the business, in the progress of events, was extended, and bankers assumed to discount bills and notes and to loan money upon mortgage, pawn, or other security, and at a still later period to issue notes of their own intended as a circulating currency and a medium of exchange instead of gold and silver. Modern bankers frequently exercise any two or even all three of those functions." Oulton v. Savings Institution, 84 U. S. (17 Wall.) 109, 118 (21 L. Ed. 618). Other functions have, with the still further progress of events, come to be regarded as so appropriate and relevant to the banking business as to be deemed almost essential attributes of it. An apt illustration is to be found in the case of the national banks. The act of Congress establishing the federal reserve board (38 U. S. Stats. 251, 262, chap. 6, § 11 [k]; U. S. Comp. St. § 9794) gives the board authority to grant national banks the right to act as trustee, executor, or administrator. The right of Congress to confer this power was called in question in a controversy between certain trust companies and a national bank. The Supreme Court of the United States held that although it might not be within the implied power of Congress to establish as a function of the banks a particular character of business, when such business was isolatedly considered, if such business was appropriate or relevant to the banking business the implied power was to be tested by the right to create the bank and the authority to attach to it that which was relevant in the judgment of Congress to make the business of the bank successful. First Nat. Bank v. Union Trust Co., supra, 244 U. S. at page 420, 37 Sup. Ct. 734, 61 L. Ed. 1233, L. R. A. 1918C, 283, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 1169. What may or may not be done by banks, and what may or may not be considered as carrying on a banking business, depends upon the changing circumstances of society. The California pioneers, by the section of the Constitution of 1849, supra, prohibited banking associations from issuing paper "to circulate as money." Construing the effect of this prohibition at a much later date, this court said:

"The provisions of the Constitution of 1849 must be viewed in the light of 1849." Bank of Martinez v. Hemme Orchard & Land Co., 105 Cal. 376, 378, 38 Pac. 963, 964.

As corollary to that statement, the provision of the present Bank Act should be construed in the light of to-day.

Corporations and associations formed for other purposes may take on the essential functions of a banking business. In such event the power of the state to regulate the business is unquestioned. For instance, trust companies that receive deposits and make loans perform two of the most important functions that are performed by banks generally. For very obvious reasons they are subject to regulation to the same extent as banks are. In classifying trust companies as banks, for the purpose of regulation, the Legislature has acted on common knowledge that trust companies frequently do a general banking business in addition to their trust business, and that many banks are doing a more or less extensive trust business. We therefore entertain no doubt that it was competent for the Legislature, considering the business which trust companies are doing in this state, to define such business as banking, if it were not such in fact, and to throw around it the general safeguards provided for the banking business proper. MacLaren v. State, 141 Wis. 577, 580-584, 124 N. W. 667, 135 Am. St. Rep. 55, 18 Ann. Cas. 826.

[5, 6] We are also satisfied that the Bank Act embraces but one subject, and that subject is sufficiently expressed in its title. It is now well settled that the constitutional provision requiring the subjects of the act to be expressed in its title must be liberally construed, and that all that is required to be contained therein in order to meet the constitutional requirement is a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject to which the legislation is to be addressed. When the purpose of the Bank Act as expressed in its title is borne in mind, it must appear, from what we have already said, that the provisions of the act relating to trust companies, and to the appointment of such trust companies as executors and trustees, are logically germane to the title of the act, and are included within its scope. Estate of McPhee, 154 Cal. 385, 389, 97 Pac. 878; Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 229, 24 Pac. 383. The general purpose of a statute being declared, the details provided for its accomplishment will be regarded as necessary incidents. Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 603, 637, 29 Pac. 251. The procedure outlined by the Legislature for the appointment and qualification of foreign trust companies acting as executors and trustees, and providing the method by which they shall carry on the administration of the trusts committed to them, are part of the comprehensive scheme contemplated, and afford an appropriate means of effecting one of the main purposes of the law. Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 40, 50, 90 Pac. 129, 121 Am. St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. Cas. 829; Buelke v. Levenstadt (Cal. Sup.) 214 Pac. 42.

[7] For the foregoing reasons we see no need to question the capacity of the Michigan Trust Company, as trustee, to conduct, manage and dispose of the property comprising the residue of the estate of Myra Josephine Wellings, deceased. The will has been probated here. It operates upon the real estate by the force of our law, and the property will be distributed to the Michigan Trust Company by the superior court of this state. Appellant will not have the status of a trustee appointed by the courts of another state merely to sell property in this state, and therefore no complication or doubt as to its powers can arise on that ground. After distribution the trust will still be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state. (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1699.) Appellant, having complied with the laws of this jurisdiction governing the right of foreign corporations to do business in this state, and being a devisee under the will, it was entitled to have distribution of the estate made to it pursuant to the terms of the will of the deceased testatrix. Estate of Rawitzer, 175 Cal. 585, 593, 166 Pac. 581.

[8] The trial court went beyond the stipulation of the parties as to the sole question to be decided in the lower court, and found that it would be detrimental, unnecessary, and not to the best interests of the estate to appoint appellant trustee. In support of this finding respondents rely upon the stipulation in the agreed statement of facts to the effect that the decedent, before her death, received payment of a mortgage on Michigan property drawing six per cent. interest, and invested the amount as seven per cent interest in Los Angeles county, and that the going rate of interest in California is from one to three per cent. higher than in Michigan. Assuming it was proper to rely on this point on the appeal, there is nothing in the agreed statement to justify the court in saying in advance of any act of the appellant in connection with the administration of the estate that it would be detrimental or not to the best interests of the estate that it be appointed trustee. It is not even intimated that the Michigan Trust Company intends to remove any part of the estate from the state of California pending the termination of the trust, and, as already pointed out, after distribution the superior court will not lose jurisdiction of the estate but will retain such jurisdiction for the purpose of the settlement of accounts under the trust. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the trustee will so invest the funds of the estate distributed to it as to bring in the greatest amount of revenue.

The order of the lower court is reversed.

In re EDDY'S ESTATE.

NORTHERN TRUST CO. v. EDDY.

(L. A. 7396.)

Trusts §159—Foreign trust company held entitled to distribution as testamentary trustee.

A foreign trust company complying with the laws of California for doing business therein held entitled to distribution of a nonresident's estate as trustee under a will probated in the state of his residence.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Petition by Jerome O. Eddy for distribution of the estate of Arthur J. Eddy, deceased, to petitioner and the Northern Trust Company, as testamentary trustees. From a decree denying distribution to the trust company, it appeals. Reversed.

Phelps & Winston and Frederick J. Winston, all of Los Angeles (Jerome H. Kann, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

G. A. Gibbs, of Pasadena, and Leland J. Allen (Louis P. Boardman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

WASTE, J. This appeal is prosecuted by the Northern Trust Company, a corporation of Illinois, one of the trustees named in the last will and testament of Arthur J. Eddy, deceased, from the decree of distribution rendered in the matter of said estate, particularly from that part wherein appellant was denied the right to act as trustee under said last will and testament. The questions involved are very similar to those considered in the Estate of Myra Josephine Wellings, Deceased (L. A. 7351) 221 Pac. 628, this day decided.

Arthur J. Eddy was, at the time of his death, a resident of the state of Illinois, and left real property in the county of Los Angeles in this state. His will was admitted to probate in the state of Illinois, and letters testamentary were issued thereon to the Northern Trust Company and to Jerome O. Eddy, son of the decedent, who were named in the will as executors and trustees. Thereafter, a copy of the will and of the probate thereof, duly authenticated, was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county, and letters testamentary were issued to said Jerome O. Eddy. In due course of administration Jerome O. Eddy, as executor, filed his final account and petition for distribution, praying, among other things, that the residue of the estate be distributed to appellant herein and to said Jerome O. Eddy, as trustees, pursuant to the terms of the last will and testament of Arthur J. Eddy, deceased. On hearing of said petition, the lower court ordered distribution of the estate in accordance with the will of the deceased, except that the petition of the Northern Trust Company to be cotrustee with Jerome O. Eddy was denied. It is from that portion of the decree that it has appealed.

The appeal is on the judgment roll alone. It is not disputed here that the last will and testament of Arthur J. Eddy, deceased, properly gives, devises, and bequeaths unto the said Northern Trust Company and Jerome O. Eddy, as trustees, all of the residue of the estate of the decedent in trust and upon the trusts, purposes, and conditions set out in the will. Neither is it disputed that the appellant has complied with the laws of the state of California for the purpose of enabling it to do business in this state.

On the authority of the Estate of Myra J. Wellings, Deceased, supra, that portion of the decree of the lower court which denies distribution to appellant Northern Trust Company, as cotrustee with Jerome O. Eddy, is reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.; MYERS, J.

GRINBAUM v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 10708.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1923.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 16, 1924.)

1. Constitutional law §309(1)—Insane persons §33(1)—Notice to incompetent prerequisite to appointment of guardian.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1763, 1793, or even in the absence of statutory provisions, a guardian of an insane person or his estate may not be appointed without some form of notice to him sufficient to satisfy the constitutional requirement of due process.

2. Insane persons §33(2)—Presumption of service of notice of guardianship proceedings held unwarranted.

In a proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1793, for the appointment of a guardian for an insane person residing out of the state, where the order for service of notice and the notice itself and the affidavit of service all affirmatively showed upon whom service was to be made or had been made, and did not include the alleged insane person, the court will not presume in aid of the record that such person was actually served.

3. Insane persons §33(1)—Service of notice of guardianship proceedings, in absence of order directing, futile.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1793, providing that the court in guardianship proceedings "must cause notice to be given to all persons interested, in such manner as such court deems reasonable," any attempted service of notice, in the absence of an order directing it, would be futile.

4. Insane persons —33(1)—Recitals in order appointing guardian held not to show giving of notice of proceeding.

Recitals in an order appointing a guardian for an insane person that "the petition * * * coming on regularly to be heard," and "that all notices had been given as required by law and as directed by this court," held not to show that notice had been given to the alleged insane person, in view of other recitals.

5. Insane persons —36—May not during incapacity lose by estoppel or waive rights.

One subject to the disqualification of adjudged insanity cannot, by permitting a lapse of time or by acts or conduct, waive or lose by estoppel the right to have the order adjudging her insane or undertaking to establish guardianship vacated for defects of jurisdiction apparent on its face, particularly in view of Civ. Code, § 40, declaring one judicially determined insane can waive no right until restoration to capacity.

6. Insane persons —33(2)—Denial of certiorari to review appointment of guardian held unwarranted.

The Supreme Court, in the exercise of its discretion, would not be warranted in denying writ of certiorari to annul an order, declaring petitioner insane and appointing a guardian, which is void on its face for lack of jurisdiction, merely because petitioner may have been actually insane or the guardianship of benefit to her, or because of possible confusion and litigation growing out of the right of third persons, who have contracted with the de facto guardian.

7. Certiorari —9—Granting writ of review discretionary.

The granting or refusal of a writ of review is within the discretion of the court to which application is made.

8. Trusts —170—Good faith acts of de facto trustee upheld.

Equity will protect and uphold good faith acts and transactions of a de facto trustee, which inure to the benefit of the cestui que trust.

9. Insane persons —33(2)—Certiorari to annul void adjudication of insanity not denied for failure to proceed by motion.

A petition for the writ of certiorari to review and annul a void adjudication of insanity should not be denied merely because petitioner might have proceeded by motion to set aside in the court making same.

10. Certiorari —3—Relief in court making void judgment need not be sought first.

One having a clear right to directly attack by certiorari a judgment or order void for want of jurisdiction is not required first to seek relief in the court making or entering same.

11. Insane persons —33(2)—Denial of certiorari to review void adjudication of insanity held unwarranted by different remedy.

A proceeding under Civ. Code, § 1766, for restoration to capacity, affords no proper remedy against a void adjudication of insanity, and denial of certiorari to review and annul such an adjudication is unwarranted merely because no application for restoration has been made.

12. Insane persons —33(2)—Denial of certiorari to review void adjudication of insanity unwarranted by remedy in equity.

Denial of certiorari to review an adjudication of insanity, void for want for jurisdiction, held unwarranted merely because petitioner might have proceeded in equity to have such adjudication set aside, in view of circumstances indicating such mode of relief would have been prolonged and inadequate, due to petitioner's age and health.

13. Insane persons —38—Guardian's duty is to ward, and it cannot oppose proper termination of guardianship.

The highest duty of an insane person's guardian is to its ward, and it can have no adverse interest, and cannot oppose proper removal of the ward from guardianship.

Wilbur, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Application by Julie Grinbaum, by John Francis Neylan, her guardian ad litem, for a writ of certiorari to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Honorable Frank H. Dunne, Judge thereof, to review an order of J. V. Coffey, Judge. Order annulled.

See, also, 209 Pac. 1005; 221 Pac. 651, 653.

John Francis Neylan and Philip S. Ehrlich, both of San Francisco (Edmond E. Herrscher, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

John J. Barrett and Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. The original application for a writ of review herein was presented by Julie Grinbaum acting on her own behalf and praying for the relief sought therein. A motion to dismiss said application was presented by the respondents named therein upon the ground that the petitioner had not the legal capacity to sue. In support of said motion there was presented a certified copy of an order of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, adjudging the said petitioner to be at the date thereof, and for some time prior thereto, an insane person, which said order and adjudication at the time of the filing of said application was, and thereafter continued to be, in full force and effect. Thereupon a petition for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for said Julie Grinbaum in this and also in certain other proceedings pending before this court was presented by one Erna A. Herrscher, alleging herself to be the nearest blood relative of said Julie Grinbaum, and asking for the appointment of John Francis Neylan as such guardian ad litem for said petitioner. Thereafter this court made an order granting said application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem and making the appointment as prayed for in said petition; which order had the effect of disposing of said motion for a dismissal, and placing said applicant in a position through her said guardian ad litem to further maintain and prosecute her said application.

The proceedings herein sought to be reviewed are those proceedings in the matter of the guardianship of the estate of Julie Grinbaum, which were initiated in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on January 9, 1913, by a petition on behalf of the Mercantile Trust Company, a corporation, alleging that said Julie Grinbaum was an insane person, having estate and properties in the state of California requiring attention and praying for the appointment of said Mercantile Trust Company as guardian of the estate of said insane person; whereupon such proceedings were had, that an order was made by said court on January 27, 1913, appointing said Mercantile Trust Company to be such guardian of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, an insane person; which proceedings and order are sought to be reviewed in the instant proceeding. The respondents herein are nominally the said superior court and the judge thereof, but the real party in interest and actual respondent herein is the Mercantile Trust Company in its capacity as such guardian of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, under and by virtue of the aforesaid order for its appointment as such guardian, and under which it has, ever since the making thereof and its qualification thereunder, been and still is the acting guardian of said estate.

The petitioner herein alleges, as the basis for her application for the issuance of a writ of review herein, that the order of said superior court made and entered upon January 27, 1913, wherein and whereby the said Mercantile Trust Company was appointed guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum, was and is void upon the face of said proceedings forming the basis for said order, since it affirmatively appears therefrom that the said superior court did not acquire and did not have jurisdiction to make said order for the reason that no notice of such proceedings or of the application for said order or of the hearing thereon was ever ordered, issued, or served upon said Julie Grinbaum as required by law. The respondents herein, both by their demurrer and answer herein, present and urge certain objections involving the present right of this petitioner to institute or maintain this proceeding, and also urge certain reasons why this court should not exercise its discretion to the extent of granting the relief sought therein. These objections might appear to stand upon the threshold of this proceeding and to require determination in advance of any consideration of the merits of the petitioner's said application; but, since the parties to this proceeding, both nominal and real, have by appropriate stipulations agreed that the entire record of the proceedings of the superior court in the matter of the guardianship of the estate of Julie Grinbaum are correctly set forth in the pleadings and exhibits of the respective parties, and are as fully before this court as if they had been brought before it in response to a writ of review, and that the same may be considered by this court as fully as though the record of such proceedings had been embodied in a return to such writ, and since the preliminary objections urged by the respondents herein to the consideration of said application and to the issuance of said writ can only be properly resolved upon and after a full understanding of the whole case and of the merits of the petitioner's said application, the court will first address itself to the main question at issue in this proceeding. This will require a review at some length of the history and record of said proceedings sought to be reviewed herein, together with the history and record of the present proceeding.

In the year 1873, Moritz S. Grinbaum and his wife, Julie Grinbaum, the former a native of Baden and the latter of Dusseldorf, Germany, came to the United States, and settled in San Francisco, which city became and was at all times thereafter the place of their residence and home. They became, in due course, naturalized citizens of the United States. Mr. Grinbaum prospered in his business ventures, which included the acquisition of considerable interests in the Hawaiian Islands, and accumulated a fortune estimated in 1913 at $800,000, a portion of which was invested in San Francisco real estate, but the larger and more productive portion of which consisted of sugar plantations in the islands. In the year 1909 the Grinbaums, who had no children, left San Francisco for an extended European trip. They passed the winter of that year in Berlin, and during the year 1910 visited several places, apparently in search of health. On December 14, 1910, while at Meran, in the Austrian Tyrol, Mr. Grinbaum died, after an operation following a brief illness. By his will, dated August 4, 1904, he left his entire estate to his wife. By an olographic codicil thereto, dated March 2, 1909, he again devised his said estate to his wife if she survived him, but provided that if she predeceased him, one-half of his said estate was to go in equal shares to certain of his blood relations in Germany and the remaining one-half to a blood relative of

Mrs. Grinbaum, one Erna Goldschmidt, then living in Germany, and being the daughter of her only sister, then deceased. By the terms of her deceased husband's said will Mrs. Grinbaum was named as the executrix thereof, but she renounced her right to act as such in favor of Albert Meyer, a member of a banking institution known as the Bank of Daniel Meyer, long established in San Francisco, and being at the time of his death her husband's banker and agent. This will was admitted to probate in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and said Albert Meyer was appointed as administrator with the will annexed of the decedent's said estate. Mrs. Grinbaum, after her husband's death, went to several places, both in France and Germany, seeking relief from a heart affliction, which was complicated by an increasing melancholy due to her husband's death and her own lonely condition, and which showed signs of affecting her mind. In 1911 she went, upon the advice of her physicians, to a sanitarium in Baden-Baden devoted to the care of those mentally afflicted. Her condition grew steadily worse during the following year, and until in the latter part of 1912 her physicians considered the appointment of a guardian over her and her affairs imperative, and instructed their attorney to institute necessary proceedings for such guardianship in the German courts. After an apparently careful investigation of her case, a petition for the appointment of a guardian was on November 20, 1912, filed by the Attorney General in the judicial tribunal of the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, having jurisdiction of such matters. On December 4, 1912, an order was made therein appointing one Emil Meyer, described as a banker in Baden, "interim guardian" of the property and person of Mrs. Julie Grinbaum. This order does not upon its face purport to be more than temporary, and does not attempt to determine whether or not Mrs. Grinbaum was at the time insane. It expressly refers to the appointment of the guardian as an "interim" appointment, and to the fact that a proceeding to determine whether Julie Grinbaum was insane had been instituted and was then pending. The court, in point of fact, proceeded with its investigation of the question as to whether Julie Grinbaum was or was not insane during the succeeding months, and it was not until May 3, 1913, that its final adjudication of the fact of Mrs. Grinbaum's insanity was formally made by the German court. In the meantime and at an early date in January, 1913, the Bank of Daniel Meyer in San Francisco received advices from Emil Meyer, the interim guardian of Julie Grinbaum in Baden-Baden, informing the San Francisco banking house as to her physical and mental condition, and advising the appointment of a local guardian of her estate. The Bank of Daniel Meyer was at that time engaged in winding up its affairs, but Henry Meyer, one of the members of said institution took the matter up with the Mercantile Trust Company, requesting this latter corporation to act as guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum. The Mercantile Trust Company consented to so act, whereupon and on January 9, 1913, a petition on behalf of the Mercantile Trust Company for such guardianship was filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. In view of the fact that this petition marks the initiation of the proceedings for the appointment of the Mercantile Trust Company as guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum, which are assailed in this proceeding, some particular reference to its contents should be made. The petition, after alleging the corporate character and qualifications of the petitioner, proceeds to allege:

"That the above-named Julie Grinbaum is a widow over the age of 21 years, and at present resides at Baden-Baden, empire of Germany. * * * and has estate within the city and county of San Francisco, said state, and that your petitioner petitions as a friend of said insane person that the said Julie Grinbaum for more than one month last past has been of unsound mind, and wholly incompetent to transact her own business or to properly, or at all care for her own property or estate; that the said Julie Grinbaum was on or about the 10th day of December, 1912, adjudged of unsound mind by the Grossherzoglich Badisches Ministerium des Grossh. Hauses, der Justiz und des Auswartigen, of the Grand Duchy of Baden, Empire of Germany, and has not since said time been restored by any decree of court to capacity, and ever since said last-mentioned date has been and now is an insane person; that as petitioner is informed and believes, and therefore so alleges, there are no persons within the state of California who are interested in the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, and that the heirs and relatives and next of kin who are interested in said estate are:

Names:	Who Reside at:
Toni Horn (a cousin),	50 Rue Juste-lipse, Brussels, Belgium;
Max Goldsmith (a brother-in-law),
Jane Doe Goldsmith (a daughter of said Max Goldsmith True name unknown),	Hamburg, Germany;
	Hamburg, Germany.

"That it is necessary and for the best interests of the estate that a guardian be appointed by the Court to collect and preserve the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, and to manage said estate."

On the date of filing said petition, the said superior court made an order directing notice of said application to be given. This order follows in the main the language of the petition reciting that the said Julie Grinbaum, an insane person, resides at Baden-Baden, Germany, and is without the state of California:

"That there are no relatives of said Julie Grinbaum within said state of California, but that the relatives of said insane person reside in the empire of Germany and are as follows, to wit: (Repeating former names and addresses) and that there are no persons within the state of California who are interested in the estate of said Julie Grinbaum; It is therefore ordered that notice of said application be issued by the clerk of this court directed to said Toni Horn, Max Goldsmith, and Jane Doe Goldsmith, relatives of said insane person, residing in said empire of Germany, and that true copies of said notice be mailed forthwith to said relatives by depositing in the United States post office at said San Francisco, Cal., true copies of said notice, inclosed in envelopes properly addressed, with the postage prepaid thereon; it is further ordered that true copies of the said notice of the time and place of the hearing of said application be forthwith served personally at least 5 days prior to the time fixed herein for the hearing of said petition upon any and all persons, firms, and corporations, which have in their possession, or under their control, any of the property or estate of the said insane person within the said city and county of San Francisco, or the state of California; The hearing of said petition is hereby set for the 27th day of January, 1913, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day at the courtroom of department No. 9 of the above-entitled court."

Thereafter and on January 13, 1913, the clerk of said court made, issued, and filed the notice of the time and place of the hearing of said application in conformity with the terms of said order, which notice, after stating the title of the court and cause, reads as follows:

"Notice of Time and Place of Hearing of Application.

"To Bank of Daniel Meyer, Henry Meyer, A. I. Esberg, Toni Horn, Max Goldsmith, Jane Doe Goldsmith:

"Take notice that Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, a corporation, has heretofore filed in the above-entitled court its petition to be appointed guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum, an insane person; that said petition has been set for hearing by said court on the 27th day of January, 1913, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the courtroom of department No. 9 of the above-entitled court, at which time and place you may appear and show cause, if any you can, why said Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco should not be appointed such guardian."

Thereafter and on January 25, 1913, there were filed with the clerk of said court two affidavits relating to the service of said notice. In one of these affidavits one Henry Melander deposed that he personally served said notice on Henry Meyer and the Bank of Daniel Meyer, and that he left a copy of said notice at the place of business of A. I. Esberg, in the city and county of San Francisco, he being then absent from the state, the persons thus served being named in said notice as comprising presumably "the persons, firms and corporations" generally referred to in said order as having "in their possession or under their control any of the property or estate of said insane person within the said city and county of San Francisco or the state of California." The other affidavit was by one G. Selner, who, after reciting generally the terms of said notice and of said order directing that copies of said notice be mailed to the specified relatives of said insane person residing in Germany, deposed "that on the 13th day of January, 1913, the affiant deposited in the United States post office in San Francisco, Cal., true copies of said notice of the time and place of hearing said application securely inclosed in envelopes, respectively addressed as follows:

One thereof addressed to Toni Horn (a cousin), 50 Rue Juste-lipse, Brussels, Belgium; one thereof addressed to Max Goldsmith (a brother-in-law), Hamburg, Germany; and one thereof addressed to Jane Doe Goldsmith, (a daughter of said Max Goldsmith, true name unknown), % Max Goldsmith, Hamburg, Germany."

Thereafter and on January 27, 1913, the matter of the application of the Mercantile Trust Company to be appointed guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum came on for hearing in said superior court in department 9 thereof, and was then and there heard; whereupon the judge of said department of said court made and entered an order appointing said Mercantile Trust Company to be the guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum, an insane person. The said order contains the following recitals:

"The petition of Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco praying to be appointed the guardian of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, an insane person, coming on regularly to be heard, upon due proof to the satisfaction of said court that notice has been given to the relatives of the said Julie Grinbaum, residing in the empire of Germany, and that none reside in this city and county or in the state of California, and that said insane person resides in and is now in said empire of Germany, and that all notices have been given as required by law and as directed by this court, and it duly appearing to the court that said Julie Grinbaum is an insane person and has estate within the state of California, which needs the care and attention of some fit and proper person, which estate is of the value of $200,000 or thereabouts."

Letters of guardianship were issued to said Mercantile Trust Company pursuant to said order, under the authority of which it has ever since been and still is acting as guardian of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, and has been and still is in the possession and administration of practically the whole of her property and estate, together with the rents, issues, profits, increments, and accumulations thereof.

Before attempting to set forth and pass upon the respective contentions of the petitioner and respondents herein based upon the foregoing record, it may be well to have in mind the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to proceedings for the appointment of guardians of insane or incompetent persons who do or who do not reside within the state of California. Section 1763 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the appointment of guardians for the person and estate of insane or incompetent persons who reside within the state of California having property within it. It reads as follows:

"When it is represented to the superior court, or a judge thereof, upon verified petition of any relative or friend, that any person is insane, or from any cause mentally incompetent to manage his property, such court or judge must cause a notice to be given to the supposed insane or incompetent person of the time and place of hearing the case, not less than five days before the time so appointed, and such person, if able to attend, must be produced on the hearing, provided that when such person is a patient at a state hospital in this state, the certificate of the medical superintendent or acting medical superintendent of such state hospital, to the effect that such patient is unable to attend on the hearing, shall be prima facie evidence of such fact."

Section 1793 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the appointment of guardians of insane or incompetent persons who reside or are without the state of California. It reads as follows:

"The superior court may appoint a guardian of the person and estate, or either, of a minor, insane or incompetent person, who has no guardian within the state, legally appointed by will, deed or otherwise, and who resides without the state, and has estate within the county or, who, though not having such estate, is within the county, upon petition of any friend of such person or any one interested in his estate, in expectancy or otherwise. Before making such appointment, the court must cause notice to be given to all persons interested, in such manner as such court deems reasonable."

These two sections of the Code of Civil Procedure comprise the law of this state, by compliance with which its courts acquire jurisdiction to appoint guardians of the persons or estates of alleged insane or incompetent persons who do or who do not reside within the state of California, and who have property rights or interests therein.

[1] It is to be observed that each of these two sections of the Code provides for some form of notice to be given to the individual whose personal liberty or whose property rights or interests are to be affected by such guardianship. Section 1793 of said Code provides that "before making such appointment, the court must cause notice to be given to all persons interested, in such manner as such court deems reasonable." Section 1763 of said Code provides that the "court or judge must cause a notice to be given to the supposed insane or incompetent person of the time and place of hearing the case," and further provides that "such person, if able to attend, must be produced on the hearing." The requirement of these sections of the Code of Civil Procedure that notice in some form and of some manner of service must be given to the individual alleged to be an insane or incompetent person before the courts can acquire jurisdiction to appoint guardians over their persons or estates does not depend for its sanction upon the express provisions of either section of the Code. It rests upon the fundamental doctrine, as old as Magna Charta, that no person can be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and it has accordingly been held in several of the states that, even in the absence of express provisions in their laws relating to guardianship, requiring notice to be given to insane or incompetent persons of impending guardianships over their persons or estates, such notice must be given, or such proceedings shall be void. In the case of McKinstry v. Dewey, 192 Iowa, 753, 185 N. W. 565, 23 A. L. R. 587, the decisions of these several jurisdictions are extensively reviewed, and are shown to uniformly support the conclusion that even without express statutory requirements as to notice the personal liberty or property rights of a person alleged to be insane or incompetent cannot be invaded or impaired by the appointment of a guardianship over his person or estate without the giving to him of some form of notice sufficient to satisfy the constitutional requirement as to due process of law. It is not seriously contended by the respondents herein that either in the presence or absence of the provisions of the foregoing sections of the Code of Civil Procedure respecting notice, any appointment of a guardian of either the person or property of the petitioner herein could have been validly made without some sufficient form of notice to her of such proceedings. The primary question before this court, therefore, is as to whether, upon the face of the foregoing proceedings, this court, as the petitioner insists, is compelled to the conclusion that no notice whatever was given to the petitioner herein of the application of the Mercantile Trust Company to have her adjudged to be insane or incompetent; and to have itself appointed guardian of her estate or of the proceedings taken thereunder, resulting in such adjudication and such guardianship; and hence that such proceedings and the orders therein made were and are wholly void as beyond the jurisdiction of said court; or whether, as the respondents herein contend, this court will presume upon the face of said proceedings, read as a whole, that some sufficient form of notice of such proceedings and of the order or orders sought to be made therein was given to said petitioner, and hence that such proceedings and the order or orders adjudging said petitioner to have been incompetent or insane and appointing the said Mercantile Trust Company guardian of her estate were and are valid as within the proper exercise of the jurisdiction of said court. To this primary inquiry we therefore address ourselves. In so doing we do not deem it necessary to determine whether proceedings for the appointment of guardians of the estates of insane or incompetent persons are proceedings in personam or in rem; for while it is true that, if such proceedings are in the nature of proceedings in personam, personal service of notice of such proceedings and of the relief sought therein would be required, while if in rem notice by substituted service, as by mail or posting or publication, might suffice, the question here is not as to the form or sufficiency of the notice, but is as to whether or not any notice whatsoever was given, or is to be presumed to have been given; for, if the presumption is to be indulged in at all, it must be held to go the full length in establishing the sufficiency of the notice thus presumed to have been given. It would seem to be conceded by the respective parties hereto that the proceedings which are assailed herein were taken under the provisions of section 1793 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the appointment of guardians of the person and estate of nonresident persons. The petition of the Mercantile Trust Company alleged that Julie Grinbaum "at present resides at Baden-Baden, Germany"; and further alleged "that as petitioner is informed and believes and therefore so alleges there are no persons within the state of California who are interested in the estate of said Julie Grinbaum." The order of the court, fixing the time and place for the hearing upon said petition, and directing to whom and in what manner the notice of said hearing should be given, repeats in its recitals the foregoing recitals of the petition. Without attempting to precisely define the meaning of the phrase in said section 1793 of the Code of Civil Procedure reading "who resides without the state," it will be assumed, in view of the admission of the parties hereto and of the form and phrasing of the aforesaid petition and order that said proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum comes properly within the scope of the provisions of said last-named section of the Code; and that the provision therein that "before making such appointment the court must cause notice to be given to all persons interested in such manner as the court deems reasonable," applies to said proceeding. This assumption is in harmony with the authorities of both this and other states having similar statutes, and is in keeping with the constitutional requirement that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without such notice and opportunity to be heard as shall be held to constitute due process of law. Estate of Eikerenkotter, 126 Cal. 55, 58 Pac. 370; Estate of Schulmeyer, 171 Cal. 344, 153 Pac. 233; McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336, 59 Pac. 767, 78 Am. At the threshold of our consideration of the record before us in the matter of the application of the Mercantile Trust Company for the appointment of itself as guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum, it is to be noted that, under the express provision of section 1793 of the Code of Civil Procedure last above quoted, whatever notice is to be given of the time and place of the hearing upon said application "to all persons interested" must be such notice as is ordered by the court as distinguished from such notices in certain similar proceedings as are expressly provided for by statute, and as may be given without any special order of the court but by the clerk or other officer thereof pursuant to statutory direction. In the proceeding under present review there must be a court order directing the giving of notice to all persons interested, and specifying in what reasonable manner such notice shall be given. It is therefore essential to a proper consideration of the sufficiency of the proceedings under review to scrutinize the contents of the order of the court touching the notice to be given of the hearing upon said application. An inspection of said order discloses that there are two specified sets of persons to whom notice of the hearing upon said application is directed to be given. These are (1) Toni Horn, a cousin of the alleged insane person, who resides at 50 Rue Juste-lipse, Brussels, Belgium; Max Goldsmith, a brother-in-law, who resides at Hamburg, Germany, and Jane Doe Goldsmith, a daughter of said Max Goldsmith, who also resides at Hamburg, Germany. (2) "Any and all persons, firms and corporations which have in their possession, or under their control, any of the property or estate of the said insane person within the city and county of San Francisco or the state of California." It thus affirmatively appears upon the face of said order that no notice whatever is directed to be given the alleged insane person, either under the particular name of Julie Grinbaum or under the general designation of a person interested in her estate.

We next come to consider the notice which, as appears from the record before us, was issued by the clerk of said court pursuant to the foregoing order. It gives the title of the court and cause, and then proceeds to designate somewhat more particularly than was done in said order the persons to whom said notice is directed. They are "Bank of Daniel Meyer, Henry Meyer, A. I. Esberg, Toni Horn, Max Goldsmith, Jane Doe Goldsmith." It then proceeds to state:

"Take notice that Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, a corporation, has heretofore filed in the above-entitled court its petition to be appointed guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum, an insane person."

It then proceeds to state the time and place of hearing in said court upon said petition in conformity with the terms of said order, and notifies said designated persons to "appear and show cause, if any you can, why said Mercantile Trust Company should not be appointed such guardian." It thus appears upon the face of said notice what particular persons are cited to appear at the hearing upon said application for guardianship, and it thus affirmatively appears that Julie Grinbaum, neither by name nor by any general inclusion, is to be notified to thus appear.

We come next in order to the service of said notice, to the manner thereof, and to the persons upon whom the service of the same was made pursuant to the directions of said order and the terms of said notice. There are two affidavits of service, and no more, embraced in the record before us. One of these relates to the service of said notice upon the first three persons named in said notice, viz. Bank of Daniel Meyer, Henry Meyer, and A. I. Esberg. As to the first two of these, the affiant deposes that the notice was personal, by delivering to Henry Meyer, in his personal capacity, a copy of said notice, and by delivering to Henry Meyer, as vice president of the Bank of Daniel Meyer, a corporation, a copy of said notice. As to the service upon A. I. Esberg, the affiant states that service of said notice was made by leaving a copy thereof at his place of business, he being absent therefrom and from said city and state. The second affidavit of service relates to the fact and manner of service upon the other three persons specifically designated in both said order and said notice, viz. Toni Horn, Max Goldsmith, and Jane Doe Goldsmith, and shows the service of said notice by mailing copies of said notice to each of said persons at their respective places of residence in Europe. Neither of said affidavits of service refers directly or indirectly to any service of said notice upon any person or persons other than those whose names are specifically enumerated therein.

On January 27, 1913, the said matter of the application of Mercantile Trust Company to be appointed guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum came on for hearing pursuant to the aforesaid order and notice with the affidavits of service thereof, and was heard by said superior court upon said day. Upon such hearing the said court made its order appointing said Mercantile Trust Company guardian of said estate, which order reads as follows:

"It is hereby ordered that said Mercantile Trust Company be and it is hereby appointed guardian of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, an insane person, and that letters of guardianship of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, an insane person, be issued to said Mercantile Trust Company, no bond being required by law, said Mercantile Trust Company is appointed without bonds."

Thereupon and on said 27th day of January, 1913, pursuant to said order, the clerk of said court issued letters of guardianship of said estate to Mercantile Trust Company, which thereafter duly qualified as such guardian, and took possession of the said properties and estate of Julie Grinbaum which were within the state of California, and has ever since been and still is in the possession and administration of the same as such guardian of said estate under and by virtue of its appointment as such by and through the foregoing proceedings and not otherwise.

It is the contention of the petitioner herein that the foregoing proceedings as produced before this court in the manner above set forth show upon the face thereof that the said superior court in which the same were instituted and pending never acquired and did not have jurisdiction to make the aforesaid order appointing said Mercantile Trust Company guardian of the said estate of Julie Grinbaum, for the reason that no notice of such proceedings or of the hearing thereon was ever served upon said Julie Grinbaum as required by law or at all; that a writ of review is the petitioner's proper and only adequate remedy and that for the reason stated this court should declare void and should vacate and annul the said order of said superior court appointing said Mercantile Trust Company guardian of her said estate.

[2] The respondents herein, while apparently conceding that some sort of notice to an alleged insane or incompetent person residing or being outside of the state of California is required to be given under the express provisions of section 1793 of the Code of Civil Procedure before the court can acquire jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of the estate of such person, still contend that the presumption as to the regularity of the proceedings of courts of record having jurisdiction over such proceedings can be invoked and applied in the instant case to eke out the insufficiency of the record herein due to its silence as to whether or not the alleged insane person was duly served with such notice; and the respondents further and more particularly contend that this presumption is not only aided but is fully sustained and established by the recitals in the order making such appointment, referring to the said petition as "coming on regularly to be heard," and reciting "that all notices have been given as required by law and as directed by this court." In support of the respondents' contention that they are entitled to the benefit of the presumption as to the regularity of the proceedings for the appointment of said guardian as shown by the record under review, they cite and copiously quote from the leading case of Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742, and from certain other cases from this and other jurisdictions which have followed and applied its doctrine as fully upholding their aforesaid contention. The petitioner on the other hand insists, and we think correctly, that the case of Hahn v. Kelly, supra, far from upholding the respondents' contention, expressly repudiates it, and sustains the petitioner's contention, that the presumption relied on by the respondents herein cannot be invoked or relied upon under the state of the record before us. The case of Hahn v. Kelly, supra, arose out of the case of Hawes v. Jones, which was an action in equity for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon property in this state of a nonresident and absent mortgagor, upon whom personal service could not be had. The case was concedely one wherein a judgment in rem affecting only the property involved could be obtained upon substituted service by publication of the summons therein. An order for such publication in a designated newspaper was duly made; an affidavit of publication was in due time presented, which showed the publication of the process for the requisite period but which affidavit failed to state whether the person making it was the printer, foreman, or principal clerk of said newspaper. The record was silent as to the qualification of the affiant, or as to whether or not upon the hearing other proof was presented as to the regularity of the publication, or as to the qualifications of the maker of the affidavit. The judgment recited that service had been made "according to law and the order of said court." In the later case of Hahn v. Kelly, involving the same property, and wherein the said judgment of foreclosure was assailed as void by reason of said defective affidavit of service of the process upon which jurisdiction to render the judgment depended, this court held in an exhaustive opinion that, upon the state of the record in that case and of the recitals of the judgment, "if the record is silent as to what was done in respect to some material matter, we will presume that what ought to have been done was done." The court supports this brief statement of the principle governing the application of the rule as to presumptions in support of a judgment with an amplitude both of reasoning and of illustration, which abundantly serves to differentiate the case of Hahn v. Kelly from the case at bar. For example, it follows immediately the foregoing statement of the principle with these words:

"But, where the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done. A want of jurisdiction affirmatively appears on the face of the record whenever what was done is stated, and which having been done was not sufficient in law to give the court jurisdiction."

Again, the court, by way of illustration, says:

"Suppose in a case of attempted personal service the officer should return that he had served the summons upon A. B., the son of the defendant, by delivering to him personally a copy, and also a copy of the complaint, and the remainder of the record is silent upon the subject of service, could we presume, in the face of such a record, that he served it upon the defendant also? Undoubtedly not. There would be a want of jurisdiction upon the face of the record within the rule in hand, and the judgment would be declared a nullity whenever and wherever presented in support of a legal claim or right. We consider the true rule to be that legal presumptions do not come to the aid of the record, except as to acts or facts touching which the record is silent. Where the record is silent as to what was done, it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done but rightly done; but when the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done. If the record merely shows that the summons was served on the son of the defendant, it will not be presumed that it was served on the defendant. If the affidavit of the printer shows that the summons was published one month, it will not be presumed that it was published three."

[3] A very good illustration applying the foregoing principles and showing the difference between the facts of the case of Hahn v. Kelly and those of the case at bar would be the following: Suppose that in that early case the record had affirmatively shown that no order directing the service by publication of the summons upon the defendant had ever been made. Would the court have presumed from the recitals of the judgment that such order had been entered, and that such service had been made? In the case at bar the record affirmatively shows that the order for service of notice specified those persons upon whom such service was to be made, and that the alleged insane person was not among the list of those thus directed to be served. This amounts to an affirmative showing that there existed no order for service of notice upon such insane person. Could the court presume in the face of this state of the record that an order for service of notice upon Julie Grinbaum was made?

If not, then whatever service was attempted to be made would be futile in the absence of an order directing such service to be made. But the record in this case goes further in differentiating it, not only from the state of facts shown in Hahn v. Kelly, but also in distinguishing it from every other case upon which the respondents rely in support of their contention upon the point at present under review. The notice issued pursuant to the order entered in the instant case specifies with even greater particularity than the order itself the persons upon whom service thereof is to be made. The alleged insane person, though the person most interested in said proceeding, is not included in that specification. Could it be presumed that the service of said notice was to be made upon one whose name was thus excluded from the list of those upon whom such service was to be made? Again, the affidavits of service of said notice contained in this record show affirmatively the persons upon whom the service of such notice was made, and the alleged insane person is not among their number. Does not the foregoing illustration in Hahn v. Kelly have exact application to this state of the record? When the return of service thus shows affirmatively the names of those persons upon whom such service has been made, can the court presume that service has also been made upon one whose name is: neither included in the order, the notice, or the affidavits of service thereof? Undoubtedly not. The case of Alderson v. Bell, 9 Cal. 315, also cited and relied upon by the respondents, resembles the case of Hahn v. Kelly as to its facts, and is subject to the same differentiation from the facts of the case at bar and the principles to be applied thereto. On the other hand, this court has had occasion in numerous later cases to apply and to distinguish the doctrine announced in Hahn v. Kelly, supra, among which are the cases of Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 639; Smith v. Los Angeles Co., 98 Cal. 210, 33 Pac. 53; Latta v. Tutton, 122 Cal. 279, 54 Pac. 844, 68 Am. St. Rep. 30; and Johnston v. Southern Pacific Co., 150 Cal. 535, 89 Pac. 348, 11 Ann. Cas. 841. In the case last cited the court gives a more direct application to the rule announced in these earlier cases when it says:

"There is, however, a well-defined limit to an appellate tribunal's power in indulging in such presumptions. It can indulge in no presumption which does violence to the facts as presented by the record of the inferior court, and, while it is true that an order of a court of general jurisdiction will be treated as void only in the event that its invalidity appears upon the face of the record, * * * the rule in this court has been well settled that this does not mean that the record must contain a direct statement to the effect that something which must have been done in order to give the court jurisdiction was not done, but means that want of jurisdiction appears whenever what was actually done is stated, and this which was done is not sufficient in law to confer jurisdiction. Therefore, whenever the record states the evidence or makes an averment with reference to a jurisdictional fact, it will be understood to speak the truth on that point, and it will not be presumed that there was other or different evidence respecting the fact or that the fact was otherwise than is averred"—citing Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 350, 21 L. Ed. 959, and other cases.

[4] The respondents, however, insist that the recitals contained in the order of the court appointing the Mercantile Trust Company guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum are sufficient to establish due service of process upon her so as to sustain the jurisdiction of the court to make said order. These recitals, as we have seen, are: (1) "The petition of the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco to be appointed the guardian of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, an insane person, coming on regularly to be heard"; and (2) "and that all notices have been given as required by law and as directed by this court." It is to be noted that these two recitals in said order are connected and joined together by the declaration therein immediately following the first of said recitals and immediately preceding the second of them, reading as follows:

"Upon due proof to the satisfaction of said court that notice has been given to the relatives of said Julie Grinbaum residing in the empire of Germany and that none reside in this city and county or in the state of California and that said insane person resides and is now in said empire of Germany."

As to said first recital, it thus appears upon the face of the order what notice and proof of service formed the basis of said recital, and upon the foregoing authorities it will not be presumed that any other notice than that thus affirmatively stated is covered by said recital; while as to said second recital, not only does the same reasoning apply, but the recital itself grammatically construed means no more than that whatever notices were given were given in the manner required by law and as directed by the court. That the foregoing is the utmost force and effect to be given to either of said recitals is further made plain by the authorities which deal with the weight to be accorded to recitals in orders, judgments, and decrees, and which uniformly hold that it is only in the absence of anything to the contrary in the record that the recital that the matter "came on regularly to be heard" must be presumed to be true. Estate of Schulmeyer, 171 Cal. 341, 153 Pac. 233; Estate of Espinosa, 179 Cal. 189, 175 Pac. 896; Settlemyer v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 1110; Latta v. Tutton, supra; Hahn v. Kelly, supra. We are satisfied from the foregoing considerations that the order of the said superior court dated January 27, 1913, appointing the Mercantile Trust Company guardian of the estate of said Julie Grinbaum, was void for want of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the proceedings in said court leading up to and including said order sought to be reviewed herein.

[5] The respondents herein, however, contend that, conceding said order to have been void at the date thereof for want of jurisdiction, the petitioner herein should not at this time be granted the relief prayed for in her petition herein, for the following reasons: First, that the petitioner herein has waived her right to make this application for a writ of review (a) by laches and lapse of time; (b) by her acts and conduct since the making of said order, amounting to a consent thereto, and particularly by her acts and conduct since her return to San Francisco in August, 1921, including her application for a restoration to capacity presented to the court, in which the aforesaid proceedings were pending on or about June 26, 1923, and which said proceedings for restoration are still pending therein, and by which acts and conduct the respondents also contend the petitioner herein is now estopped to maintain the present proceeding. As to the petitioner's waiver of her right to a writ of certiorari, for the purpose of having said proceedings reviewed and said order annulled for want of jurisdiction, a sufficient answer to the respondents' foregoing contention in that regard is to be found in the provisions of section 40 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 40. After his incapacity has been judicially determined, a person of unsound mind can make no conveyance or other contract nor delegate any power or waive any right, until his restoration to capacity.

During all of the years which have elapsed since the date of the making of said order and even down to the present moment, Julie Grinbaum has been the subject of judicial determination that she was an insane or incompetent person. Not only was she so adjudged by the terms and effect of said order, but also by the judicial determination of the German tribunal, which, in May, 1913, adjudged her insane; which adjudication has never been set aside or revoked so far as the record in the present proceeding discloses. The instant proceeding is being conducted through and by means of a guardian ad litem appointed by this court upon the presentation of the aforesaid proceedings of both the American and German courts adjudging her to be insane. It is impossible to conceive how any act of failure to act, or any conduct on the part of a person thus subject to the disqualification of adjudged insanity could be held to operate as either a waiver or estoppel against the assertion of the right to have an order of a court adjudging her insane or undertaking to establish a guardianship over either her person or estate, vacated for defects of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the proceedings which form the basis of such order. We are cited by the respondents to no decision of any court which goes so far, or which applies the doctrine of either waiver or estoppel to persons who are laboring under an unrevoked judicial determination of their disability.

[6] Second, the respondents contend that inasmuch as a writ of certiorari is not a writ of right, but is an extraordinary remedy, the granting of or refusal to grant which lies in the sound discretion of the court to which application therefor is made, this court ought not to issue such writ or set aside said order creating such guardianship, conceding said order to have been void for want of notice to the petitioner herein, if the said petitioner was in fact insane at the time of the making of said order, and if the condition of her properties and estate was such that an imperative necessity existed for the appointment of a guardian over her estate at said time, and if the guardian was otherwise a suitable, acceptable, and properly qualified person, and if the administration of the petitioner's said estate under said guardianship had during the several years of its continuance been beneficial to the said insane person and to her said estate; and if no substantial injustice has been done to her or her estate through the existence or exercise of said guardianship; and if confusion, litigation, and prejudice to third persons would result from the annulment of the initial order upon which such guardianship and all subsequent proceedings thereunder rests.

[7] In entering upon a discussion of this phase of the issue before us, it is to be taken as true that the granting or refusal of a writ of review is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the court to which application for such writ is made. The authorities fully sustain this view. 4 Cal. Jurisprudence, 1061, and cases cited. But, conceding this to be true, it is not to be denied that the making and execution of a judicial order or decree, declaring an individual to be insane, and placing the entire property and estate of such individual within the custody and control of others, are matters of the gravest concern, affecting, as they do, intimately and immediately, those rights of the individual often and not improperly termed "sacred" to the full exercise and enjoyment of life, liberty, and property. It is for this reason chiefly that the express provisions of our statutes relating to guardianship require that notice of proceedings for the creation of such guardianship shall be given to the person having property within the jurisdiction of the court, and who in such proceedings is alleged to be incompetent or insane. The strictitude of our statutory requirements in that regard is best illustrated by the provisions of section 1763 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the guardianship over the person or property of alleged insane or incompetent persons who are within this state. Said section requires, not only personal service of notice of the pendency of such proceedings and of the time and place of the hearing thereon to be given to the alleged insane or incompetent person, but further requires that such person must be produced at such hearing, unless he is at the time a patient at a state hospital, and is shown by the certificate of the superintendent thereof to be unable to attend. The reason for this strictitude lies in the fact that the issue of primary importance to be determined before any order can be made in the premises is as to whether or not the persons, whose personal and property rights are to be thus affected, are or are not incompetent or insane. That a similar strictitude cannot be practically enforced in the case of alleged insane or incompetent persons, who reside without or are absent from the state, lies in the nature of things, but does not in any degree diminish the importance of giving the notice required by section 1793 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the case of Evans v. Johnson, 39 W. Va. 299, 19 S. E. 623, 23 L. R. A. 737, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912, this proposition is aptly and forcibly stated:

"It lies at the fountain of justice in all legal proceedings that the person to be affected have notice of such proceedings. As such an appointment takes from the person the possession and control of his property and even his freedom of person, and commits his property, his person, his liberty to another, stamps him with the stigma of insanity and degrades him in public estimation, no more important order touching a man can be made, short of conviction of infamous crime. Will it be said in answer to this that he is insane, and that notice to an insane man will do him no good? The reply is that his insanity is the very question to be tried, and he the only party interested in the issue. In many cases, if notice be given him, he will be prompt to attend and in person be the unanswerable witness of his sanity. In some cases, if notice be not given him, those interested in using his property or robbing him of it will effectuate a corrupt plan. Almost as well might we convict a man of crime without notice."

In the entire absence of any notice to the person of all others, the most interested in the proceedings in which these vital issues are to be determined, and in the consequent want of jurisdiction in the court entertaining such proceedings to make any order whatever in the premises, it would seem clear that this court ought not to prejudge, under the procedure of a writ of review, that the order thus assailed was imperatively or at all necessary to the welfare of the person most affected by it, or that the subsequent proceedings under the guise of the guardianship created thereby were beneficial to such person or to his property; since as to all such matters such person has never had his or her day in court. In the instant proceeding it is not to be forgotten that Julie Grinbaum was at the time of the making of the order complained of herein detained in a hospital for the mentally afflicted in a distant foreign land, and that she continued to be so detained for the seven years or more which followed the making of said order; that the record herein discloses that during that entire period she had not a single relative in the state of California who might have been interested in the welfare of her property interests therein, or who might have been notified of proceedings from time to time taken, and of orders from time to time made in the course of said guardianship; that, so far as the record herein discloses, no such legal notice as the law requires was ever given either to Julie Grinbaum or to any relative of hers, interested in her welfare, of any of the subsequent proceedings had or orders made in the course of said guardianship during all these years; that it was not until within a brief year before the institution of the instant proceeding that Julie Grinbaum came or was brought within the boundaries of this state or the jurisdiction of its courts; and that ever since her return to this state in 1921 she has been and still is subject to the legal disability created by said order judicially determining her to have been insane at the date thereof, and to have continued so to be while said order remains in force and effect. Can it be said with propriety under these circumstances that this court would be exercising a proper discretion in denying to this petitioner, for the reasons urged by the respondents, the right by writ of certiorari to have annulled an order void upon its face for absolute lack of jurisdiction in the court to make it, if the petitioner is otherwise entitled to such writ? We think not.

[8] As to the contention of the respondents that confusion, litigation, and prejudice to third persons might result from the annulment of said order, it may be said that so far as the record herein discloses no rights of third persons are involved in said proceedings or would be injuriously affected by the annulment of said order. As to possible litigation, it may be noted that it is to such very litigation that this court is asked by respondents to relegate this petitioner through their insistence that she should seek her relief in a court of equity rather than by means of this writ; while as to any confusion in respect to the petitioner's properties or affairs or in respect to the administration thereof during the past years of said guardianship it would seem that the mere fact that the guardian might be required to render an accounting of its stewardship, while acting as such under a void order of appointment, should not of itself be sufficient to justify this court in refusing to annul said order, since equity will always intervene to protect and uphold the acts and transactions of trustees de facto, when done in good faith, and when the same inure to the benefit of the person or estate of the ward. Perry on Trusts (6th Ed.) § 910; Jessup v. Jessup, 17 Ind. App. 177, 46 N. E. 553; Curran v. Abbott, 141 Ind. 492, 40 N. E. 1091, 50 Am. St. Rep. 337; Jones v. Dawson, 19 Ala. 672; Lowe v. Morris, 13 Ga. 165; Railroad Co. v. Miller, 47 Vt. 146; McElhenny's Appeal, 46 Pa. 347; Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. 8.

[9, 10] We will next proceed to a discussion of the further contention of the respondents herein to the effect that said petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, and hence is not entitled to the relief sought herein. Under this head, the respondents insist that the petitioner has had four separate, distinct, and adequate remedies against the making, operation, and effect of said order, viz.: (1) By appeal; (2) by motion in the court making said order to set the same aside; (3) by an action in equity to declare said order void; and (4) by a petition for restoration to capacity. As to the first of these remedies, it is conceded that the time has long gone by for its exercise, and it is obvious from the state of this record that the petitioner neither had nor was in any condition to receive notice of the making of such order or of the defects in the same during the statutory time when such appeal might have been taken. As to the petitioner's second suggested remedy, viz., that of a motion to set aside such void order in the court making the same; in response to this suggestion it may be stated that it has never been the practice to require a party injuriously affected by a judgment or order of a court, which court had never acquired jurisdiction over either his person or property to make the same, to first apply to the court making said order to have the same vacated; nor should it be so in reason, since to apply such a rule would be to require such a party to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court making such void order, and thus commit himself thenceforward to the tender mercy of the court making the same. We are cited to no authority which goes so far as to hold that a person having a clear right to make a direct attack by certiorari upon a judgment or order of a judicial tribunal upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction must first seek relief from such judgment or order in the court which was without jurisdiction to make or enter the same. The cases of Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651, 66 Pac. 216, 70 Pac. 732, People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 77 Pac. 651; and Benning v. Superior Court, 34 Cal. App. 296, 167 Pac. 291, go no further than to hold that a party affected by an order of a court, void upon its face, may apply to the court making the same to have it vacated, but do not hold that such party is obliged to do so before applying for a writ of review. On the other hand, in the case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 405, 24 Pac. 121, 141 (10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192), which arose on application for a writ of prohibition, this court, after an exhaustive consideration of the subject, said:

"If a want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the proceeding in the lower court, no plea or preliminary objection is necessary before suing out the writ of prohibition."

This we think to be the true and reasonable rule applicable to cases of this character.

[11] The respondents' next contention is that the petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by application for restoration to capacity under the provisions of section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but a moment's reflection will serve to show that this is no remedy at all for the matter complained of in this proceeding, since proceedings under that section of the Code do not assail the validity of the original proceedings and order declaring the petitioner to be insane, but, on the contrary, admit, in so far as the party applying for restoration to capacity can admit, the validity of such proceedings. Nor does such an application in any way involve an inquiry into the validity of the order creating a guardianship over the property or estate of the petitioner, and hence could not determine the main issue presented in the instant proceeding.

[12] The respondents finally contend that the petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in a court of equity, in an action to declare said order void. In the case of Consolidated Adjustment Co., etc., v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 92, 207 Pac. 552, Mr. Chief Justice Shaw, referring to the issuance of extraordinary writs in cases where inferior tribunals have attempted to proceed in causes over which they have no jurisdiction, aptly says:

"The question whether or not there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in such cases is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of the particular case." See, also, Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 195 Pac. 390.

[13] The circumstances of this particular case, as shown by the record before us, disclose that Julie Grinbaum, the petitioner herein, is now of the advanced age of 75 years; that she is in delicate health physically, and in a more or less enfeebled mental state; that during most of her life she has been a citizen and resident of San Francisco; that about 13 years ago she was deprived of her husband's companionship and support by his sudden death while they were traveling in foreign lands; that under the shock of that loss she became morbid and melancholy to a degree which deprived her of all interest in the ordinary affairs of life, and which presently rendered her the proper subject of internment in hospitals devoted to the care of those mentally afflicted or enfeebled, if not actually incompetent or insane; that for 7 years she was thus interned under the immediate custody and care of guardians and of physicians who were not only not related to her by ties of blood, but who had been strangers to her prior to her said affliction. During that entire period the administration of her properties and estate in California proceeded under the guardianship of the Mercantile Trust Company, with which institution she had never theretofore had any business connection or relation, and without any actual participation by her therein, and without any form of legal notice or actual or comprehending knowledge on her part, so far as this record discloses, of the various proceedings, reports, hearings, and orders had and made therein. In the year 1921, through the persistent efforts of her nearest relatives, she was enabled to be freed from such detention to return to the city of San Francisco, which had always been the place of her legal residence and home, and where she has since continued to be. What may be the actual state of her bodily health or mental powers at present is beyond the scope of the instant inquiry, but it is reasonably certain that at most she has left but few remaining years of her already prolonged and too much troubled life. To relegate her to a suit in equity against this guardian of her estate to obtain the relief which she seeks by this direct proceeding would but mean to relegate her to a litigation which would in all reasonable probability outlast her life, and during the continuance of which she would not only be under the ban of the judicial determination of her incapacity which said order creates, but would also have her property and affairs administered by a guardian whose appointment, as such, she was assailing as void for want of original jurisdiction in the court creating the same. In such suit in equity, the primary question to be determined would be the question of law as to the validity upon its face of the proceedings for the appointment of such guardian; but this question would necessarily in such action be involved in the other equitable considerations presentable in such case under the well-known rule that when equity lays hold of any matter of equitable cognizance it will do so to the full extent of affording complete equitable relief to the parties before it. This would of necessity involve a complete accounting between the parties before the entry of a final decree, and it is fairly to be apprehended from the attitude and briefs of respective counsel herein that such accounting would involve an extended inquiry and a prolonged, if not acrimonious, litigation. It is to be noted in this connection that the parties interested in said guardianship proceeding are not adversary parties in the ordinary sense of that term. The Mercantile Trust Company as guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum has no interest in her properties or estate in any other capacity than as her trustee, and has no right to be perpetuated in the possession and control of her said properties or estate, except upon the assumption that she has been judicially determined to be incompetent or insane by a valid order of the court, which, after such determination, appointed it to be and act as guardian of her said estate. Its highest duty as such guardian is to its ward, and in relation to both her personal welfare and her property rights it can have no adverse or selfish purpose or interest to subserve; nor should it be heard to urge either that removal of its said ward from the shadow of an alleged adjudication of insanity, if such removal is otherwise proper, shall be delayed, nor that its possession and control of her property shall be perpetuated through its insistence upon slower or more involved legal processes to gain relief than those which the ward herself, or her immediate relatives and advisors, have seen fit to select. Under the foregoing circumstances the language of this court in the case of Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 195 Pac. 390, while applied to a different state of facts, would seem to have application here:

"In view of the fact that the superior court was then, and ever since has been, without power or jurisdiction to proceed further in the action, * * * and that further proceedings of any kind, except to again dismiss the action, would be void, we are disposed to grant the writ, rather than put the parties to further vexation and useless expense * * * to prosecute it. The question is largely one of discretion, and we deem it the better policy to terminate the proceedings forthwith."

The order is annulled.

We concur: LENNON, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.; WASTE, J.

WILBUR, C. J. I dissent. As to the question of notice and the effect of the failure to make substituted service upon Mrs. Grinbaum of the application for letters of guardianship, I am in doubt, and as the majority of my associates have arrived at a conclusion, I do not desire to further delay the filing of an opinion in order to make the necessary research to definitely determine that question, nor do I think that necessary, in view of my conclusion as to the duty of this court in the premises in the exercise of a sound discretion in the granting or withholding of writs of review. The original petition filed in this matter was presented by Mrs. Grinbaum, and upon that petition an order to show cause was issued. Upon the return day the respondent called attention to the fact that the petition showed on its face that Mrs. Grinbaum was under legal disability, owing to the adjudication of the German court, and that, although she might have presented a petition in this matter in her own right, upon the theory that the adjudication of the California court was void for lack of jurisdiction, she was, notwithstanding that proposition, under legal disability owing to the German decree, which was still in full force and effect. Thereupon, upon the suggestion of the attorney who had presented her petition, he was appointed guardian ad litem to present the matters alleged in her petition. At the time of the issuance of the order to show cause upon the petition of Mrs. Grinbaum, we had before us two original proceedings instituted by her relating to her proceeding for restoration to capacity then pending before the department of the superior court in which the guardianship proceedings were pending. One of these proceedings was an application for writ of prohibition to prohibit the judge of that department from proceeding with the trial of the issues upon the application for restoration to capacity, and the other was a mandamus proceeding to compel him to issue certain commissions for the taking of depositions. It was urged upon us as a reason for entertaining these original proceedings to view the record upon the appointment of a guardianship that a decision favorable to the applicant might render unnecessary a long and expensive trial of the proceedings for restoration to capacity, and render unnecessary our own decision in the two original proceedings then pending. It was upon this basis that the order to show cause was issued. It now appears that a favorable judgment in this matter will not at all relieve Mrs. Grinbaum of the necessity of proceedings for restoration to capacity because of the fact that her incapacity is established by the German decree. We are called upon in this matter to exercise our discretion in three different particulars: first, in the question of whether or not the proceedings will be entertained at all in the court of last resort without requiring the parties to first present the matter to the superior court; second, we are called upon to determine whether or not in this proceeding we will exercise our discretion by annulling the order of the trial court appointing the Mercantile Trust Company as guardian, in the event that we conclude that the trial court had no jurisdiction to make the appointment; third, we are called upon to determine whether or not for the purpose of prosecuting these proceedings we will appoint and continue in power the guardian ad litem.

In view of the fact that we have already expended the time and labor involved in a consideration of this matter, both by briefs and argument, it may be that, if there is no consideration involved other than the inconvenience resulting to the pressing business of this court by taking up such proceedings in the first instance, we might waive that question, and proceed to judgment. Second, with reference to the discretion as to the issuance of the writ of review upon the application of Mrs. Grinbaum, it might be that, if we were fully satisfied that she was capable of conducting her own affairs, and was only deprived of that authority because of a decree entered without jurisdiction and without notice to her, we might be justified in entertaining jurisdiction on the theories advanced in the main opinion. But as to the exercise of our discretion and power in appointing and continuing in power the guardian ad litem for the purpose of attacking this order declaring Mrs. Grinbaum incompetent and appointing a guardian to take possession of her property, it is clear to my mind that under the circumstances disclosed by the record this ought not to be done.

I will state my reasons briefly for the conclusion. It appears that the Mercantile Trust Company was appointed guardian at a time when Mrs. Grinbaum was insane and under guardianship for that reason, and that the guardianship in Germany was continued after a full inquiry into her mental capacity. It further appears that the guardianship proceedings here were instituted at the request of the friends and relatives of Mrs. Grinbaum, and in all probability with the knowledge and upon the request of the German guardian. This German guardian and the guardian subsequently appointed in Switzerland not only had knowledge of the fact that the Mercantile Trust Company was acting as guardian for Mrs. Grinbaum, but they applied to the guardian for money for the maintenance of the ward, and during almost the entire period of guardianship were in receipt of regular remittances from the Mercantile Trust Company to pay the expenses of caring for Mrs. Grinbaum. It further appears that the Swiss guardian was appointed at the instance of the Mercantile Trust Company, and eventually surrendered the custody of the ward to an agent acting jointly for the Mercantile Trust Company, the guardian of her estate in California, and the guardian of the person appointed by the California court. It thus appears that the only persons capable of acting for and on behalf of Mrs. Grinbaum had full knowledge of and fully acquiesced in the appointment of the Mercantile Trust Company as guardian. It is no doubt true that Mrs. Grinbaum would not be bound by the extraterritorial acts of her German and Swiss guardians, and that so far as the conduct of the guardian of her person appointed in California is concerned, that appointment is also under attack. This contention, however, does not dispose of the question involved, namely, as to whether or not we should appoint a guardian ad litem to directly interfere with that which has been acquiesced in by her general guardian, inasmuch as it is necessarily conceded that Mrs. Grinbaum is incapable of acting for herself because of the legal adjudication of incompetency which is still in full force and effect. It seems to me that, if the proceedings for the appointment of her guardian here are to be attacked in certiorari proceedings, that attack should be made by a general guardian properly appointed, who would have the right in the event of a successful termination of the proceedings to immediately take over the estate now in the custody of the Mercantile Trust Company. The difficulty I see in the matter is that the guardian ad litem is acting under the authority of the appointment by this court, and solely upon that authority. It is true that the appointment is predicated upon the petition of the ward herself and of her relatives in this jurisdiction, but, inasmuch as her own consent is clouded by the incompetency resulting from the German decree, it seems to me that we ought not to proceed further in the matter. There are other considerations leading to the same conclusion and bearing upon our general discretionary powers. It clearly appears that, at the time of the appointment of the Mercantile Trust Company, Mrs. Grinbaum was in fact insane, and that she continued to be so for many years thereafter. It further appears that her insanity is of such type that actual notice to her of the pendency of the proceeding for the appointment of a guardian in California would have no effect whatever upon her; that is to say, she was incapable mentally of receiving notice, and whatever form the notice may have taken her mentality was so clouded that she would not have understood or appreciated the nature or effect of the notice.

It is clear, then, that, if the almost universal form of notice given by the probate court under the statutes of this state, namely, a notice posted for 10 days in three public places in the county, had been given, such notice would have been utterly unavailing to actually bring home to the insane person, then in Germany, knowledge of the proposed proceeding in California. It is true that of necessity we indulge in the conclusive presumption that notices of that type do in fact notify nonresidents of the pendency of proceedings affecting their rights in California. Assuming, as the majority opinion holds, that in default of such notice the proceedings are utterly void, I do not think that we should indulge in the legal fiction that only by such notice or a similar notice could the ward be subject to the jurisdiction of the court when the result of our action will be to declare that the acts of the guardian for more than 10 years had been without legal authority.

The Mercantile Trust Company, in their answer to these proceedings, allege that the transactions of the estate have involved the transfer of nearly $2,000,000 worth of property, and that during its administration the estate has increased from a value of $800,000 to nearly $2,000,000. We are asked to declare these proceedings all void at the instance, not of the ward, but of a guardian ad litem appointed by ourselves. I think this ought not to be done.

It is true that in considering this matter we must recognize that Mrs. Grinbaum, being under a formal adjudication of incapacity, could not herself take any action which would be binding upon her. Nevertheless, it is true that during all this period she has been supported by moneys provided by the Mercantile Trust Company from the funds belonging to her in their hands. If she is not estopped by her conduct in thus acquiescing in the appointment of the Mercantile Trust Company as guardian, it is only because of her adjudicated incapacity, and it seems to me that we ought not to appoint another guardian ad litem to attack this guardian, and thus have at the instance of the guardian ad litem a declaration that an order to which she and her general guardian have consented, as far as they were capable of consenting, declared null and void.

It may be said that we have already exercised our discretion by the appointment of the guardian ad litem. This is true, but when, after a complete hearing of the matter, it is manifest that the result of his appointment is merely to give this guardian so appointed by us an opportunity to attack a guardian appointed by the superior court, where such appointment has been acquiesced in, not only by the ward herself, but also by duly appointed general guardians of her person and estate in Germany and Switzerland, I think we should not continue the guardian ad litem in office.

The fact is that we are baffled at every turn in this case by the fact that Mrs. Grinbaum is under adjudication of complete and total incapacity to transact business, and that at the same time she claims to be sane and is prosecuting a proceeding for restoration to capacity.

It has been held by the Supreme Court of the state of Missouri in the case of Dutcher v. Hill, 29 Mo. 271, 77 Am. Dec. 572, that, where an alleged insane person petitions for restoration to capacity in a guardianship proceeding, he could not subsequently attack the validity of those proceedings upon the ground that he had had no notice of the original appointment of the guardian, and that he was thereby estopped from pursuing property which had been sold by the general guardian so appointed in the hands of an innocent purchaser from the guardian. Under the principles established by this Missouri case, Mrs.

Grinbaum, after having applied for an order restoring her to capacity, cannot now be heard to claim that the guardian was not originally appointed upon proper notice. But here we again encounter the baffling difficulty that while Mrs. Grinbaum in her own proper person could apply for restoration to capacity in the probate court in California, and after such restoration might be bound by the original order appointing a guardian, she was in this case under the additional disability of the German and Swiss decrees of incompetency, and it is doubtful if her application for restoration to capacity in the California court would have any effect as a waiver or estoppel because of her disability under the German and Swiss decrees. It seems to me that an order vacating the appointment of the Mercantile Trust Company before the appointment of a guardian entitled to receive the property of the ward and without any adjudication as to her restoration to capacity would result in confusion and delay. And confusion and delay in an estate involving $2,000,000 means great expense. The guardian ad litem in this matter, it should also be stated, adheres consistently to his contention that the real purpose of these proceedings is to obviate the delay and difficulty incident to a trial of the proceedings for restoration to capacity, and, when we have determined that such proceedings in some form or other are essential, it is clear that we ought not to proceed further in the matter.

In my judgment we should discharge the guardian ad litem, and dismiss the proceedings without prejudice to any further actions that may be undertaken by the parties interested.

1. Insane persons — 33(1)—Personal service of notice necessary in proceedings to appoint guardian of person.

Proceedings to appoint a guardian being in personam, it is essential to jurisdiction that the incompetent, or insane person, be within the court's jurisdiction, and that personal service of notice be made, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1793, providing "the superior court may appoint a guardian of the person and estate, or either, of a minor, insane or incompetent person * * * who resides without the state."

2. Insane persons — 32—Order appointing guardian of person held void.

Where it affirmatively appears that at the time of proceedings to appoint a guardian of the person of an insane person she was without the state, beyond the jurisdiction of the court to give personal service, and that no personal service was ordered or attempted, the order appointing a guardian of such person was void for want of jurisdiction.

Application by Julie Grinbaum, by John Francis Neylan, her guardian ad litem, for a writ of certiorari to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Hon. Frank H. Dunne, Judge thereof, to review an order of J. V. Coffey, Judge. Order annulled.

See, also, 209 Pac. 1005; 221 Pac. 635, 653.

John Francis Neylan and Philip S. Ehrlich, both of San Francisco (Edmond E. Herrscher, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This is an application for a writ of review, wherein it is sought to have a certain order of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, made and entered on the 7th day of April, 1921, appointing Erna Herrscher guardian of the person of Julie Grinbaum, reviewed and annulled.

The main facts respecting the physical and mental condition of Julie Grinbaum which led up to the institution of the proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of the person of Julie Grinbaum which is herein sought to be reviewed are substantially the same as those fully set forth and considered in the decision of this court in the Matter of Julie Grinbaum, an insane person, etc., v. Superior Court, etc. (S. F. 10708), 221 Pac. 635, this day filed.

The petition of Erna A. Herrscher for appointment as guardian of the person of Julie Grinbaum was filed in said superior court on March 9, 1921. It averred that the petitioner was the next and only relative in California and nearest blood relation of Julie Grinbaum; that on the date of the filing of said petition Julie Grinbaum was and for more than 40 years prior thereto had been domiciled in and a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California; that Julie Grinbaum was and is, at present, temporarily without the state of California, and is incarcerated in the Bellevue Sanitarium at Kreuzlingen, Switzerland, as and that she has been and is an insane person, and that it is necessary that a guardian be appointed of the person of Julie Grinbaum, an insane person. Wherefore the petitioner prays that she be appointed such guardian. Upon the filing of said petition the court made an order setting the hearing thereon for April 5, 1921, and directing notice to be given to the Mercantile Trust Company, guardian of the estate of said insane person, by personal citation, and also directing the posting of notices of the time and place of hearing for two weeks prior thereto. The court further set forth in its said order that "it further appearing from said petition and the facts aforesaid that the said petitioner is the only person in the state of California related to said Julie Grinbaum by consanguinity or otherwise, and that said petitioner is the nearest blood relative of Julie Grinbaum, said insane person, that no necessity exists for any other or further notice of the time and place of said hearing, no further notice thereof is hereby directed." The matter in said application came on for hearing upon the date appointed, whereupon proof was made of the giving of the notices as required by said order and of the facts set forth in said petition, and thereupon said court made its order appointing Erna A. Herrscher guardian of the person of Julie Grinbaum, an insane person, which is assailed in this proceeding.

[1] It is apparent upon the face of the foregoing proceedings that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain said petition for the appointment of a guardian of the person of said insane person, and had no jurisdiction to appoint such guardian. Proceedings for the appointment of a guardian of the person of another are essentially proceedings in personam. De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 131, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; 28 Corpus Juris, 1068, 1069; Schouler on Domestic Relations (6th Ed.) vol. 1, p. 930. This being so, it is a prime essential to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain a proceeding or make an order for the appointment of one person as a guardian of the person of another alleged to be either a minor or an incompetent or an insane person that such person shall be within the jurisdiction of the court seeking to make such appointment, and that personal service of notice of such proceeding and of the time and place of the hearing thereon shall be given to such person before the court can acquire jurisdiction to make an order for the appointment of a guardian of either such minor or incompetent or insane person. With regard to the appointment of guardians of minors, it was held by this court in the case of De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 131, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165, that the superior court had no jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for minors who were absent from the state, and that the fact of their domicile within the state did not suffice to give the court jurisdiction to appoint a guardian over them while they were so absent from the state and thus beyond the jurisdiction of said court to give personal notice of such application and appointment. The same principle applies to proceedings for the appointment of a guardian of the person of another who is at the time absent from the state. It is true that section 1793 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the superior court may appoint a guardian of the person and estate, or either, of a minor, insane, or incompetent person, * * * who resides without the state, and has estate within the county or, who, though not having such estate, is within the county" wherein such application is made. This provision of the Code, however, cannot be held to give jurisdiction to the superior court to entertain a proceeding or make an order for the appointment of the guardian of a person of an alleged minor, insane, or incompetent person, who is absent from the state, and hence beyond the jurisdiction and power of the court to give to such person personal notice of the pendency of said proceedings under the authorities above cited. The only other section of said Code giving statutory authority for the appointment of guardians of insane and incompetent persons is section 1763 thereof, which expressly provides that personal service of notice of such proceedings shall be given to the alleged insane or incompetent person before the court can acquire jurisdiction to make an order appointing the guardian of his person.

[2] In the proceedings sought to be reviewed herein and upon the face of the order sought herein to be annulled, it affirmatively appears that at the time said proceedings were instituted, and, at the time said order was made, Julie Grinbaum was absent from the state of California, and was therefore beyond the jurisdiction of said court to give personal notice to her of the pendency of said proceedings. And it further affirmatively appears upon the face of the order sought to be annulled herein that no such personal notice was either ordered or attempted to be given. It follows necessarily that the entire proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of the person of Julie Grinbaum, while she was so absent from the state of California, and beyond the jurisdiction of said court, is void. It follows that the order appointing Erna A. Herrscher guardian of the person of the said Julie Grinbaum must be annulled, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; WASTE, J.

WILBUR, C. J. I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice RICHARDS, for the reasons stated by him, and, in view of my dissenting opinion in the companion case affecting the guardianship of the estate of Julie Grin-baum, I would add to what is stated by Mr. Justice Richards that the guardian ad litem in this matter was appointed at the instance of Erna A. Herrscher, who, in effect, consents to the reversal of the order appointing her guardian.

GRINBAUM v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 10634.)

Mandamus ☞ 16(1)—Moot question only held presented.

Application for writ of mandate, questioning the qualifications of a judge to hear proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 1766, for the restoration to capacity of one adjudged insane, presents only a moot question after the adjudication of insanity has been declared void, and will be dismissed.

In Bank.

Application by Julie Grinbaum for a writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Hon. Frank H. Dunne, Judge thereof. Dismissed.

See, also, 209 Pac. 1005; 221 Pac. 635, 651, 653.

John Francis Neylan, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, and John J. Barrett, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. This is a petition for a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the respondent Frank H. Dunne, judge of the superior court, to perform the acts required by him under section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the selection of another judge for the trial of the proceedings in the matter of the guardianship of Julie Grinbaum, the petitioner, now pending before him for her restoration to capacity after the denial by respondent of her motion for such transfer, based upon affidavits alleging that the respondent is disqualified by reason of bias and prejudice to hear such proceeding.

The only points presented by the parties in connection with this application are with relation to the disqualification of the judge. We have, however, this day rendered decisions holding that the appointments of a guardian of the person and a guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum were made without jurisdiction and void. The proceedings herein were inaugurated under and by virtue of the provisions of section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section is only applicable to persons adjudged insane or incompetent, for whom guardians have been appointed under section 1764, Code of Civil Procedure, or section 1793, Code of Civil Procedure. Kellogg v. Cochran, 87 Cal. 192, 25 Pac. 677, 12 L. R. A. 104; Aldrich v. Superior Court, 120 Cal. 140, 52 Pac. 148.

Having reached the conclusion that such guardian has not been appointed, it is unnecessary to determine the application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent judge, Frank H. Dunne, to transfer the proceedings to another judge or department, for the reason that the proceedings for restoration to capacity are based upon a false premise, namely, that a guardian of the person and a guardian of the estate have been appointed. Inasmuch as the only question before us relates to the qualifications of the respondent judge to try the proceedings now pending before him, it is unnecessary to pass upon the jurisdiction of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to entertain proceedings based upon section 2189 of the Political Code, or other appropriate proceedings to determine the present mental capacity of Julie Grinbaum. The question involved in the application having thus become a moot question, the petition for writ of mandate is dismissed.

We concur: LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; MYERS, J.; WASTE, J.

GRINBAUM v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 10685.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1923.)

Mandamus ☞ 16(1)—Moot question only held presented.

Proceedings for mandamus to compel the issuance of an order for the taking of depositions in a proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1766, for the restoration to capacity of one adjudged insane, present only a moot question after the adjudication of insanity has been declared void, and will be dismissed.

John Francis Neylan, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck and John J. Barrett, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. We have this day rendered decisions holding that the guardian of the person and the guardian of the estate of Julie Grinbaum were appointed by void orders. We have also held that by reason of these decisions it is unnecessary to pass upon the qualifications of the judge to try the proceedings for restoration to capacity, because the respective proceedings for the appointment of the respective guardians of the person and estate were void, and that the proceedings for restoration to capacity based upon the validity of such orders of appointment must fall with the orders appointing the respective guardians. For the same reason it is unnecessary to issue a mandamus to compel the respondent judge to make an order for the taking of the depositions of certain individuals to be used upon the trial of the pending application of Julie Grinbaum for restoration to capacity.

We concur: LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; WASTE, J.; MYERS, J.

64 Cal. App. 386

PEOPLE v. BAKER. (Cr. 996.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 3, 1923.)

1. Criminal law §1144(13)—Appeal disposed of on assumption of truth of state's evidence.

Where state's evidence was contradicted by that of defendant and jury resolved contradictions in favor of the state, an appeal must be disposed of on the assumption that the facts were as testified to by state's witnesses.

2. Embezzlement §16—Act as to fraudulent removal of leased property inapplicable to embezzlement as bailee.

Information in embezzlement of an automobile being under Pen. Code, § 507, as embezzlement by a bailee, section 504a, making fraudulent removal of leased property embezzlement, is not applicable.

3. Embezzlement §16—One in possession of automobile under agreement to paint held a bailee; "bailment."

Where defendant received possession of an automobile to paint it on an agreement to redeliver after the painting was completed, he was a bailee and the transaction a "bailment" during his possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bailment.]

4. Embezzlement §16—Test to determine whether contract creates "bailment" or a "sale" on credit stated.

The principal test by which to determine whether a contract creates a bailment, or is a sale on credit, is whether there was a binding promise by the person to whom the possession was given to pay for the article, and, if there was such promise, then it is one of sale, and, if there was no such promise, then it was not.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Sale.]

5. Embezzlement §16—Bailment with option of bailee to buy remains a "bailment."

A bailment with an option to bailee to buy is a "bailment" and nothing more.

6. Embezzlement §16—Bailee with optional right to purchase guilty of embezzlement in fraudulently appropriating.

A bailee with an optional right to purchase is guilty of embezzlement, if he fraudulently appropriates property with which he was intrusted.

7. Embezzlement §16—Automobile painter guilty of embezzlement, on conversion to own use.

Defendant receiving an automobile under contract to paint and return it, with option to buy on becoming financially able to make an initial payment, held it as bailee only, and when, instead of painting or purchasing it by making agreed payment, he fraudulently and feloniously converted it to his own use, he was guilty of embezzlement.

8. Embezzlement §11(1)—Owner's demand for return of automobile held unnecessary.

Where automobile was turned over to a painter with option to purchase it when able to make an initial payment and the only right which he had to drive it anywhere was to go to a town within the state for only one day to raise money to make the initial payment, his action in taking the car into Mexico and there borrowing money on it was inference of fraudulent appropriation with felonious intent, rendering demand for return unnecessary.

9. Criminal law §564(1)—Evidence warranted finding of intent to embezzle within venue.

In prosecution for embezzlement of an automobile, evidence held to warrant a finding that intent to embezzle was conceived in county of venue.

10. Embezzlement §23—Restoration of property embezzled received only to mitigate punishment.

Under Pen. Code, § 513, actual restoration of property embezzled is ground for mitigation of punishment only; and hence, in prosecution for embezzlement of an automobile, defendant's guilt was not affected by the fact that evidence failed to show that the automobile was not recovered and returned to its owner prior to time when complaint was lodged.

11. Criminal law §547(2)—Witnesses §255(2)—Stenographer competent to testify to admissions in court, referring to notes to refresh recollection.

In prosecution for embezzlement of an automobile, admissions of defendant at preliminary examination were properly proved by a stenographer who heard his statements in presence of the magistrate, and she was therefore competent to testify as to admissions and properly referred to her notes to refresh her recollection. Code Civ. Proc. § 2047.

12. Criminal law §1086(14)—Court not put in error for refusing unrequested instructions.

Where record fails to show that requests for instructions were proffered by defendant, errors assigned on refusal so to give them are not available.

13. Criminal law —958(3)—Denial of new trial held not abuse of discretion.

Where, on motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence, affidavits set forth only matters to which affiants could testify, but did not show that their evidence could not have been produced at trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence as required by Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 7, no abuse of discretion in denying the motion was shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

E. W. Baker was convicted of embezzlement of an automobile, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred A. Shaeffer, of Santa Maria, and W. E. Learned, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. By an information filed in the superior court for Santa Barbara county, defendant was charged with the embezzlement of an automobile, the property of one O. P. Hazard. He was found guilty, and now appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information charges that defendant, as a bailee, was intrusted by Hazard with a Nash automobile of the value of $700, and that on or about June 13, 1922, at Santa Maria, in the county of Santa Barbara, he feloniously and fraudulently appropriated it to his own use.

Appellant's main contention is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. The evidence adduced by the people tended to prove the following: Defendant was the proprietor of a paint shop at Santa Maria. Hazard, the owner of the automobile, took his car to defendant's place of business on June 12, 1922, to have it painted. Defendant agreed to paint the car and to finish the job not later than June 21st. He signed and delivered to Hazard a receipt for the property reading as follows:

"Rec'd. of O. P. Hazard June 12, '22 Nash, a chummy roadster, 249341. To be painted dark blue black fenders promised June 21st, '22.
[Signed] E. W. Baker."

Hazard testified unequivocally that he delivered the automobile to defendant and left it with him under the latter's agreement to paint it, as evidenced by this written receipt. It seems that Hazard desired to sell the car to any one who would purchase it on terms satisfactory to him; and such desire to sell seems to have furnished the reason why he wanted the automobile painted, he thinking, doubtless, that if it were painted it would sell more advantageously. Prior to delivering the automobile to defendant, i. e., a day or so prior to June 12th, defendant and Hazard had a conversation respecting the possible purchase of the car by the former. Hazard expressed a willingness to sell the automobile to defendant for $600, payable one-half at the date of sale and the balance on time. Defendant was seemingly willing to buy the car for that sum, but instead of agreeing to make an immediate cash payment of one-half of the purchase price he offered to give for the initial payment his personal check, postdated two weeks. Hazard declined to consider any such arrangement, but told defendant that the latter could buy the car for $600 if he would pay one-half down and the balance in monthly installments. On his cross-examination Hazard testified, in part, as follows:

"Q. Did you agree upon a sale? A. No, sir; I wouldn't receive his check dated two weeks ahead. * * * I agreed that I would sell it for that [$600] if he had the money. * * * Q. Mr. Baker did not have the purchase price at that time? A. No. Q. It was settled at that time that Mr. Baker should use the car in order to secure the money to pay you for the car? A. I took the car to be painted. He asked me for the use of it to go out to Sisquoc [a small town in Santa Barbara county], as I understood him, to raise the money. Q. And you consented to have him use the car so he could go out and get the money? A. On that day [June 12th]; yes, sir. * * * If I did not find another purchaser before he bought it, he had the privilege to buy it. Q. He had the privilege of buying that car at any time while it was in the shop to be painted? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. If he did not buy it, he would have the right to go ahead and paint it? A. Yes. * * * Q. Then, Mr. Hazard, the truth of the situation is this, is it not: That you delivered the car to Mr. Baker expressly with the understanding that he should buy it? A. No, sir. Q. What was the understanding? A. Not expressly. The understanding was that he could buy it, and the price was open to anyone who wished to purchase. * * * Q. And you did not object to his taking the car out to see if he could raise money? A. Only on the day I gave him permission to use the car [June 12th]. * * *

"Question by the Court: Did you ever authorize the defendant to take that car out of this county? A. No, sir. Q. Or anywhere else except to go to Sisquoc on this errand to see if he could raise the money? A. That was all."

On his redirect examination Hazard testified as follows:

"Q. Mr. Hazard, on June 12th, at the time this contract was executed referring [to the painting contract evidenced by the receipt which defendant gave when the car was left with him], was there any other agreement whatsoever of any kind or nature between you and E. W. Baker in regard to that car? A. Only he had the privilege to buy it if he could raise the money. * * * Q. But the car was left there under this contract [the contract to paint it]? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. You mean that it was open for purchase by him or anybody else for that price, if they would come and give you the money? A. Yes, sir."

At no time subsequent to June 12, 1922, when he left his car to be painted, did Hazard again see defendant until after the latter's arrest. Shortly after the car was delivered to him to be painted, defendant drove it to Mexico, where he left it with a man from whom he says he borrowed a sum of money. Some time about the middle of August Hazard recovered possession of the automobile. He testified that the "insurance people" told him that they had recovered the car. It was redelivered to him at Los Angeles by an agent of the insurance company.

[1] Needless to say, the evidence given by the people's witnesses was flatly contradicted, on many points, by that given by the defendant and his witnesses. For example, defendant testified that Hazard gave him express permission to drive the automobile to Mexico. By their verdict of guilty the jury resolved these contradictions in favor of the testimony of the people's witnesses, and this appeal must be disposed of upon the assumption that the facts are as testified to by them.

To support his claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict appellant claims: (1) That the automobile was delivered to him not only to be painted, but with the right to purchase it at any time while it was in his possession; and (2) that the owner gave him the right to use it.

[2, 3] The information was drawn under section 507 of the Penal Code. Hence, section 504a, added to the Code in 1917, is inapplicable. Appellant's contention, therefore, necessarily presents the question of whether or not he held possession under a contract of bailment or under an unfulfilled contract of purchase. We think it clear that appellant was a bailee and that the transaction was one of bailment during all the time the automobile was in his possession. There never was a contract of sale, and appellant never acquired any interest in the car as a purchaser. According to the testimony of the complaining witness, which on this appeal must be accepted as true, appellant received possession of the car for a particular purpose, namely, to paint it, on an agreement to redeliver it after that purpose had been fulfilled. Such a transaction constituted a bailment. C. J., vol. 6, p. 1088. If the bailment had been coupled with an agreement whereby appellant had obligated himself to purchase on terms mutually agreed upon, the transaction doubtless would have constituted a sale. But appellant never obligated himself to purchase. He never exercised the optional right which was given him—the right to purchase the car, at his option, for $600 by paying one-half of that amount in cash and agreeing to pay the balance in monthly installments. Under the terms of the offer made to him by the owner, appellant could exercise his optional right to purchase only upon the payment by him of one-half of the stated purchase price. That he never did. Until such time as he should make a cash payment of one-half of the amount for which the owner was willing to sell, or at least until such time as he should communicate to the owner his acceptance of the latter's offer and express a willingness to comply therewith by the immediate payment of one-half of the stated purchase price, appellant was a bailee, and the transaction was one of bailment only.

[4] One of the principal tests by which to determine whether any particular contract creates a mere bailment or is a sale on credit is this: Was there a binding promise on the part of the person to whom the possession was given to pay for the article? If there was such promise, then the contract is ordinarily held to be one of sale and not of bailment; and, conversely, if there was no such binding promise to purchase on terms agreed upon, then the transaction is ordinarily held not to be a sale. See Bentley v. Snyder, 101 Iowa, 1, 69 N. W. 1023; and Norwegian Plow Co. v. Clark, 102 Iowa, 31, 70 N. W. 808.

[5, 6] A bailment with an option on the part of the bailee to buy—and that is this case—is a "bailment," and nothing more. 35 Cyc. p. 655. There is a class of sales known to the law as "sale or return." They are cases where the purchaser is given the option to return the article if he does not like it. 6 C. J. pp. 1095, 1096. Such cases differ radically from those wherein the person to whom the property is delivered is given the option to purchase if he likes the goods or if he finds himself financially able to make the purchase. In the former class of cases the title passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return; in the latter class, no title passes until the option to purchase is exercised. One who falls within the latter class, that is, one who, like the defendant here, is a bailee with an optional right to purchase, is guilty of embezzlement if he fraudulently appropriates the property with which he was intrusted. State v. Betz, 207 Mo. 589, 106 S. W. 64; See, also, People v. Goodrich, 142 Cal. 216, 75 Pac. 796.

[7] Our conclusion is that, having received the automobile under a contract to paint it and return it, with the optional right to buy it if he should desire to do so upon becoming financially able to make the initial payment, appellant held the car as a bailee only, and that he was guilty of embezzlement when, instead of painting the car or purchasing it by making the agreed payment, he fraudulently and feloniously converted it to his own use.

[8] There is no merit in the claim that appellant was given the right to take the car into the Republic of Mexico. According to the testimony of the complaining witness, the only right which appellant had to drive the car anywhere for his own use was the right to drive it to the town of Sisquoc, in Santa Barbara county, and then only on the one day mentioned by the parties, namely, June 12, 1922. This right to drive the car to Sisquoc was given to appellant solely for the purpose of enabling him, if possible, to raise the money wherewith he might make a payment on the car if he elected to purchase it. His action in taking the car out of the state in the manner he did, with all the attendant circumstances, was sufficient to warrant the jury in drawing the inference that he fraudulently appropriated it. That is, it was sufficient to warrant the inference that appellant converted the car to his own use in a manner and for a purpose inconsistent with the owner's rights and inconsistent with the nature and purposes of the bailment, and that he did so with a fraudulent and felonious intent. See People v. Fisher, 16 Cal. App. 275, 116 Pac. 688. There was therefore, no necessity for a demand that the property be returned. People v. Fisher, supra; People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 66 Pac. 372; People v. Goodrich, supra; People v. Hatch, 163 Cal. 368, 373, 125 Pac. 907.

[9] The evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the intent to embezzle the property was conceived in Santa Barbara county. This answers appellant's objection that the venue was not properly laid. People v. Goodrich, supra.

[10] Appellant's guilt is not affected by the fact that the evidence fails to show that the automobile was not recovered and returned to its owner prior to the time when the complaint was lodged with the committing magistrate. Had appellant voluntarily restored or tendered restoration of the car before the complaint was laid before the committing magistrate, that fact might have justified the trial court in mitigating the punishment, but it would not be a ground of defense. Pen. Code, § 513; People v. Royce, 106 Cal. 188, 189, 37 Pac. 630, 39 Pac. 524.

[11] While testifying in his own behalf at the preliminary examination in the justice's court, appellant made certain admissions which the district attorney proved at the trial in the superior court by producing the person who took the shorthand notes of the testimony which appellant gave before the committing magistrate. That person was permitted to refresh her memory by referring to her notes. It is claimed that they should not have been used until it first was shown that the witness had been sworn honestly and faithfully to take the testimony in shorthand. The witness heard the statements which appellant made in the presence of the committing magistrate. She therefore, regardless of whether she was or was not a duly appointed official reporter, was competent to testify to the admissions or statements which she had heard appellant make in her presence, and it was proper to permit her to refer to her notes for the purpose of refreshing her recollection. Code Civ. Proc. § 2047. See People v. Carty, 77 Cal. 216, 19 Pac. 490.

[12] The contention that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions is not available here. The record before us fails to show that the requests for the instructions were proffered by appellant. See People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425, 429, 58 Pac. 918, and People v. Vukojevich, 25 Cal. App. 459, 464, 143 Pac. 1058.

[13] Newly discovered evidence was one of the grounds of appellant's motion for a new trial. The motion upon this ground was supported by the affidavits of the persons whose testimony appellant claimed he could adduce if granted a new trial. Those affidavits simply set forth the matters to which the affiants could testify. No attempt was made to show that their evidence could not have been produced at the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence. The exercise of reasonable diligence is an express requirement of the statute. The Code expressly states that a defendant is entitled to a new trial upon this ground when new evidence is discovered "which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the trial." Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 7. An affirmative showing that the newly discovered evidence could not have been discovered and produced at the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence has always been insisted upon in the decisions. Haynes on New Trial and Appeal, vol. 1, § 92. "A motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence," says the court in People v. Warren, 130 Cal. 685, 63 Pac. 86, "is looked upon with suspicion and disfavor, and a party who relies upon such ground must make a strong case both in respect to diligence on his part and as to the truth and materiality of the evidence, and if he fails in either respect his motion must be denied." We cannot perceive that the trial court abused its discretion in denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

GLOBE COTTON OIL MILLS et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 4310.)

1. Master and servant ☞369—Situe of accident in Mexico not conclusive of jurisdiction under Compensation Act.

That an accident, out of which injuries arose, occurred in Mexico, is not in itself conclusive of jurisdiction, since Workmen's Compensation, Insurance Safety Act, as amended by St. 1917, p. 870, confers jurisdiction in controversies arising from injuries outside the state, where contract of hire was made within the state.

2. Master and servant ☞368—Contract of employment of compensation claimant made at place where offer was accepted.

Where claimant for award under Workmen's Compensation Act as amended by St. 1917, p. 831, applied in this state to superintendent of construction work in Mexico for work, and superintendent stated he would see foreman when he went down to the Mexican camp, and the foreman told him to send plaintiff down, and the superintendent saw plaintiff in this state and asked him when he was ready to go, and plaintiff went down the following day, the contract was made at the place where plaintiff accepted the offer, notwithstanding superintendent's evidence that only the foreman employed workmen.

3. Contracts ☞2—"Place of contract" is where meeting of minds occurred.

The "place of the contract" is the place at which the last act was done by either of the parties essential to a meeting of the minds.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Place of Contract.]

4. Master and servant ☞417(7)—Decision of Commission on conflicting evidence conclusive.

The decision of the Industrial Accident Commission on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

5. Master and servant ☞385(11¼)—Compensation for permanent disability for injury to eye held not excessive.

Where injury to a workman necessitated removal of lens of an eye, in which condition he had but $\frac{1}{100}$ vision, having previously lost sight in his remaining eye, determination of the Industrial Accident Commission that percentage of permanent disability was $19\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. and awarding a named sum for 77 weeks, based on his earning capacity, was not abuse of discretion, though with aid of glasses his vision was restored to practically normal.

6. Evidence ☞19—Common knowledge that experts differ as to loss from impairment of human body.

It is common knowledge that one experienced person may differ greatly from another equally experienced in conclusion as to the degree of loss sustained by impairment of any part of the human body.

Certiorari by the Globe Cotton Oil Mills and another against the Industrial Accident Commission and another, to review an order awarding compensation for injuries to Frank Kowall. Award affirmed.

HOUSER, J. Certiorari to review proceedings of the Industrial Accident Commission in connection with a claim presented by Frank Kowall as applicant against Globe Cotton Oil Mills and others as defendants for damages caused by an injury received by said Kowall while in the employ of said defendants.

The questions which this court is called upon to decide are, first, whether or not the Industrial Accident Commission had jurisdiction of the matter, and, secondly, whether the percentage of permanent disability of the claimant was correctly determined by the Commission.

[1-4] The accident out of which the injuries to the claimant arose occurred in Mexico. That fact in itself, however, is not conclusive of jurisdiction, for the reason that section 58 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, as amended in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 870), confers jurisdiction in all controversies arising out of injuries suffered without the territorial limits of this state in those cases where the contract of hire is made within this state. The primary question which the Commission had to determine was simply as to where the contract of hire was entered into between the claimant and his employer. The evidence showed: That the Globe Cotton Oil Mills was engaged in some construction work in Mexico, just below the border line of the state of California. That C. N. Perry was superintendent of the work and Charles Lichtenberger was the foreman. That a few days before January 25, 1922, at the border town of Calexico, in the state of California, Kowall asked Perry for employment, to which Perry replied that when he went down to the Mexican camp he would ask Lichtenberger "how he was fixed." That Perry testified that he made it a rule never to hire a man. He further testified: "In other words, if I put a man in charge of the work it is up to him to deliver the work, and it is not up to me to say who he shall carry on the pay roll." That thereafter Perry did talk to Lichtenberger regarding the proposed employment of Kowall, with the result that Lichtenberger told Perry to send Kowall down, following which Perry saw Kowall at Calexico and asked him if he was ready to go. That on the day thereafter Kowall did go down to the camp, and on his arrival there no conversation occurred between him and Lichtenberger, other than a greeting by Kowall of "How do you do. Where is my bunk?" and a response by Lichtenberger of "Make yourself at home; there is your bunk; throw in and get ready to work," followed a few days later by a fixing of the compensation to be paid to Kowall for his services. The substance of the negotiations was that at Calexico, within the state of California, Kowall asked the superintendent for a job; the superintendent said he would see about it and later told Kowall that he could go to work. Whatever the superintendent may have had in his mind regarding the propriety of letting his foreman hire his own men, or whatever arrangement the superintendent may have had with his foreman concerning the matter, is of no consequence here. So far as the workman was concerned, he applied for his employment directly to the superintendent at Calexico, and it was the superintendent who indicated to him that he could have the job. A contract is made at the place where the offer is accepted. Bank of Yolo v. Sperry Flour Co., 141 Cal. 314, 74 Pac. 855, 65 L. R. A. 90; Michelin Tire Co. v. Coleman & Bentel Co., 179 Cal. 598, 178 Pac. 507. The place of the contract is the place at which the last act was done by either of the parties essential to a meeting of the minds. Clark v. Belt, 223 Fed. 573, 138 C. C. A. 1. That the contract was complete at the time the superintendent asked Kowall when he would be ready to go is shown by the fact that on the arrival of the workman at the construction camp in Mexico no conversation took place other than an inquiry by the workman as to the location of his "bunk," its designation by the foreman, and a direction to "throw in and get ready to work." Perry may have had it in mind not to interfere with Lichtenberger in his right to employ the men who were to work under his direction, but legal principles affecting the contract rights of individuals cannot be prejudicially affected by what one party may have concealed within the recesses of his mind, and which he fails to divulge to the individual with whom he is negotiating, and with whom contractual relations are later consummated. Perry, as the superintendent of construction, had the power to disregard any rule or custom which he had theretofore followed regarding the hiring of men. There is nothing in the evidence to show that Kowall knew that Perry had abdicated any of his authority in the matter. Kowall had the right to assume that he was dealing with the supreme head of the construction department of the defendant company in the matter of employment. If any different rule prevailed, Kowall was entitled to complete knowledge thereof before entering into a final contract. If the place of contract was a part of the contract within the intention of both parties to the agreement, certainly each of the contracting parties should have been placed in possession of all the details going to a determination of that factor. It must be presumed that Kowall knew the law of this state affecting the status of an employee injured while engaged within the scope of his employment; also that, if the contract of hire were made in Mexico, he would waive such rights. In such circumstances he might and probably would have declined the employment in Mexico, on the ground that he could not afford to take the risk which such employment would necessarily involve, especially in view of the testimony herein that if he were not successful in obtaining the Mexican job he was assured of occupation in the Imperial Valley and on American soil. Kowall's testimony at least supports the conclusion by the commission that the contract of hire was made in this state, and the rule that, where substantial conflict in the evidence exists, the decision so reached by the Commission is conclusive, is so well settled that a citation of authorities in support thereof is unnecessary.

[5] The remaining question has to do with the amount awarded by the Commission to the applicant on account of his injuries. Kowall's injury was of such a nature and to so great an extent as necessitated the removal of the lens of one eye. In its then condition he had but $\frac{1}{100}$ vision in that eye, and owing to the fact that previously he had entirely lost the sight in his remaining eye, his situation was apparently that of a blind man. However, with the aid of properly prepared and adjusted glasses, his sight was restored to practically normal vision for most purposes. It is admitted that under the provisions of the act here in question the respondent Commission is vested with a reasonable discretion in making disability ratings and in fixing the percentage under different claims. The Commission, in accordance with the terms of the statute and of its schedule theretofore adopted, determined that the percentage of applicant's permanent disability was $19\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., for which he was awarded the sum of \$20.83 per week for 77 weeks, or a total of \$1,603.91, and which award was based upon an earning capacity of \$7.50 per day.

[6] Complaint is made that because the schedule of the Commission fixes $35\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. as a maximum allowance for complete loss of sight without removal of the eyeball, the allowance by the Commission of $19\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. to the applicant, considering that he has $\frac{1}{100}$ vision without glasses and normal vision with glasses, is excessive. The argument is that, considering applicant's age as being 48 years, even without the accident occurring, he would in all probability be compelled to wear glasses within a very short time, that because wearing glasses was somewhat inconvenient to the applicant constitutes no valid reason for awarding him anything, but, on the contrary, that the wearing of glasses would constitute a protection to his eyes, and that if he been wearing goggles at the time the accident occurred, the probabilities are that he would have suffered no injury whatsoever. In support of such reasoning the case of McNamara v. McHarg-Barton Co., 200 App. Div. 188, 192 N. Y. Supp. 743, is cited. That case holds in effect that where the loss of vision may be corrected by the use of glasses no award can be made therefor; which conclusion is supported by several cases from the same court. In the case of Butch v. Shaver (1921) 150 Minn. 94, 184 N. W. 572, the applicant had suffered an injury to one of her eyes, with practically the same results as had the applicant here—that is, without glasses, no vision, and with glasses, normal vision—and the court held that because the disability might in a measure be overcome by artificial means was no good reason why compensation should not be awarded to her. Another case with similar facts is that of Johannsen v. Union Iron Works (N. J. Err. & App. 1922), 117 Atl. 639, in which it is held that where an employee sustained an injury to his eye, causing permanent impairment of vision, he was entitled to compensation, although the vision could be rendered normal by the use of glasses. It would seem apparent, without the use of argument or illustration, that the loss of the use of any organ or member of the body would constitute a permanent disability. Because such a loss may be regained by artificial means, while perhaps in a measure compensatory, is not a complete or satisfactory substitute for nature's art. From an injury one might lose the use of either leg or both legs. Surely it should not follow that because thereafter such person might succeed in transporting himself, by means of crutches, or by a wheeled chair, to and from his place of employment, he had suffered no permanent disability. And so here, while by the aid of glasses the applicant has had his sight restored as long as those means are employed, the very instant that the glasses are removed from their proper position, whether such removal be caused intentionally or through an accident, the applicant is rendered absolutely helpless because of the total blindness in one eye and only $\frac{1}{100}$ vision in the eye which was injured in the accident herein involved. Laying aside the probability of an accident, and considering the ability on the part of the applicant to be always in possession of his glasses, they will be very useful only at certain distances from given objects because of their failure to perform other than purely mechanical functions. The natural lens of the eye is controlled by the muscles so as to accommodate the sight to near objects as well as to those located at a distance. Spectacles cannot be so arranged; neither do they afford the same field of vision as does the eye when naturally used. It is certainly a most difficult matter, if one that is possible, to determine with accuracy, or even with satisfaction, the degree of loss sustained by the impairment of any part of the human body. Perhaps the most that can be truthfully said of such determinations is that they are approximate, and that they actually amount to nothing more than a rough estimate. It is common knowledge that one experienced person may differ greatly from another equally experienced in a conclusion regarding such matters. As is said in Frankfort General Insurance Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 59, 159 Pac. 152:

"The extent of disability occasioned by an injury is not capable of exact measurement. The percentage of such disability is a matter to be determined by the Commission in the exercise of its sound discretion, based upon a fair view of all of the circumstances. Its conclusion on this matter is the determination of a question of fact, and is not subject to review by the courts unless palpably contrary to the undisputed evidence."

The Commission in the instant case has made an allowance based upon the evidence and its adopted schedules. So far as this court is able to determine, there was no abuse of discretion in its findings. In such circumstances its award should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

WESTERVELT v. McCULLOUGH.
(Civ. 4403.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 9, 1923.)

Appeal and error ⇨82(3)—Order denying motion to set aside judgment appealable; "special order made after final judgment."

An order, denying a motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, to set aside a judgment and enter a different judgment, is a "special order," made after final judgment, and as such is appealable under section 963.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Order.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas O. Toland, Judge.

Action by Emma J. Westervelt against Nora McCullough. From an order denying defendant's motion to set aside judgment, she appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Walter M. Campbell and Peyton H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William Hazlett and Merton A. Albee, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal, which was taken from an order denying a motion made by defendant in the trial court under section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, a motion in that court to set aside its judgment, amend its conclusions of law, and enter another and different judgment. No appeal has been taken from the judgment. Respondent claims that an order denying a motion to set aside the judgment and to enter another and different judgment is not an appealable order. Hence her motion to dismiss this appeal.

An order denying a motion made under section 663 is unquestionably a special order made after final judgment, and as such is appealable under section 963—unless there be some good reason for holding otherwise. Because in section 663a the Legislature expressly provided that an order granting such a motion may be reviewed on appeal in the same manner as a special order made after final judgment, respondent argues that, under the familiar rule of construction, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," it should be held that the lawmakers did not intend that there should be a right of appeal from an order denying the motion. To support this view respondent cites Modoc Co-operative Ass'n v. Porter, 11 Cal. App. 270, 104 Pac. 710. It is true that certain dicta may be found in the opinion in that case which seem to give color to respondent's contention; but since that case was decided our Supreme Court has stated unequivocally that an order denying a motion made under section 663 is appealable under section 963, as a special order made after final judgment. Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 270, 113 Pac. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50; Condon v. Donohue, 160 Cal. 749, 118 Pac. 113. The rule thus announced is binding here.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

1. Mines and minerals ⇨27(1)—Location according to law has priority over subsequent location.

A location of mineral land in accordance with law, based on a discovery and followed by compliance with the law as to assessment work, has priority over any subsequent location.

2. Mines and minerals ⇨39—Basis of right to possession and ownership of public mineral lands stated.

The right to possession of public mineral land and ultimately to ownership thereof, under a patent from the federal government, rests on discovery of a mineral deposit of such value as would justify a man of ordinary prudence in expending sufficient money for its development, and on performance of the development work required by statute.

3. Mines and minerals ⇨14(1)—Claim to mineral land not sustained in absence of findings as to discovery and performance of assessment work by claimant.

In the absence of findings by the trial court, or abuse of discretion in not finding, that mineral deposits of such value as to justify development were discovered, and the required assessment work done by claimant of mineral land, such claim cannot be sustained.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Findings supported by substantial evidence not disturbed.

The trial court's findings on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal, when supported by substantial evidence, whether or not the appellate court would reach the same conclusion.

Action by J. T. Stockton and another against the Santa Paula Oil Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Hall and Ferard Leicester, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Charles W. Slack, of San Francisco, Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, and Thomas H. Breeze, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. [1] In form this action is a quiet-title suit between adverse claimants to mineral land, and, as is admitted by counsel representing the respective parties hereto, the ultimate question for determination by the trial court was simply which of them was entitled to priority. Plaintiffs claim under an original location made in 1910, while the defendant claims under locations made in 1916. Assuming that plaintiffs' location was made in accordance with the law, based upon a "discovery" and followed by a compliance with the law regulating the performance of the required assessment work after such location, it would result that any subsequent location made by the defendant would necessarily yield to plaintiffs' prior rights.

[2] The right of any claimant, first to the possession of public mineral land, and ultimately to ownership thereof through the medium of a patent therefor issued by the United States government, rests primarily on the discovery of a mineral deposit of such value as would justify a man of ordinary prudence in expending sufficient money for its development, and, secondarily, upon the performance by the claimant of the development work required by the statute. Donnelly v. United States, 228 U. S. 243, 33 Sup. Ct. 449, 57 L. Ed. 820, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 710, and cases there cited; Lindley on Mines (1st Ed.) vol. 2, p. 773.

[3] The only alleged errors committed by the trial court of which complaint is here made consist in findings by the court which it is contended are not supported by the evidence. The first of these has to do with the question of whether or not a discovery was made within the meaning of the statute, and the second relates to the question of the performance of the assessment work required thereunder. It is manifest that the decision of both these questions must be based upon findings of fact made by the court. In the absence of either of such findings in favor of a claimant, assuming no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court, no legal foundation exists to support his claim. In the instant case, so far as those particular issues were concerned, the trial court found:

"That neither the plaintiff, J. T. Stockton, nor any of the other said locators of the said claim 'Flow 4' (the claim in question), ever made any discovery of any gas, petroleum, or other mineral oils on or in the said south half (S. ½) of the south half (S. ½) of the said section eighteen (18), embraced within the exterior boundaries of the said claim 'Flow 4,' or ever made discovery of any mineral, of any kind, of any value, thereon or therein, or ever prosecuted any work of discovery, diligently, or otherwise, thereon or therein; that the alleged discovery by the plaintiff, J. T. Stockton, of valuable deposits of ochre and minerals other than natural gas, petroleum, and other mineral oils, on and in the said last-mentioned land is sham and a subterfuge; that the plaintiff, J. T. Stockton, as the owner of the said claim 'Flow 4,' performed work and made improvements on the said claim 'Flow 4,' as and for purported annual assessment work thereon, during each of the years subsequent to the said location of the said claim 'Flow 4,' and prior to the respective said locations of the said (claims of defendant), but the said purported assessment work and improvements for each of the said last-mentioned years were not of the reasonable value of the sum of $100, and were flimsy in character, were not in good faith, and did not tend to develop the said claim 'Flow 4,' or to facilitate the extraction of any minerals therefrom."

The said findings also contain the following:

"That none of the said last-mentioned land (referring to the claim of plaintiffs) is valuable for, or contains valuable deposits of, ochre, or any minerals other than natural gas, petroleum, and other mineral oils."

[4] The record discloses a substantial conflict in the evidence with reference to each of the said several findings of fact, and under the rule which has been many times announced by the courts of this state, and to which we must adhere, whether from the evidence we would reach the same conclusion or not, the findings of the trial court when supported by substantial evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Some other contentions are made by appellants, especially one to the effect that another finding of the court as to a relocation by plaintiffs of the same claim was invalid by reason of the fact that a homestead entry embracing a part of such claim was filed thereon prior to such relocation, but each of such objections falls within the ruling heretofore announced. There are other findings made by the trial court which support the judgment in favor of the defendant.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be and the same is affirmed.

WEBER v. WILEY B. ALLEN CO. et al.
(Civ. 4631.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 30, 1923.)

1. Master and servant §332(4)—Refusal of instruction as to employer's defense of abandonment of business by agent held error.

In action for injuries from an automobile collision while plaintiff was riding with defendant's agent on alleged business of defendant, where it was defendant's theory that after the alleged business trip was abandoned plaintiff and the employee went on a pleasure trip of their own, during which the collision occurred, it was reversible error to refuse instruction thereon; such theory not having been submitted in any other instruction.

2. Trial §194(16)—Instruction in action by third person against employer for injuries, held to take from jury question of fact.

In action for personal injury from an automobile collision while plaintiff was riding with defendant's agent on alleged business of defendant, an instruction that, if the agent went on a business trip to a named place, then the return trip at the time of the accident was a part of the business trip, took from jury question of whether agent and plaintiff were on a business trip, or whether having started on such a trip, they abandoned it for their own pleasure.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Adolph C. Weber against the Wiley B. Allen Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Reversed.

Rea, Cassin & Caldwell, of San Jose, for appellant.

W. E. Foley and D. T. Jenkins, both of San Jose, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover damages for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, judgment went for the plaintiff, and Wiley B. Allen Company, a corporation, defendant, has appealed.

During the period of time involved in this litigation, the plaintiff was engaged in soliciting life insurance for the New York Life Insurance Company. The Wiley B. Allen Company had a place of business at San Jose, where it was engaged in selling musical instruments, and the defendant W. Austin was the resident manager at San Jose in charge of the business of the defendant corporation. The defendant J. P. Bertlow was the owner of and operating an automobile on the highway leading from Gilroy to San Jose, and, as contended by the plaintiff, he was guilty of such negligence in the operation of his machine that he was partly responsible for the accident.

On June 25, 1921, the plaintiff stated to Mr. Austin that he knew of a man residing in the neighborhood of Morgan Hill, a small town in Santa Clara county 20 miles south of San Jose, who would be interested in purchasing a piano. Thereupon the plaintiff and Mr. Austin arranged for a call on the prospective purchaser. Some time during that evening, variously recited as being between 7:30 and 9 p. m., the plaintiff and Mr. Austin took the automobile belonging to the defendant corporation and started on their trip. Miss Koenig, a friend of the plaintiff, accompanied them. The party drove down the highway to Morgan Hill, and there they turned off on a mountain road and traveled that road a distance of 5 miles or thereabouts, and made three separate calls for the purpose of locating the prospective purchaser. That purchaser, the plaintiff said, was a Portuguese; but he did not recall the name. Neither did he recall the names of the persons on whom he called. At the last place at which the party called, they were informed that the prospective purchaser lived about 4 miles to the south. Thereupon the party stopped their attempt that night to locate the purchaser. Later the party returned up the highway to a place where soft drinks and sandwiches were on sale, and which is referred to in the record as Kinkade's. At that place Austin separated from the plaintiff and his companion, and all of them remained at Kinkade's some time; the exact length of time being differently stated by the witnesses at from 30 minutes, or 45 minutes, or even a longer period. The defendant Austin testified that he had two drinks of wine, and the plaintiff testified that he had no drinks but did have some sandwiches. The defendant Austin testified that a part of his purpose in stopping at Kinkade's was to interview Kinkade on the subject of purchasing a musical instrument. While the party was still at Kinkade's, the automobile of J. P. Bertlow came up. As it came to a stop, Miss Koenig ran out and asked Mr. Bertlow if he was going to San Jose and if he would take her, as she was in a hurry to get there. He asked her in reply how she got out there, and when he learned that she had gone out in another automobile he declined to interfere, but at once drove on up the highway. As he proceeded up the highway, he was traveling at 35 miles, or perhaps 36 or 37 miles per hour, and his machine was traversing the middle line of the highway. When he was so traveling, the automobile driven by the defendant Austin approached from the rear and attempted to pass on the left, and as it did so it was partly off of the highway and in the attempt to right itself it swerved and turned over. In that accident the plaintiff Weber suffered the injuries which are the subject-matter of this suit.

It is conceded by both parties that the de fendant Austin had the right to drive the automobile of the defendant corporation for his own pleasure, or for the business of the corporation, and that the defendant Austin was accustomed at times, with the knowledge of the defendant corporation, to solicit business, after ordinary business hours, and for that purpose to use the automobile belonging to the corporation. However, it was the theory of the defendant corporation that the trip on the evening of June 25th was not for the purpose of interviewing any prospective purchaser of a musical instrument, but was solely for the purpose of the entertainment of the occupants of the machine, and, moreover, that if that contention be not wholly true, nevertheless that when the last call was made on the mountain road near Morgan Hill that the party then abandoned the business of the defendant corporation and started on a frolic of their own.

Many points are made by the appellant, but in view of the conclusion which we have reached concerning two of those points, it will not be necessary to discuss all of the points made by the appellant.

[1] 1. The appellant requested the trial court to give its instruction numbered XV, which is as follows:

"If you believe from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff and the defendant Austin went on the trip on June 25th, and left San Jose for the purpose of attending to business of the Wiley B. Allen Company, a corporation, and for any reason afterwards abandoned that business and went on a pleasure trip or entertainment of their own, and that subsequently the defendant Austin undertook to drive said plaintiff and said lady guest to their respective homes in San Jose, and that he was so engaged at the time of the accident, then I instruct you that he was not, at the time of the accident, engaged within the scope of his employment, and under such circumstances the Wiley B. Allen Company, a corporation, would not be liable for any negligence of his, or for any tort that he might commit."

The trial court refused to give the instruction, and the appellant assigns the refusal as error. We think the appellant is correct in this contention. It will be observed that the instruction is directly in point as to one theory of the defense of the appellant. The same instruction, differently worded, or the same instruction in substance, was not given in any other part of the proceedings. The appellant was therefore deprived of a substantial right which was vital to its defense.

[2] 2. The defendant corporation asked the trial court to give an instruction which it numbered XIV. The trial court added a clause to the end of the instruction (which we have printed in italics), and then gave the instruction as follows:

"If a servant abandons or departs from the business of his master and engages in some manner suggested solely by his own pleasure or convenience, or pursues some object which relates to an end or purpose which may be said to be a servant's individual and exclusive business, and while so negligently commits a tort, the master is not answerable although he was using his master's property, and although the injury could not have been caused without the facilities afforded to the servant by reason of his relations to the master.

"If the said plaintiff and the said defendant Austin, on the evening of June 25th, were on a trip for their own pleasure, or on the business of the plaintiff, and not on the business of the defendant Wiley B. Allen Company, a corporation, and at the time of the accident they were thus engaged, the plaintiff is not entitled to recovery against Wiley B. Allen Company, even though the injuries received by him were due entirely to the negligence and carelessness of the defendant Austin, and the defendant Austin at the time was driving and operating an automobile belonging to the Wiley B. Allen Company, but if you should find that Austin went on the trip to Morgan Hill or vicinity on business of the Wiley B. Allen Company, then I charge you that the return trip at the time of the accident was a part of the business trip of the Company named."

The appellant claims that the language added to the instruction by the trial court had the effect of charging the jury on a question of fact and taking from the jury its power to determine that question of fact. One needs only read the language to see that it did have that effect. The question as to whether the party departed from the master's business at any time during the evening of June 25th was the vital issue in the case as viewed by the appellant. If it did so depart, did it later return to the transaction of the master's business, and, if so, when and where were also vital questions touching the rights of the appellant. When, therefore, the trial court stated to the jury that if the outward trip was on the business of the appellant that, then the return trip was a part of the appellant's business, the trial court clearly took from the jury all power to answer that question. The appellant claims that the question was a question of fact which had been placed in issue by the pleadings and was solely for the determination of the jury. 26 Cyc. 1576; Mechem on Agency, § 1916. The respondent does not cite to us any authorities to the contrary. We know of none. In view of the refusal to give instruction XV, the error in modifying instruction XIV was patently enhanced, and the whole charge, as given to the jury, took from the appellant the one substantial defense which the appellant was attempting to present.

PEOPLE v. MOORE. (Cr. 1016.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Nov. 1, 1923.)

1. Criminal law §1166½(6)—Excusing juror without challenge not prejudicial.

In prosecution for rape, where, in answer to questions on voir dire, juror showed she was subject to challenge for actual bias, and had not the court excused her on its own motion, state would have challenged, and the court would have sustained, excusing her without challenge was without prejudice to defendant.

2. Criminal law §1166½(6)—Where peremptory challenges not exhausted, excusing juror without challenge not prejudicial.

Where the record does not disclose that state exercised its full number or any peremptory challenges, no prejudice is shown by the court's excusing a juror, without challenge, who was subject to challenge for actual bias.

3. Criminal law §1186(4)—Excusing juror without challenge did not deprive defendant of fair trial.

Where evidence showed defendant was guilty of crime charged, and that no other verdict than that of guilty could have been returned, excusing a juror for actual bias, if error, was not, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, ground for reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Arthur Moore was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CURTIS, J. [1] The only error assigned by appellant for a reversal of the judgment herein is the ruling of the court in excusing a juror without any challenge to said juror having been interposed by either party. It is not questioned but what the juror excused possessed all the general qualifications of a juror. Upon her examination, after answering in an equivocal manner a number of the questions propounded to her both by the court and by counsel, she was asked by the court, if the guilt of the defendant was established beyond a reasonable doubt by the evidence and instruction of the court, would she find him guilty, to which question she replied, "I don't know." Whereupon the court, without any challenge being interposed by either side, stated as follows: "I think we better excuse Mrs. Wheaton. You are excused." To which ruling the defendant then and there excepted.

While the practice of the court in excusing the juror is not that which is usually followed by our trial courts and probably not such as our criminal procedure contemplates, we cannot say that the defendant was prejudiced thereby. The answers of the juror to the questions propounded to her clearly showed that she was subject to challenge for actual bias. Undoubtedly had not the court excused her on its own motion, the district attorney would have challenged her, and the court, under the testimony, would have been bound to have sustained the challenge. It is inconceivable that a prosecuting officer would have permitted a juror in the state of mind of this juror to remain on the jury without interposing every challenge at his command. A person who does not know whether he would find the defendant guilty when from the evidence and instruction of the court he has been proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt is not qualified to sit as a juror in any case.

[2] It is further contended that the record does not show whether the court excused the juror peremptorily or for cause, and that, if it was done peremptorily, such action on the part of the court would virtually give to the prosecution an additional challenge above those provided by law. An answer to this contention may be made by calling attention to the fact that the record does not disclose that the prosecution exercised at the trial of defendant its full number or any peremptory challenges.

[3] Aside from the above considerations in favor of sustaining the judgment herein, we are of the opinion that, under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of the state, the judgment should be affirmed, even conceding that the court erred in excusing the juror, Mrs. Wheaton. The defendant was not thereby deprived of a fair trial. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the jury impaneled to try him was not a fair and impartial jury. The evidence shows beyond all question that the defendant was guilty of the crime charged, and that no other verdict than that of guilty could have been returned by the jury under the facts presented to it. After examining the entire record herein, including the evidence, we are of the opinion that, if any error was committed by the court in excusing the juror, such error has not resulted in any miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order denying motion for a new trial are affirmed.

QUATMAN et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF GLENN COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2714.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 24, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 20, 1923.)

1. Judges ⚡42—Interest must be pecuniary to disqualify.

To disqualify a judge under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 1, his interest must be a pecuniary one, either direct or indirect.

2. Judges ⚡42—Ownership of note and account against litigant held to disqualify.

Ownership by a judge of a note given by, and a small account against, defendant in receivership proceedings disqualifies him to act therein.

3. Judges ⚡51(1)—Evidence of collateral oral understanding inadmissible to affect liability upon transfer of note to remove disqualification.

Evidence that a judge, at the time of selling a note and account which he held against a litigant for the purpose of removing a disqualification, stated to the purchaser, "This is your funeral and not mine," held inadmissible in proceeding to prohibit him from acting for the purpose of modifying, qualifying, or limiting the obligation of the parties concerned.

4. Evidence ⚡44(11)—Oral testimony inadmissible as affecting liability on blank indorsement.

Oral testimony is inadmissible to show an agreement between the indorser in blank and the indorsee of a promissory note that the note was to pass without recourse.

5. Judges ⚡55—Transfer without recourse of note of party owned by judge will not remove disqualification.

The indorsement, without recourse, and transfer by a judge of a note due from a corporation for whom a receivership is sought does not remove the disqualification arising from the note, since such transfer divests him of none of the liabilities of vendor of the paper.

6. Bills and notes ⚡280, 296—Liability of indorser without recourse stated.

An indorser without recourse is liable as a vendor, and warrants that the instrument is genuine and in all respects what it purports to be; that he has good title; that all prior parties had capacity to contract; and that he had no knowledge of any fact impairing its validity or rendering it useless.

7. Prohibition ⚡3(5)—Denial of writ unwarranted merely because of remedy by appeal.

Denial of a writ of prohibition, restraining a judge from further proceeding in an action for receivership and other relief, wherein he is disqualified, is unwarranted merely because relief might be had by appeal, as such remedy is neither speedy nor adequate.

Petition by A. H. Quatman and another, for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court of Glenn County, Claude F. Purkitt, Judge thereof. Writ granted.

Joseph E. Blen, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for respondents.

Ware & Ware, of Chico, amici curiæ.

PLUMMER, J. By this proceeding petitioners seek a writ of prohibition restraining respondent Hon. Claude F. Purkitt from further proceeding in a certain action heretofore begun and now pending in Glenn county, entitled H. J. Barceloux, plaintiff, v. Sacramento Valley Realty Company, a corporation, respondent (action No. 3454), on the alleged grounds that the respondent was at the time of the beginning of the said action and ever since has been and now is disqualified to act therein.

It appears from the petition that on or about the 11th day of April, 1923, an action was begun by the said Barceloux against the Sacramento Valley Realty Company, a corporation, praying for the appointment of a receiver and for other appropriate relief; that, at the time of the filing of the complaint by the said Barceloux, the respondent made an order to show cause returnable on the 21st day of April, 1923, directed to defendant Sacramento Valley Realty Company, commanding it to be and appear on said 21st day of April, 1923, to show cause why receiver should not be appointed, and at the same time issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting the Sacramento Valley Realty Company from mortgaging or otherwise disposing of any of its personal property. On the 21st day of April, 1923, the hearing of the order to show cause was continued until the 28th day of April, when a hearing was had and a receiver thereafter appointed.

At the time of the beginning of the action by Barceloux against the Sacramento Valley Realty Company, the respondent Purkitt was the owner and holder of a promissory note dated June 6, 1920, for the sum of $301.60 made, executed and delivered to him by the Sacramento Valley Realty Company, payable, 60 days after date, and also was the owner and holder of an account against said Sacramento Valley Realty Company in the sum of $27.35.

On the 26th day of April, 1923, as admitted by the proceedings, for the sole purpose of removing any disqualification of the judge, owing to his being a creditor of the corporation, if in fact such disqualification existed, the plaintiff Barceloux caused one Leo A. Mitchell to purchase the said promissory note and account from the respondent Purkitt; the plaintiff Barceloux furnishing the money with which to make such purchase. Thereupon the respondent indorsed said promissory note in the following words: "Pay to Leo A. Mitchell or order. [Signed] Claude F. Purkitt"—and at the same time assigned and transferred to the said Mitchell all his interest in the account hereinbefore referred to. Thereafter and on or about the 4th day of September, 1923, and three days before the hearing of the petition for the writ of prohibition herein in this court, there were added to the indorsement on the promissory note the additional words "without recourse."

Upon this state of the facts it is insisted by the petitioners that the respondent is disqualified under the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, for the reason that the respondent at all times during the proceedings had and taken in the case of Barceloux v. Sacramento Valley Realty Co. was a party interested, in that at the time of the filing of the complaint and issuance of the temporary restraining order and order to show cause he was a creditor of the defendant in the action begun by the plaintiff Barceloux, and that he was an indorser on the note issued by the Sacramento Valley Realty Company, and liable as such until on or about the 4th day of September, when the words "without resource" were added to the indorsement of the promissory note theretofore indorsed by the said respondent, and that under the law his liability on said note is still such as to constitute him a party in interest.

[1] The law is well settled that in order to disqualify a judge under the first subdivision of section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, the interest must be a pecuniary one, either direct or indirect, or, as said in the case of Lassen Irrigation Co. v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 357, 90 Pac. 709, the interest which will disqualify a judge under the provisions of this section "is a property or personal interest, an interest in the event of the suit, in the judgment which may be rendered," and not a mere sentimental interest.

It is insisted by counsel for respondent that no disqualification ever existed, and that if any disqualification ever did exist the indorsement of the note and assignment of the account held by the learned judge against the Sacramento Valley Realty Company removed the same.

[2] That such disqualification, save and except as to the formal matters of procedure specified in section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, existed on the part of respondent at the time of the beginning of the action by Barceloux v. Sacramento Valley Realty Co., of which company the respondent was then and there a creditor, scarcely appears to be a debatable question. In the case of Adams v. Minor, 121 Cal. 372, 53 Pac. 815, an action was pending involving the value of certain bonds issued by the irrigation district. Some of these bonds were held by a bank in which the Hon. Wm. O. Minor, judge of the superior court of Stanislaus county, was a stockholder. The court held the judge was disqualified irrespective of the pecuniary value of the stock held by him, and also further held that a disposal of the stock after he had heard the evidence did not remove the disqualification so as to qualify him to render judgment therein. In the case of Regents of University of California v. Turner, 159 Cal. 541, 114 Pac. 842, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1162, it is pointed out that section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, disqualifies a judge from acting in all cases where he is a creditor of one of the parties to the action save and except as that disqualification is limited and held not to apply to certain probate proceedings under section 1495, Code of Civil Procedure. Thus in all other cases except those specially provided for, the existence of the relation of debtor or creditor to one of the parties in the action necessarily disqualified any judge occupying such relation. To the same effect is the case of Johnson v. German American Insurance Co., 150 Cal. 336, 88 Pac. 985.

Several cases have been called to the attention of the court where the disqualification has been removed after the beginning of the action, and thereafter the disqualification was held to no longer exist. It does not appear, however, in the cases cited, that the courts are governed and controlled by the same statutory provisions as exist in this state. It does appear, however, in some of the cases, that the claim, account, or note held by the presiding judge against one of the parties and for which it was said to disqualify him from acting therein, had been actually paid and thus put out of existence and not merely transferred or assigned to other persons. In the case at bar the note and account are still in existence, the receiver appointed to take charge of the property is authorized to collect the assets of the company and discharge its indebtedness. Upon the conclusion of the receiver's duties it would be necessary for him to render an account to the court appointing him of all and singular the acts done and performed by him under such authorization which would necessarily include passing upon by the court of the two items hereinbefore referred to, to wit, the note indorsed to Mitchell under the circumstances set out and also the account assigned to him. Whatever language may be used in describing the transaction, it nevertheless is true that it is the duty of the court to pass upon and determine the validity of every note, claim, or account paid by the receiver, and in this manner the respondent would be called upon to pass upon the genuineness of the note and account formerly assigned and transferred by him.

[3, 4] Upon the hearing of this petition there was some evidence to the effect that at the time of the assignment of the account and indorsement of the note by the respondent to Mitchell, the respondent stated to

Mitchell in substance to the effect "that this is your funeral and not mine." Though admitted without objection, such oral testimony is clearly inadmissible and cannot be given any weight as to modifying, qualifying, or limiting the obligation of the parties concerned. The authorities are all to the effect that in the case of a blank indorsement or an indorsement without limitation, qualification, or restriction, oral testimony is inadmissible to show any agreement between the indorser and the indorsee of a promissory note, that the note was to pass without recourse; the effect of such evidence would be to controvert the unambiguous terms of the contract as evidenced by the written indorsement. Aronson v. Nurenberg, 218 Mass. 376, 105 N. E. 1056; Security National Bank v. Pulver, 131 Minn. 454, 155 N. W. 641. Also cases cited in notes 25 and 26 of section 3119, Civ. Code, Kerr's Cyc. Codes.

[5, 6] Irrespective of whether such testimony is admissible, did the adding of the words "without recourse" in the indorsement on the promissory note referred to on the 4th day of September, 1923, remove the disqualification of the Honorable Claude F. Purkitt to further proceed in the case of Barceloux v. Sacramento Valley Realty Company? We think not. The authorities are practically unanimous to the effect that it does not follow that one who exempts himself from liability as an indorser by using the expression "without recourse" or its equivalent stands free from all obligation in respect to the indorsement. His undertaking, notwithstanding the restricted indorsement, may be a substantial one, for it seems clear that he divests himself of none of the liabilities of the vendor of the paper. In other words—

"An indorsement 'without recourse' still leaves the indorser liable as a vendor, with the following warranties that the instrument is genuine and in all respects what it purports to be; that the indorser has a good title to it; that all prior parties had capacity to contract; and that the indorser has no knowledge of any fact which would impair the validity of the instrument or render it valueless; and under such an indorsement the party is not relieved from liability in case the instrument or any of the signatures or indorsements thereon are not genuine or that the indorser is not the rightful and legal holder thereof."

In other words, one who makes an indorsement of a promissory note "without recourse" still stands sponsor for the integrity and validity of the instrument indorsed by him and is pecuniarily responsible for any loss occurring to a subsequent holder by reason of any such defect in the indorsed instrument. The cases are so numerous to this effect that citation is unnecessary. They are, however, collated in a note to the case of Bank of Sampson v. Hatcher, 134 Am. St. Rep. beginning at page 995.

[7] It is further insisted on the part of respondent that the writ of prohibition should not issue herein for the reason that other remedies exist. Such remedies, however, do not appear to the court to be speedy or adequate. Where a judge is disqualified to act in any proceeding or cause, the disability necessarily enters into all orders and decisions made by him other than those specially excepted and provided for in the Codes, and to refuse the writ on the ground that a remedy might be had in another manner would be to permit the trial to proceed to a final conclusion by the disqualified judge and then set aside the proceedings as void ab initio. Where a receiver has been appointed to take charge of property, such a course would not be either speedy or adequate but would in all probability lead to an entire dissipation or at least material loss of property. The cases of Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District v. Superior Court of Tulare County, 182 Cal. 315, 187 Pac. 1056, and Consolidated Adjustment Co. of California v. Superior Court of Sonoma County, 189 Cal. 92, 207 Pac. 552, appear to be conclusive answers to this contention. In both those cases the writ was granted, irrespective of the fact that the same ends might have been accomplished by the long and tedious course of appeal. In the Strathmore Case the same question was presented as is presented here, to wit, the disqualification of the trial judge, and it was there held that the interests of the judge rendered him disqualified, even though that pecuniary interest was small. In that case, as in this, it is not a question of whether the learned trial judge would or would not act impartially. A legal question only is presented. For the reasons given we think the Honorable Claude F. Purkitt was, during all the times mentioned herein, disqualified, and is still disqualified to hear and determine any matters in the case of Barceloux v. Sacramento Valley Realty Company, and this irrespective of whether, under the case of Adams v. Minor, supra, it is possible in this state to remove a disqualification. In other words, we do not express any opinion as to whether the Adams Case renders the removal of the disqualification after the beginning of an action insufficient to permit a once disqualified judge to thereafter act.

It is hereby ordered that the writ of prohibition as prayed for against the Hon. Claude F. Purkitt be, and the same is hereby, granted.

DISHIAN v. KISHISHIAN. (Civ. 2685.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 17, 1923.)

Vendor and purchaser — 305—Obligation of purchaser to pay note maturing after termination of contract by vendor held terminated.

Where vendor terminated a contract for the sale of real property on purchaser's default prior to the maturity of a note given as part of the purchase price and transferred to innocent holder, the obligation of the purchaser to pay ceased, except to an innocent holder for value, and vendor having taken reassignment of the note after maturity could not enforce it, though contract provided for forfeiture of payments.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Haig Dishian against Dick Kishishian. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Earl A. Bagby, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Frank Lamberson, of Visalia, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff sued to recover the amount of a promissory note given him by defendant. The defendant was given judgment for costs, and plaintiff appeals.

February 16, 1921, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement by the terms of which the former agreed to sell certain real property to the latter for the sum of $10,250, as follows: "$1,000 upon the execution of this agreement, the sum of $2,000 on or before November 21, 1921, the payment of which shall be represented by a promissory note in the words and figures following:" Then follows a copy of the promissory note. The other deferred payments are not material here. The agreement made time of its essence and provided that upon failure of the defendant to perform any of the terms and conditions thereof then the plaintiff might, "at his option, declare this agreement to be at an end and to be null and void and all payments theretofore made by the second party shall be retained by the first party as further consideration for the execution of this agreement and as compensation to the first party for the occupancy of the real property hereinbefore described." The agreement provided that the defendant was to have immediate possession of the premises and to "continue such possession until the termination of this agreement by any default of the second party as hereinbefore provided, and upon such termination the second party will yield peaceable possession of said real property unto the first party." The defendant paid the $1,000, and gave his promissory note, payable November 21, 1921, as provided in the agreement, and was given possession of the premises.

For some default of defendant, not shown by the record, the plaintiff seems to have canceled the agreement, and, on the 4th day of November, 1921, brought an action of ejectment against defendant to recover the premises. The defendant duly filed his answer in that action, setting up the agreement and alleging that he had performed all the covenants thereof and was ready, able, and willing to pay said promissory note. January 28, 1922, plaintiff was given judgment restoring him to the possession of the premises.

Immediately after the execution of the promissory note plaintiff indorsed and assigned the same to one Davidian, who took the same as an innocent purchaser for value. December 12, 1921, Davidian commenced an action against plaintiff and defendant herein for the amount due on the note. January 16, 1922, plaintiff herein made a settlement with Davidian and took a reassignment of the note. Thereafter this action was commenced on the 30th day of January, 1922.

The judgment herein for defendant was manifestly proper. Had the plaintiff received promissory notes for all deferred payments, under the same conditions as the note in suit was received, and had immediately transferred them to innocent purchasers and then had declared the defendant's rights in the premises forfeited before the maturity of any one of such notes, by reason of some default on defendant's part, it would be a fraud against defendant to permit plaintiff to take a reassignment of the notes and collect the whole purchase price. The only difference between such conduct and that here involved is in the extent of the fraud.

The agreement and the promissory note are to be considered together as parts of one agreement. McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 455, 31 Pac. 558. When plaintiff elected to declare the agreement to be at an end and brought an action to recover possession of the premises prior to the time when the note became due, defendant's obligation to pay the amount of the note to plaintiff ceased, and payment thereof could be enforced only by an innocent holder for value. Glassell v. Coleman, 94 Cal. 260, 29 Pac. 508. Under the express terms of the agreement the plaintiff, on electing to terminate the contract, had the right to retain the payments theretofore made on the purchase price of the land, but he did not have the right thereafter to collect payments falling due after the time of such termination, and it was his duty to return to defendant the promissory note which, by its terms, was made payable at a time subsequent to such termination. His position is in no wise strengthened by his failure to discharge this duty. Had plaintiff taken a reassignment of the note before maturity and prior to the termination of the agreement, his rights would have been exactly what they would have been if the note had never been assigned, and the time of payment provided for in the note, which constituted one of the terms of the agreement, being subsequent to the termination of the contract, the obligation of defendant to make such payment would have ceased at the same time that the agreement came to an end. Plaintiff certainly acquired no greater right by the reassignment after maturity of the note than if it had been made before maturity.

The judgment is affirmed.

WALLACE v. McINTOSH. (Civ. 4673.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 15, 1923.)

Brokers — Successive documents construed as part of same transaction in determining time for performing services.

In action for commission for sale of leases of mining property, where defendant, on August 5th, executed option to plaintiff to sell mines, for which plaintiff was to receive commission, and on same date and at practically same time defendant executed another agreement certifying that he had option and lease on the mines, and was in possession, and that plaintiff could have 15 days in which to examine the property and close deal, in construing the documents together as part of the same transaction there was no error.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Edgar T. Wallace against Colin McIntosh. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Solinsky and Edw. R. Solinsky, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. C. Sharpsteen, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against him in an action brought to recover the sum of $5,000, commissions alleged to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff for the sale of certain leases of mining property in the state of Oregon.

The argument upon the appeal is that the evidence does not justify the judgment. An examination of the transcript on appeal discloses facts amply justifying the inference drawn by the trial court. The defendant was the owner of certain leases of mining property, and on August 5, 1920, wrote to the plaintiff, stating:

"In case you sell my option on Old Channel Mines for $30,000, I will pay you $5,000 commission for making sale—provided it is a cash sale—in other words, I want $25,000 cash for the lease and option."

On the same date, and practically at the same time, defendant executed another agreement, which was properly construed by the trial court as inseparable from the first one quoted, which second agreement reads as follows:

"This is to certify that I have an option and lease on what is known as the Old Channel Mines in Josephine county, Oregon—Lease to expire May 26th, 1924. Purchase price of property under my option $90,000—may be a few hundred more. I am now in possession of this property. I will take $30,000 for my option and lease—to reimburse me for my outlay on the property. You can have fifteen days in which to examine said property and close the deal if you desire to purchase the lease."

The trial court was justified, under the testimony appearing in the record, in construing, as it did, these two documents together as part of the same transaction. Such a construction limited the time in which plaintiff could earn the $5,000 commission to 15 days. Support is lent to such a view of the actual contract between the parties by their subsequent dealings, evidence of which was presented to the trial court. Plaintiff brought a prospective purchaser to the property, but no sale was concluded during the 15 days allowed for the same. Thereafter, on September 10, 1920, the plaintiff and defendant signed another agreement regarding the property by which, upon a consideration of $500 paid by the plaintiff, defendant granted to him an option to purchase the lease—

"for a period of ten days from date, with the further understanding that an additional sum of fourteen thousand five hundred dollars shall be paid to me on or before Sept. 20, 1920, and a further understanding that the sum of fifteen thousand dollars in addition to the above sum shall be paid to me on or before December 20, 1920, making a sum total of thirty thousand dollars for said lease. It is fully understood that if the payments are not made as stipulated above, then the option shall become void, and of no force and effect, and the sum of $500 above mentioned shall be forfeited. Time is the essence of this option."

The option given to the plaintiff by the above agreement was forfeited because of his failure to make the payment of $14,500 due on September 20th. Later plaintiff found another prospective purchaser, and on November 3, 1920, succeeded in obtaining from the defendant the following agreement:

"I hereby make you the following proposition: If you advance a sufficient sum, say between $3,000 and $5,000 to start operations, etc., on what is commonly known as the Old Channel Mines in Josephine County, Oregon, I will give to you an option to purchase my lease on the said property for a period to extend to Dec. 21, 1920, for the sum of $30,000 cash, out of which sum I will pay to Robert J. Pringle, the sum of $7,500 cash for the quarter interest which he is entitled to but is not on record. You are to be refunded the amount advanced by you from the first clean-up provided you do not dispose of the property. In case you do dispose of the property, you must look to the purchaser for the payment of the amount advanced by you. An acceptance of this proposition shall be considered as a contract between us."

Under this agreement plaintiff and one Holman started to work upon the mine and advanced money to the defendant and on November 8, 1920, another agreement was entered into between Holman and plaintiff as purchasers and defendant, providing for a sale of the lease upon the payment of $6,500 upon the date of the signing of the agreement and installment payments thereafter. Various other details of the transaction were provided for by the writing and this agreement was fully performed by the parties. It did not provide for the payment of any commission to plaintiff and he appears therein as one of the purchasers at a price of $30,000.

From the above statement of facts it is not only evident that the judgment was justified, but it is apparent that no other judgment could have been reached. The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FRANKOVICH et al. (Cr. 719.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1923.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1023(8)—Order denying a motion for an arrest of judgment not appealable.

No appeal lies from an order denying a motion for an arrest of judgment, the points raised by a motion in arrest of judgment being reviewable on an appeal from the judgment.

2. Statutes $\S$ 51—Statute adopting by reference provisions of federal law not violative of Constitution.

The Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) adopting by reference all the penal provisions of the law enacted by Congress (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, $\S$ 10138½ et seq.) for the enforcement of Const. U. S. Amendment 18 is not violative of Const. art. 4, $\S$ 24, providing that no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title, etc., that provision referring only to the revision or amendment of some law already enacted.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 970(1)—Indictment and Information $\S$ 196(1)—Defects in information other than failure to state a public offense waived by failure to demur.

Defects in the information under Pen. Code, $\S\S$ 950-952, other than failure to state a public offense, were waived by failure to demur, and not available on motion in arrest of judgment.

4. Indictment and Information $\S$ 110(31)—Information in language of statute for maintaining public nuisance held sufficient.

An information, charging the maintaining of a nuisance, in substantially the language of Volstead Act, $\S$ 21 (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, $\S$ 10138½jj), as adopted by the Wright Act, and stating the acts constituting the offense in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, as provided in Pen. Code, $\S$ 950, subd. 2, is sufficient.

5. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 236(9)—Evidence held to sustain verdict for maintaining nuisance.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a verdict of maintaining a nuisance, as defined by Volstead Act, $\S$ 21 (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, $\S$ 10138½jj), as adopted by the Wright Act.

6. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 169—That bartender had no interest in business of selling liquor immaterial as to his guilt.

Where bartender sold and dispensed intoxicating liquors at his employer's place of business, though he had no interest in the business other than as an employee, he was guilty of maintaining a public nuisance, in view of Pen. Code, $\S$ 31, making an aider and abettor a principal in the offense committed.

7. Criminal law $\S$ 371(10)—Evidence that defendant sold liquor prior to time alleged in information held admissible.

In a prosecution for maintaining a public nuisance for sale of intoxicating liquors, evidence that defendant sold liquor prior to the time alleged in the information was admissible to show the character of the place and the purpose of defendant.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 371(10)—Testimony that defendant transported whisky admissible in prosecution for maintaining public nuisance.

In a prosecution for maintaining a public nuisance, testimony that witness saw a quantity of liquor in defendant's car, between the dates charged in the information, though showing another crime, was competent to show that defendant intended to sell the liquor at his place of business, where he had been driving towards his place of business until arrested by officers, and to show a disposition on part of defendant to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors, this circumstance being corroborative of other testimony.

9. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 131 — If defendant maintained or aided and abetted in maintaining nuisance he was guilty regardless of intent.

In a prosecution for maintaining a public nuisance, all that was necessary to support a verdict of guilty against any defendant was that such defendant maintained, or aided and abetted in maintaining, the nuisance, and that intoxicating liquor was sold therein, intent being immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Steve Frankovich, Martin Gutenich, and William White were indicted for maintaining a common nuisance, as defined by the Volstead Act, § 21, as adopted by the Wright Act. Steve Frankovich and William White were convicted, and they appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 213 Pac. 39.

J. Logan Beamer, of Eureka, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The district attorney of Humboldt county filed in the superior court of said county an information accusing the defendants of the crime of maintaining a common nuisance, as said offense is defined by section 21 of the Volstead Act, as adopted by the so-called Wright Act, enacted by the Legislature, and later approved by the people of California under the power of referendum, for the purpose of enforcing within the limits of said state the mandates of the Eighteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. The defendants Frankovich and White were convicted, and the defendant Gutenich was acquitted by the jury of the crime so charged. Frankovich and White have removed the case to this court by an appeal from the judgment and the order denying them a new trial. They also make an attempt to appeal from the order denying their motion for an arrest of judgment.

[1] As has repeatedly been pointed out in the decisions, there is no authority for an appeal from the last-mentioned order, the points raised by a motion in arrest of judgment being reviewable on an appeal from the judgment.

The asserted failure of the information to state a public offense, alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, and alleged errors in the court's rulings upon the question of the admissibility of certain testimony and in the giving and refusing to give certain instructions, constitute the general grounds upon which a reversal is urged.

[2] 1. The contention first made as to the alleged insufficiency of the information to state a public offense is grounded upon the proposition that there is no law in this state specifically denouncing as a common or criminal nuisance the act of maintaining a place or house, or building, etc., where intoxicating liquor is manufactured, sold, kept, or bartered, etc. The specific contention is, in effect, that the Legislature, in enacting the so-called Wright Act, violated the mandate of section 24 of article 4 of our state Constitution, in that by said act it merely adopted by reference all the penal provisions of the law enacted by Congress for the enforcement of the terms of the Eighteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. The section of the state Constitution referred to reads:

"No law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the act revised or section amended shall be re-enacted and published at length as revised or amended."

In the recent case of Ex parte Burke, 212 Pac. 193, the Supreme Court had before it the precise question now before us. In fact, the law involved in that case was the Wright Act, and the attack launched against it therein was upon exactly the same grounds as those upon which the validity of said act is questioned herein. The Supreme Court held that the act was not obnoxious to the objection that the method of its enactment was contrary to section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution of this state, saying, among other things, that that provision of the Constitution "refers only to the revision or amendment of some law already enacted by our state Legislature, and has no reference to the enactment of a new provision. The principle that laws may be enacted in that fashion," proceeds the court, "is well established. In People v. Whipple, 47 Cal. 592, it was held that it was proper for the Legislature, in creating an office, to define the duties of the incumbent by reference to an existing statute, and to provide that those duties shall be the same as those required by the act referred to. The principle is that such legislation may consist in readopting by its title the provisions of another act adopted by another state or by the United States."

[3, 4] It is further contended that the information is bad because it does not conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code. There was no demurrer to the information, but the objections challenging the sufficiency of the information were raised by the motion in arrest of judgment. Except in so far as the said motion may involve an attack upon the information on the ground that it does not state a public offense (section 950, subd. 2, Pen. Code), any defects therein were waived by the failure to demur. We think, however, that the information, with the requisite clearness and directness, charges the offense sought to be therein stated. It is substantially in the language of the section of the Wright Act or Volstead Act (section 21) upon which it is founded (see Fed. Stats. Anno. 2d Ed. 1919 Supp. p. 212, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, § 10138½jj), and involves a statement of the acts constituting the offense denounced by said section "in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended"

(section 950, subd. 2, Pen. Code). No more is required of a criminal pleading than that "it be direct and certain, and allege all the acts and facts which the Legislature has said shall constitute the offense charged." People v. Fowler, 88 Cal. 136, 138, 25 Pac. 1110. No language could be added to section 21 of the Volstead Act, adopted by the Wright Act, which would render its definition of the crime of maintaining a common nuisance clearer or more direct, and hence the general rule that it is sufficient if a crime be stated in an information or indictment in substantial agreement with the language of the statute applies here.

[5] 2. The contention that the verdict is devoid of sufficient evidentiary support to uphold it is without merit. The information alleges that the defendants, "on or about the 1st day of February, 1923, and on divers other dates between said 1st day of February, 1923, and the 22d day of March, 1923," did " * * * maintain a common nuisance, to wit, a room, building and place, at No. 238 Second street, in the city of Eureka, said county and state, where intoxicating liquor, to wit, whisky and brandy, was kept, sold, and bartered," etc. The defendant Frankovich admitted that he was the owner of the business—ostensibly that of dispensing "soft drinks"—carried on at 238 Second street, in the city of Eureka, and the lessee of said place, and that he had been such owner and lessee and conducted said business continuously from some date in the month of June, 1922, down to the date upon which the information herein was filed, to wit, April 17, 1923; that the defendant White, during the months of January, February, and March, 1923, was employed by him as a barkeeper at said place, and during all of said time worked therein in that capacity. Some eight or ten witnesses—most of them in the employ of the district attorney and engaged in the investigation of "bootlegging" and the apprehension of "bootleggers" prosecuting their illicit activities in Humboldt county and the city of Eureka—positively testified that on many different occasions in the months of January, February, and March, 1923, and prior to the date of the filing of the information herein, they purchased, were served with, and drank whisky and "Jackass" brandy in the said place; that the defendant White, so some of these witnesses declared, waited on and served them with intoxicating liquors on some of the occasions referred to; that the price paid by them for the liquor so sold and served to them was 25 cents a drink. These witnesses generally visited the place and purchased the liquor in pairs—on some of the occasions more than two would appear together in the saloon and obtain intoxicating liquor there. Corroborative of the testimony of these witnesses was the fact that the room in which intoxicating liquors were dispensed had been arranged with the evident purpose of evading detection by the public authorities of the unlawful traffic, or so that it could be carried on with as little probability or likelihood of detection as possible. The testimony shows that the main room, or the room into which customers or other persons ordinarily entered the place from the street or sidewalk, and the "back room," or the room in which the prohibited liquors were kept and sold, were divided by a partition. There was a door between the rooms, and to the latch thereof was attached a string which was long enough to extend to a point behind the bar. This string could be so manipulated by the man behind the bar "as to cause the door to open." Two "peepholes" were in the wall or partition, and through them the barkeeper could look (and it was shown he was often seen to look) into the main room and so ascertain the identity of the persons who had entered therein from the street or sidewalk. Manifestly, an inference which might reasonably be deduced from such an arrangement of the place, when considered in connection with the other facts, was that the defendant Frankovich deliberately planned preparations for the surreptitious prosecution of bootlegging activities in his "soft-drink" establishment. But, regardless of the probative value of these physical facts, or the weight attached to them by the jury, it is plainly true that the positive testimony of the witnesses for the state that intoxicating liquors were sold and served to them on the occasions mentioned by them at Frankovich's place of business affords ample support to the verdict.

[6] It is vigorously urged, however, that, even if the verdict is sufficiently buttressed as to the defendant Frankovich, there is a palpable insufficiency of proof of the guilt of the defendant White of the crime charged. This proposition seems to be inspired by the fact that the evidence, without conflict, shows that White was not an owner or part owner of the establishment, or, in other words, shows that said defendant had no interest of any kind or character in the business or the place where it was maintained. The argument from this hypothesis is that, unless it be true or is shown that a party is interested as an owner in the unlawful business, he cannot justly or legally be convicted under the statute of the crime here charged, notwithstanding that, as an employee, he may have assisted the owner in conducting the business of selling the contraband liquors, or in the doing of the acts constituting the crime here charged. The proposition cannot be sustained upon any consideration either of logic or the law of this state. The established rule in this state is that any person who aids and abets in the commission of a crime, whether it be a felony or misdemeanor, is a principal in the crime so committed. Pen. Code, § 31. In this case there is, as seen, positive evidence that White personally, in his capacity of barkeeper for Frankovich, during the period of time or between the dates mentioned in the information, sold and served intoxicating liquors at No. 238 Second street, the place of business of the latter. This conduct brought him as clearly within the terms of section 31 of the Penal Code as would the act or acts of a party in aiding and abetting in the commission of any other offense known to the law.

[7, 8] 3. There are but two of the rulings affecting the question of the legal propriety of certain testimony which merit special attention herein. The first of these assignments involves the objection that error was committed by the allowance of testimony showing sales of intoxicating liquor made by the defendants at 238 Second street prior to the period of time during which the information alleges that the defendants committed the acts constituting the crime charged. The testimony was admissible "not for the purpose of proving another and distinct offense from that charged, but to show the character of the place and the purpose of the defendant." People v. Pera, 36 Cal. App. 292, 302, 171 Pac. 1091, 1095; People v. Macy, 43 Cal. App. 479, 483, 184 Pac. 1008. See, also, People v. Cavallini, 29 Cal. App. 526, 531, 156 Pac. 73; Lawson et al. v. State, 20 Ala. 65, 56 Am. Dec. 182; State v. Snover, 64 N. J. Law, 65, 44 Atl. 850. The second assignment under the present head arises out of the testimony of the state's witness McKay that on the 9th day of February, 1923, he met the defendant Frankovich in his auto near the courthouse, in Eureka, and that at that time the said defendant had in his car several jugs and small barrels containing intoxicating liquor. The objection to this testimony was and is that it revealed an entirely different crime from the one charged, and for that reason was irrelevant to this case and prejudicial to the defendants. It appears that on the 9th of February, and a short time prior to the appearance of said defendant near the courthouse, an attaché of the district attorney's office met Frankovich in his automobile on a country road while the latter was driving towards and approaching Eureka; that the officer stopped Frankovich and discovered in his auto the 35 gallons of liquor referred to by the witness, McKay; that the officer thereupon took the defendant into custody and to the justice's court, at the county courthouse, for the purpose of charging him with the crime of having in his possession intoxicating liquors; that it was at this time and place that the witness McKay saw the said defendant and also the vessels containing the thirty-five gallons of liquor in his car. The testimony, in so far at least as Frankovich was concerned, was proper. The circumstance to which it related occurred between the 1st of February and the 22d of March, 1923, which embraced the period of time during which the defendants were accused of committing the acts constituting the crime charged in the information. It tended to show, or, at any rate, the jury could well have so inferred therefrom, that Frankovich, when intercepted on the road by the officer, intended to convey the liquor to his place at 238 Second street and there keep or sell it. It was not made to appear that there was any other place in Eureka to which he could have taken or intended to take the liquor. Moreover, under the cases above cited, it was admissible for the purpose of showing the disposition of Frankovich to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and this would be a circumstance corroborative of the testimony showing that he did have in his possession and was engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors at 238 Second street during the times mentioned in the information.

[9] 4. There are too many specifications of error in the giving and the refusal to give certain instructions to justify an attempt to give each special notice herein. Indeed, we perceive no necessity for doing so. There is, however, one of the given instructions of which the defendants complain, contending that it involves a misstatement of the law, the objection to which will be specially considered. It is to the effect that intent to commit the crime charged in the information is not essential to the consummation thereof; that "all you are required to find, to reach a verdict of guilty against any defendant, is that such defendant at the time and place charged in the information maintained or aided and abetted in maintaining the place described in the information and that intoxicating liquor was either kept or sold therein." The instruction, in so far as it involves the statement of a legal proposition, and as applied to the class of cases to which the instant case belongs, is invulnerable. People v. Pera, 36 Cal. App. 292, 304, 171 Pac. 1091; People v. Tomasovich, 56 Cal. App. 520, 532, 206 Pac. 119; Commonwealth v. Holstine, 132 Pa. 357, 19 Atl. 273.

Some of the other given instructions are assailed on the ground that there is no law in California affording a basis for the charge set forth in the information. As shown, the same proposition constituted the foundation for the attack against the information first hereinabove considered, and, as seen, we held that it is untenable. The complaint against the action of the court in disallowing a number of instructions preferred by the defendants it is deemed unnecessary to specially consider herein. It is enough to say that the court's charge to the jury contains a full and correct statement of every principle of law applicable to the issues of the case, and covers every pertinent principle which the defendants sought to have stated to the jury in the instructions submitted by them and rejected by the court.

The judgment and the order as to each of the appealing defendants are affirmed.

Municipal corporations — 706(5)—Findings of negligent operation of automobile sustained.

Evidence held to sustain findings of the trial court as to the negligent operation of an automobile at a street intersection.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by W. R. Emerick against O. L. Johnson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Joseph J. Bullock, of Redwood City, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against him in an action to recover for damage caused to plaintiff's automobile by a collision between it and defendant's automobile at a street intersection in South San Francisco.

As appellant states the appeal involves only a question of fact, it being his contention that the evidence fails to show negligence on the part of the defendant and shows negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

The case was tried without a jury and the court made the following pertinent findings of fact: That on February 7, 1921, in the city of South San Francisco, county of San Mateo, state of California, plaintiff was the owner of and was operating a certain automobile in a careful and prudent manner and at a lawful rate of speed along Miller street and was driving thereon in a general southeasterly direction and on the right-hand side of said street and toward the intersection of said Miller street with Linden avenue, another public street in said city; that about the same time defendant was operating his automobile in a careless and reckless manner and at an unlawful rate of speed along said Linden avenue, proceeding in a general northwesterly direction thereon and toward the said point of intersection of said street or avenue with said Miller street; that as plaintiff in his automobile reached the said point of intersection of said two streets, defendant in his automobile was then on said Linden avenue and approaching said point of intersection from the right of plaintiff, and said defendant was then and there further from said point of intersection than was plaintiff. The court further finds that when the plaintiff had reached a point on said crossing an intersection beyond the center of said intersection, said defendant carelessly, negligently, recklessly, and unlawfully attempted to pass in front of plaintiff's automobile, and by reason of said recklessness and carelessness of defendant in so attempting to pass in front of said automobile of plaintiff, plaintiff's automobile collided with the automobile of the defendant, injuring and damaging plaintiff's automobile.

These findings are conclusive in this court if they are supported by any evidence in the record, and while the appellant makes a strong case by presenting excerpts from the record, an examination of the transcript discloses the following testimony by plaintiff:

"A. Yes, I had come from my residence, which is over in this direction. Q. Come on to Miller avenue? A. Yes, came up to here and came along Miller avenue (pointing). Q. Indicate with the chalk. A. This would be the center street here, and as I proceeded along here there was a car down here somewhere (indicating). Q. When you were proceeding along here and were close to the intersection, was this car quite a distance down? A. Yes, sir; it was. * * * Q. As you got close to the corner, you observed a car some distance down? A. Down the street, yes. Q. Now tell me, as you approached the intersection of the two streets known and designated one as Miller avenue and the other designated as Linden avenue, were you or were you not closer to that intersection than the car which was coming on Linden avenue and traveling in a northerly direction? (There was an objection to this question, and the court suggested that the witness indicate on the blackboard the positions of the automobiles.) A. I was just about even with the sidewalk here (pointing). Q. As you indicate on the map? A. Yes, sir; when I first observed this other machine—this would be my car traveling in this direction here (pointing). Q. That is where you were when you first observed it? A. Yes, sir. Q. Your answer is that you were about even with the curb line, is that it? A. Just about. Q. And where, will you kindly indicate on the diagram, will you say the car of the defendant was at that time? A. I would say it was probably 200 feet. Q. Say about 200 feet? A. He was. Q. Do you mean 200 feet from the intersection? A. Yes, from the sidewalk line. Q. From the sidewalk line of what street? A. Of Linden avenue—that must be Linden. Q. No, that is not Linden. A. Miller avenue. Q. About 200 feet from the sidewalk line of Miller avenue, is that right? A. Just an approximate estimate."

Plaintiff testified that when he observed the defendant's automobile in the distance, plaintiff was traveling about 15 miles an hour; that he proceeded along in the usual manner; that he traveled straight ahead until he saw the defendant's automobile swing in front of him at a place indicated on the map before the trial court; that plaintiff's car had reached a point 7 feet and 1 inch from the curb line of Linden avenue when the collision occurred; that the rear of his car had passed the center of the crossing when the collision occurred.

The above-quoted testimony is sufficient to support the findings made by the trial court, and it also indicates that the court had before it a map or diagram illustrating the testimony of the witness. This diagram not being before us, we must assume that it lent aid to the findings made by the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF VALLEJO v. BURRILL.
(Civ. 2586.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 15, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 12, 1924.)

1. Waters and water courses ⚡157—Evidence held to show city entered premises to lay pipe line as licensee.

In city's action to recover possession of portion of unused pipe line on defendant's land, evidence held sufficient to show that the city did not enter such land to lay its pipe line as a trespasser, but entered at least as a licensee for consideration and expended a considerable sum in laying and maintaining its pipe line.

2. Waters and water courses ⚡157—City laying pipe line as licensee entitled to notice and time for removal of line.

Where city entered defendant's land to lay its pipe line as licensee for consideration and expended a considerable sum in laying and maintaining such line, the city owned an irrevocable license, or at least a license subject to revocation only upon notice with reasonable time allowed for removal of its property.

3. Fixtures ⚡24—Pipe line held not a fixture on lands of landowner granting license to lay line.

Where city entered defendant's land to lay its pipe line as licensee for consideration and expended a considerable sum in laying and maintaining such line, held, that such pipe line did not become a fixture and part and parcel of defendant's lands.

4. Abandonment ⚡2—Distinguished from neglect.

There is a distinction in law between abandonment of property such as to divest ownership or title thereto, and mere neglect.

5. Abandonment ⚡4—City held not to have abandoned pipe line.

Negligence of the officers of a city to keep a pipe line in repair in another section of the line than that running through defendant's lands held not proof of abandonment of the portion of the pipe running through defendant's premises.

6. Adverse possession ⚡31—Owner must have knowledge.

To constitute an adverse possession, so as to set the statute of limitations in motion, the occupation of the one holding adversely must be open and notorious, under a claim of right, and the person against whom it is held must have knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of such occupation and claim of right.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by the City of Vallejo against Edward Burrill. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

L. G. Harrier, of Oakland, for appellant.
Edward S. Bell, of Oakland, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff and appellant is a municipal corporation owning and operating its own water system. A portion of the water system is a pipe line running from the city of Vallejo to Green Valley, a distance of about 16 miles. The original pipe line was laid in 1893 and runs through the lands belonging to the defendant, but at that time owned by his father, Thomas Burrill. The defendant succeeded to his father's interest in the land referred to about the year 1900. In 1905 or 1906 a new line was constructed between Vallejo and Green Valley. This line was laid in two sections, the first section was laid between Vallejo and Creston; the second section some years later from Creston north to Green Valley. In building the second section the line was carried around, and not through, the lands belonging to the defendant. Use of the original line running through defendant's land was discontinued, but the pipe was not disturbed. This portion, as claimed by appellant, was left intact to be used as an extra or emergency pipe line. In August, 1918, owing to the great demand for pipe to assist in supplying water to the navy yard for war purposes, the city decided to use the old pipe. The portion in controversy was taken up by the plaintiff, but its removal from the ranch thereafter was objected to by the defendant; hence this action for possession of the pipe or its value. The court found that the defendant was and for a period of ten years had been the owner of and entitled to the actual possession of the pipe and other materials connected therewith.

There is no dispute that the 6,000 feet of pipe line in controversy was originally a part of the water system of the city of Vallejo and belonged to said city. It therefore follows that unless the city has parted with the ownership of said pipe line, it still belongs to and is property to which the city is entitled. There is no evidence in the record that the city parted with its ownership of said pipe line by either purchase or gift. The learned trial court made no findings of fact as to the manner in which the defendant became the owner of said pipe line, but the argument of counsel and the testimony introduced show that the trial was conducted on the part of the defendant upon the theory that the plaintiff had abandoned the property in question and on the part of appellant that no such abandonment had ever taken place.

Upon the question of abandonment the testimony establishes the following facts: That since the building of the new line the city has not used any portion of the pipe line running through defendant's lands as a water conduit; that such portion of the pipe line remained in an undisturbed condition until the year 1918, when it was dug up by the plaintiff; that other portions of the pipe line, to wit, that portion between Creston and Green Valley, also remained unused, but from this portion vents, turnouts, and blow-cocks were removed. There is also some testimony to the effect that short portions of this section were allowed to fall into disrepair.

[1] The point made for reversal is that the finding of the defendant's ownership is not supported by the testimony. The solution of this question depends upon the right, if any, of the plaintiff acquired in the first instance to enter upon the lands of Thomas Burrill and lay down and operate the pipe line in controversy, and secondly whether there has been any abandonment of the property, such as to transfer the ownership thereof to the defendant in this action. In the recent case of City of Vallejo v. Scally (Cal. Sup.) 219 P. 63, where the ownership of a portion of the same pipe line herein referred to was in controversy, it was held that where the city has acquired a right of way by deed, mere nonuser of a pipe line as a water conduit does not establish abandonment no matter how long continued. Are the city's rights in the premises such that the same principle should be applied in the determination of this case?

Upon the trial of the action no written grant or conveyance of the right of way from Thomas Burrill to the city of Vallejo was introduced in evidence, and, so far as the record shows, none is in existence, though a witness, James B. McCauley, a city official at the time of the building of the pipe line in controversy, stated that such an instrument had been executed. The testimony on the question of the rights acquired by the city and under and by virtue of which it entered upon the premises then belonging to Thomas Burrill, as shown by the transcript, is as follows:

"The city trustee property minutes as admitted in evidence is as follows: 'Book entitled "Record of Trustees, July 6 to December 16, 1896."'

"Vallejo, August 8, 1894.

"Hubert Vischer, Chief Engineer."

In connection with this record the witness McCauley testified as follows:

"I was a member of the board of trustees of the city of Vallejo at the time of the building of the original water system.

"Q. Did you obtain a right of way from Thomas Burrill? A. We did.

"Q. By Mr. Bell: Was there such an instrument in writing obtained from Mr. Burrill? A. There was.

"Q. What was paid him for that right of way? A. Well, I could not absolutely say that now; that is too long ago. I could not answer that.

"Q. Were you present at the meeting of the board of trustees on August 8, 1894? A. I was.

"Q. Did you hear read the report of the chief engineer of the water system in which it was stated that $500 was paid to Thomas Burrill? A. I did.

"Q. What was it paid for? A. Well, I would say, of course this is 20 years or more is a long time while to say in detail what happened, and I have had no occasion to refresh my mind on the matter since, but there was no other transaction we had with Mr. Burrill except the right of way. The payment there was for the right of way; whether it covered anything else I could not say. I was a member of the special committee. The board had a special water committee consisting of three members under whose supervision this work was directly carried on, and Mr. Fry and I were the active members of that committee; so that I say that all of the deeds covering the right of way were passed on by our committee before they were submitted to the board. That is why I was so positive that all the rights of way had been covered, some of the deeds were recorded and some not. If I saw all the deeds, I saw the Thomas Burrill deed. I say positively that we had all the deeds at the time and there was no occasion to change my mind since."

[2] The court made no finding as to the existence or nonexistence of a deed granting the right of way to the city, hence we are not at liberty to give any consideration to appellant's argument based upon the intimation of the trial court that such an instrument probably had one time existed. Without deciding whether the foregoing testimony is sufficient to have justified the trial court in finding that a right of way was granted by Thomas Burrill to the city of Vallejo, we think it is nevertheless sufficient to show that the city did not enter the premises then belonging to Thomas Burrill as a trespasser, but did at least enter the premises as a licensee for consideration and after paying such consideration proceeded to and did expend a considerable sum of money in laying and maintaining its 6,000 feet of pipe, and under such circumstances the city owned and possessed an irrevocable or at least a license subject to revocation only upon notice with reasonable time allowed for the removal of its property. As stated on page 578, 17 R. C. L., the rule in many states is:

"That where a licensee has entered under a parcel license and has expended money or its equivalent in labor, it becomes irrevocable, and the licensee acquires a right of entry on the lands of the licensor for the purpose of maintaining his structures, or, in general, his rights under his license, and the license will continue for so long a time as the nature of it calls for.

* * * The cases holding to this rule as to irrevocability of certain licenses proceed on two distinct theories, one theory being that when the licensee expends large sums of money in making the improvement, and such expenditure is made without opposition by the licensor, the license becomes executed and, as such, irrevocable; and that, in fact, what was at its inception a license becomes in reality a grant. The other theory and the reason most frequently given is that after the execution of the license, it would be a fraud on the licensee to permit a revocation."

It will be observed that these cases rest upon circumstances where no consideration appears to have been paid for the license in the first instance. In Gravelly Ford Canal Co. v. Pope & Talbot, 36 Cal. App. 717, 178 Pac. 155, this court, speaking through Presiding Justice Chipman, declares the law as follows:

"A license is defined as a personal, revocable and unassignable privilege conferred either by writing or parol to do one or more acts on land without possessing any interest therein.' (17 R. C. L. 584.) A license may be implied from the acts of the parties, from their relations, and from custom, and where the owner of land, with full knowledge of the facts, tacitly permits another to repeatedly do acts upon the land, the license may be implied from failure to object. (25 Cyc. 642.) The essential of a license that it be assented to may be shown by any acts which tend to show assent. (17 R. C. L. 572.) And the creation of a license privilege may be evidenced by acquiescence in its exercise. (Id.) A license by deed or parol, under the well-settled rule of the common law, is revocable at pleasure, unless under certain circumstances, among them, that it is executed and also unless, by reason of expenditures made by the licensee on the strength of the license it would otherwise be inequitable to permit the licensor to effect a revocation. In such case the license is irrevocable. (Id., 576, 578; Stoner v. Zucker, supra; Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 154 Cal. 785 [99 Pac. 179].)"

The same rule was announced by the Supreme Court in Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704. In Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 557, 204 Pac. 19, the Supreme Court, having before it a somewhat similar question, uses the following language:

"Whatever the rights of a trespasser or entire stranger may be, the rule is that where structures are erected upon land by a person who occupies the land with the permission or license of the owner but who has no estate in the land, that is to say, by a mere licensee, consent on the part of the owner of the land that the structures shall remain the property of the person erecting them will be implied in the absence of any other facts or circumstances tending to show a different intention. (Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Stanton, 55 Minn. 211 [43 Am. St. Rep. 491, 56 N. W. 821]; * * * Fischer v. Johnson, 106 Iowa, 181 [76 N. W. 658].) There is no finding that the owner of the land granted Lauff or the plaintiff express permission to occupy the land, but a direct authorization is not essential to establish an occupancy by virtue of permission or acquiescence of the owner; a license may result from circumstances as, for instance, where a person has continued in possession for such a length of time and under such circumstances that objection might well have been expected had there been no assent."

In many cases where it is held that a license granted or presumed to exist under the circumstances which we have detailed, revocation may be had upon reasonable notice and opportunity to remove the improvements erected by a licensee. 17 R. C. L. 587. In the case at bar the testimony fails to show that any notice of revocation was ever given by the defendant or his predecessors in interest to the plaintiff herein. If we are right in holding that the testimony referred to and set out in this opinion is sufficient to show that at least the sum of $500 was paid by the city of Vallejo to Thomas Burrill for the privilege of laying its pipe through his land, then and in that case it became also a license coupled with an interest and carried with it the right of the plaintiff to enter upon the lands and premises of the defendant and remove its pipe line. 22 R. C. L. 81; Clements v. Philadelphia Co., 184 Pa. 28, 38 Atl. 1090, 39 L. R. A. 532. This latter case is strictly in point, as it involved the right of the Philadelphia Company to take up and remove a gas pipe belonging to it. That a licensee, even though his license is revocable, is entitled to reasonable notice and opportunity to remove his property is also supported by the following authorities: Ingalls v. St. Paul, 39 Minn. 479, 40 N. W. 524, 12 Am. St. Rep. 676; Great Falls Water Works Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., 21 Mont. 487, 54 Pac. 963; Shipley v. Fink, 102 Md. 219, 62 Atl. 360, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002. That such right of removal exists is also held in the case of Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal., at pages 561 and 562, 204 Pac. 19. To the same effect is Flick v. Bell, 5 Cal. Unrep. 206, 42 Pac. 813.

[3] Did the pipe line, installed as herein related by the city of Vallejo, become a fixture and a part and parcel of the Burrill lands? We think not. It is manifest from the testimony that the use of the pipe line was to convey water to the city of Vallejo. No part or parcel of the pipe line was installed for the purpose of use or with the intent of being used in connection with or as a part of the Burrill property. It was placed there, as it appears from the testimony, solely for the uses and purposes of the city. The circumstances attending the installation and use of the water pipe in controversy bring the instant case squarely within the decision of this court in Breyfogle v. Tighe et al., 58 Cal. App. 301, 208 Pac. 1008, where it is said that three principles or tests must be applied in determining whether personal property attached to land becomes a part of the realty: First, annexation; second, adaptation or application to the use or purpose to which that part of the realty to which it is connected is appropriated; and, third, intention. Only one of these tests respond to the circumstances under consideration, to wit, being imbedded in the soil. That it was the intention that the pipe line should remain the property of the city, and that its uses were for the city alone, appears to be incontrovertible. Under these circumstances, the right of removal exists under the authorities we have cited unless the city has in some manner parted with its title. The rule generally adopted by other authorities is set forth in 11 R. C. L. 183, as follows:

"Generally a building erected on the land of another by his consent or license does not become part of the realty, but remains the property of the person annexing it, and may be removed by him, is subject to sale and mortgage as personal property, or may be taken on execution against him. Such a building does not pass to a purchaser of the land, and if he is wronged his remedy is upon the covenants in his deed. This rule certainly holds when there is an express reservation of a right to remove the building, and generally it is considered that where the landowner consents to the placing of a building on his land by another without an express agreement as to whether it shall become a part of the realty or remain personalty, an agreement will be implied that it is to continue personal property."

[4, 5] Is there anything in the record to show that the city has parted with its title? We think not. There is no pretense of a sale or transfer of title in the ordinary method. No gift could be made by the officers of the city and the defendant could only acquire title by abandonment on the part of the city if any such there be. As heretofore stated the testimony on the subject of abandonment simply establishes non-user of that part of the pipe line on the defendant's premises and the taking away of faucets, vents, and blowouts referred to on other portions of the line and the allowing of other portions of the line to fall into disrepair. Our attention has not been called to any other testimony that can reasonably be said to bear upon the question of abandonment. It must be borne in mind that there is a distinction in law between abandonment of property, such as to divest ownership or title thereto, and mere neglect. Ordinarily, as said by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Board of Education v. Martin, 92 Cal. 209,¹ "the public is not to lose its rights through the negligence of its agents." We do not well see how the negligence of the officers of the city of Vallejo to keep the pipe in repair in another section of its line can be held to be proof of abandonment of the pipe running through the premises belonging to the defendant. The city itself took no official act evidencing an intention to abandon its property and if any such intention existed it can only be inferred from what has heretofore been mentioned. To sustain the theory of abandonment the defendant relies strongly upon the case of Norton v. Duluth Transfer Co., 129 Minn. 126, 151 N. W. 907, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 760. Upon the subject of abandonment the court in that case says:

"This intention" to abandon "need not appear by express declaration, but may be shown by acts and conduct clearly inconsistent with an intention to continue the use of the property for the purposes for which it was acquired."

[6] It is there stated, however, that to have the effect of divesting title the abandonment must have been more than a mere nonuser and must appear to have been an intentional relinquishment of the rights granted. The facts in that case also show that the defendant had taken up its tracks, ties, bridges, etc., and had taken away all its property from the right of way in controversy. The California cases cited in support of the doctrine of abandonment have reference to the giving up of possessory claims to real estate and are not pertinent to the issues herein involved. Our attention has not been called to any testimony which would establish title in the defendant by adverse possession or which would take this case from under the operation of the rule announced in Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508, to wit:

"To constitute an adverse possession, so as to set the Statute of Limitations in motion, the occupation of the one holding adversely must be open and notorious, under a claim of right, and the person against whom it is held must have knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of such occupation and claim of right."

It would seem also that title acquired by abandonment would be inconsistent with the claim of title acquired by adverse possession. The testimony of defendant upon his use of the pipe line is as follows:

"Q. When did you talk with Chappell about this matter? A. About 1910. Q. Why did you go to see Chappell? A. I went to see George Savage. Q. Why did you go to see George Savage? A. Because I wished to use some of the pipe that was vacant or idle there at that time. * * * To get some to use as culverts across a private road, across the place there. Q. Then at that time you went to the city of Vallejo to ask permission to use a part of their pipe? A. Yes. Q. And you were taken to see Chappell? A. Yes. Q. What did Chappell tell you? A. He told me that they had talked that matter over quite recently, and he said, 'We have concluded that the pipe does not belong to us, that the pipe belongs to the ranches in which it runs through.' And he said, 'After we take the faucets and blow-offs and air valves off there and the like, that way,' I could do what I pleased with the balance. I know that Savage and Chappell are dead. I never talked to anybody else but those two parties. Q. Then you understood from Chappell's words that the city had given you that pipe? A. Yes."

That Chappell and Savage had no authority to give away the property of the city requires no citation of authority. Other than what has been stated, our attention has not been called to any testimony of any acts of ownership or control of the pipe line by the defendant save and except that the defendant was the owner and in possession of the lands and premises through which the pipe line was laid by the city of Vallejo as hereinbefore stated. It being admitted that the pipe line in controversy was owned by the city of Vallejo at the time it was laid, and all the testimony on the subject tending to show that the city was a licensee upon consideration, the city was entitled to reasonable notice of revocation and reasonable time to remove its property, assuming that such a license is revocable. No notice of revocation was ever given. The city did not acquire its rights in the premises from use alone and therefore did not lose its rights by mere nonuser, and as there is no substantial evidence of abandonment except nonuser and no other substantial evidence of an intention to abandon, it necessarily results that the finding of the court that the defendant is the owner of the property in question is not supported by the evidence.

For the reasons given, we think the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

TIETKE v. FORREST. (Civ. 4457.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 9, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error §193(9)—Sufficiency of complaint may be first urged on appeal.

That a complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is not waived by failure to demur, but may be raised first on appeal.

2. Pleading §34(7)—Complaint first attacked on appeal liberally construed.

Where complaint is first attacked on appeal as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, it will then be liberally construed and upheld, if necessary facts appear by implication only, or as a conclusion of law.

3. Negligence §111(1)—Averment in general terms sufficient.

While it must appear from facts averred that negligence caused or contributed to injury and complaint is not sufficient if no fact is stated which shows how the injury was caused, yet an averment of facts constituting negligence in general terms is sufficient.

4. Gas §20(1)—Negligence in installing stove held sufficiently alleged.

Where complaint, in action for personal injury resulting from explosion of a gas stove installed by defendant, alleged that he was careless and negligent in the installation, in that the oven burner was improperly adjusted so that it had an insufficient supply of secondary air and that it was placed too close to the wall to permit sufficient air to enter the oven burner, it sufficiently alleged negligence.

5. Gas §20(1)—Omission in complaint held not misleading.

Where complaint in action for personal injury from explosion of a gas stove alleged that defendant was negligent in installation, in that the oven burner was improperly adjusted so that it had an insufficient supply of secondary air, even though complaint did not clearly allege the importance of secondary air to safe operation of the stove, defendant held not thereby misled.

6. Appeal and error §1002—Conflict in testimony not ground for reversal.

A conflict in the testimony can never be a ground for reversal.

7. Gas §20(2)—Evidence held to show negligence in installing gas stove.

In action for personal injuries from explosion of a gas stove purchased from and installed by defendant, evidence held sufficient to sustain verdict for plaintiff either on the theory of faulty installation or that the explosion was due to insufficient secondary air, which defect could have been remedied so as to have allowed proper ventilation.

8. Appeal and error §995—Rule as to two possible causes for injury, one of which relieves defendant, is matter for jury.

Rule where there are two or more possible causes of injury for one or more of which defendant is not responsible, and evidence leaves it just as probable that injury was the result of one cause as of the other, then plaintiff cannot recover, is applicable more as rule for guidance of jury than for appellate court in passing on sufficiency of evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Elsie Tietke, an unmarried woman, against Fred Forrest, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Forrest Stove Works, and individually. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Moote & Patterson and Harold S. Kiggins, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles Robert McCarty, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This is an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff as a result of the explosion of a gas stove purchased from and installed by the defendant. The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and judgment was entered in accordance therewith, from which judgment defendant now appeals.

It appears that at the time of the occurrence which gave rise to this action, and for some years previously thereto, the defendant conducted a business of selling and installing gas stoves for cooking purposes in the city of Los Angeles, and known as the Forrest Stove Works. He sold one of such stoves to the plaintiff, and installed in her home a secondhand stove, to be used until such time as he could deliver the new one; the stove temporarily in use was lighted at the oven, in the ordinary performance of household duties, and when the oven was subsequently opened by plaintiff there was an explosion of gas, which burned her about the face, arms, and hands. The complaint alleges that defendant was careless and negligent in the installation of said stove in that the oven burner thereof was improperly adjusted, so that it had an insufficient supply of secondary air; that the stove was placed too close to the wall to permit sufficient secondary air to enter said oven burner; that the said defects were not known to plaintiff. The complaint further alleges that defendant advised the plaintiff that said stove was properly installed and was ready and safe for use, but that by reason of said lack of secondary air the oven burner, after being so lighted, and after the closing of said oven door, and without negligence on the part of plaintiff, went out, and the oven was filled with gas; that thereafter the plaintiff opened said door, and the gas so collected in said oven, as aforesaid, exploded and inflicted upon plaintiff's person the alleged injuries.

It is further charged that the plaintiff's injuries were proximately caused by the afore-said negligence on the part of defendant, and not otherwise.

An answer was filed herein, denying generally and specifically each of these allegations, and the case went to trial upon the pleadings, resulting in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

[1, 2] No demurrer was interposed to the complaint, but defendant here contends that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that there is no allegation from which it may be inferred that secondary air, and a sufficient supply thereof, is so vital to the proper or safe operation of a gas stove as to make an installation negligent or careless when it failed to provide therefor. It was argued that the complaint must necessarily show wherein the acts or omissions complained of constitute carelessness or negligence.

[3-5] The objection that a complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is not waived by failure to demur, but may be raised for the first time on appeal, but the pleading will then be liberally construed, and if the necessary facts appear by implication only, or as a conclusion of law, it will be upheld. Ohio Electric Car Co. v. MacIntosh, 182 Cal. 450, 188 Pac. 982. It has repeatedly been held to be the rule in this state that, while it must appear from the facts averred that the negligence caused or contributed to the injury, and that a complaint is not sufficient if no fact is stated which shows how the injury was caused, or that it was not caused through a patent defect (Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 27 Pac. 29), yet an averment of the facts constituting the negligence, in general terms, is sufficient; the more specific facts being generally more largely within the knowledge of the defendant than that of the plaintiff (Cunningham v. Los Angeles R. Co., 115 Cal. 561, 47 Pac. 452; Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 Pac. 618, 36 Pac. 407; Schmidt v. Bauer, 80 Cal. 565, 22 Pac. 256, 5 L. R. A. 580; Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 Pac. 84, 19 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1094; Pigeon v. W. P. Fuller & Co., 156 Cal. 691, 105 Pac. 976). It is sufficient to call attention to the rule frequently announced by the Supreme Court that it is necessary only to allege negligence by general averment that defendant negligently did the particular act which resulted in the damage to plaintiff. Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 248, 254, 107 Pac. 309; Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 99, 27 Pac. 29. The complaint fully measures up to the standard required by these authorities. From the excerpts which we have set forth, in substance or in hæc verba, it is apparent that it contains more than an allegation of negligence on the part of the defendant in general terms, and specifies with considerable particularity conduct which it is alleged was negligent, and was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury. Again, the matter of pleading becomes unimportant when a case is fairly tried, as this one apparently was, upon the merits and under circumstances which indicate that nothing in the pleadings misled appellant to his injury. Stein v. United Railroads of San Francisco, 159 Cal. 368, 113 Pac. 663. If it were true, as urged by appellant, that the complaint does not clearly allege the importance of secondary air to the proper or safe operation of the gas stove in question, he cannot be said to have been misled by this omission.

[6, 7] The next and only remaining point made by appellant is that the evidence falls far short of bearing out the allegations of the complaint and wholly fails to support the verdict of the jury. Testimony was introduced by the respondent tending to show that appellant hurriedly connected the stove when it was installed by him, that plaintiff remarked at the time that she smelled escaping gas, but that appellant made no test, and assured her that the stove was in proper condition for use. Plaintiff was supported in these statements by her mother and sister, and witnesses experienced in the construction and installation of gas stoves of the style here involved testified that secondary air is taken in from the outside to feed the burner. One expert witness stated positively that in his opinion the lack of secondary air caused the fire to go out. Others stated that the stove was set too close to the wall, and that the trouble was due to insufficient secondary air, and that the defect could have been remedied so as to have allowed proper ventilation and the entrance of secondary air. The appellant testified that he tested the stove, and that it was in good condition and properly installed; that there was no lack of secondary air, but that there were various ways that an explosion could occur. This and other evidence to the same effect constitutes nothing more than a conflict in the testimony, which can never be a ground for reversal.

It is obvious that the case was tried by both sides upon the theory presented by the complaint, and it cannot be said that there was no evidence to support the elements necessary to constitute respondent's case, or that any element thereof was merely inferred by the jury without substantial evidence to justify it. If, as was testified the stove was placed so near the wall that proper ventilation was rendered impossible, and this prevented secondary air to enter, causing gas to accumulate, float, and explode, and there were not sufficient holes in the bottom, which contributed to the same difficulty, appellant, while engaged in installing an instrument consuming a dangerous substance such as fuel gas, would be presumed to know what adjustments were proper and expected to make them.

[8] Considerable evidence was offered going to show that the explosion might have been the result of other causes than the appellant's negligence. It will serve no good purpose to quote this testimony here. Appellant seems to rely upon the rule that where there are two or more possible causes of injury, for one or more of which the defendant is not responsible, if the evidence leaves it just as probable that the injury was the result of one cause as of the other, the plaintiff cannot recover. However, this principle is applicable more as a rule for the guidance of the jury in passing upon the facts than for the appellate court in passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence. Peters v. McKay, 136 Cal. 73, 68 Pac. 478.

The judgment is affirmed.

GOSS et al. v. BROWN. (Civ. 3915.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 14, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 10, 1924.)

Venue  77—Right to change not waived by filing cross-complaint with moving papers.

Defendant, filing an affidavit of merits and demanding a change of venue when he answers or demurs, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 396, does not waive his right to the change by also filing a cross-complaint, which can be filed only by the court's permission after the answer is filed. Code Civ. Proc. § 442.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nstrand, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Goss and others, co-partners, doing business as Chas. E. Goss & Son, against George Brown. From an order granting a motion for a change of venue, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Hankins & Hankins and Olin F. Nuckolls, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

A. J. Carlson, of Modesto, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs appeal from an order granting defendant's motion for a change of place of trial from the city and county of San Francisco, in which the action was commenced, to Stanislaus county, the county of defendant's residence.

The moving papers are conceded to be in due and proper form, and to entitle defendant to a change of venue, except that, concurrently with their service and filing, the defendant also filed a cross-complaint. The only point involved on appeal is whether defendant, by filing a cross-complaint with his answer at the time he filed the moving papers, waived his right to have the place of trial changed to the county of his residence.

Undoubtedly a failure to assert this right in the manner provided by section 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure would be deemed a waiver of the right. But defendant has strictly complied with the provisions of that section. It requires that a defendant file an affidavit of merits and make the demand for the change of the place of trial at the time he answers or demurs. This the defendant did. We do not think he lost the right which then arose under the statute, merely because, in addition, he filed a cross-complaint. Section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a cross-complaint may be filed at the same time as the answer, or by permission of the court subsequently. As said in a somewhat similar situation in Pittman v. Carstenbrook, 11 Cal. App. 224, 228, 230, 104 Pac. 699, 702:

"It would be a very harsh rule to hold that by following the statute the defendant waives a privilege conferred by the statute. * * * It is true that the privilege [to have the place of trial changed] may be waived impliedly as well as expressly, but in order to do so there must be some act of the moving party tending to show his intent to invoke the jurisdiction of the court of first instance for the trial of questions of fact or of law. The filing of the amended demurrer does not indicate this intention, although it might just as well have been filed after the cause was transferred."

In the case at bar the defendant, in order to protect his rights under the cross-complaint, was required to either file his cross-complaint with his answer or to trust to the discretion of the trial court to permit him to file it after the cause had been transferred. A similar situation arose also in Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Herman Mining Co., 139 Cal. 713, 717, 73 Pac. 588, 589, where the court says:

"He [defendant] must either appear by answer or demurrer, and if he does either he is entitled to be heard on his motion. We see no reason why the defendants in the present case could not also file a motion to strike out parts of the complaint. The purpose of the statute is to require the defendant to appear, and also to show that he has a meritorious defense. * * * We think the motion was no waiver of defendants' rights."

In view of the statutory provisions referred to, we do not think the reasoning of the Texas cases cited by appellant applicable in this jurisdiction.

Order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CROSS. (Cr. 1007.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 19, 1923.)

1. Criminal law §1166½(8)—Failure to sustain challenge to jurors held not prejudicial where they did not serve.

The disallowance of accused's challenges for cause to jurors because of their testimony that they were prejudiced in narcotic cases, for which accused was being tried, was not prejudicial as respects certain of such jurors who did not serve upon the case.

2. Jury §97(4)—Juror held not disqualified in misdemeanor case.

In trial for selling narcotic, testimony by a woman juror that she was prejudiced "from the very nature of the charge," followed by testimony that she would be fair, that she entertained no prejudice and could and would lay it aside and accept the instructions of the court, furnishes no ground for accused's objection to such juror's competency.

3. Jury §110(1)—Objection to competency waived by failure to challenge.

In a narcotic law violation prosecution, held that, if accused considered a woman juror incompetent to serve, he waived such objection by failure to make any challenge, peremptory or for cause, as to such juror.

4. Poisons §9—Evidence as to violation of narcotic law sufficiently corroborated.

In prosecution for violation of St. 1907, p. 124, as amended, by the sale of morphine, evidence held sufficient corroboration of the prosecuting witness' testimony to sustain conviction.

5. Criminal law §1163(6)—Separation of the jury presumptively prejudicial.

Separation of the jury after submission is presumptively prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Gilbert Cross was convicted of violating the state Poison Act, and appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Wright, of Tulare, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. Appellant was convicted of a misdemeanor, it being charged that on or about the 8th day of March, 1923, he willfully and unlawfully sold and furnished a quantity of morphine, contrary to the provisions of the Act of March 6, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 124), as amended, regulating the sale of poisons.

[1-3] It is contended, first, that appellant's challenges for cause should have been allowed by the court as to four jurors, because they had testified that they were prejudiced in narcotic cases. Three of such jurors did not serve upon the case, and hence no prejudicial error could result. In People v. Schafer, 161 Cal. 573, 576, 119 Pac. 920, 921, it was said:

"While the record shows that the defendant did subsequently exhaust his 10 peremptory challenges, it does not appear that he had occasion or desire to use an additional peremptory challenge, or that each and all of the 12 jurors finally accepted and sworn were not entirely satisfactory to him. * * * This is not enough to warrant reversal for error in the ruling on the challenge for cause. * * *

This states the situation in the instant case. The same rule is announced in People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 157 Pac. 599, and People v. McMillan (Cal. App.) 212 Pac. 38. The fourth juror, a woman who at first stated that she was prejudiced "from the very nature of the charge," testified to all subsequent questioning that she would be fair, and that she entertained no prejudice, but could and would lay it aside and accept the instructions of the court, and try the case upon the evidence as fairly as any other; that she did not know of any reason why she could not be fair and impartial as a juror, both for the people and for the defendant. We think this testimony, taken as a whole, furnishes no ground for the appellant's objection to the competency of this juror. Besides, the record nowhere discloses any challenge, peremptory or for cause, as to this juror, and if appellant considered her incompetent to serve he waived such objection. People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 29, 32.

Much argument is indulged in to discredit the testimony of the principal witness for the people, it being contended that her reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity in the community of Visalia was bad; that she had offered to accept a bribe of $100 to leave the county and not testify against appellant, and that she was a "stool pigeon" for the officers, who agreed to pay her $50 if appellant should be convicted; also, that her testimony was contradicted by that of the two officers who testified that they worked with her upon the case. It is true that witnesses called on behalf of appellant did, when asked the direct question, state that the witness' reputation was bad, but none of them appear from their testimony to have known what constituted general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity; although they were repeatedly prompted and instructed by the court and by counsel to answer "yes" or "no" to the question whether or not they knew her general reputation. Answers that the prosecuting witness was "untruthful" were stricken out as not responsive, which is assigned as error, and it is insisted that the interruptions and explanations by the court embarrassed the witnesses before the jury and discredited their testimony. It does not appear that the court expressed any criticism as to the credibility of any witness. The explanatory remarks to which exception is taken were prompted either by objections of the district attorney or by the witnesses, in an endeavor to assist them.

The jury were instructed that the court in no manner expressed or desired to express any opinion on the weight of the testimony of any witness; that with questions of fact, the weight of evidence and the credit to be given any witness the court had nothing to do; that they were not to infer, from any of the rulings or remarks of the court during the trial, how the court might think the case should be decided. They were further instructed that all witnesses are presumed to speak the truth, but that this presumption may be repelled and overcome by the manner in which they testify, by the manner and character of their testimony, by contradictory evidence, or when impeached by evidence that their reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity was bad. The complaining witness denied that she had ever discussed the subject of a bribe, or that she had heard it discussed, and all of the matters to which appellant here directs attention constituted questions of fact, and were covered by the instructions of the court.

[4] Appellant next asserts that when the record is carefully examined it will be noted that the jury convicted him upon the testimony of the prosecuting witness alone, and that she was not corroborated. Such a claim is entirely without foundation. The witness in question testified that she arranged with the defendant to furnish her some narcotics, and that she drove to a house in her automobile, stopping near and directly in front of a window where two officers were concealed who could see all that transpired; that the defendant followed in another automobile; and that he stopped just to the rear of her car, alighted, came to the car in which she remained seated, and handed her a small package of narcotics, which she later gave to the officers, and which was introduced in evidence. The officers each testified to the positions of the automobiles, and of the parties, and positively stated that they witnessed the transfer of the narcotics, which were subsequently handed to them, and brought into court by them. There was abundant evidence justifying the jury in concluding that the defendant was guilty. The defendant as a witness denied only the delivery of the narcotics, strenuously insisting that he merely placed some groceries in her arms before she entered the house. His testimony only raises a conflict in the evidence, which cannot be reviewed.

[5] A more serious question was raised, however, upon appellant's motion for a new trial. He and three other persons furnished affidavits stating that after the cause had been submitted to the jury the jurors separated, some of them talking among themselves and with other parties in the courtroom, some in the hallway and others in the toilet. Respondent filed no counter affidavit, but contends that there is no merit in appellant's motion for a new trial, citing People v. Knight (Cal. App.) 218 Pac. 79. In that case it does not appear that the jurors conversed with other persons, or that any one spoke to them; but it does appear that some of them were permitted to go down the hall to a toilet, and talked among themselves in the hallway, also that the officer entered the jury room on several occasions. The court stated in its opinion that there was nothing in the facts shown that would furnish a sufficient cause for granting a new trial.

On the other hand, certain rulings of the Supreme Court of this state seem controlling, and conclusive, upon the facts presented. In People v. Brannigan, 21 Cal. 337, 339, it was said:

"The language of the oath administered to the officer having the jury in charge points out with clearness his duties. He is required to 'keep them together'; that is, he must not permit them to separate. He must keep them 'in some private and convenient place'; that is, removed from access by strangers. He must not 'permit any person to speak to them,' a duty which can only be performed by following the previous requirement of keeping them in a private place. And, finally he must not speak to them himself, except to ask them whether they have agreed upon a verdict. When either of these requirements is disregarded by the officer, he fails to perform his duty, and the trial is irregularly conducted. If a conviction follows, the prisoner has ground to complain of the irregularity. He is entitled to all the protection which the statute intends to secure, against any interference with the action of the jury, whether arising from the hostility of personal enemies or popular prejudice. If such protection be not afforded, suspicions are excited and confidence in the justice of their decision is destroyed. It would seem therefore but reasonable, where an irregularity has been committed, which may have affected the jury, that the government seeking to uphold their action, should be called upon to show that no injury to the prisoner has followed from the irregularity complained of. If this can be shown, their verdict will not be disturbed—for the end which the law contemplated by its provisions has been attained. In the present case the irregularity consisted in the unauthorized separation of the jury, after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict. The prisoner, in his affidavit, upon which the motion for a new trial was based, alleges the separation, and the fact is not controverted, nor is any explanation of it attempted by the state. The district attorney appears to have considered it incumbent upon the prisoner to show affirmatively injury to himself resulting from the separation, or at least reason to suspect such injury. There are authorities which support this view. Such are the cases cited from the New York courts. But there are authorities of equal weight the other way, and the latter, we think, are supported by better reasons." (Italics by the court.)

In People v. Adams, 143 Cal. 208, 76 Pac. 954, 66 L. R. A. 247, 101 Am. St. Rep. 92, it was said:

"Under our law there is a marked difference between a separation during the progress of the trial and a separation after final submission of the case. As to the former there is no law requiring the jury to be kept together, although the court may order them to be so kept; and it is not necessary in the case at bar to consider the significance of a violation of such an order. But it is provided in the Penal Code (sections 1128, 1135, 1136) that after the jury have finally retired for deliberation they must be kept together; and one of the express grounds for a new trial is 'when the jury has separated without leave of the court after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict' (section 1181). * * *

"And it is clear that the burden was not on appellant of proving affirmatively that she was prejudiced by the said separation of the jury. In this state the law on the subject was first declared in People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 275."

See, also, People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 348; People v. Cord, 157 Cal. 562, 571, 108 Pac. 511; and People v. Hawley, 111 Cal. 78, 43 Pac. 404, to the same effect.

In the instant case, as in that of People v. Brannigan, supra, an irregularity is shown to have been committed which may have affected the jury to the appellant's injury; here also no counter affidavits were filed by the people. The district attorney has not attempted to show affirmatively that the separation of the jurors after final submission of the case, and the fact of their conversing with others, did not prejudice the defendant and result in a verdict against him. Under these circumstances such injury to the defendant stands as a conceded fact established by presumption of law, and a reversal is necessary.

Appellant's exceptions to the refusal of requested instructions are untenable, since the general charge covers the matters embodied therein. However, for the reasons herein set forth, a new trial should have been granted, and the judgment appealed from is therefore reversed.

ANDERSON v. STANDARD LUMBER CO.
(Civ. 2534.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 16, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 12, 1924.)

1. Corporations §406(4)—Lumber company held not bound by mill superintendent's contract employing foreman.

A lumber company authorizing its sawmill superintendent to employ lumber pilers and pond men at stipulated rates per thousand feet and per hour, respectively, held not bound by the superintendent's contract, executed before entering on his duties, employing a "green lumber foreman" or "all around yard man" at $250 per month, in the absence of evidence that such employee had any knowledge of the superintendent's authority, except from his statement, contract, or letter of authorization to employ men.

2. Master and servant §7—Contract abandoned by accepting other work at smaller salary.

An employee, stating that he could not do the work for which employed and agreeing to do other work at a smaller salary, abandons the first contract and cannot recover thereon.

3. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Abandonment of contract by employee held for trial court.

Whether an employee abandoned his contract held exclusively for the trial court on conflicting evidence as to whether he stated that he could not do the work and agreed to accept other work at a smaller salary.

4. Master and servant §80(9)—Employee shown to have quit work.

Evidence held to show that employee voluntarily quit work before he had been on the job for the time required to entitle him to reimbursement for transportation to his place of work, and was not discharged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by George A. Anderson against the Standard Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 213 Pac. 65.

H. W. Zagoren, of Sacramento, for appellant.

J. B. Curtin, of Sonora, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff sued to recover for services alleged to have been performed by him for defendant and for the amount of a claim of one Ole Orr against defendant which had been assigned to plaintiff. The court found against plaintiff and gave defendant judgment for costs. This appeal is from the judgment.

July 28, 1920, the defendant employed P. S. Dainard to act as superintendent of its sawmill at Standard, Tuolumne county; the contract of employment being in the form of a letter, signed by D. H. Steinmetz, defendant's general manager, containing the following:

"Per the arrangements made with you today, we will agree to pay you on the basis of $4,000.00 per year, to take the position as superintendent at Standard, in full charge of sawmill, pond and yard. * * * It is understood that you will make your arrangements to be at Standard not later than the 15th to the 20th of August."

Dainard entered upon the discharge of his duties as such superintendent about the 1st of September, 1920.

For many years prior to his employment by defendant, Dainard had occupied similar positions in various eastern and Canadian saw-mills and had a wide acquaintance with men working therein. The defendant desired to secure the services of some of these men, and on July 28, 1920, Steinmetz gave Dainard, who was about to go to Minnesota to bring his family thence to Standard, written authorization to employ men as follows:

"In connection with the help that we would like to have you pick up, we can use: 6 or 8 good first-class lumber pilers, and we will pay the following rates: 5/4 and 6/4 and 8/4 & better, 60 cents per thousand feet; 4/4, 67½ cents per thousand feet. * * * All piles will be covered with 1½" box lumber, which will be paid for at the regular 6/4 rate, 60 cents.

"We would like to have you look up two or three pond men to work on the water at 57½ per hour; 1 or 2 setters, 70 cents per hour; doggers, 62½ cents per hour; 2 edgemen, 75 cents; 2 trimmermen, 65 cents; 2 oilers, 60 cents. We can use from six to twelve good mill men, common laborers, at 50 cents per hour.

"You can say to the men that you employ that the work will be steady the year around, and we will furnish transportation to such men as you select, with the understanding that it is to be paid back to us, and with the further understanding that if they stay with us for six months that the company will refund the railroad fare."

Dainard testified that Steinmetz orally authorized him to employ men and said:

"You know what you need as well as I do. However, I better give you some letter so it will bear out our part. You can hire what you need."

Steinmetz denied having made the statement, and further testified that the only authority given Dainard to employ men was that contained in the letter quoted and that defendant never departed from such written authorization. Steinmetz also testified that Dainard was not in the employ of defendant during August, 1920. August 16, 1920, in Minnesota, Dainard and plaintiff executed the following instrument:

"This is to evidence that Geo. A. Anderson has this day been employed by the Standard Lumber Company as an all around yard man at $250 per month looking after hauling out lath lumber and piling.

"Transportation to be furnished to said employee by said company to the place where work is to be performed, the same to be deducted from his wages; but in case said employee works continuously for said company for a period of six months the amount so deducted for said transportation is to be refunded to him by said company.

"Dated this 16 day of August, 1920.

"The Standard Lumber Company,

"By P. S. Dainard Agt.

"Geo. A. Anderson."

While in Minnesota, after the execution of the instrument last quoted, the plaintiff procured 18 men for the defendant at Dainard's request, the latter agreeing to pay plaintiff his expenses incurred in procuring them. Plaintiff and these 18 men then came to California, arriving at Standard August 25th. Plaintiff testified that he presented his agreement with Dainard to Steinmetz and Ben J. Zeigler, who was general yard superintendent, on August 26th, and that Steinmetz looked at the contract and then said: "I am satisfied you are just the kind of man we want." Plaintiff further testified that nothing was then said about paying him less than $250 a month. Steinmetz testified that he did not authorize Dainard to incur any expenses in procuring men, that he did not know that plaintiff had a contract until after the latter had been discharged, and that Ziegler had authority to employ men and that he (Zeigler) put plaintiff to work. Plaintiff testified that he was employed by Dainard as green lumber foreman "to handle the green lumber from the mill saw to the pile." Ziegler testified that on plaintiff's arrival at Standard "he showed me a contract but I didn't read the contract." "I gave it back to him without reading it." "He told me he was hired as a green lumber yard foreman, and he further stated that he didn't feel competent, owing to the different conditions that existed here and back there, and he asked me to keep on the man we had as green lumber foreman until he got acquainted." W. H. Cross, who was yard foreman in charge of the green lumber at the time of plaintiff's arrival, testified that the latter said to the witness, "You stay three or four weeks, I want to get onto the lumber," and further said "he couldn't handle the job"; that "he didn't know sugar pine from white pine." Ziegler testified that plaintiff agreed to take charge of "the green lumber chain at nights" at $225 a month. He worked in this capacity for six weeks, at the end of which time defendant "let the chain out by contract," Ziegler then offered plaintiff work in scaling lumber at 65 cents an hour, but the plaintiff declined. Two or three days later plaintiff was given work in the box factory. Nothing seems to have been said at that time relative to the wages he was to receive in the box factory. He was paid at the rate of $5 a day, the wages paid others for like work. After working there for a few days plaintiff left the factory one evening 12 minutes before the whistle blew for the men to cease work, and he was thereupon discharged. He admitted that he left 6 minutes early. The defendant has received payment for his services at the rate of $225 a month for the time he had charge of the green lumber chain. He refused to accept payment at the rate of $5 a day for the time he worked in the box factory and took the matter up with the state labor commissioner.

Defendant thereupon paid the amount due plaintiff to the commissioner. There was no attempt made to show that the services rendered were reasonably worth more than the amounts paid therefor.

Appellant contends that the defendant is bound by Dainard's agreement to make payment at the rate of $250 a month, notwithstanding the fact that Dainard exceeded his authority in making the agreement. Whitton v. Sullivan, 96 Cal. 480, 31 Pac. 1115, is cited in support of this contention. In that case the defendant's attorney had employed the plaintiff to take and transcribe testimony in an election contest at a certain rate per folio, and the services had been performed without knowledge on the part of plaintiff that the defendant had placed a limit on the price to be paid for the work. The court said:

"Bowden was authorized by appellant to make a contract with respondent to perform this work, and under such authorization he made a contract with respondent, who performed the work thereunder. Appellant's cause of complaint is, simply, that his agent, Bowden, exceeded the limitations placed upon his powers, by contracting to pay respondent a greater price for the work than was included in his authority of agency. But this is a matter between the principal and his agent, and with which the party doing the work has no concern.

"This principle is clearly declared in Mechem on Agency, § 283, where the author, speaking as to general and special agents, says: 'In either case, the question of the authority of the agent must depend, so far as it involves the rights of innocent third persons who have relied thereon, upon the character bestowed, and not upon the instructions given.'"

In the employment of Whitton, Bowden had not exceeded the authority usually exercised by an attorney in the conduct of his client's case. In Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 710, it is said:

"The criterion in this case, as in others, is the character bestowed by the principal. * * * Although the agent violates his instructions or exceeds the limits set to his authority, he will yet bind his principal to such third persons, if his acts are within the scope of the authority which the principal has caused or permitted him to appear to possess. But if the agent be not held out as one possessing other than the limited and restricted authority, then the instructions and the authority may coincide."

This statement of the law is in harmony with section 2317 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess."

In Harris v. San Deigo Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526, 528, 25 Pac. 758, it is said:

"There are two essential features of an authority of this character, viz., the party must believe that the agent had authority, and such belief must be generated by some act or neglect of the person to be held. A belief founded on the agent's statements is not sufficient."

[1] The evidence does not show what information plaintiff had relative to Dainard's authority at the time the contract between them was executed. It does not appear that he could have had any knowledge thereof except from Dainard's statements to him, or from Dainard's contract with defendant or the letter of authorization to employ men. The defendant was not bound by Dainard's statements as to the extent of his authority, and neither the contract nor the letter show any authority in Dainard to execute the contract on which the suit is based. The letter did not authorize Dainard to employ a "green lumber foreman" or "an all around yard man" or to agree to pay any man $250 a month. Neither did Dainard have authority, on August 16, 1920, merely by virtue of his contract to act as superintendent, to employ men. His authority at that time was such only as was specially given him by the defendant's letter of authorization. He did not enter upon his duties as superintendent until after he had employed plaintiff. Dainard's contract with defendant provided that he was to be at Standard not later than August 15th or 20th. This time was extended. He was in North Dakota on his way to California August 28th. He was not in the employ of defendant as superintendent during August. From the foregoing it clearly appears that the defendant was not bound by the agreement on which the plaintiff sues.

[2, 3] Even if the contract had been binding on defendant, nevertheless, when plaintiff, on his arrival, stated that he could not do the work for which he had been employed and agreed to do other work at a smaller salary, he thereby abandoned the first contract. It is not a question of the oral modification of a written contract, but an abandonment thereof and the substitution of the oral contract in its stead. It is true that plaintiff testified that he did not state that he could not do the work for which he was employed by Dainard and denied that he agreed to accept other work at $225 a month, but this testimony only created a conflict in the evidence which was exclusively for the determination of the trial court.

Dainard told plaintiff that the latter's salary was to commence from the date of the written agreement between them and that the defendant would reimburse him for his expenses incurred in procuring men for defendant. From what has been said, it appears that Dainard was without authority to so bind the defendant or to employ anyone to procure men for defendant.

[4] Ole Orr was employed by Dainard to pile lumber at certain rates per thousand feet. The contract provided that if he remained "on the job for a period of six months," his railroad fare from Minnesota to Standard would be paid him by the defendant. He worked for defendant "close to two months" and was paid for his services. He claimed reimbursement from defendant in the amount paid by him for transportation and assigned his claim therefor to plaintiff. The complaint alleges that he was wrongfully discharged and is therefore entitled to such reimbursement, even though he did not "remain on the job" for six months. Orr testified as follows:

"Q. Why did you leave? A. This day I got sore, Mr. Ziegler and his foreman was out there. Q. What was the foreman's name? A. Bill Cross. Q. What happened? A. He said, 'Go and get your time.' * * * Q. You said a while ago that you were kicking about it? A. Because every time I wanted to spot the lumber, the teamster would leave it 300 or 400 feet from the loads. * * * Q. Then you went to the foreman and Mr. Ziegler and Mr. Cross? A. I wanted to get some of the lumber spotted so that I could work. Q. What was said? A. Said if I didn't like it here to go and get my time. Q. Then what did you do? A. I went and got my time. Q. You did not offer to do any other work? A. No. * * * Q. And your (work) was not satisfactory to either one of the bosses, Cross or Ziegler, is that correct? A. He told the boss my work was satisfactory, and he didn't want me to go, and that he would have the lumber spotted, and I didn't like that idea that I should sit there and wait every day for the lumber to come in. Q. You didn't like to wait? A. We had to work, contract, and didn't want to sit there and do nothing; like to make a few dollars. * * * Q. And by spotting lumber you mean putting the lumber at a certain point? A. Putting it where it is supposed to be piled. * * * I was fired."

In relation to the same subject-matter, Ziegler testified as follows:

"Did he quit voluntarily or was he discharged? A. He said he was going to quit."

Orr left the employ of defendant October 22d. During the first half of September he earned and was paid $143.12; during the first half of October, $117.62; and from the middle of October to the time he quit, $41.50. During the latter period he "laid off a couple of days." The record does not show what he earned during the second half of September. It thus appears that his average earnings were in excess of $250 a month, and hence it may fairly be inferred that his work was not greatly interfered with the defendant's failure to spot cars as he desired.

But one point is relied on for a reversal of the judgment in so far as the Orr claim is concerned. In his brief appellant says:

"The only question in this matter is: Did Ole Orr quit of his own accord, was he discharged with cause, or was he discharged without cause?"

The only inference to be drawn from Orr's own testimony is that he quit of his own accord. He testified that he was "fired"; but this conclusion can be given no weight against the facts related by him, which show that he voluntarily quit his employment.

The judgment is affirmed.

64 Cal. App. 418

Ex parte GERE. (Cr. 1035.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 16, 1923.)

1. Habeas corpus $\S$ 85(1)—Prosecution must show good cause for delay in bringing accused to trial.

The burden of showing good cause for failure to bring accused to trial within 60 days after indictment, as required by Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, is on the prosecution.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 576(4)—Guaranty of speedy trial not available to accused, whose arrest is delayed because of his own wrong.

The constitutional guaranty of speedy trial and Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382, adopted pursuant thereto, do not operate in favor of one whose dissimulation, falsity, and deceit, as by assuming fictitious names, contributed to delay in arresting him, in which case such right would be available only after he had been taken into custody.

3. Habeas corpus $\S$ 85(1)—Good cause for delay in apprehending and trying accused held shown.

Evidence of the prosecution's attempts to locate accused and the latter's misconduct in evading arrest by assuming fictitious names held sufficient to show good cause for delay in apprehending him and failure to bring him to trial within the time required by Pen. Code, $\S$ 1382.

4. Indictment and information $\S$ 34(4)—Nonindorsement of witness' names on indictment held not shown.

Testimony of the foreman and secretary of the grand jury held not to show that the names of all the witnesses appearing against accused were not indorsed on the indictment, so as to require that it be set aside under Pen. Code, $\S$ 995.

5. Indictment and information $\S$ 34(4)—Foreman and secretary of grand jury alone competent to prove nonindorsement of witnesses' names on indictment.

Accused cannot examine the records of the grand jury, nor prove his contention that the names of witnesses appearing against him were not indorsed on the indictment by the reporter of the testimony; the only witnesses competent to prove such contention, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 995, being the foreman and secretary of the grand jury.

Application by Thomas P. Gere for writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice pro tem. On the 8th day of September, 1920, an indictment was found by the grand jury of Los Angeles county and returned to the superior court, charging the petitioner and others with the crime of grand larceny. Thereupon the court ordered bench warrants issued for the apprehension of the several defendants and fixed bail thereon. The case is referred to as one of a series of "bunco cases." A codefendant of petitioner, one Otis B. Berry, was arrested, tried, and convicted. The judgment as to him was affirmed in People v. Berry (Cal. Sup.) 215 Pac. 74. On September 20, 1920, the sheriff received the warrant for the arrest of the petitioner. He was taken into custody in the city of Los Angeles on August 13, 1923, duly arraigned in the superior court, and on his plea of not guilty the case was set down for trial on October 8. The petition herein was filed on September 26, and the trial has been continued, pending a determination of this proceeding.

Petitioner alleges that he is unlawfully restrained of his liberty, first, in that his case was not brought to trial within 60 days after the finding of the indictment and no good cause shown for the delay, and, secondly, in that the names of all the witnesses appearing against him before the grand jury were not indorsed on the indictment before it was presented to the court.

After his arraignment and before his plea, the petitioner moved the trial court to dismiss the indictment on the same grounds now alleged in his petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The trial court took testimony for and against the motion, extending over a period of several weeks as the business of the court would permit, and denied the motion. When the matter was called in this court the same was submitted for decision on the petition and return, on the records of the trial court, and on the transcript of the testimony taken by that court on the hearing of the motion to dismiss.

In support of his first contention, the petitioner relies on the following provisions of section 1382 of the Penal Code:

"The court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution dismissed in the following cases: * * * 2. If a defendant, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial within sixty days after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information."

And he bases his right to test, in a proceeding of this kind, the question of his unlawful detention after the expiration of the 60-day period on In re Begerow, 133 Cal. 349, 65 Pac. 828, 56 L. R. A. 513, 85 Am. St. Rep. 178, where the petitioner was discharged for the reason that no good cause for a delay beyond the statutory period was shown. It is therefore necessary to determine whether or not the facts and circumstances here shown constituted good cause for delay.

It is the contention of the petitioner that since the finding of the indictment he has lived continuously in the city of Los Angeles, and that, if the prosecution had exercised reasonable diligence he could have been arrested and brought to trial without delay. On the part of the respondent it is contended that the petitioner went under numerous assumed names and made false statements for the purpose of avoiding identification, and that his conduct in that respect was so culpable as to deprive him of the benefit of the law requiring diligent prosecution.

[1] The burden of showing good cause for delay is upon the prosecution. People v. Morino, 85 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 892. In this behalf the respondent shows that under date of September 15, 1920, the district attorney of Los Angeles county caused to be printed and sent to the police departments of the principal cities of the United States a circular bearing what purported to be a photographic likeness of the petitioner over which were the words "Arrest this man," and beneath which was the name "Louis Gear" in large letters, followed by smaller lettered words of description, including the following:

"Alias Thomas Gere, alias Thomas McLain, alias George Wilson, * * * This man is wanted for the crime of grand larceny, having buncoed a man out of fifty thousand dollars by means of fake stock deals. Address all communications or wire information to" —the district attorney of Los Angeles county. These circulars were not broadcast in the city of Los Angeles, but deputy sheriffs were detailed to the especial duty of ferreting out and arresting men guilty of this particular class of crime. The deputy sheriff in charge of these investigations at the time of the finding of the indictment against petitioner died shortly thereafter, and another deputy was assigned in his place. Just what efforts he employed during the short time he was in charge is not disclosed, but in April, 1921, another officer was placed in charge who sought in numerous ways to locate the petitioner. In company with the complaining witness, John F. Herr, this officer went out some two dozen times in an endeavor to locate him, but without avail.

The photograph of petitioner, hereinbefore mentioned, was obtained from the Los Angeles police department, and on it is indorsed "L. Gear," as the name of the person whose photograph it purported to be. Petitioner was also known as Louis Gear, Louise Gere, Thomas Gere, Thomas Geere, Thomas McLain, George Wilson, George Baily, and Fred Williams. A witness who was a neighbor of petitioner for over two years testified that he knew him as Gere (pronounced Ge-ray). The complaining witness knew him as Fred Williams. In this connection it may be related that the petitioner was designated in the indictment as Fred Williams. The Supreme Court refers to him in the case of People v. Berry, 215 Pac. at page 78, in the following quotation:

"Mr. Herr [the prosecuting witness] made the acquaintance of Fred Williams in a city park in Los Angeles. They soon thereafter visited another of the city's recreation grounds, namely, Westlake Park, where they had the misfortune (for Herr) to meet Dorchester. We have already had some inkling of Dorchester's pursuits, which, the sequel shows, were shared by Williams. Herr was induced by these worthies to enter into a fictitious stock transaction, during the course of which he intrusted to Williams, duly indorsed, 60 shares of Pennsylvania Railroad stock, 1,000 shares of Guarantee Trust Company stock, a bank certificate for $500, $620 in travelers' checks, together with $12,000 of Liberty bonds. All these valuables were by Williams 'lost' in the same manner as Donohue's securities, and Herr was hurried off to New Orleans, where his recently found friends were to join him and together they were to retrieve their ill fortune."

The foregoing is recited, not as indicating petitioner's guilt, for he has not been tried, but for the purpose of suggesting the likelihood of petitioner's endeavor to conceal his identity and thus avoid arrest, if the recited facts be true.

Petitioner was taken into custody on August 13, not because he was recognized as the defendant in said action, but because of the suspicious circumstance that he was seen in the company of one Gleason, who was wanted in the state of Georgia on a similar charge. The officer who took petitioner into custody testified that when the arrest was made the petitioner gave his name as Williams or Wilson. Petitioner was taken to the district attorney's office and questioned. He there stated that he was a newspaper man employed on a New York newspaper, and had been in California between two and three months. He was then placed in the county jail. When he was booked at the jail he stated to the clerk that his residence was at Rivera, and that he had been in this state three weeks. Then or shortly thereafter he was identified as the Fred Williams named as a defendant in the indictment then pending. When arraigned he first gave his true name as Louis Geere. Later on in the trial court he gave his true name as Thomas P. Gere, and the proceeding in this court is conducted by him under the name last given.

[2] It is conceded that the constitutional guaranty of a speedy trial and the provisions of section 1382 of the Penal Code, adopted in pursuance thereof, do not operate in favor of a fugitive from justice. It must also be true that the law on this subject should not be permitted to work to the advantage of one whose arrest has been delayed because of his own wrong. In other words, one whose dissimulation, falsity, and deceit have been a contributory factor in the delay in the matter of his apprehension is in no position to complain that he was not arrested and his case not brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the indictment or information. In such a case the constitutional and statutory right to a speedy trial would be available to him only after he had been taken into custody, and the court had acquired jurisdiction to proceed with the trial. In Ford v. Superior Court, 17 Cal. App. 1, 118 Pac. 96, the court, in an original proceeding in mandate, ordered a prosecution dismissed because no good cause for the delay had been shown. The only reason three given for the delay was that an alleged material witness for the prosecution, not under subpoena or order of court, was out of the state and was expected to return at some future time. In commenting on the facts and circumstances shown in that case, the court said:

"Of course, underlying all that has been said is the familiar maxim of jurisprudence that 'No one can take advantage of his own wrong'; and a showing that the absence of an adverse witness was instigated, or knowingly aided and abetted, by a defendant would be ample justification for prolonged, if not indefinite, continuances, in aid of a bona fide endeavor to apprehend a defaulting witness which in all likelihood will result in his return to the jurisdiction of the court."

[3] The petitioner sought to rebut the showing of diligence on the part of the prosecution by proof, in response to allegations of the petition, that he had lived in the city of Los Angeles continuously since the finding of the indictment. A brother-in-law of petitioner testified that he had known petitioner for about six years; that for three years he had visited at his place of residence several times; that for about one year prior to his arrest the petitioner had been engaged with him in a financial way in his business as a ditch-digging contractor; that he did not know what petitioner's business was prior to the past year; that petitioner had lived in Los Angeles for over three years and had gone freely about the streets as a pedestrian and riding in automobiles; and that he had never disguised himself. Petitioner's mother-in-law also testified that he had lived in Los Angeles during the past three years. A neighbor of petitioner testified that she knew him under the name of Thomas Geere. An employee of the brother-in-law testified that he had known petitioner for over two years as Tom Geere. Another witness testified that he had seen petitioner six or seven times during the past six or seven years. It is also shown that the Los Angeles city directory for the year 1920 contained the name "Thomas P. Gere, real estate, 4900 5th ave.;" for the year 1921, the name "Thomas P. Gere, traveling salesman, 4900 5th ave.;" for the year 1922 the name "Thomas R. Gere, 1117 West 78th, writer;" and for the year 1923 the name "Thomas Gere, salesman, 1117 West 76th st."

Such, in brief, was the showing by petitioner of his presence in Los Angeles since the finding of the indictment. But, notwithstanding such showing, we have the proof as above outlined, which satisfied us that the prosecution exercised reasonable diligence under the circumstances in an attempt to locate the petitioner. In addition, it is reasonable to conclude from the facts disclosed in the record that the only purpose of petitioner in assuming numerous fictitious names from a time even prior to the finding of the indictment was to render his arrest less likely. No reason for the change of names in the 1922 and 1923 directories is suggested, and we have the admission of petitioner, which is not denied, that he had been in California but three weeks prior to his arrest. The showing by the prosecution of what was done to locate the petitioner and also of his own misconduct in our opinion constitute good cause for the delay in his apprehension. And, of course, no trial could be had unless he were in custody. If he had succeeded in his purpose to deceive the authorities at the time he was taken into custody, the period of time between the finding of the indictment and his arrest would perhaps have been indefinitely lengthened.

Petitioner contends that as his photograph was in the possession of the police department it would be reasonable to suppose that he could be identified. An observation of his dapper personal appearance in court, and an inspection of the collarless and unshaven subject of the photograph, lead to the conclusion that a casual or even a close observer would have difficulty in determining that the two were one and the same person.

[4] The second contention of the petitioner, namely, that the names of all of the witnesses appearing against him before the grand jury were not indorsed on the indictment, may be answered by the statement that the proof is entirely lacking in support of the contention. Section 995 of the Penal Code provides that an indictment must be set aside—

"when it appears by the testimony of the foreman or secretary of the grand jury that the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, * * * are not inserted at the foot of the indictment or indorsed thereon."

[5] Respondent presents cogent reasons, but without the citation of authority, why the court should not entertain this point in this proceeding. The argument is that an order denying a motion to set aside the indictment on this ground is, if improperly made, no more than an error in the course of the proceedings in the trial court and reviewable only on appeal, and that, when the motion is denied, the defendant, under section 995 of the Penal Code, must immediately answer the indictment by demurring or pleading thereto. But assuming that the contention may properly be passed upon, it appears that the foreman of the grand jury was called as a witness for petitioner. He stated that he could not recall the names of all witnesses who appeared before the grand jury in the matter, and that the only way he could ascertain them was by reference to the records which were in the hands of the secretary. The secretary was then called. He testified that no witnesses appeared before the grand jury in the case against Gere other than those names appeared on the indictment. Counsel for petitioner sought himself to examine the records of the grand jury, and further sought to prove his contention by the phonographic reporter, who took down and transcribed the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before the grand jury. He was very properly not permitted to do so. Obviously, the only witnesses competent to prove his contention were, under said section 995, the foreman and secretary of the grand jury. The foreman had not sufficient recollection on the subject to state the facts, and by the secretary it was shown that there was no basis for the contention.

Other points are made by the respondent, but we deem it unnecessary to discuss them, in view of our conclusions as to the contentions of the petitioner.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner is remanded.

PEOPLE v. HINKLE. (Cr. 1017.)

1. Criminal law —478(1)—Officers held qualified to give expert testimony as to gambling paraphernalia.

Officers who have been specially detailed to ferret out cases of race track gambling, and who have gained a special knowledge of such matter, may testify as experts that papers taken from defendant were a "register of bets" and a "bookmaker's chart"; the extent of their qualification going to the weight, rather than the admissibility, of their testimony.

2. Criminal law —481, 1153(2)—Qualifications of officers to testify as experts on race track gambling in discretion of court.

Qualifications of officers to testify as experts as to the modus operandi of race track gambling is a matter largely in the court's discretion, whose action will not be disturbed except for actual want of evidence to support or a clear abuse of discretion.

3. Criminal law —304(21)—Judicial notice not taken of gambling symbols.

The courts do not take judicial notice of the meaning of the signs and characters used by horse race gamblers.

4. Criminal law —449(1)—Meaning of symbols on "register of bets" and "bookmaker's chart" proper subjects for opinion testimony.

Papers taken from defendants charged with race track gambling called a "register of bets" and a "bookmaker's chart" held proper subjects for opinion testimony by officers as to the meaning of letters and figures thereon.

5. Gaming —98(3)—Evidence held to sustain conviction.

Evidence held to sustain conviction under Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 2, for occupying a room with papers for the purpose of recording bets on horse races.

6. Gaming —73—Proof that bet was made or race actually run unnecessary to sustain conviction for bookmaking.

To sustain conviction under Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 2, for occupying a room with papers for the purpose of recording bets on horse races, it is unnecessary to show the bet made or the race run.

7. Criminal law —480—Refusal to permit preliminary cross-examination as to qualifications of expert not reversible error.

Whether qualifications of an expert witness shall be tested by cross-examination before or after stating his opinion is a matter of procedure, not of right, and refusal to permit a preliminary cross-examination, though perhaps not best practice, is not reversible error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

William Hinkle was convicted of race track gambling, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. By an information containing three counts defendant was charged, in the first count, with the crime of occupying a room with papers for the purpose of recording bets upon the result of a contest of speed between horses—the offense defined in subdivision 2 of section 337a of the Penal Code. In the second and third counts he was charged, respectively, with the offenses defined in subdivisions 3 and 4 of the section. The jury returned a verdict of guilty on all three of the counts. A new trial was granted as to counts 2 and 3. The appeal is from the judgment of conviction on count 1 and from the order denying defendant a new trial on that count.

The facts, in brief, are as follows: Defendant was the proprietor of a cigar store on the ground floor of a building fronting on a street in the city of San Diego. At the time mentioned in the information two San Diego police officers, while driving in an automobile along the street on which the store faced, saw two men inside defendant's premises. These two persons were seen standing in front of the cigar counter engaged in conversation with defendant. One of the men was leaning over the counter. As the officers rode by they observed defendant writing on a pad of paper which lay on the counter. This document, later taken from defendant's person by one of the officers, was, so the officers testified, a "register of bets"—a document ordinarily used by bookmakers for the purpose of recording bets on horse races. As the officers passed the store they observed another man, an employee of defendant, whom the officers referred to in their testimony as the "lookout." He was standing at the door which led into defendant's store. Observing these things, the officers hurriedly parked their automobile near by and immediately returned to defendant's place of business. As they entered, defendant's employee—the person whom the officers previously had observed standing in the doorway—turned toward defendant and exclaimed, "Look out!" By that time the two men whom the officers had seen in the store talking with defendant while the latter was writing on the pad of paper had moved from the spot where they had stood in front of the cigar counter and were then standing on the sidewalk in front of the store. Defendant was telephoning when the officers entered the store. Between the time when the officers first observed defendant as they drove by and the time when they walked into the store—a brief period, not exceeding two minutes—defendant had taken from the cigar stand the pad of paper—the document which was described by the officers as a "register of bets"—and had folded it and put it in his pocket. One of the officers demanded that he surrender it. Defendant refused to hand it over. Whereupon the officer forcibly took the document from him. Referring to this incident, the officer testified:

"I came in, and he took it [the register of bets] up off the counter, folded it up, and started to put it in his pocket, and he started backing away from me and would not give it to me, so I backed him up against the wall and took it away from him."

Defendant told the officers that he had just made two bets and was sending the paper to the race track at Tia Juana. At the same time the officers took from defendant, or from under his cigar counter, another document which they described as a "bookmaker's chart."

[1] Appellant claims that the court erred in permitting the arresting officers to testify that the two papers which they took from him were, respectively, a register of bets and a bookmaker's chart, and are such papers as ordinarily are used by bookmakers. The officers were qualified by experience to give expert testimony. Long prior to the time when they arrested appellant they had been specially detailed to work on cases of this character. Their duties often took them to the race track at Tia Juana, where, as well as in the haunts of the bookmakers, pursuing their calling in the city of San Diego, they had made a study of race track gambling and its modus operandi. They had acquired experience in ferreting out offenders engaged in violating the provisions of this act. As a part of their duties they had familiarized themselves with the papers, books and paraphernalia ordinarily used by bookmakers. They had acquired some special knowledge of a subject which is not within the common experience of mankind generally. They possessed a knowledge which ordinarily does not come within the ken of the average member of a mixed jury of men and women—the juror who has moved in only the routine walks of an exemplary life and has not permitted his feet to wander into the forbidden byways frequented by the gamester. The experience thus gained by the officers was clearly sufficient to establish prima facie their competency to give expert testimony as to the character of the documents which they had taken from appellant, as well as to the significance of the cryptic letters and figures which were written on those documents. See Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 570, 571, 147 Pac. 238, and Miller v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 255, 131 Pac. 717, L. R. A. 1915A, p. 1088. The extent of the special knowledge acquired by these officers went to the weight of their testimony rather than to its admissibility. In State v. Wolfey, 75 Kan. 406, 89 Pac. 1046, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 12 Ann. Cas. 412, it is said:

"There was no error in allowing opinions to be given regarding the inferences to be drawn from the appearance of cattle brands, even by witnesses whose experience was not such as to enable them to speak with authority, for they had some special training in the matter—the extent of it went to the weight rather than to the admissibility of their testimony."

See, also, Corpus Juris, vol. 22, p. 522, § 607.

[2] Whether or not the qualification of a witness with respect to knowledge or special experience is sufficiently established is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court, and its determination of the matter will not be overturned on appeal unless there be an actual want of evidence to support it or a clear abuse of discretion in ruling upon the evidence given on the subject. Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., supra.

[3,4] Not only were the arresting officers qualified by experience to give expert testimony, but the nature of the documents taken from appellant's possession was such as to call for opinion evidence to explain their hidden meaning. Courts do not take judicial notice of the meaning of the signs and characters used by horse race gamblers. Neither the judge nor the jury could properly speculate upon what was the peculiar significance to be given to the kabalistic letters and figures which appeared on the papers taken from appellant, or what meaning they would convey to the minds of men instructed in the bookmakers' school. But while these characters were a concealed mystery to the uninitiated, they were as an open book to those who, by their study of the methods and instrumentalities employed by bookmakers, had been inducted into the arcana of the gambler's craft. It was therefore proper to permit the officers to explain to the jury the nature and character of the papers taken from appellant and to state what, in their opinion, is the peculiar significance attaching to the letters and figures which appeared on these two exhibits. State v. Gaines, 32 R. I. 462, 79 Atl. 1107; People v. Sutherland, (Cal. App.) 210 Pac. 965; People v. Emerson (Sup.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 374; sec. 1863, Code Civ. Proc. See, also, State v. McKone, 31 N. D. 547, 154 N. W. 256; State v. Rothschild, 19 Mo. App. 137; State v. Wetherell, 70 Vt. 274, 40 Atl. 728; Becker v. Fitch, 66 Okl. 57, 167 Pac. 202, 2 A. L. R. 340; McGarity v. State, 151 Ark. 423, 236 S. W. 611; and McGuffin v. State, 156 Ark. 392, 246 S. W. 478.

[5,6] The evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict. It was not necessary to show that a horse race was actually run. People v. Carroll, 54 Cal. App. 684, 202 Pac. 885. Nor was it necessary to show that a bet was actually made. An offense of the character charged in the first count of this information—the offense defined in the second subdivision of section 337a—is complete when it is shown that the accused occupied a room or inclosure with a paper for the purpose of recording a bet or bets on the result or purported result of any horse race or purported horse race. It is the occupancy of a room with a paper for the purpose of recording such bets, not the actual making of the bets, which constitutes the offense denounced by this subdivision of the Code section. Here the evidence of the arresting officers warranted the jury in finding that at least one of the papers in appellant's possession was such as is ordinarily used for the purpose of recording bets on horse races. The possession of such a paper, when considered in the light of appellant's conduct immediately prior to and at the time of his arrest, fully warranted the jury in inferring that he was occupying his cigar store with this paper for the purpose of recording bets on the result of a contest of speed between horses. It is hardly to be supposed that one innocently in possession of such a paper would seek to conceal it from the police officers, as defendant did. The circumstances of the case point unerringly to the conclusion that appellant had the paper in his possession for the unlawful purpose defined by the act. That the paper was in a room occupied by him is not disputed. Every element of the offense was, therefore, sufficiently established.

[7] While it may be the better rule to allow cross-examination of an expert as to his competency before he gives his opinion, it was not error, certainly not reversible error, to refuse appellant's counsel permission to cross-examine the police officers as to their qualifications before they were permitted to give their opinion evidence. On regular cross-examination, after the witness has completed his direct examination, his competency as an expert can be tested. That was the procedure which the court enforced in the instant case. Such cross-examination, conducted after each officer had concluded his direct examination, did not affect in any material degree the evidence which the witness had given on his direct examination respecting his competency. Whether an opposing party shall be accorded permission to test the qualifications of an expert by a preliminary cross-examination before the witness states his opinion, or whether the privilege of testing the witness' competency shall be exercised on his regular cross-examination after he has given his opinion and has concluded his direct examination, involves, not a matter of right, but a question of procedure which lies within the discretionary power of the trial court. Finch v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 46 Minn. 250, 48 N. W. 915; City of Fort Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 75, 7 N. E. 743, 57 Am. Rep. 82; Sarle v. Arnold, 7 R. I. 582; In re Gorkow's Estate, 20 Wash. 563, 56 Pac. 385.

We have examined the record with care and have found no substantial ground for complaint against the manner in which the case was tried by the court below. In other words, we have found no prejudicial error.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

64 Cal. App. 352
PEOPLE v. HUBER. (Cr. 727.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 8, 1923.)

1. Highways $\S$ 186—Indictment and information $\S$ 110(47)—Information charging failure to stop automobile after accident or render assistance and give required information held sufficient, though not sufficiently alleging necessity of assistance; failure to comply with any requirement of Motor Vehicle Act is offense.

An information charging, in language almost identical with that of Motor Vehicle Act, $\S$ 21, that defendant failed to stop his automobile after striking a pedestrian, or to render assistance to the latter, and give him the number of the automobile or name of the owner, held not objectionable as not conforming to the requirements of Pen. Code, $\S\S$ 950, 952, though it did not allege with certainty that any assistance was necessary; failure to comply with any of the requirements of section 21 constituting a complete offense.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1169(2)—Admission of testimony that automobilist striking pedestrian did not give required information to bystander held not prejudicial error.

In a prosecution of an automobile driver for failure to stop after striking a pedestrian and give him the information required by Motor Vehicle Act, $\S$ 21, admission of a bystander's testimony that defendant did not give the witness such information held not prejudicial to defendant, in view of his own statement as to facts from which any jury would know that no such information was given to any one.

3. Highways $\S$ 186—Automobile driver's ignorance of extent of injuries to pedestrian no defense to prosecution for failure to offer assistance.

An automobile driver's ignorance of the extent of injuries to a pedestrian struck by his car is no defense to a prosecution for failing to offer assistance as required by Motor Vehicle Act, $\S$ 21.

4. Highways $\S$ 186—Inability of pedestrian struck by automobile to receive required information from driver no excuse for failure to stop and offer assistance.

That a pedestrian struck by an automobile was rendered unconscious and unable to receive the information required of the driver by Motor Vehicle Act, $\S$ 21, is no excuse for violating the act by failing to stop and offer assistance.

5. Criminal law — § 1169(1)—Error in admission of testimony as to matters known to jury not prejudicial.

Technical errors in admission of testimony as to matters of which the jury had knowledge are not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Joe Huber was convicted of violating Motor Vehicle Act, § 21, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Holl & Waggoner, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was convicted of violating the provisions of section 21 of the Motor Vehicle Act approved May 10, 1915 (St. 1915, p. 397), and prosecutes this appeal therefrom. It appears from the transcript that along about 7 o'clock on the evening of the 23d of December, 1922, the defendant was driving a Ford automobile on one of the roads leading from the town of Susanville; that as he neared a small place called Halltown his car collided with and knocked down a man by the name of Steve Begley; said Steve Begley and his son Deryl Begley were walking along the highway toward their home; Deryl stepped to one side and the car passed him without doing any injury. The responsibility for the collision or injury has no place in this case. After knocking down Begley, the defendant continued on his course for some little distance; just how far the evidence does not clearly establish, the testimony being, according to various witnesses, from 70 feet to 200 yards. After stopping his machine, the defendant merely looked back and then drove on. There is no dispute in the testimony upon this point. The defendant did not take the witness stand upon the trial of this case, but at the coroner's inquest he did give his version of the incident, and this version was introduced in evidence by the district attorney and is substantially as follows: I had been out hunting, came back to town, had supper, went to a bakery shop, I drove around town a few minutes, took my car, and started to go home. There were lots of cars going with bright lights that were blinding my eyes. I tried to speed along up a little hill and, bang. I never saw that man before. I thought the machine had passed. I got out and drove for about 200 yards and stopped and saw nobody. The windshield was broken, and I thought I had hit a man and drove over and around by the butcher shop to Emigs. Mr. Goodfellow came in and asked me where I hit a man, and I said I did not hit a man. I was down there with another fellow at the cabin, and he said, "Joe, it is better that you go over there and report it," and I walked in the house and took a drink. It was so excited myself and thought I had hurt a man a little. Then I took a drink, and the sheriff came in and wanted to take the bottle out of my pocket. Whether the defendant had been drinking prior to the collision does not appear from the testimony. Suffice it so say that he was not prosecuted under any provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act than those contained in section 21, hereinbefore referred to. Upon arraignment defendant interposed a demurrer setting forth eight different grounds why it should be sustained, the principal ones being that the information does not conform to the requirements of sections 950 and 952 of the Penal Code. The charging part of the information, after giving date and place, reads as follows:

"Was then and there driving a motor vehicle, to wit, an automobile, and while so driving said automobile, said automobile struck and collided with a person, to wit, Steve Begley, as he the said Joe Huber then and there well knew and although said Joe Huber knew that his said automobile had struck and collided with said person, Steve Begley, he, the said Joe Huber, did then and there unlawfully, willfully and feloniously fail and refuse to stop or cause to be stopped, either immediately or at all his said automobile, or to forthwith or at all render all necessary or any assistance to the said Steve Begley, the person who was then and there struck and collided with by the automobile so driven by the said Joe Huber and the said Joe Huber did then and there fail and refuse to carry the said Steve Begley to a physician or surgeon for medical or surgical treatment, and the said Joe Huber then and there failed and refused to give or cause to be given to the said Steve Begley the person collided with and struck by the automobile so driven by the said Joe Huber, the number of said automobile, or the name of the owner of said automobile or the name of the passenger or any passenger in the said automobile at the time of the said striking and collision aforesaid or at all."

[1] It will thus be seen that the information is almost identical with the language used in section 21 of the Motor Vehicle Act. It is true that there are a number of specific things required to be done by that section in the event of a collision with or injury to a person on the highway, yet the information following the language of the statute, as above quoted, charges in fact but one offense. That but one offense is charged is clearly established by the case of People v. Barnovich, 16 Cal. App. 427, 117 Pac. 572. It is the failure to comply with any one of the requirements of said section that renders the person so failing amenable to prosecution. It is not alleged in the information that any assistance was necessary to be given to the injured person, but the information nevertheless charges a complete offense in that it is therein stated in both clear and concise language that the defendant did not stop his automobile and also failed and neglected to give the information required by the statute. Having charged sufficient to constitute an offense the demurrer was properly overruled, even though it be admitted that the information does not with sufficient certainty show that any assistance should have been given by the defendant to Steve Begley, the injured person.

[2] It is also strongly contended that the court erred in permitting the witness Deryl Begley to testify that the defendant did not give him (the witness) any of the information required by section 21 of the Motor Vehicle Act to be given to the injured person. The statute does not in terms require such information to be given to a bystander, but we cannot very well see how the defendant has been injured by the admission of such testimony. His own statement shows that he drove on some little distance, merely stopped, did not get out of the machine, did not go back to the scene of the collision, but drove away and remained away until apprehended by the officers. Any jury of reasonable intelligence would necessarily know that no such information was given to any one by the defendant for the simple reason that he did not return to where the collision had taken place to make it possible for him to comply with the terms and provisions of the statute. The statute clearly means, if it means anything, that the defendant under such circumstances must stop his automobile as soon as reasonably possible, return to the scene of the collision and offer to do all and singular the acts required by section 21 of the Motor Vehicle Act. It does not mean that a person under such circumstances is excusable if he simply stops his machine, looks back, learns nothing of what he has done, and then drives on, leaving his helpless victim to the tender mercies of chance passers-by.

[3] It cannot be the law that the innocence of an automobile driver depends upon his ignorance of the extent of the injuries he has committed. In this particular the appellant complains strongly of instruction number 14½, given by the trial court of its own motion. It is:

"You are instructed that if you find from the evidence in this case, to and beyond a reasonable doubt, that a motor vehicle driven by the defendant did strike one Steve Begley, and that he, the said defendant, knew that he had so struck the said Steve Begley and did fail to stop his said motor vehicle or stopping said motor vehicle immediately drove away and failed to do any of the things required to be done by him under the circumstances by the statute hereinabove read, and as charged in the information, then it is your duty to find the defendant guilty as charged in the information."

As we have shown, the defendant by his own testimony establishes the fact of his knowledge of having hit a man and also that he drove away without attempting or offering to render any assistance to the person injured or to do any of the things required by the Motor Vehicle Act under such circumstances. In this connection the appellant asked, and the court refused to give, the following instruction:

"A man cannot be guilty by reason of his failure to do a certain thing, unless he knows the facts which make it his duty to do that thing."

In other words, if the defendant failed to stop his machine, failed to make any inquiries to ascertain the damages or injuries inflicted upon the person with whom he had collided, and failed to do everything required to be done by the statute, then and in that case the jury should be told to acquit because the defendant was ignorant of what he should do under such circumstances. Again, we say we cannot subscribe to the doctrine that an automobile driver's innocence depends upon his ignorance of the extent of the injuries he has inflicted. Instruction No. 16, given by the court at the request of the defendant, was certainly as favorable as could have been reasonably asked for. It is as follows:

"If you find that after the collision all assistance necessarily was rendered to the person collided with, more promptly than it was possible for the defendant to have rendered it, and that the defendant had reason to believe and did believe that such assistance was being so rendered, then you should not find the defendant guilty because he did not personally render such assistance."

[4] As the defendant immediately drove away, and did not return to the scene of the collision to learn what was being done, we do not see how the jury, even under so favorable an instruction, could conclude that the defendant either believed, or had any reason to believe, that any assistance whatever was being given to Steve Begley unless it be that automobile drivers have the right to depend upon the humanitarian instincts of passers-by who are not responsible for damages done or injuries inflicted. Nor do we think the defendant was injured by reason of the refusal to give instructions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 which have to do with giving information to the person where the person to whom the information is to be given is unconscious or is in a condition unable to receive such information.

[5] It appears from the testimony that the injured person was rendered unconscious and of course, could not at the immediate time of the injury or within a short period thereafter and during the time he was unconscious have received such information. Giving the information required by the statute is only a part of some of the things required to be done on the part of an automobile driver and to render himself excusable it is necessary for the driver who strikes down a person on the highway to stop his machine and stand ready and offer to comply with the various provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act and because he cannot do all he cannot be excused for failure to do and perform all and singular the acts which he might have done. In this case, as we have seen, the defendant made no attempt to comply with any of the provisions of the law applicable in the event of collisions or injuries to persons or property upon the highway. The testimony shows an aggravated case fully warranting the verdict of the jury and the sentence imposed by the court, to wit, imprisonment in the state prison. The technical errors in the admission of testimony to which we have adverted relate to matters of which the jury had knowledge and, therefore could not in any manner have been prejudicial.

We think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

OBERKOTTER v. SPRECKELS et al.
(Civ. 4211.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 21, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 17, 1924.)

1. Appeal and error §544(3)—Printed transcript containing no copy of bills of exceptions, judgment roll alone considered.

Where record of appeal was not brought up under the alternative method, and printed transcript contains no copy of any bill of exceptions, only the judgment roll, consisting of pleadings, orders on demurrers, and judgment of dismissal, may be considered.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit §60(1)—Inherent power in court to dismiss action for lack of diligent prosecution.

Where jury disagreed in trial of cause on April 9, 1920, and on April 20, 1922, defendant moved for dismissal because plaintiff had not diligently prosecuted, if Code Civ. Proc. § 583, providing that trial court may dismiss actions for want of prosecution whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring action to trial, was not applicable, trial court could resort to its inherent power to pass on motion and grant or deny it.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit §60(1)—Defendant may move to dismiss without showing effort to bring about trial.

Where two years after jury disagreed at trial, defendant could properly move to dismiss for want of diligent prosecution, without showing an effort on its part to bring about a trial.

4. Appeal and error §907(3)—On appeal on judgment roll alone, intendments favor trial court's action.

On appeal on judgment roll alone, all intendments will be made in favor of trial court's action, and support of judgment, and if error is claimed the record must contain sufficient legal evidence of it.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment based on an order dismissing the action for lack of diligent prosecution.

[1] The record on appeal was not brought up under the so-called alternative method, and the printed transcript contains no copy of any bill of exceptions. This is pointed out in the opinion filed by us when denying respondents' motion to dismiss the appeal (Cal. App.) 219 Pac. 1010. Since no bill of exceptions appears in the printed record, we may properly consider naught but the judgment roll—that is, naught but the pleadings, the orders made on demurrer and the judgment of dismissal. It is from these, and from these only, that we must learn of the facts which confronted the trial court when it granted defendants' motion to dismiss the action.

[2] The following are the facts as shown by those parts of the printed transcript which we may consider:

"The action is one to recover damages for an alleged libel. Plaintiff filed his complaint June 7, 1919. A demurrer thereto was sustained November 3, 1919. An amended complaint was filed by plaintiff November 13, 1919. A demurrer to the amended complaint was overruled, and defendant answered January 5, 1920. The case was set for trial before a jury on April 5, 1920. The trial consumed about four days. After the introduction of evidence the cause was submitted to the jury, and on April 9, 1920, that body returned to the courtroom and announced that it was unable to agree upon a verdict; whereupon the jury was dismissed. No further action was taken in the case until the expiration of more than two years, when defendants, on April 17, 1922, filed notice of their intention to move for a dismissal of the action upon the ground that plaintiff had not diligently prosecuted it. The motion to dismiss came on for hearing April 24, 1922. On that day the court, according to a recital in its judgment of dismissal, examined the record and affidavits on file, and from such examination found that no sufficient excuse has been given by the plaintiff for his lack of diligence in prosecuting said action, and that said action should be dismissed."

Whereupon it was ordered that the cause be dismissed, and judgment of dismissal was entered accordingly. Though it is recited in the judgment of dismissal that the trial court "examined the records * * * and affidavits on file herein," we have no means of knowing the contents of those affidavits, because, as we have said, the appeal has not been prosecuted under the so-called alternative method, and no bill of exceptions appears in the printed transcript.

The evident reason for the dismissal of the action was that plaintiff permitted a period of more than two years to elapse after the first and only trial of the case without doing anything further to expedite his cause to a final determination. It is provided by section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the trial court may in its discretion dismiss an action for want of prosecution, "whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring such action to trial." Because the action was in fact brought to trial within the two-year period designated in the section, it is argued by appellant that the case is not one of those intended to be covered by that legislative provision. We do not find it necessary to pass upon this question. Section 583 certainly does not forbid a dismissal of the action under the circumstances here presented, and, if authority for the dismissal cannot be found in that legislative enactment, it can be found in the court's inherent power to dismiss an action for lack of diligent prosecution. There is nothing in the record before us to show that the trial court abused its discretion. If, therefore, the Legislature intended that section 583 should be applicable where, as here, the action was brought to trial within two years after answer filed, but the jury disagreed and nothing more was done during the ensuing two years, then the dismissal was proper because authorized by the statute. If, on the other hand, this Code section was not intended to cover a situation such as that here presented, then we have a case where no statutory authority for the dismissal exists. But if the case is not embraced by the terms of the statute, then the court could resort to its inherent power to pass on the motion and to grant it or deny it. See Kaster v. Superior Court, 34 Cal. App. 88, 166 Pac. 852.

"It is settled by numerous decisions in this state that the superior court, without the aid of statutory authority, has power to dismiss an action because of the failure of the plaintiff to prosecute it with reasonable diligence." Romeo v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 Pac. 1002.

[3, 4] What we thus far have said seems to be conceded. It is claimed, however, that if the dismissal was not made under section 583, but in the exercise of the court's inherent power, then the motion to dismiss should have been denied for the reason that defendants made no effort to have the case set for trial. The argument is that it was equally within the power of defendants, as it was equally their duty, to have the case set for trial, and that, since plaintiff and defendants stood upon precisely the same ground in this regard, neither could charge the other with a lack of diligence.

The contention lacks merit. In the first place, even if it were the rule that a defendant must himself seek to have the cause set for trial before he can successfully prosecute a motion to dismiss, we would be compelled to assume, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing the contrary, that defendants did seek to have the case set for trial, but that plaintiff chose not to try it. When an appeal to this court is to be determined upon the judgment roll alone, all intendments will be made in favor of the action of the trial court and in support of the judgment; and if error is claimed the record on appeal must contain sufficient legal evidence of it. Waymire v. California Trona Co., 176 Cal. 399, 168 Pac. 563. But appellant is mistaken in assuming that a defendant must seek to have the action set for trial before he can move its dismissal for want of diligent prosecution.

The established doctrine in this state is that it is the plaintiff upon whom rests the duty to use diligence at every stage of the proceeding to expedite his case to a final determination. It is true that the defendant may bring about a trial of the case, but he is under no legal duty to do so. His presence in the case is involuntary, and his attitude toward it is quite different from that of the plaintiff; he is put to a defense only, and can be charged with no neglect for failing to do more than meet the plaintiff step by step. Mowry v. Weisenborn, 137 Cal. 113, 69 Pac. 971. Simmons v. Keller, 50 Cal. 38, is directly in point. There the plaintiff, appealing from a judgment dismissing the action for want of prosecution, urged, as does appellant here, that—"When the defendant can himself bring the cause to trial he cannot have judgment, as in the case of nonsuit, for the obvious reason that he is as much in default as the plaintiff for not bringing the case to trial."

The judgment of dismissal was, nevertheless, affirmed.

We have considered the points raised by appellant, notwithstanding the briefs filed in his behalf contain language which so reflects upon the character of the trial judge as to require that they be stricken from the files. To save appellant from the consequences of his counsel's improprieties we have examined the briefs, but we cannot permit them to remain a part of the records of this court.

It is ordered that appellant's opening and closing briefs be stricken from the files. The judgment is affirmed.

4. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 89—State to which mortgaged chattel is removed will recognize lien even as against innocent purchasers or incumbrancers.

Under the rule of comity between states, a state to which a mortgaged chattel is removed will recognize and sanction enforcement of the lien even as against innocent purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith and for value.

5. Roplevin $\S$ 1—Ultimate issue is plaintiff's right to possession of specific personalty.

The ultimate issue in an action in claim and delivery is whether plaintiff is entitled to possession of the specific personalty concerned.

6. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 172(5)—Proof necessary to support mortgagee's action for possession of mortgaged truck stated.

In claim and delivery for possession of a truck removed from another state in violation of a chattel mortgage executed therein, plaintiff need merely show its right to possession by proof that mortgagor owed plaintiff a debt, to secure which he duly executed a mortgage stipulating that on default in payment of the debt plaintiff could take possession of the truck, and that he did default in such payment.

7. Evidence $\S$ 353(15), 383(7)—Mortgage executed and recorded in another state held competent and sufficient evidence of debt, terms of payment, and consequence of default.

A chattel mortgage executed and recorded in another state held competent and sufficient evidence of the debt secured, terms of payment, and consequences of default, in the absence of a sufficient counter showing, irrespective of the sufficiency of the recording officer's certificate as evidence of its recordation.

8. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 68—Execution in mode prescribed by laws of state in which executed held shown.

Testimony and an admission as to execution of a chattel mortgage, according in form and other respects with the requirements of the laws of the state in which executed, held sufficient to show its execution in the mode prescribed by such laws.

9. Evidence $\S$ 343(4)—Recording officer not required to hold "legal custody of original instrument."

The officer recording a mortgage has the legal custody of the record of the original instrument, but does not have and is not required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1918, subd. 7, requiring certification of copies "by the officer having the legal custody of the original," to have such custody of the original itself.

10. Pleading $\S$ 126—Issue as to recordation held not raised by negative pregnant.

An answer denying "that said mortgage was after the execution thereof and on the 7th day of October, 1920, duly recorded," etc., held to have tendered no issue on the question of recordation; such denial involving a negative pregnant.

11. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 93—Presence of mortgaged chattel in state at time of recordation held sufficiently shown.

Testimony that a truck covered by a mortgage executed in another state was in such state at the time held sufficient to show that it was there when the mortgage was recorded, in the absence of sufficient countervailing proof to dispel the presumption created by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subs. 19, 20, 32.

12. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Sufficiency of evidence to overcome presumption generally for trial court.

Whether evidence is sufficient to destroy the presumption created by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subs. 19, 20, 32, that a mortgaged chattel was in the state wherein the mortgage was recorded on such date, is peculiarly the function of the trial court, whose findings will not be disturbed unless there is something in the nature of the evidence requiring a court of review to declare it sufficient.

13. Evidence — 589—Testimony in support of contention that mortgaged truck was in state on day mortgage was recorded in another state held properly disregarded.

In claim and delivery for possession of a truck removed from another state in violation of a chattel mortgage executed and recorded therein, the court, in the exercise of its discretion in passing on the credibility of witnesses and weight of evidence, did not err in disregarding the testimony of a second mortgagee that, if mortgagor first appeared in California with the truck on the day the first mortgage was recorded, the witness "must" have seen him and the truck the following day.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by the Motor Investment Company against Leon Breslauer and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for appellants.
Bond & Deirup, of Chico, for respondent.

HART, J. This action, in claim and delivery, was brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of a Day-Elder motor truck, or, in case possession thereof cannot be had, judgment for the sum of $1,400, the alleged value of said truck.

The plaintiff was awarded judgment as prayed for, and the defendants appeal therefrom upon a record prepared according to the alternative method.

The claim of plaintiff to the right to the possession of the truck arises out of a chattel mortgage alleged to have been executed by one William England, then owner of said truck, in favor of plaintiff, a duly organized corporation of the state of Oregon, to secure the purchase price of said truck, which was the sum of $2,150.05; the plaintiff having sold the truck to said England. Said mortgage was executed on the 30th day of September, 1920, in Jackson county, state of Oregon. At that time England was a resident of said county and state, and the said truck was then situated therein. The mortgage was recorded in the proper office of the said county of Jackson on the 7th day of October, 1920. The instrument provided for the payment of the purchase price in monthly installments of $215 each; the first installment being payable thereunder one month and ten days after the date of said mortgage, and each of the remaining installments being payable every month and ten days thereafter until the same is paid. The mortgage also provided that in case of default in the payment of any of said installments when the same became due, or in case the mortgagor made default in the performance of any of the covenants or conditions "to be by him kept," etc., the mortgagee was at liberty to declare the whole sum of both principal and interest due and payable and at once proceed to collect the same, and either foreclose the mortgage or take possession of the truck, wherever the same might be found. It further provided that the mortgagor should not, without the written consent of the mortgagee, remove the property from the state of Oregon. The mortgage was not accompanied by the affidavit of good faith which is required by our own statute to be attached to a chattel mortgage to constitute it a valid lien as against the creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value. See section 2957, Civ. Code, subd. 1.

It appears that subsequently to the execution of said mortgage, England surreptitiously, or without the knowledge or the consent of the plaintiff, removed the mortgaged truck to the county of Butte in the state of California. Having shortly after such removal learned thereof, the plaintiff caused its said mortgage to be recorded in the office of the county recorder of said Butte county on the 13th day of November, 1920.

On the 12th day of May, 1921, approximately six months after the said mortgage had been filed for recordation with the county recorder of Butte county, the defendant Breslauer and one G. W. Wright loaned England the sum of $600, and the latter executed and delivered to the former his promissory note for said sum, payable on the 23d day of May, 1921. To secure the payment of said note, England executed to Breslauer and Wright a mortgage on the truck in dispute. This mortgage was in all respects in the form required by the laws of California and was recorded, in the office of the county recorder of Butte county on the 13th day of May, 1921. In the month of June, 1921, England having defaulted in the payment of the Breslauer and Wright note, said Breslauer, in pursuance of the authority vested in him and said Wright by their mortgage, took possession of the truck. The plaintiff thereafter replevied and so secured possession of the truck.

The foregoing facts were found by the court to be true. As to the plaintiff's mortgage, it was further found that the same, as "drawn, executed and recorded, contained all the matters and things required to be contained therein by the laws of the state of Oregon in order to make said chattel mortgage, when so recorded, a first lien upon said truck wherever the same might be found." The court further found that the laws of the state of Oregon do not require that a chattel mortgage executed in that state, to be valid as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbranc-ers of the property in good faith and for value, shall be accompanied by or have attached thereto an affidavit of the parties that the same was made in good faith and without any design to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors; that said chattel mortgage, under the laws of Oregon, "was and is valid as against the defendants herein," etc.

As to the mortgage of the defendants, the court found that the same was taken by Breslauer and Wright without actual knowledge of the existence of any lien attaching to or prior mortgage covering the truck in question; that said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of Butte county; that said mortgage was received by Breslauer and Wright without any design to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor or creditors of England. But, in this connection, the court further found that the chattel mortgage of the plaintiff was, at the time the mortgage of Breslauer and Wright was recorded, in full force and effect and "was a first lien on said truck and was of record in the office of the county recorder of said county of Butte, and that said Leon Breslauer and G. W. Wright had constructive notice of the existence and contents of said mortgage to plaintiff at the time when they accepted said mortgage from said William England."

[1, 2] The plaintiff, for the purpose of stalling the operation of the presumption, otherwise to be indulged, that the laws of the state of Oregon relating to the legal essentials of a chattel mortgage were not, in all particulars, the same as the law of California relating to the same subject, introduced in evidence the said laws of the former state; it having specifically pleaded in its complaint that the laws of Oregon did not, at the time of the transaction culminating in the execution by England to plaintiff of the mortgage on the truck in controversy, require that an affidavit of good faith should be attached to a chattel mortgage to constitute it a valid lien as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value. The laws so introduced consisted of all the sections of the laws of Oregon pertaining to chattel mortgages, and were taken from Olsen's General Laws of Oregon, which the attorney for the defendants stipulated contained all of the laws of that state. These laws, introduced in evidence, contained no provision requiring an affidavit of good faith to accompany or be attached to a chattel mortgage. The plaintiff's general manager, C. C. Hall, who also had been for twelve years a practicing attorney at law in the state of Oregon, and who qualified himself as being skilled in the laws of said state, testified that an affidavit of good faith as a part of a chattel mortgage was not required by any law of the state of Oregon. This was competent testimony. Section 1902, Code Civ.

Proc.; Estate of Faber, 163 Cal. 491, 143 Pac. 737. Thus it is to be seen that the finding that no such an affidavit was required to be attached to a chattel mortgage executed in the state of Oregon, when the mortgage of plaintiff was executed, is well supported.

[3] There is no law in California expressly requiring chattel mortgages properly executed and recorded in a sister state to be recorded in this state in order to perpetuate their validity and force herein, where such mortgaged property has been removed to this state. The California statutes prescribing the mode and manner of executing and recording mortgages on personal property have reference to mortgages executed within this state upon property here situated. It has been said by our Supreme Court, however, that—

"In the absence of any specific * * * provision regarding the removal of mortgaged property, the record of a chattel mortgage in the town or county where it is required to be originally filed for record is held to be constructive notice to all the world, and the mortgage is valid, even though the property may be removed to another town or county, or even to another state." Hammels v. Sentous, 151 Cal. 520, 523, 524, 91 Pac. 327, 328 (12 Ann. Cas. 945) and cases therein cited.

In Kanaga v. Taylor, 7 Ohio St. 134, 70 Am. Dec. 62, the mortgage was executed and recorded in the state of New York according to the laws of that state and the mortgaged chattel thereafter, and while the lien of the mortgage still remained undischarged, was removed to the state of Ohio, where default in the payment of an installment of the purchase price occurred, and where the property was sold by the mortgagor, through a public auctioneer, to a third party. The mortgage was not recorded in Ohio, and neither the auctioneer nor his vendee had notice of the mortgage. As here, the mortgage provided that failure by the mortgagor to pay any of the installments at the time it fell due would entitle the mortgagee to take possession of the chattel. The contention of the defendant (vendee) was that the lien of the mortgage was lost by the removal of the property from the state of New York to the state of Ohio. The Ohio court, affirming the judgment in favor of the plaintiff (mortgagee), said, among other things:

"Gregory held the property subject to the condition of the mortgage, which was the payment of the money, as specified therein, or in case of default, the plaintiff was authorized to take possession of, and to sell it. The default occurred after the property had been removed into a foreign jurisdiction. Gregory had no power to confer any better title than he held; and those who might desire to purchase of him, were bound by the rule of caveat emptor. True, there was no record of the mortgage in Ohio, but Gregory was a stranger to Moore, and apprised him that his late residence was Buffalo. This ought to have excited inquiry by Moore, which might quite as well have been instituted in Buffalo as in another county of this state. He cannot charge upon the plaintiff the consequences of this neglect of his. He took the property subject to the incumbrance upon it; and that amount, we think, was very properly found and reported by the jury in favor of plaintiff."

See, also, Pease v. Odenkirchen, 42 Conn. 415; Barrows v. Turner, 50 Me. 127; Brigham v. Weaver, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 298; Whitney v. Heywood, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 82; Hoit v. Remick, 11 N. H. 285; Hicks v. Williams, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 523; Greenville Nat. Bank v. Evans, 9 Okl. 353, 60 Pac. 249; Hornthal v. Burwell, 109 N. C. 10, 13 S. E. 721, 13 L. R. A. 740, 26 Am. St. Rep. 556.

[4] But even if it were true that the effect of the due decordation of a chattel mortgage in the state where it was executed according to the law of such state is not to charge all persons in another state to which the mortgaged chattel may have been removed with constructive notice of the mortgage, or that the recordation of the mortgage in the latter state imparts no such notice, or that the doctrine of caveat emptor may not, in such a case, be invoked as a protection of the rights of the mortgagee as against the creditors of the mortgagor or subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith, yet it is clear from all the authorities that, upon the rule of comity between the states, the state to which the property has been removed will recognize the validity of the lien and sanction its enforcement, notwithstanding that the chattel may have fallen into the hands of innocent purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith and for value. Indeed, counsel for the defendants conceded at the trial, substantially, that, if the plaintiff's mortgage, in its execution and recordation, complied in all material respects with the requirements of the laws of the state of Oregon relating to the execution and recordation of chattel mortgages and the property mortgaged was situated in said state when the mortgage was executed and recorded, the effect of the removal of the mortgaged property from the state of Oregon to the state of California would not be to destroy the lien of the mortgage or the force and effect thereof. The doctrine, approved by all the cases and authorities to which our attention has been directed, is enunciated as follows in Shapard v. Hynes, 104 Fed. 449, 452, 45 C. C. A. 271, 274 (52 L. R. A. 675):

"There has been much discussion concerning the effect of the removal of mortgaged goods and chattels from the state where the mortgage was made and recorded, to another state. The general consensus of judicial opinion seems to be that when personal property, which at the time is situated in a given state, is there mortgaged by the owner, and the mortgage is duly executed and recorded in the mode required by the local law, so as to create a valid lien, the lien remains good and effectual, although the property is removed to another state, either with or without the consent of the mortgagee, and although the mortgage is not rerecorded in the state to which the removal is made. The mortgage lien is given effect, however, in the state to which the property is removed, solely by virtue of the doctrine of comity."

See Handley v. Harris, 48 Kan. 606, 29 Pac. 1145, 17 L. R. A. 703, 30 Am. St. Rep. 322, and other cases cited in Shapard v. Hynes, 104 Fed. 453, 45 C. C. A. 271, 52 L. R. A. 675. See, also, 5 Ruling Case Law, p. 399, § 21; Alferitz v. Ingalls (C. C.) 83 Fed. 964; Bonin v. Robertson, 2 Terr. Law. Repts. (N. W. Terr.) 21, 24, et seq.

In the case from which the foregoing excerpt is taken, it is said that, after a careful research, there was found but one state (Michigan) in which the rule of comity in such cases as this was not recognized and applied. The rule, however, appears to be founded upon the principles of equity and natural justice. As applied to cases of the character of the one before us, it can produce no harsh or unjust results. The principle underlying it may be analogized to that upon which the owner of property stolen from him and taken or transported to another state may follow the thief into the latter state and reclaim or take possession of the pilfered goods or chattels wherever found. A state may, it is true, refuse to recognize the rule of comity in such cases; but, should it do so, it would become a party to every such fraudulent transaction. It is not going too far to say and to hold that it is preferable and more desirable that an innocent purchaser or incumbrancer of personal property brought into a state under such circumstances as those characterizing the transaction with which we are here concerned should suffer loss, which possibly his own providence or want of diligence has brought to him, than that the state should assume and maintain an attitude towards such transaction which would necessarily stigmatize it as an accessory after the fact to the fraud inhering therein. See Bonin v. Robertson, supra.

But it is further contended that, granting the soundness of the above-considered principles and that they apply, under appropriate circumstances, to cases of this character, the judgment must, nevertheless, be reversed for these asserted reasons: (1) That plaintiff failed to prove the note or debt to secure the payment of which the mortgage was given; (2) that it was not shown that the plaintiff's mortgage was executed and recorded according to the mode prescribed by the laws of the state of Oregon; (3) that the mortgaged chattel was not in the state of Oregon at the time of the recordation of the mortgage in Jackson county, said state.

[5-7] 1. Replying to the proposition first stated, it is to be remarked that this is not an action to recover on a promissory note or a debt. The action is in replevin, or, as our own

Code designates the action, in claim and delivery. The ultimate issue or fact in such an action, as the name of the action plainly implies, involves the single question whether the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the specific personal property or chattel concerned. In this case the plaintiff, to support its action, was required merely to show that it had the right to the possession of the truck, and to do this all it was compelled to do was to prove that England owed it a debt, that he had duly executed a mortgage on the truck in its favor to secure said debt, and that it was stipulated in the mortgage that if he defaulted in the payment of the debt or any part thereof, the plaintiff would be entitled, upon such default, to take and hold possession of the truck, and that he did default in such payment. These facts were shown by the mortgage itself, which was introduced in evidence, and by the testimony of the general manager of the plaintiff that default by England in the payment of the installment of the purchase price of the truck had occurred. It will not be questioned that, even if it be conceded, as the attorney for the defendants contends, that the certificate indorsed on the original mortgage by the recording officer of Jackson county in the state of Oregon to the effect that the instrument had been recorded in said county and state is not competent evidence of such recordation, the mortgage, nevertheless, constitutes competent evidence of the debt and the terms and conditions of payment and of the consequence following from failure to pay at the time or times therein specified. Nor will it be questioned that the mortgage itself will stand as sufficient proof of all those facts except the fact of the default, in the absence of such a counter showing as will destroy the probative force thereof. No such counter showing was made or attempted.

[8] 2. To the contention, made on this appeal, that it was not shown that the mortgage was executed according to the mode prescribed in such cases by the laws of the state of Oregon, the answer is that a comparison of the original mortgage with the requirements of the laws of the state of Oregon relating to the execution and recordation of chattel mortgages will show that the instrument as to its form as well as in other respects accords with the provisions of said laws, and from an examination of the testimony of the witness Hall, who prepared the mortgage, it will be seen that he testified that he was present and saw England subscribe his name to the instrument in the presence of the subscribing witnesses. In fact, counsel for defendants virtually admitted the execution of the mortgage in the following language:

"I simply admit that Mr. England executed that proposed to be mortgage to the Motor Investment Company."

[9, 10] As to the act of recording the mortgage, the attorney for the defendants contends that the instrument, bearing the certificate of the recording officer of Jackson county, Or., that the same had been recorded on the 7th day of October, 1920, is not itself competent proof of such recordation, since there was not attached to the instrument a certificate of any of the officers named in subdivision 7 of section 1918 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "that he copy is duly certified by the officer having the legal custody of the original." While, as presently we shall see, it is not necessary to decide this question here, it is deemed not amiss to say that the writer, speaking for himself and not for the court, is not prepared now to accept counsel's construction of said subdivision of section 1918. The precise point, so far as we are advised to the contrary, has never been passed upon in this state. It will be noted, however, that the subdivision mentioned appears to limit its application to copies and not to the originals of the documents therein referred to. If it were not for the concluding words of the subdivision, to wit, "having the legal custody of the original," the problem would be easy of solution. In the case of the recordation of a mortgage or a deed, the recording officer, while having the legal custody of the record of the original instrument, does not have nor is he required to hold the legal custody of the original itself. The question, however, need not be further considered here, since the defendants in their answer failed to tender an issue on the question of the recordation of the mortgage. The complaint alleges that the mortgage in question was executed on the 30th day of September, 1920, and that the instrument was duly recorded in the office of the county clerk (also county recorder) of Jackson county, Oregon, on the 7th day of October, 1920. The answer, as to said allegation of the complaint, is as follows:

"Deny that said mortgage was, after the execution thereof, and on the 7th day of October, 1920, duly recorded in the office of the County Recorder," etc.

This denial involves, obviously, a negative pregnant, and tendered no issue upon the question of the recordation of the mortgage. If it were necessary to cite authorities to confirm the correctness of the conclusion thus announced upon the point in hand, it would be sufficient to refer to the comparatively recent case of Janeway and Carpender v. Long Beach Paper & Paint Co. (Sup.) 211 Pac. 6. In this connection, it may be stated that several other of the denials of the answer of important averments of the complaint were in the same insufficient form, but as to those we preferred, as we found could be done, to dispose of the points based thereon upon the merits rather than upon a technical rule of pleading.

[11, 12] 3. The claim that the evidence shows that the mortgaged truck was not in the state of Oregon at the time of the recordation therein of the plaintiff's mortgage is not sustained by the record. The witness Hall testified (and as to this his testimony is not contradicted) that the truck in dispute was situated in the state of Oregon on the 30th day of September, 1920, at which time, as seen, the mortgage was executed by England. There is, it is true, no direct or positive evidence that the truck was in the state of Oregon on the 7th day of October, 1920, the day on which the mortgage was recorded. But the presumption is that it was in said state on the last-named day (Code Civ. Proc., § 1963, subds. 19, 20, and 32), and this presumption will stand as a sufficient predicate for a finding or a judgment until there has been presented countervailing proof of sufficient probative strength to dispel it. And, generally speaking, or unless there is something in the nature of the testimony or evidence received against such presumption which would require a court of review to declare it sufficient to overcome its effect, it is peculiarly the function of the trial court or the jury to determine whether the testimony or evidence so offered and received was sufficient in evidentiary force to destroy the effect of the presumption. Code Civ. Proc., § 2061, subd. 2; People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 179, 54 Pac. 833; Sarraille v. Calmon, 142 Cal. 651, 655, 76 Pac. 497; Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 36, 77 Pac. 712; Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, 726, 91 Pac. 616; Keating v. Morrissey, 6 Cal. App. 163, 168, 91 Pac. 677; Ruth v. Krone, 10 Cal. App. 770, 773, 103 Pac. 960; Rec. Dist. No. 70 v. Sherman, 11 Cal. App. 399, 419, 105 Pac. 277; Hitchcock v. Rooney, 171 Cal. 285, 152 Pac. 913; Davis v. Judson, 159 Cal. 121, 128, 113 Pac. 147; Blanc v. Connor, 167 Cal. 719, 722, 141 Pac. 217; Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 379, 156 Pac. 509.

[13] The only testimony presented by the defendants for the purpose of showing that the truck was in Chico, in this state, and not in the state of Oregon, on the day the plaintiff's mortgage was recorded in Jackson county, Or., was given by the proprietor of the hotel in Chico at which England and his wife registered and resided for several days, and the defendant Breslauer. The former stated that he had no independent recollection of the time when England and his wife first went to the hotel as guests thereof, but from the registration of said hotel he testified that England and his wife first registered there on the 7th day of October, 1920. Breslauer, in response to questions by his attorney, testified as follows:

"Q. I want to ask you about when did you first meet Mr. England? A. Oh, let's see, some time in 1920, the latter part of 1920. Q. Well, in the month of October—do you know what date, approximately? A. Just the day before—the day after he came to Chico. Q. If the evidence shows that he came to Chico on the 7th, when, in that connection, would you say that you met him or saw him? A. Well, now, it must have been on the 8th. Q. Where did you see him? A. I saw him on Main street, right by the store. Q. Did he have this Day-Elder truck with him at that time? A. Yes, sir; he did. Q. That is the same truck that was subsequently taken possession of by you? A. Yes, sir."

It requires no critical analysis of Breslauer's testimony to compel the conclusion that, even upon its face, it is not convincing. It will be noted that the statement that he first met England in Chico was in the month of October was not made by him, but was suggested in a question propounded to him by his attorney. Furthermore, he did not say that he knew when England first arrived in Chico, nor did he say that he derived any knowledge as to that fact through an inspection of the hotel register. His testimony on the point merely amounted to the declaration that, if England first made his advent into Chico on the 7th day of October, 1920, then he "must" have seen him and the truck the following day. We are not able to follow his reasoning in that particular. In other words, it is not conceived how he could say that he met England with the truck the day following the latter's arrival in Chico if he did not know of his own knowledge the day of England's arrival in said city. If he based his knowledge of the latter fact upon what some other person told him or on what some other person told him of the fact that England had registered at the hotel, the testimony would be hearsay, and upon that ground alone the court could have refused to give it credence. However, even if the testimony were not characterized by the infirmities pointed out, as has been shown and as is obvious, the trial court, in the exercise of its discretion in passing upon the credibility of witnesses and the weight of evidence, could have disregarded it as unworthy of belief. The trial court, as we are to assume from the result reached below, did disregard or discard it, and with the exercise of its discretion in that particular this court cannot justly interfere.

There are other points, specifically made, subsidiary, however, to the principal questions presented here, which, it is thought, it is not necessary to consider herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

64 Cal. App. 347

In re De VORE. (Cr. 1025.)

1. Infants $\hookrightarrow$ 16—Evidence of neglect by parents of juvenile court ward unnecessary to authorize taking him from their custody.

Evidence that parents of a juvenile court ward have failed to properly provide for his care and training is unnecessary to authorize an order taking him from their custody without their consent under Juvenile Court Law, § 9b, which also authorizes such action on a finding that his welfare requires it.

2. Infants $\hookrightarrow$ 16—Finding that minor's welfare required taking from custody of parents held warranted.

Evidence held to support a finding that the welfare of a juvenile court ward required that he be taken from his parent's custody, as authorized by Juvenile Court Law, § 9b, and committed to a reform school.

3. Infants $\hookrightarrow$ 16—Appellate court may consider preponderance of evidence on appeal from juvenile court.

Under Juvenile Court Law, the appellate court is not bound by the juvenile court's findings on disputed evidence as to whether the welfare of a ward requires that he be taken from the custody of his parents, as authorized by section 9b, and may read the entire record to determine where the evidence preponderates.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Harold De Vore, a minor, was committed to a reform school, and his parents appeal. Affirmed.

Charles W. Ostrom, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

WORKS, J. Harold De Vore, a minor of the age of 14 years, was by the juvenile court committed to the Whittier State School until he reaches the age of 21. The parents of the minor appeal from the order of commitment.

The minor met a boy of his acquaintance, the latter being in possession of an automobile which he had stolen. The two together then stole a second car, and drove the vehicles to a spot where they proceeded to "strip" both of some of their accessories. They placed in one of the automobiles the property thus removed from both, and were about to drive away with it when they were apprehended by the police, and placed under arrest. Young De Vore was released on bail, and his hearing before the juvenile court was set for a certain date. On the evening before that day he stole another automobile. The hearing was had upon the day set, and the minor was adjudged a ward of the juvenile court, and was ordered to Juvenile Hall for a period of two weeks, then to be returned to the court for further hearing. At the time of the making of this order the judge of the juvenile court was not aware of the theft of the automobile which De Vore stole after he was admitted to bail upon the original charge, as the circumstance had not then come to light. While at Juvenile Hall under the order for his detention there, De Vore effected his escape from the institution, but he was immediately reapprehended upon information as to his whereabouts given by his father. When he testified upon the hearing at which he was declared a ward of the court, the minor denied the theft of the car which he had stolen in company with the other boy and told an improbable story as to his presence at the place of arrest when he was apprehended for the theft. He had told this story to his parents immediately after the arrest, and he persisted in it throughout the hearing. He later admitted that the story was false, and confessed that he had participated in the theft of the car. According to the reporter's transcript, the following occurred toward the close of the hearing at which the minor was declared a ward of the juvenile court:

"The Court: * * * I am going to have you go down to Juvenile Hall, and remain there for a couple of weeks. It is going to depend on your conduct there as to what will be the future disposition of your case. You have a chance now here to let this be a lesson to you. If you were a little bit older, probably you would go to the penitentiary for this. They are going there every day. I am just wondering whether or not you sense the seriousness of it. If you do, there is hope this may be a lesson to you. If you don't, why this will be a mere incident in your career, and the next time it may be something serious. The Boy: It will be a lesson. The Court: How is it going to be? A. Just behave myself, that's all. The Court: You just keep that up with that idea, and buckle down and everything will go along all right. This is all we are here for, we want to get you fellows to see the right way, and as soon as we get a fellow to see the right way, we will get along fine."

It was after all these matters had transpired and at a hearing held at the end of the two weeks for which the minor was ordered to Juvenile Hall, that he was committed to the Whittier State School. The order of commitment was made upon a finding that "the welfare of the said Harold De Vore requires that he be taken from the custody of his parents." Section 9b of the Juvenile Court Law (Stats. 1915, p. 1225; Deering's Gen. Laws, 1915, Act. 1770a) reads as follows:

"No ward of the juvenile court as defined in this act shall be taken from the custody of his parent or legal guardian, without the consent of such parent or guardian unless the court shall find such parent or guardian to be incapable of providing or to have failed or neglected to provide proper maintenance, training and education for said person; or unless said person has been tried on probation in said custody and has failed to reform, or unless said person has been convicted of crime by a jury, or unless the court shall find that the welfare of said person requires that his custody be taken from said parent or guardian."

[1] Appellants contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding upon which the order of commitment was made, in that there was no evidence to show "that the parents have failed, neglected, or refused to care for or provide the care and training contemplated by good law and good morals," or that the parents were responsible for the minor's wrongdoing. We are further told that there is no evidence in the record "to sustain the findings that the welfare of the said ward requires that he be taken from the custody of his parents; but on the contrary, the court said, 'You have had good training. You did not come from a home without good training.'" Other points of a similar nature are made, but these will suffice to indicate the position taken by appellants. The arguments advanced in support of that position are demolished by a reading of the section of the statute above set forth. In it the circumstances under which a minor may be taken from the custody of his parents without their consent are stated in the disjunctive. It is enough that De Vore was committed upon a finding that his welfare demanded that he be removed from the custody of his natural guardians. Evidence was not necessary as to circumstances covered by the other branches of section 9b.

[2, 3] In addition to the specific questions above mentioned, appellants make the general point that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the minor's welfare required that he be taken from the custody of his parents. The finding seems to us to be amply justified by the showing that young De Vore first stole a car; that he then aided in the spoliation of that car and another; that, after his arrest and admission to bail on a charge involving the above-mentioned matters, and upon the eve of his hearing concerning them, he stole another car; that he persisted in a false story as to the first offense stated against him, and that, notwithstanding the fair statement of the judge of the purpose in sending him temporarily to Juvenile Hall and his own statement that he would profit by the lesson and "behave," he effected an escape from the institution. The judge properly concluded from these untoward happenings that the minor's welfare required a restraint and an isolation from the world such as could be secured only by his detention in an institution provided under the law for such cases. The correctness of this conclusion is further indicated by a matter shown in the record, and to which we have not yet adverted. At his last hearing in response to remarks by the court concerning the theft of the automobile on the night before his first hearing and while he was out on bail, the boy said, "I just got in with the same crowd again." Because under the Juvenile Court Law we may consider where the evidence preponderates in matters of this character, and are not bound by the findings of the juvenile court upon disputed evidence (Matter of Cannon, 27 Cal. App. 549, 150 Pac. 794), we have carefully read the entire record on this appeal. We see no reason for disturbing the order from which the appeal is taken.

Some exception is taken to the form of the petition pursuant to which the order of commitment was made, but we can perceive no defects in it.

Order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BRINGHURST et al. (Cr. 2532.)(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1923.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 24, 1924.)1. Homicide —250—Evidence held to support conviction for murder.

Evidence held to support conviction for murder.

2. Homicide —29—Defendants' participation in conspiracy to resist arrest held sufficient to create guilt of murder of policemen in attempt to escape.

Where there was an understanding among five men to commit robbery or burglary, and, if detected by officers, to resist arrest, all participants were equally guilty of any crime which was the natural and probable consequence thereof, whether one of them personally committed the act, or whether its commission was done by any one or more of the associates in carrying out the common purpose.

3. Homicide —268—Whether murder of policemen was probable effect of common design held a question for the jury.

Where there was an understanding among five men to commit robbery or burglary, and, if detected by officers, to resist arrest, whether the murder of two policemen in resisting arrest was the ordinary and probable effect of the common design was a question for the jury.

4. Homicide —166(10)—Evidence of robbery three nights previous to killing admissible to show motive for killing.

In a prosecution for the murder of two policemen killed while arresting defendants, evidence that defendants had participated in a robbery three nights before was admissible as tending to show a motive for the killing.

5. Criminal law —528—Confessions of accomplices competent, though made in absence of defendants.

In a murder prosecution, confessions of accomplices were competent evidence to explain the conduct of defendants, though made in their absence, which deprived them of a right to raise a question as to whether they were voluntarily obtained, where they did raise a question on trial, and the trial court went fully into the matter, and further, when the confessions were read to defendants, they made no denial.

6. Criminal law —407(2)—Silence of defendant in face of accusation of crime evidence of guilt.

When a defendant, under conditions which fairly afford him an opportunity to reply, stands mute in the face of an accusation of crime, the circumstance of his silence may be taken against him as evidence, indicating an admission of guilt.

7. Criminal law —564(1)—Venue of offense amply proven by testimony of witnesses.

In a prosecution of murder, venue of the offense was amply proven where witnesses testified that the shooting took place in the city where the prosecution was had.

8. Criminal law —622(1)—No error in trying defendants jointly in prosecution of murder.

In a murder prosecution, no error was committed in trying defendants jointly, in view of Pen. Code § 1098, as amended by St. 1921, p. 90, providing that, when two or more defendants are jointly charged with any public offense, they must be tried jointly, unless the court orders separate trials.

9. Criminal law —829(4)—Unnecessary to give every requested instruction, where court fairly states the law.

It is unnecessary that the court give every instruction requested by a defendant, although they may be proper instructions, where the court correctly and fairly states the law governing the subject-matter of the defense.

10. Criminal law —822(1)—Defendant cannot complain of instruction, where charge to jury is fair.

Defendants cannot complain by reason of instructions given or refused, though some of the instructions given in the case standing alone may be subject to criticism, where the charge to the jury taken as a whole is correct and fair.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

William A. Bringhurst and Willard Thompson were convicted of murder. They appeal. Affirmed.

R. T. Walters, of Los Angeles, and Chas. I. Rosen, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WASTE, J. The two defendants, who are appellants here, were accused by the grand jury of Los Angeles county, jointly with James Wheaton, Calvin Rowell, and Jess Wendell, of the murder of Harry Clester and W. L. Brett, two police officers of the city of Los Angeles. The indictment was based upon a crime in which all of the defendants named therein participated. The defendants Wheaton and Rowell were tried together, as were these appellants. Wheaton and Rowell were sentenced to the state penitentiary for life. The judgment in their case was affirmed (People v. Wheaton and Rowell [Cal. App.] 220 Pac. 451), and a petition to have the cause heard in the Supreme Court was denied. Bringhurst and Thompson, these appellants, were sentenced to pay the death penalty, from which judgment they prosecute this appeal.

Several assignments of error are made. It is first contended that the evidence is insufficient to justify or sustain the verdict rendered against the appellants or either of them. This contention is without merit. A complete and comprehensive statement of the events preceding and leading up to the killing of Clester and Brett is to be found in the opinion of the court in People v. Wheaton and Rowell, supra. It is unnecessary to do more than summarize them here. Briefly, the facts are that all of those mentioned in the indictment were together on the night of the 6th of December, 1921. All of them, except Wheaton, carried revolvers. Three nights prior thereto they had participated in a robbery. On the evening in question they planned other similar offenses, but were deterred from carrying their plans into execution, and became suspicious that they were being watched by the police. At about 11 o'clock that night they were all together in an automobile with its lights out. Witnesses narrated how the two police officers in another automobile drew alongside of that occupied by the defendants, and told them to stop. The officers, who were in uniform, got out of their machine, and began to interrogate the defendants, and one of the policemen started to get into the automobile with them. A number of shots were fired from the unlighted machine, in which were the defendants, and it moved rapidly away. While the shooting was going on, witnesses saw the two police officers fall. It was found that each had been shot several times, and when the witnesses reached them they were lying dead in the street. A man, identified as the appellant Thompson, was seen to get out of the unlighted machine and run rapidly away during the shooting. The actions of the defendants in the days following the shooting indicated an attempt at concealment. After the arrest of Wheaton and Rowell, they made statements regarding the killing of the two policemen which implicated all of the defendants.

[1-3] The evidence clearly indicates that the appellants had participated in committing a robbery on December 3d, and, with their codefendants, had planned to commit burglary on the night in question. The jury was justified in believing that they and the others implicated were jointly engaged in an expedition of crime, and were prepared to kill any police officers or others who might interfere with their plans. All the defendants were equally guilty of any crime that was the natural and probable consequence of such an enterprise, whether one of them personally committed the act, or whether its commission was done by any one or more of the associates in carrying out the common purpose. People v. Wheaton and Rowell, supra. Whether or not the murder of the two policemen was the ordinary and probable effect of the common design was a question of fact to be determined by the jury. People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 335, 92 Pac. 861. Its finding was adverse to the contention of the appellants, and the evidence in the record amply supports the verdict.

[4] Over the objection of the defendants, the court admitted evidence of a robbery in which the defendants participated on the night of December 3, 1921. The admission of this evidence is assigned by the appellants as reversible error. Without discussing any other points raised by the contention, the testimony was—

"admissible as tending to show a motive on the part of the defendants for the homicide of the two policemen. It explained why the defendants were so anxious to prevent arrest. * * * Knowing that they were all guilty of the crime of robbery, it is easy to understand why they might even take life before they would suffer themselves to be arrested, their crime found out, and the severe punishment meted out to them which the law affixes to the crime of robbery. People v. Pool, 27 Cal. 572; People v. Prantikos, 164 Cal. 113-116, 127 Pac. 1029." People v. Wheaton and Rowell (Cal. App.) 220 Pac. 451.

[5, 6] Appellants' next contention is that the confessions of Rowell and Wheaton, read to the jury over the objection of the appellants, were incompetent evidence, for the reason that the confessions were made in the absence of either of these appellants, and appellants could not raise the question as to the confessions being free and voluntary or obtained under threat, duress, or promise. The record indicates, however, that they did raise the question, and that the trial court went fully into the matter of the voluntary character of the confessions, and the circumstances under which each was made. From the evidence taken for that purpose, it was fully convinced that the confessions were freely and voluntarily made, and were not attended with any circumstances that would render them inadmissible. For another reason it was proper to read the confessions in the presence of the jury. When they were read to the appellant Thompson before the trial, he did not deny the accusatory statements, but said he had nothing to say. In the same connection the defendant Bringhurst stated there were statements in the confession which were not correct. He did not promptly and fully deny the accusations. It has become a well-established rule that when a defendant, under conditions which fairly afford him an opportunity to reply, stands mute in the face of an accusation of crime, the circumstance of his silence may be taken against him as evidence indicating an admission of guilt. The reason for admitting the accusation in such cases is to explain the conduct of the accused. People v. Lapara, 181 Cal. 66, 71, 183 Pac. 545; People v. Gordon (Cal. App.) 214 Pac. 276.

[7] There is no merit in the contention of the appellants that the venue of the offense was not proven. Witnesses testified that the shooting of the policemen who were members of the police department of the city of Los Angeles, occurred in the street in front of or close by 543 South Lorena street, Los Angeles, Cal

[8] The trial court did not commit error in denying the motion of the appellants Bringhurst and Thompson that they be tried separately. Section 1098 of the Penal Code, as amended (Stats. 1921, p. 90), provides:

"When two or more defendants are jointly charged with any public offense, whether felony or misdemeanor, they must be tried jointly, unless the court order separate trials. In ordering separate trials, the court in its discretion may order a separate trial as to one or more defendants, and a joint trial as to the others, or may order any number of the defendants to be tried at one trial, and any number of the others at different trials, or may order a separate trial for each defendant."

[9, 10] A considerable portion of the brief for the appellants is devoted to their contention that the court erred in giving certain instructions at the request of the prosecution, and in refusing instructions requested by the defendants. Some forty specifications of error are made in this connection. We have carefully examined the instructions given and refused, and find the contention to be without foundation. The charge to the jury, given by the trial court, is full, clear, and comprehensive. It does not, in our opinion, go outside of or enlarge the case presented to the jury, yet it presents, we think, every phase of the case necessary to fully advise that body as to the law governing the facts presented for their consideration. Some of the instructions requested by the defendants were proper instructions, but the points involved were fully covered by the court in other instructions given by it. It has been repeatedly held that it is not necessary that the court give every instruction requested by a defendant—although they may be proper instructions—provided the court correctly and fairly states the law governing the subject-matter of the defense. People v. Wilson (Cal. App.) 215 Pac. 565. Some of the instructions given in this case, standing alone, may be subject to criticism, but the charge to the jury, taken as a whole, is correct and fair, and appellants have no reasonable ground of complaint by reason of instructions given or refused. People v. Hatch, 163 Cal. 368, 382, 125 Pac. 907; People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 317, 339, 20 Pac. 719.

No matters relating to the trial of the appellants in any way prejudicially affecting their rights having been called to our attention, and no errors appearing warranting a reversal, the orders denying their respective motions for a new trial are, and the judgment in the case of each of the appellants is, affirmed.

WHANN v. DOELL. (S. F. 10419.)

(Supreme Court of California, Dec. 24, 1923.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 21, 1924.)

1. Account $\S$ 11—Existence of relationship requiring accounting and statement that balance is due plaintiff may be only issues raised by pleadings.

The issues raised by the pleadings in an action for an accounting may be only those as to the existence of the partnership or other relationship requiring an accounting and the statement that some balance is due plaintiff; other issues being raised by the account and exceptions thereto.

2. Account $\S$ 11—Mere statement of balance due without setting out items or showing disposition of controversy as to particular items insufficient.

A statement of the balance due plaintiff in findings by the court without a reference, account, or exceptions to specific items is not a proper disposition of an action for an accounting, the issues not being so framed or disposed of as to show how the result was reached and enable the aggrieved party to present his grievances to an appellate tribunal.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(3)—Determination of controverted facts favorably to respondent assumed on appeal.

The Supreme Court must assume, in support of a judgment stating an account, that every controverted fact was determined in respondent's favor.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(1)—Presumption in favor of trial court's action on contested items.

On appeal from a judgment stating an account, the presumption is in favor of the trial court's action on contested items.

5. Account $\S$ 11—Any procedure or record from which issues and disposition thereof may be ascertained sufficient statement.

An account need not be stated in accepted bookkeeping fashion, any procedure or record from which the issues and the court's disposition thereof can be intelligently ascertained being sufficient, whether it be the findings, decree, bill of exceptions, or a typewritten record prepared under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a et seq., particularly in view of Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, restricting the Supreme Court's power to order a retrial to cases where, on the whole record, there has been a miscarriage of justice.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1033(7)—Appellant cannot complain of general finding according with her own claims.

Appellant cannot complain of a general finding in accord with her own claims and adverse to those of appellee.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(6)—Failure to find as to matter not disputed not ground for retrial.

Failure to specifically find as to a matter not disputed is not a ground for retrial.

8. Partnership ⚡342—General finding of ownership of property by partnership held sufficient in action for accounting.

In an action for an accounting of partnership assets invested in property in defendant's name, a general finding that such property belonged to the partners in equal parts held sufficient.

9. Partnership ⚡327(6) — Claims as to amounts of partnership and individual assets invested in property held not inconsistent.

In an action for an accounting of partnership assets invested in property in defendant's name, plaintiff's claim that a certain sum was thus invested held not inconsistent with her testimony that part of such amount was paid from defendant's bank account, which plaintiff testified was a partnership account.

10. Partnership ⚡329—Amount of separate funds invested in partnership property held for trial court.

In an action for an accounting of partnership profits invested in property, in which defendant also invested separate funds, where defendant testified that she did not know the exact amount of her own money so invested, the court did not err in accepting plaintiff's testimony as to the amount thereof, even if defendant was entitled to full credit for the amount claimed by her, there being merely a conflict in the evidence for the trial court's determination.

11. Partnership ⚡5—Parties jointly owning proceeds of business held partners.

Where parties jointly owned the proceeds of a business and each was entitled to half thereof, subject only to a claim by one that their joint living expenses were to be paid therefrom, there was a partnership.

12. Courts ⚡212—Cause transferred to Supreme Court because of respondent's failure to meet appellant's objections.

A petition for transfer to the Supreme Court, after a judgment by the District Court of Appeals stating an account, granted because of respondent's failure, in her brief or reply to the petition, to adequately meet appellant's claim that the items of account allowed and disallowed should have been stated, and her presentation of difficulties pointed out by appellant as necessitating reversal.

13. Appeal and error ⚡1071(6)—Appellant held not prejudiced by court's failure to find on contested items of account.

Where each item protested by defendant, in an action for an accounting, was properly allowed, she was not prejudiced on appeal by the general presumption in favor of the judgment, and hence not injuriously affected by the court's failure to find on specific contested items.

14. Courts ⚡487(7)—Supreme Court decisions on application for transfer from Court of Appeals must be made within ten days.

Supreme Court decisions on applications for transfers to it from the District Courts of Appeals must be made under its own rules and within ten days, as required by Const. art. 6, § 4, and rule 30 (177 Cal. 57).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Marguerite R. Whann against Betta M. Doell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Treat, of San Francisco, and Royle A. Carter, of Fresno, for appellant.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, C. J. This action is brought by the plaintiff to secure an accounting of the partnership business and a distribution of the assets of partnership alleged by her to have existed between the plaintiff and defendant from the period of February, 1907, to May, 1918. The plaintiff alleges that this copartnership was engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling a proprietary medicine known as "Chewalla" and that part of the proceeds of this business were invested in certain apartment houses and other real estate described in the complaint to which title was taken in the name of the defendant. The plaintiff prays that her one-half interest in the real estate in question be declared; that an accounting of the rents, issues, and profits of the real estate and of the partnership business be had; that the assets of the partnership be distributed and the partnership be dissolved.

By an amendment to the complaint the plaintiff alleged that the rents and profits of the real estate amounted to $18,844.22.

The defendant alleged in her answer that the net receipts from the sale of the medicine was $37,580.08, of which she was entitled to one-half, not as partnership profits but as wages; that plaintiff had paid her $21,629.36 and no more for such wages and for living expenses, which were also to be shared equally; that the living expenses of the plaintiff (her one-half) amounted to $6,065, of which she had paid $2,839.32 (being the difference between $21,629.36 and one-half of the profits, $37,580.08, to wit, $18,790.04). Defendant admitted that the profits of the real estate were $17,938.25, but claimed the same as her own.

A trial was had before the court without a jury and without a reference to a master or referee and without an interlocutory decree ordering an accounting. The trial court found that there was a copartnership between the parties; that the real estate involved was partnership property; that the total rents, issues, and profits thereof were $17,938.25 (as alleged by the defendant); that $11,945.95 thereof had been expended for the joint benefit of the partners, leaving a balance belonging to the copartnership of $5,992.25; that plaintiff had accounted for all moneys received by her which had been used for the copartnership; that $1,600 par value of United States government securities had been purchased by the partnership; that certain furniture described in detail in the findings belonged to the partnership; that the defendant had $1,462.94 partnership money on deposit in her name in a savings bank; that the plaintiff was not indebted to the defendant, as claimed, for a balance of $3,215.68 for living expenses, or for any sum for rent. The court thereupon divided the balance of rents retained by the defendant, to wit, $5,992.26, by correspondingly increasing the interest of the plaintiff in the real estate and property of the copartnership, after directing the payment to her of the money on hand and by directing a sale of the property.

It will be observed that the only issue as to the rents, issues, and profits of the real estate was whether those profits were $18,844.22, as alleged by the plaintiff, or were $905.97 less, as alleged by the defendant, less, also, the expenses. As to the net receipts from the business of manufacturing and selling medicine, defendant admitted them to be $37,580.08, to which each party was entitled to one-half, and that she had been overpaid $2,839.32, unless she was allowed her claim of $6,065 for living expenses, which the court did in fact disallow. The court thus found the net profits of the business to be the amount alleged by the defendant, to wit, $37,580.08.

We have thus stated the findings and the issues because the appellant's main objection to the action of the trial court is based upon its alleged failure to state an account in the findings. The appellant complains that the findings of the trial court merely determine the balance due to the plaintiff from the defendant and appellant, and do not set forth any of the items of the accounting between the parties which covered a period of about 14 years. The appellant cites and relies upon the case of Barnebee v. Beckley, 43 Mich. 613, 5 N. W. 976, as holding that an essential feature of an accounting is the stating of an account between the parties, even where the case is tried by the court without a reference, and that in the absence of such a statement of account the case may be sent back for a retrial. A similar conclusion is reached in the case of Tatum v. Shenk, 221 Fed. 182, 136 C. C. A. 598, by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth District.

[1-4] The situation presented by an action for an accounting is unique in that the issues raised by the pleadings may be only those with relation to the existence of the copartnership or other relationship which requires an accounting and the statement that some balance is due plaintiff. Accounts and Accounting, §§ 98, 101, 102, 1 C. J. 633, 634, 635. The other issues are raised by the account and the exceptions thereto, and not by the pleadings. It is obvious that a statement of the balance due in the findings of the court, without a reference, and without an account or without exceptions being taken to specific items, is not a proper disposition of such an action, because the issues between the parties are not framed or disposed of in such manner as to show the method by which the general result is reached, and the aggrieved party cannot successfully present his grievances to an appellate tribunal, because on such an appeal this court must assume in support of the judgment that every controverted fact was determined in favor of the respondent, and even if there was both the disposition and the power on the part of the appellate tribunal to re-examine the entire account, the presumption in favor of the action of the trial court as to the contested items would ordinarily render such action wholly nugatory.

[5] On the other hand, the contention that an account must be stated in accepted book-keeping fashion cannot be maintained. The question presented by such an appeal is a practical one in such cases, particularly in view of our restricted powers under the Constitution (article 6, § 4½), namely: Can this court upon the whole record say that there has been a miscarriage of justice in the trial court? Any procedure or record from which it can be intelligently ascertained what the issues were as to the controverted items and how these issues were disposed of by the trial court will suffice for the purpose, whether the matter appears from the findings, the decree or a bill of exceptions, showing the controversy, and the disposition thereof. It may be possible, also, to show such action by a typewritten record prepared under section 953a et seq., Code of Civil Procedure.

The respondent cites the following cases as holding that a statement of a general balance in the findings is sufficient in an action for an accounting: Murdock v. Clarke, 90 Cal. 427, 27 Pac. 275; Jacobs v. Ludemann, 137 Cal. 176, 69 Pac. 965; Tower v. Wilson, 45 Cal. App. 123, 188 Pac. 87; Reed v. Cornell, 54 Cal. App. 179, 201 Pac. 608.

The case of Murdock v. Clarke, supra, was one by a mortgagor against a mortgagee in possession. In answer to appellant's claim that the findings should have been "in reality an itemized statement of the account, rather than a summary of the transactions," the court there stated:

"It was not necessary for the findings to give the items of the account. It is not necessary in pleadings to give an itemized account (Code Civ. Proc. § 454), and a finding which follows the pleading is sufficient. In this as in other cases, it is sufficient to find the ultimate facts, or secondary facts from which the ultimate fact necessarily follows."

The court also pointed out that, where a finding is objected to in the specification of errors in general terms, there is no remedy on appeal, as follows:

"The action of the court below is presumed to be correct, and upon an appeal therefrom it is incumbent upon counsel to point out the error. This, in a case like the present, where an account has extended over many years, can be done only by taking the account as a whole, rather than selecting individual items, and expecting this court to examine the entire record for the purpose of determining whether, in connection with the result as finally ascertained, those items have been properly allowed." (Italics ours.)

We have examined the record in the case of Murdock v. Clarke, supra, and find that the account is in fact stated in considerable detail in the findings. Not only are the receipts and expenditures for each year separately stated, but there are other specific findings as to the disposition of the property in the custody of the mortgagee. That case is not authority for the proposition that in an action for an accounting a statement of the general balance due is a proper disposition of the case.

In Jacobs v. Ludemann, supra, the plaintiff's action was to establish a trust in land to which the defendant held legal title. The defendant answered admitting the trust, but claimed certain credits for money advanced, less deductions for money paid and crops received, all itemized in the answer, and stated that the balance due the defendant was $1,267.90. The trial court made findings with relation to some of the items, such as the purchase price of the land as $2,000, and declared the balance due the defendant to be $800. The plaintiff appealed, and the court there said:

"Plaintiff contends that the finding of this balance is but a conclusion of law, and that the court should have found the items—debit and credit—so as to show the figures from which the conclusion was deduced. It was not necessary for the court to do this. The ultimate fact was the amount, if anything, due from plaintiff to defendant, and this was ascertained and found from the evidence submitted to the court."

These decisions in no wise militate against the contention that there should be a sufficient statement of an account to show the main features of the account and the disposition of the various controversies arising thereon in an action for an accounting.

[6-8] We will now consider whether or not the defendant was prejudiced by the method of trial and decision adopted by the trial court. The court found that the defendant had in her possession $5,992.26 of the rents, issues, and profits of the partnership real estate as alleged by her, and she cannot justly complain of this general finding, which accords with her own claims and is adverse to the plaintiff's claims. The court disallowed the defendant's claim for $6,065 for living expenses on the theory that the living expenses were to be paid from the profits of the medicine business, and not from the plaintiff's share of the business. This general finding disposes of the defendant's claim as to the counterclaim or credit of $6,065, and is supported by the evidence. These findings dispose of all the issues on the accounting except the investment of the partnership assets in the real and personal property standing in the name of the defendant; as to these the court found that such property belonged to the copartnership, one-half to each. There is no specific finding as to the exact amount of the net profits of the medicine business, but there was apparently no dispute on that subject. The defendant alleged the amount to be $37,580.08, and the plaintiff testified to that exact amount. The parties having thus agreed upon the amount of the profits from the business, and the court having found the facts in favor of the defendant upon the issue as to rents, issues, and profits of the real estate, the only remaining question was as to the investment of these proceeds in the partnership property, and upon this issue the general finding of ownership is under the circumstances of this case a sufficient finding.

[9, 10] The defendant attacks certain items of the account, one an item of $1,500 credit allowed to the plaintiff, another for a balance of $500 on a loan of $1,500 made by plaintiff. There was sufficient evidence to support the allowance of these items. The appellant calls attention to plaintiff's claim that $30,639 of the profits of the medicine business were invested in the properties, because it also appears from her testimony that $2,771.10 of this amount was paid from the defendant's bank account. There is no inconsistency, for the plaintiff testified that the bank account was a partnership account. Another controversy is presented by the record as to the amount of money invested in the property by the defendant from her separate funds. The defendant claims the amount to be $5,300, but she testified that she did not know exactly what amount of her property was so invested. Consequently, it was not improper to accept the plaintiff's testimony as to the amount so invested, to wit, $3,500, even if the defendant was entitled to full credit. This point presents merely a conflict in the evidence for the determination of the trial court.

[11] There was no error in the determination by the trial court that there was a copartnership. It was admitted that the parties jointly owned the proceeds of the medicine business; that each was entitled to one-half thereof, subject to the plaintiff's claim that the joint living expenses were to be paid therefrom, and the defendant's claim that the living expenses were to be paid by the plaintiff.

In view of our conclusion, that there has been no miscarriage of justice we deem it unnecessary to enter into further detail.

[12, 13] In view of the fact that our conclusion is in full accord with the decision of the District Court of Appeal (First District, Second Division), we should add that appellant's application for a transfer to this court was granted because of the failure of the respondent either in her briefs or in her reply to the petition for a transfer, after the decision of the District Court of Appeal, to adequately meet the emphatic and reiterated and well-founded claim by appellant that an orderly procedure in an accounting case required at some stage of the proceeding a statement of the items of account allowed and disallowed, supported, as the claim was, by reason and authority. The respondent, moreover, claimed the benefit of the presumption that items not attacked in the appellant's brief would fully offset plaintiff's claim, and that the presumptions in favor of a judgment would require an affirmative, regardless of the correctness of the items attacked, thus presenting the very difficulty pointed out by the appellant as necessitating a complete reversal. This point of practice was not dealt with by the District Court of Appeal except by holding that no prejudice resulted to the appellant from such failure to find upon the specific contested items. With this view we are now able to fully concur after the more extended and detailed examination possible after transfer, for, as already pointed out, we find that each item protested by the appellant was properly allowed, and consequently the appellant was not prejudiced on her appeal by the general presumption in favor of a judgment, and, therefore, not injuriously affected by the method of the trial court, which might otherwise call for a reversal.

[14] In this connection the profession should bear in mind that our decisions upon application for a transfer must be made under our rules, and under the Constitution within a period of ten days (Const. art. 6, § 4; rule 30, 177 Cal. 57), no matter how much of the business of the court may demand attention during that period, and notwithstanding the constantly increasing volume of cases passed upon by the five divisions of the District Court of Appeal, and subject to review by us within the limited period allowed by the Constitution.

Judgment affirmed.

In re GREEN.

BANKS v. FOOTMAN.

(S. F. 10339.)

1. Guardian and ward ⇨13(7)—Parent's fitness at time of hearing determining factor.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, which provides that parents of a minor child under age of 14 years, if found to be competent, are entitled to appointment as guardian, in preference to other person, in proceeding for appointment, findings as to fitness and competency in the past are surplusage; the determining factor being fitness at time of hearing.

2. Parent and child ⇨2(3)—Failure to contribute to child's support did not ipso facto forfeit mother's right to custody.

Though the mother of a minor child under age of 14 years for some years did not contribute any substantial sum to its support, she did not forfeit her right to its guardianship under Civ. Code, § 246, subd. 4, where, on account of poor health, frequent operations, and necessity of self-support, she at no time had ability to maintain it.

3. Parent and child ⇨2(3)—Failure to maintain as forfeiting right to custody must be coupled with ability; "forfeiture."

To constitute a "forfeiture" of a parent's right to custody of his child, within Civ. Code, § 246, subd. 4, relative to guardianship, failure to maintain it must be coupled with ability to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Forfeit—Forfeiture.]

4. Parent and child ⇨2(3)—Acquiescence in voluntary support of child by relative not "failure to maintain" within statute.

Mere acquiescence of a parent in the voluntary maintenance of a child by relative, when the latter does not request compensation, does not in itself amount to a failure to maintain, within Civ. Code, § 246, subd. 4, regardless of parent's ability or disability.

5. Guardian and ward ⇨13(4)—Desertion by natural mother not shown; "abandonment."

In proceedings for appointment of guardian of a minor, evidence of the mother's previous inability to support it, owing to poor health, frequent operations, and necessity of self-support, and consequent placing of the child with a relative, did not show an actual desertion accompanied with intention to sever the parental relation and throw off its obligations, which would be "abandonment," within Civ. Code, § 246, subd. 4.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Abandon—Abandonment.]

6. Guardian and ward ⇨10—Parent, if fit, awarded guardianship.

In contest for guardianship between a parent and a stranger, the paramount question is whether the parent is competent to fulfill the duties and obligations involved, and an affirmative finding compels the parent's appointment, notwithstanding the child's material welfare will be best subserved by giving it to another.

Myers, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

In the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Margretta Green, a minor. Petition for appointment by Gretta M. Banks, opposed by Beulah Green Footman. From an order appointing petitioner guardian, contestant appeals. Reversed.

Henry C. McPike, of Oakland, and Clarendon W. Anderson, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

L. G. Scott, of Sebastopol, and J. T. Campbell, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of the person and estate of a minor child, Margretta Green, culminated in the court below in an order directing the issuance of letters of guardianship to the respondent, Gretta M. Banks, a half-sister of the mother of the child. The mother, Beulah Green Footman, resisted the petition for guardianship, and appeals from the order.

The facts brought forth at the hearing of the petition and pertinent to the point presented upon the appeal, succinctly stated, are these: Neither at the time of the birth of the child nor at any time thereafter did the mother and father live together, and in 1912 the mother obtained a final decree of divorce which awarded to her the custody of the child. The father makes no claim to its custody. Shortly after the birth of the child, in Oakland, appellant, being destitute, went with the child to a ranch in Sonoma county, where they lived for a time with her family, which consisted of her mother, Mrs. Peterson, a half-brother and three half-sisters. As soon as she felt her strength returning she and the child, her mother, and her half-brother went to Berkeley to live, where her mother, Mrs. Peterson, kept house and cared for the child while appellant worked to support the family. For a part of the time appellant worked in a cannery. The child was taken back to the ranch and cared for by respondent on two occasions, once when Mrs. Peterson was ill and asked respondent to come and get the child, and once when Mrs. Peterson and appellant went to Los Angeles. Upon their return from Los Angeles, Mrs. Peterson went to the ranch to get the child, and at that time respondent and her husband objected to the child being moved back and forth so often, and insisted that either they or appellant must keep her. Appellant's half-brother testified that when appellant was informed of this she—

"kind of objected in a way. She said it was pretty hard to give up the little one. * * * We used to talk it over quite a bit, what a nice little girl she was. And she was working, I think, at the Golden West Hotel, and she worked at various places, but she never had, you might say, a home, and under those circumstances she admitted lots of time that Margretta was better off where she was."

Mrs. Peterson, appellant's mother, testified that when she returned to Berkeley and told appellant of respondent's suggestion, "She studied awhile and said 'Maybe it would be the best thing to do.'" After that appellant went to Iowa to study nursing. Before leaving she went to the ranch where the child was. Evidently there was some conversation concerning the child. However, about the only evidence of this conversation is respondent's statement:

"I told her I must have her to raise in my own way. You see that has been ten years ago, * * * and I cannot recall the exact conversation, and it seems as though my sister answered, 'Of course'; that is, in my mind that she answered, 'Of course.'"

Leaving her child in her half-sister's care, appellant went to Iowa, where she studied nursing until forced to return to California in 1913 because of ill health. After her return to California, and until December, 1917, appellant underwent a series of serious operations for the purpose of removing a condition brought about by neglect at the time her child was born. The operation left her in a very weakened condition and unable to work during a great part of the time. Whenever her health would permit she obtained employment, chiefly as a nurse in a physician's office, but, due to the irregularity of these periods, she was scarcely able to earn money enough to support herself. Appellant was twice married, but neither marriage turned out successfully. During neither marriage did appellant have a permanent home, nor was she entirely relieved of the necessity of working to support herself. The operation performed in December, 1917, proved successful, and since that date appellant's health has vastly improved. In 1918 appellant was employed as a nurse for the state compensation fund. While in this position she met her present husband, who, in September, 1918, engaged her to care for his home and his two motherless children in the city of Oakland. In 1920 appellant and Mr. Footman were married, and appellant, having a permanent home for the first time since the birth of her child, wrote to respondent, stating that she and her husband would take Margretta into their home. Respondent thereupon filed the present petition for letters of guardianship. There is some conflict in the evidence as to the number of times that appellant sent gifts to the child. It is an admitted fact in the case that appellant contributed nothing to the child's support, but it also appears that appellant was never requested to do so, and further, that, not only did appellant have no permanent home in which to receive the child until her present marriage, but that at no time did she have any funds with which to support the child, except that, shortly before the child was left with respondent, she received $600 in a suit for alienation of affection against the father of her first husband. Part of this money was used to pay the expenses of respondent's wedding, part for a trip which appellant and her mother took to Los Angeles, and part to help pay appellant's expenses while studying at the hospital in Iowa. It appears also from respondent's testimony that from time to time appellant visited the ranch where the child was, and that "she has visited her more frequently the last three years (that is since March, 1918) than before." Appellant herself states that she went to see the child every chance she got, and as often as her illness and lack of funds would permit.

[1] This summary of the evidence leads to a consideration of the grounds upon which the court awarded the guardianship to the half-sister of the mother of the child. Section 1751 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"The father or the mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years, if found by the court competent to discharge the duties of guardianship, is entitled to be appointed a guardian of such minor child, in preference to any other person. * * *

Upon the question of the competency of the mother, the court below found:

"That since contestant's marriage to her present husband, Henry E. Footman, in July, 1920, she has been and now is a fit and suitable person to become the guardian of said minor."

Thus there is removed from this appeal all question of the fitness and competency of appellant. In view of this finding, any findings concerning the fitness or unfitness in the past are mere surplusage, for the determining factor in cases of this character is the parent's fitness for guardianship at the time of the hearing of the petition. Guardianship of Snowball, 156 Cal. 240, 104 Pac. 444. This proposition is not seriously questioned by respondent, who relies primarily for an affirmance of the order appealed from upon the finding that appellant—

"failed and neglected to contribute in any material extent to its [the child's] maintenance or care, she having the ability to do so; and that contestant at said time abandoned said child, and has thereby forfeited her rights to the custody or guardianship thereof."

[2] We may assume, without deciding, that the findings last quoted would, if supported by the evidence, be sufficient to bring the case within subdivision 4 of section 246 of the Civil Code, which provides that—

"Any parent who knowingly or willfully abandons, or having the ability to do so, fails to maintain his minor child under the age of 14 years, forfeits the guardianship of such child. * * *

[3, 4] We are of the opinion that, even though the evidence affirmatively shows, without contradiction, that appellant did not contribute any substantial sum to the support of her child, nevertheless, she did not, for that reason alone, forfeit her right to its custody, because the evidence also shows that owing to her poor health, frequent operations, and necessity of self-support, she at no time until her last marriage had the ability to maintain the child. To constitute a forfeiture of a parent's right to the custody of his child, failure to maintain it must be coupled with ability to do so. Furthermore, respondent supported the child in the absence of any agreement for reimbursement, and without asking appellant to contribute thereto. The mere acquiescence of a parent in the voluntary maintenance of a child by a relative, when the latter does not request compensation from the parent, does not in itself amount to a failure to maintain, within the meaning of the Code section above quoted, and this is so, regardless of the ability or disability of the parent in the matter. Matter of Forrester, 162 Cal. 493, 123 Pac. 283; Civ. Code, § 208.

[5] Nor was there any showing of "an actual desertion, accompanied with an intention to entirely sever, so far as it is possible to do so, the parental relation, and throw off all obligations growing out of the same," which, under the settled rule in this state, is necessary to constitute an abandonment within the meaning of said Code section. Guardianship of Snowball, supra.

The legal principle involved in the case at bar is analogous to that involved and enunciated in the Estate of Akers, 184 Cal. 514, 521, 194 Pac. 706, 709, where the court said:

"The right of a parent to the custody of its child cannot be held to be forever forfeited by an act of relinquishment committed under circumstances of coercion, caprice, and discouragement."

So likewise in the case at bar, the practically involuntary placing of the appellant's child in the respondent's family during a time of physical and financial stress cannot be regarded as an attempt to sever the parental relation. As stated in Matter of Galleher, 2 Cal. App. 364, 367, 84 Pac. 352, 353:

"An agreement, especially if oral, whereby a parent gives his child to another to raise, is generally held to be revocable at any time."

[6] When appellant intrusted her child to respondent she had no other alternative

She herself was unable to care for the child. Appellant's own mother was dependent upon her children and stated to appellant at the time: "I am getting along in years, and I don't feel I could take the responsibility to raise it." It is true that there is evidence from which it might be inferred that appellant was not as attentive to the child, while it was in respondent's house, as some parents would have been. However, as previously stated, according to respondent's own testimony, when she took the child she distinctly stated that there was to be no interference of appellant in the matter of raising it. This would naturally act as a deterrent upon appellant's intimacy with the child. Also, appellant was hindered by her poverty and sickness. In addition to all this, it must be remembered that a parent, if competent, does not lose his right over his child merely because his conduct may at one time have fallen short of what may be described as "ideal." Guardianship of Snowball, supra; Matter of Galleher, supra. There is no question as to respondent's fitness to act as guardian. On the contrary, it is conceded that she has given the child a happy home, raised her as one of her own children, and that the child is fond of her. The evidence, the findings, and the statement of the court below indicate that the order was based fundamentally, not upon the theory of abandonment, but upon the theory that, notwithstanding appellant's fitness to receive the child, it would be for the best interest of the child, in respect to her temporal and her mental and moral welfare, for her to remain in her present home. It has, however, been repeatedly held that, if the parent is competent, and has not abandoned the child or failed to maintain it, having the ability to do so, the court has no choice but to award the child to the parent. Campbell v. Wright, 130 Cal. 380, 62 Pac. 613; Guardianship of Salter, 142 Cal. 412, 76 Pac. 51; Matter of Forrester, 162 Cal. 493, 123 Pac. 283; Estate of Akers, 184 Cal. 514, 194 Pac. 706; Guardianship of Mathews, 169 Cal. 26, 145 Pac. 503. Subdivision 1 of section 246 of the Civil Code, providing that in awarding the custody of a minor the court is to be guided first by what appears to be for the best interest of the child in respect to its temporal, mental, and moral welfare, operates only where the court is vested with the exercise of discretion, and has no application as between a parent and more distant relative or stranger. Campbell v. Wright, supra.

We are not unmindful of the temptation to consider the fact that the child is likely to be happier if permitted to remain in the home she has known since babyhood. Such facts must be disregarded, however, where a parent is competent, and has not otherwise forfeited his rights. Otherwise a parent, who has been forced to temporarily relinquish his child by adverse circumstances, will, through no fault on his part, be penalized by a decree of total forfeiture, and a situation would soon result wherein an affluent stranger or relative would be enabled to arbitrarily deprive a less materially fortunate parent of all right to his most cherished possession.

In this behalf it may not be amiss to emphasize the fact that both the common law and our statutes, as interpreted in the cases herein cited, declare that the care, custody, and control of a minor child, under the age of 14 years, must be committed to its parent, rather than to strangers, in the absence of a showing that the parent is unfit to perform the duties imposed by the relation, or, by abandonment, has forfeited the natural right to its custody. Accordingly it has come to be the settled rule of law in this jurisdiction that in a contest for guardianship, not between parent and parent, but, as here, between a parent and a stranger to the child, the paramount question presented for consideration is whether the parent is competent to fulfill the duties and obligations involved in the relationship, and a finding in the affirmative compels the appointment of the parent as guardian, notwithstanding the fact that apparently the child's material welfare will be best subserved by giving it to another. Estate of Akers, 184 Cal. 514, 522, 194 Pac. 706.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; WASTE, J.

MYERS, J. I dissent. I think that the evidence is amply sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court "that contestant [appellant herein] at said time abandoned said child. * * *". This finding is, in my opinion, sufficient to support the judgment appealed from.

The child, who is now nearly 14 years old, has been in the continuous custody and care of respondent since the age of 11 months. It is conceded that during all of that time the entire burden and responsibility of the custody, care, maintenance and education of the child has been borne by respondent. It clearly appears from the evidence that in 1911, when the child was a mere infant, a definite understanding and agreement was entered into between appellant and respondent, whereby appellant relinquished to respondent definitely and finally all of her parental rights over the child, and respondent in turn undertook and agreed to keep and maintain the child and raise it as her own. This agreement was entered into by appellant voluntarily and only after due deliberation. Respondent has kept and performed her part of the agreement faithfully and generously in all respects. This agreement was understood and acquiesced in, not only by the immediate parties thereto, but also by respondent's husband, by the child's grandmother, and by other near relatives. It was acquiesced in by appellant, without hint or suggestion to the contrary for a period approximating 10 years. Then the child, having arrived at an age where it might be regarded as an asset instead of an incubance, appellant for the first time indicated a desire to repudiate her agreement and reclaim the child.

This presented a clear case of an actual physical transfer and relinquishment of the custody of the child "accompanied with an intention to entirely sever, so far as it is possible to do so, the parental relation and throw off all obligations growing out of the same." This, in my opinion, constituted an abandonment within the meaning of subdivision 4 of section 246 of the Civil Code.

The facts of this case are essentially different from those under consideration in Estate of Akers, 184 Cal. 514, 194 Pac. 706. In that case the mother never relinquished the child voluntarily. It was forcibly taken from her by the child's father, and she immediately set about its recapture and succeeded therein. It was again forcibly taken from her by the father, and as soon as she was able to do so thereafter, and within four years, and immediately following the death of the father, she again undertook its recapture. In the instant case the child was voluntarily relinquished by the mother, with the intention of severing the parental ties, and that intention was adhered to for 10 years.

The trial court also found that appellant failed and neglected to contribute to the child's maintenance or care, she having the ability to do so. The evidence upon this point is not satisfactory, but I think it is legally sufficient to support the finding. It is conceded that appellant did not in fact contribute to the child's support. It is claimed that she was unable to do so by reason of constant illness. But it is conceded that she was sufficiently well to enable her to acquire four successive husbands within a period of about 10 years. It is conceded that during this period she was continuously employed as a trained nurse in one household for a period of two years. It is claimed that she received no compensation for this service other than her "keep." Surely the trial judge was not compelled to believe this.

If this decision is to be rested upon the legal right of a parent to the custody and earnings of a minor child, then, by every consideration of the law of contract, and by every consideration of the equitable doctrine of estoppel, the appellant herein has transferred that right to the respondent herein.

I think that the judgment should be affirmed.

192 Cal. 754
PEOPLE v. WOLFGANG. (Cr. 2569.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1923.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 24, 1924.)

1. Criminal law §823(6)—Modification of instruction as to right of self-defense held not error, in view of others given.

Modification of a requested instruction as to defendant's right to protect himself against an unwarranted attack, materially lessening its benefit to him, held not error, where other instructions fully protected defendant's rights.

2. Criminal law §823(6)—Instruction as to justifiable homicide held not erroneous.

An instruction that if the jury believed beyond all reasonable doubt that defendant killed deceased, without any overt act or physical demonstration on the part of deceased sufficient to warrant defendant, as a reasonable man, in believing that he was in great bodily danger, the killing was not justifiable held not error, in view of other instructions given.

3. Criminal law §829(9, 18)—Denial of requested instructions on matters covered by other instructions, though less comprehensive held not error.

Where the court has given instructions, sufficiently and concisely stating the presumption of innocence and defendant's right to an acquittal in case of reasonable doubt, the denial of more elaborate and comprehensive requested instructions on the same subjects is not error.

4. Criminal law §778(11), 1172(2)—Instruction on flight held erroneous, though not reversible error.

An instruction as to the weight to be given evidence of defendant's flight held erroneous, as omitting the qualification of knowledge on the part of defendant that he was charged with crime, though not reversible error, where no prejudice appeared.

5. Homicide §311—Instruction as to discretion of jury in fixing punishment held not erroneous.

An instruction as to the right of the jury to exercise the discretion vested in it by Pen. Code, § 190, and determine the punishment to be inflicted on one found guilty of murder, which stated that, unless the evidence showed "some extenuating fact or circumstance, it is the duty of the jury to find a simple verdict of murder in the first degree, and leave with the law the responsibility of fixing the punishment," held not erroneous as interfering with the jury's discretion in the matter, particularly in view of further instructions given at its request after the jury had deliberated for a time.

6. Criminal law §829(9, 18)—Denial of requested instructions covered by others given not error.

Denial of requested instructions, as to the effect of mere probabilities and upon the doctrine of chances, which had been sufficiently covered in instructions on the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, held not error.

7. Homicide — 296—Denial of instructions as to authority of deceased to arrest defendant held not error.

In a prosecution for the killing of a policeman after his arrest of defendant, denial of requested instructions, affecting the right of deceased and his companion to arrest defendant, held not error, where defendant by his own testimony admitted that the killing took place after the arrest had been accomplished, and narrowed the issue to one of self-defense against an unwarranted assault, thus eliminating any issue as to his right to resist an illegal arrest.

8. Criminal law — 823 (17)—Denial of instruction as to manslaughter held not error in view of other instructions.

Denial of an instruction that a killing committed upon a sudden quarrel or in heat of passion was but manslaughter held not error, where the court in another instruction read Pen. Code, § 192, defining manslaughter, and further instructed that the intent to kill "must be formed upon a pre-existing reflection and not upon a sudden heat or passion sufficient to preclude the idea of deliberation."

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Isaac Wolfgang was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Aggeler and F. H. Vercoe, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman and Thos. Lee Woolwine, both of Los Angeles, for the People.

WASTE, J. The defendant was charged with the murder of Oliver Vernon Densmore, a regular patrolman of the police department of the city of Los Angeles. He was convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to suffer the death penalty. From the judgment of the court, and its order denying his motion for a new trial he prosecutes this appeal. He admits that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury, but relies for a reversal upon alleged errors of the trial court in the giving and refusing of certain instructions, which errors, he claims, vitally prejudiced his substantial rights.

In order that the contentions of the appellant may be the better understood, it is necessary to state the material facts found in the record. The defendant, 54 years of age, and unmarried, resided alone at a rooming house in the city of Los Angeles. According to the testimony of A. H. Rude, a special watchman, at half-past 4 o'clock on the morning of November 24, 1922, defendant was seen to take two bottles of milk from a box in front of a building on the latter's beat. Rude called upon the defendant to halt, but he turned around and ran. He was followed by the special watchman, who was joined by Policeman Densmore, to whom Rude pointed out the defendant and related what had occurred. Appellant ran into the hallway and started up the stairs of the rooming house. He was closely followed by Policeman Densmore, who was dressed in his regulation blue uniform, with the regular police cap, and wearing his badge. The policeman overhauled the defendant on the stairway leading to the second floor, and Densmore asked him where the milk was. Defendant produced the two bottles of milk and handed them to the policeman, who seized hold of the defendant's overcoat and said, "Come and go with me." The defendant said he would go if first taken to his room for the purpose of getting some money he had there. At first Policeman Densmore refused this request and a struggle ensued, during which the defendant was thrown to the floor, and during which he kicked the special officer. Officer Densmore then used his "sap" on the defendant, striking him on the head. Densmore then consented to the defendant getting his money, and the three went into the room occupied by him, which was dimly lighted by a weak electric light. Defendant walked to a dresser, pulled the drawer open a few inches, took from it an automatic pistol, and, throwing it quickly around, shot Policeman Densmore through the heart. Almost simultaneously with the shot the policeman struck the defendant on the head with his "sap," attempted to draw his own revolver, suddenly relaxed, and fell to the floor. There was a further struggle between the defendant and Rude in an attempt to get the policeman's revolver, which had fallen to the floor. Rude got the gun and, pointing it at the defendant, snapped it twice, but it failed to explode the cartridge. Rude then ran out of the room, returning a few minutes later with assistance summoned from the police station. The defendant had disappeared. Policeman Densmore was lying dead on the floor. The automatic pistol was found under some clothes near the dresser. Some hours later the defendant was arrested when he emerged from the river bed in the Santa Fé railroad yards and asked a switchman how long it would be before he could get a train to Pomona. He said his name was "Fred Edwards." He was carrying an overcoat that was bloodstained. When a policeman raised the defendant's hat there was a clot of blood on his forehead from which blood had run down his face. When asked to account for the blood on the coat and on his face he said he had just arrived in town and had been in a fight with two colored men, one of whom had struck him on the head. He was taken to the scene of the shooting, where he was identified by the landlady as a man who had rented a room from her nearly two months previously, and who registered as "Fred Edwards of Portland, Oregon." The defendant made conflicting statements to the police officers on the day of his arrest. He first denied having an automatic gun, and then said he had bought it in a pawnshop in Los Angeles three weeks previously. Later he said he had bought it in a pawnshop in Fresno some 8 weeks before. In the midst of these conflicting statements there is the admission of appellant that he knew that the policeman he shot was going to take him to the police station for stealing milk, and that he shot the officer because he did not want to be arrested.

There is no material conflict as to any of the foregoing facts. There is a substantial variance in the evidence as to the manner in which the defendant received certain injuries to his head during the events connected with the shooting and as to the nature of the wounds. The defendant testified that the bumps and cuts on his head were inflicted by Officer Densmore beating him during the scuffle that has been mentioned, some of them having been inflicted while the appellant was lying on the floor; that his skull was fractured and his head split open by the blows from the policeman's "sap"; that after being struck he was "bleeding and dizzy * * * like I was drunk, didn't know anything"; that he was again struck by the officer as he opened the drawer of the dresser to reach for his money; that he turned around and saw the officer [Densmore] reaching for his gun; that he thought it was the intention of Officer Densmore to kill him; and that he thereupon killed the officer before he himself would be killed. The police nurse at the receiving hospital, immediately after the arrest, treated the defendant for injuries consisting of abrasions and swellings on his head. According to his testimony, there was no fracture of the skull and no evidence of any. There was no congestion of the brain, and the injuries were slight flesh wounds, which could have been caused by the appellant falling against some object. The witness Rude testified that during the struggle in the hallway Densmore tapped the defendant lightly on the head with the "sap." As to what occurred in the bedroom he could not say whether the policeman struck the defendant before or after the shot was fired.

"It was so close together, but he [appellant] wasn't struck until after he brought the gun out of the dresser drawer. * * * He brought it out very quick. * * * The shot was fired as soon as the gun come out and the officer struck at the same time."

The autopsy surgeon testified that the bullet that killed Officer Densmore penetrated the heart, and that such wounds usually cause instantaneous death, that a man of the type of Policeman Densmore, receiving a wound of such a nature, would have sufficient muscular power to voluntarily raise his arm after receiving the wound, and that there are plenty of instances where a gunshot wound through the heart did not result in immediate death, and men have run short distances, raised their arms, and even fired guns after receiving such wounds.

[1] The defendant requested the following instruction:

"You are instructed that, even though the defendant was subject to arrest by the officer, he nevertheless had a right to protect himself from any unwarranted attack, if any made upon him by the officer, and, if the officer suddenly hit the defendant with a blackjack, the defendant had a right to take any course necessary to protect his own life or to defend himself from great bodily injury."

The instruction was modified and given as follows:

"Even though the defendant was subject to arrest by the officer, he nevertheless had a right to protect himself from any unwarranted attack, if any, made upon him by the officer."

Appellant complains that the action of the court so devitalized and emasculated his requested instruction as to render it of no assistance to his case. The court did instruct the jury, however, at the request of the defendant, that every person has a right to resist an unlawful attack upon his person, whether that unlawful attack is made by a private citizen or a police officer, and that the degree of force he may use in resisting such an attack is governed by the force and danger of the attack, and that one unlawfully attacked in such manner as to reasonably appear to endanger his life or limb may resist, even to taking the life of his assailant; and, further, that if the jury believed that Policeman Densmore was making an unlawful attack upon the defendant, and that the attack was such as to make it then appear to a reasonable person, placed in the position of the defendant, that he was in immediate and imminent danger of losing his life or receiving great bodily harm, or, if the jury had a reasonable doubt whether or not such a condition then confronted the defendant, it should give him the benefit of the doubt and return a verdict of not guilty. The jury was also instructed that in determining whether a man exercises his right of necessary self-defense, he must be understood to act on the facts as they appear to him as a reasonable person, and that if, without fault or carelessness, he is misled concerning them and defends himself correctly according to what he in good faith supposes the facts to be, he is justifiable, though the facts are in truth otherwise, and he really has no occasion for the extreme measure. It therefore appears that no harm was done to the defendant by the modification of the requested instruction.

[2] In view of all the instructions given, the court did not err in instructing the jury that if from the evidence it believed—

"beyond all reasonable doubt that, without any overt act or physical demonstration upon the part of the deceased, sufficient to warrant the defendant, as a reasonable man, in believing that he was in great bodily danger, he (the defendant) fired the fatal shot at deceased and killed him, such killing under such circumstances was not justifiable."

[3] Appellant next complains that the court erred in refusing to give two instructions requested by him relating to the presumption of innocence that goes with the defendant through the trial of the case. The court, however, did instruct the jury that the defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty, and that in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown he is entitled to an acquittal. Explicit instructions defining reasonable doubt, and stating that the burden of proof is upon the prosecution, were also given. While the instructions given do not repeat and elaborate upon the subject as fully or as comprehensively as those requested by the appellant, they concisely cover the points stated, and were sufficient. People v. Miles, 143 Cal. 636, 640, 77 Pac. 686.

[4] The jury were instructed that—

"The flight of a person immediately after the commission of a crime, or after the crime has been committed with which he is charged, is a circumstance to be weighed by the jury as tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt, and is entitled to more or less weight according to the circumstances of the particular case. Evidence of flight is received, not as a part of the res gestæ of the criminal act itself, but as indicative of a guilty mind; and if you believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant fled from the scene of the offense alleged to have been committed, that is, from the room and house in which the deceased, Densmore, was, it is a circumstance to be weighed by you as tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt. It is not sufficient of itself to establish the guilt of the defendant, but the weight to which that circumstance is entitled is a matter for you to determine in connection with all the other facts and circumstances called out in this case."

This instruction omits the qualification that the defendant, at the time of his flight, knew he was charged with the murder of the police officer, and the giving of such an instruction without the qualification of knowledge on the part of the defendant has for a long time been discountenanced by this court. People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 369, 117 Pac. 176; People v. Sainz, 162 Cal. 242, 246, 121 Pac. 922; People v. Lee Nam Chin, 166 Cal. 570, 137 Pac. 917. But, as was said in the latter case (166 Cal. 573, 137 Pac. 918):

"We will not reverse a case solely because such an instruction has been given, unless it appears that the defendant has been prejudiced thereby."

No such prejudice appears in this case.

[5] At the request of the people the jury was instructed that, if in this case they should find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and they also should find the further fact that there was some extenuating fact or circumstance in the case, it was within their discretion to pronounce such a sentence as would relieve him from the extreme penalty of the law. Continuing, the court said:

"The Penal Code invests a jury in a criminal case for murder with the discretion, but the discretion is not an arbitrary one, and is limited to determining which of two punishments shall be inflicted, and is to be employed only when the jury is satisfied that the lighter penalty should be imposed. If the evidence shows beyond all reasonable doubt the defendant to be guilty of murder in the first degree, but does not show some extenuating fact or circumstance, it is the duty of the jury to find a simple verdict of murder in the first degree, and leave with the law the responsibility of affixing the punishment."

Appellant asserts that this instruction is erroneous, in that it took away from the jury the right to exercise the discretion vested in it by section 190 of the Penal Code, which, in so far as is material here, provides that—

"Every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the same."

Appellant's contention is that, by giving the instruction, the court interfered with the jury's discretion, and in effect told the jury they must find mitigating facts or extenuating circumstances in the case; otherwise the death penalty should be inflicted. Instructions identical with the one given in this case, or so similar as to be the same in effect, have been considered by this court in a number of cases which are reviewed in People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, 126 Pac. 143. In that case the court said (163 Cal. 484, 126 Pac. 146):

"The law of this state thus appears to be thoroughly settled to the effect that the instruction in question is not erroneous."

Furthermore, it appears from the record that after the jury retired to deliberate upon its verdict, it came into court and requested a further instruction as to the penalty to follow if in its opinion the evidence proved the crime of murder in the first degree. The trial court thereupon fully and at length explained the discretion resting with it in fixing the penalty at either life imprisonment or a judgment of death, and the manner in which the exercise of such discretion should be evidenced. The right of the jury to exercise the discretion vested in it by the Code section was therefore not invaded by the trial court.

[6] Appellant complains that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions to the effect that mere probabilities are not sufficient to warrant a conviction, nor is it sufficient, upon the doctrine of chances, that it is more probable that the defendant is guilty, and also that the defendant was not compelled to prove himself innocent. In its instructions concerning the presumption of innocence that attends a defendant in a criminal action, and in its definition and explanation of the term "reasonable doubt," and in explaining where lies the burden of proof, the trial court repeated in almost exact words parts of the requested instructions, and gave all of them in effect. Trial courts are not required to repeat over and over again instructions couched in varying language but embodying the same principle of law. People v. Bickerstaff, 46 Cal. App. 764, 775, 190 Pac. 656, opinion of the Supreme Court denying petition for hearing after judgment in the District Court of Appeal.

[7] Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give a number of instructions requested by him relating to the authority of Policeman Densmore to arrest the defendant, and under what circumstances arrests are illegal. The court did, however, embody in its charge the substance of the sections of the Penal Code relating to arrests, and by whom and how made. The ruling of the trial court refusing to give the requested instructions was correct. Assuming, without deciding, that the policeman may not have had actual authority, as defined by the Code, to arrest the defendant without a warrant (Pen. Code, § 836), the night watchman, Rude, specially employed to watch the premises from which the milk was stolen, did have such authority, either as a special police officer—provided he was one—or as a private citizen, for the public offense was one committed in his presence. Pen. Code, § 837. Rude also had authority to summon the policeman to aid him in apprehending the defendant, if he deemed it necessary; and it was not necessary to inform the defendant of the intention to arrest him, for

He was pursued and apprehended immediately after the commission of the offense. Pen. Code, §§ 839, 841. For another, and perhaps more cogent, reason the ruling of the trial court was correct. Whether or not either watchman Rude or the decedent, Densmore, had authority to arrest the defendant in the first instance became an unimportant question and an immaterial consideration in the light of subsequent events. By the defendant's own admission he was actually apprehended and placed under arrest on the stairway of the lodging house. On the demand of the policeman he produced the bottles of milk he had stolen. Policeman Densmore thereupon said to him: "Consider yourself under arrest. You have to come along with me." The defendant replied: "Please let me go in my room and get my money first, and then I go along with you." The policeman at first refused to accede to defendant's request, but finally agreed to take him to the room. When there, the defendant testified, Densmore made an unprovoked assault upon him, and he feared he was about to be killed. He thereupon shot the policeman to save himself. By his own testimony the defendant narrowed the issue to one of self-defense against an alleged unwarranted assault, and entirely eliminated any issue or contention that he shot the policeman while resisting an illegal arrest. He committed the act after being arrested, and while in actual custody of the policeman. In justification of his act he relied upon a plea of self-defense against personal injury or death, and the jury was fully instructed as to his rights in that theory of the case. The requested instructions would have interjected a false quantity into the case, and would have been confusing to the jury.

[8] Appellant also urged that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions to the effect that, if the jury found the homicide complained of was committed by defendant upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, the offense was but manslaughter, and the defendant could not be convicted of any higher crime. In an instruction, given by the court, it read section 192 of the Penal Code, defining manslaughter to be the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and to be of two kinds, one of which is voluntary—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. It also instructed the jury that intention to kill "must be formed upon a pre-existing reflection and not upon a sudden heat or passion sufficient to preclude the idea of deliberation."

The trial court, in its charge to the jury, taken as a whole, correctly and comprehensively instructed the jury upon all the principles of law applicable to this particular case. It was not required to do more.

The judgment and the order of the trial court denying the defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

DUNNE v. COLOMB et al. (S. F. 10403.)

1. Brokers §86(3)—Cancellation of contract by mutual consent entitling broker to commission not shown.

Evidence that, after default of a purchaser of land, the vendor declared a forfeiture and retook possession for a short time, when a new contract was made between the same parties, held insufficient to establish a cancellation by mutual consent of the first contract and the substitution of the second for it, so as to entitle a broker to commission under the first contract, which was contingent on performance by the purchaser, notwithstanding interest under the first contract was paid to the date when the second took effect.

2. Brokers §64(2)—Mutual cancellation after purchaser's default does not entitle broker to commission.

A cancellation by mutual consent of a contract for the purchase of land, after default of the purchaser, does not entitle a broker to recover his commission, which was contingent on performance by the purchaser, on the theory that the vendor has put it beyond his power to perform, the vendor's obligation to carry out the contract in good faith being at an end upon default of the purchaser.

3. Brokers §64(2)—Vendor not required to sue on contract after default of purchaser for benefit of broker.

A vendor, after default of the purchaser, is not required to sue upon the contract in an attempt to recover the purchase price, though such act, if taken, would inure to the benefit of the broker, whose commission was contingent upon performance by the purchaser.

4. Brokers §57(1)—Broker entitled to commission though first contract between parties failed of performance.

Where, after default of the purchaser of land, the vendor declared a forfeiture, and retook possession for a short time, when a new contract was made between the parties, held, that, upon performance of the second contract, the broker whose commission was contingent upon payment by the purchaser would be entitled to recover, the fact that an abortive contract between the same parties preceded the contract actually performed being insufficient to defeat recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by W. K. Dunne against J. N. Colomb and another. Judgment for plaintiff and defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. H. Spaulding, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Norman A. Eisner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. [1] This cause is before us after decision by the District Court of Appeal. The judgment of the superior court in favor of the plaintiff was by that court reversed. A further consideration of the questions involved satisfies us of the correctness of the conclusion reached by that court, and we adopt in large part its opinion as expressing our views, which part we quote:

"This appeal is by the defendants from a judgment against them for $6,875 commission upon the sale of real property owned by defendants. The plaintiff recovered over $4,000 of the amount of the judgment as a commission directly due to him for producing a purchaser for the property of defendants, and the balance upon an assignment to him of a commission alleged to have been due to Frank Mooradian upon the same transaction.

"By the terms of the written contract between the parties introduced in evidence, the commissions to Mooradian and Dunne were not to be payable until the purchaser paid in full the purchase price for the property. The evidence showed, without conflict, that the purchase price was never paid. Plaintiff contended at the trial and secured his judgment upon the theory that the contract for the purchase and sale of the property, upon which the commission was to be paid, was abandoned by mutual consent of the parties, and another contract substituted therefor; that with this second contract plaintiff is not concerned, but is entitled to his commission, because the defendant, by agreeing to abandon the first contract, was himself the cause of the purchaser's failure to perform the same.

"With all due deference to the rule invoked by respondent and applicable where a conclusion as to facts has been arrived at by a jury upon conflicting evidence, we are unable to find in the record evidence sustaining his theory of the case. The contract between the owners of the property and the brokers was introduced in evidence. It provided that certain commissions were to be paid to said brokers, if a contemplated purchaser, one Hagopian, should enter into a contract for the purchase of the land on conditions and terms satisfactory to the vendors, and if said Hagopian should pay in full the purchase price and considerations for said property. It was admitted by the vendors that Hagopian entered into a contract satisfactory and acceptable to them, by which he agreed to purchase the land for $175,000. The defendant Colomb was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and testified that Hagopian paid $10,000 as a first payment under such contract, and the unpaid balance was to bear interest at 7 per cent. This contract was signed on May 29, 1920. By its terms Hagopian was to pay the balance of the principal, $165,000, on December 1, 1920. The witness Colomb stated that Hagopian was unable to do this, and was in default upon his contract; that thereupon the vendors notified Hagopian that his contract was forfeited. The vendors then went upon the property, and operated it throughout the month of December, 1920. About December 20, 1920, the vendors and Hagopian again negotiated for the purchase and sale of this property. The result of these negotiations was that a contract was executed some time after the middle of January, 1921, and antedated January 1, 1921, by which Hagopian agreed to purchase the property for $175,000, and to pay 8 per cent. upon the unpaid balance, and to give as security for the performance of his obligations thereunder a deed of trust upon another ranch owned by him.

"With the positive testimony in the record, standing uncontradicted, that Hagopian was in default under his contract on December 1, 1920, and that notice of cancellation was served upon him, and that the vendors thereupon entered into possession of the property, and later, together with Hagopian, served notice upon the bank that held the papers in escrow that the contract was forfeited by Hagopian and all rights thereunder were at an end, we do not see any basis for the argument of the respondent that the performance of the contract by the purchaser was prevented by the vendors. Apart from this positive testimony of the vendor, the inference from the written documents themselves seems to support appellants' contention. It is incredible that Hagopian would have agreed to abandon his contract of May 29, 1920, under which he had paid $10,000, and under which he was obligated to pay only 7 per cent. interest upon the unpaid balance, and was obligated to deposit no collateral as security, and enter into another contract by which he was forced to pay $175,000 with no credit for the $10,000 already paid, and to pay 8 per cent. interest upon the unpaid balance, and also to give a deed of trust upon other property as security, unless he had forfeited his rights under the more advantageous contract. The positive evidence of Colomb, called as a witness by plaintiff, not only stands uncontradicted that Hagopian forfeited his contract by noncompliance with its terms, but such testimony is corroborated by the action of Hagopian in acceding to the terms of a new contract regarding the same property, much less advantageous to him than the contract of May 29, 1920. Why should not the first contract have been retained by Hagopian, if it had not been forfeited?

"We find no real conflict in the evidence upon this question of forfeiture of Hagopian's rights under the contract. Respondent admits that the testimony of his witness Colomb is that Hagopian forfeited his contract, but seeks to establish a conflict in the evidence so as to sustain the findings by pointing out that the testimony of Colomb was that, although the contract had been forfeited and canceled on December 1, 1920, for noncompliance with its terms, nevertheless Hagopian paid interest upon the balance due thereunder until January 1, 1921, and that the second contract was antedated January 1, 1921, so that the defendants did not lose any interest. Respondent infers from this that the first contract was in effect until the second contract became effective, and that one was merely substituted for the other. It is true the statement above recited regarding the payment of interest appears in the record, but it does not stand unexplained therein. It cannot be taken apart from the explanation which the witness had a right to make and which he did make. He stated that, after the forfeiture of the contract by Hagopian, the vendors took possession of the land, and worked upon it until the time when the property was turned over to Hagopian under the second contract. As they received nothing for their time and labor during the period they were occupying the property, and as the property received the benefit of such labor, the vendors insisted as a condition of entering upon the second contract with Hagopian that he should pay a sum equivalent to interest on the value of the ranch to compensate them for their trouble and loss of time in looking after the property during the period when there was no contract in existence between the parties. This is a reasonable explanation; it stands uncontradicted in the record, and it must be taken in connection with the statement that interest was paid for the month of December. So taken, it creates no conflict, even by possible inference, with the positive evidence of the cancellation of the contract."

[2] But conceding, for the sake of argument merely, that there was some evidence in the case which would justify the jury in finding that the first contract was canceled by mutual consent, such finding, in view of the admitted default of Hagopian, the vendee, affords no foundation for the judgment in plaintiff's favor. The respondent's contention in support of the judgment is that, by consenting to the cancellation of the contract with Hagopian, the defendants voluntarily put it out of their power to perform their obligation to pay to the plaintiff his commission upon full payment by Hagopian of the price of the land, thereby preventing performance, and making absolute that obligation theretofore contingent.

We cannot agree with this contention. To render such cancellation an act of prevention entailing the consequence claimed by respondent it must be without legal justification. Where the vendee is in default, there is no longer any legal obligation on the vendor to proceed with the performance of the contract. The law gives him the right to regard the contract as at an end. The law prescribes no penalty for the exercise of this right. The default of the vendee, with the consequent destruction of the right of the broker to his commission, was a contingency inherent in the contract, the risk of the occurrence of which was assumed by the broker.

The main case relied upon by the respondent in support of his contention, namely, Ratzlaff v. Trainor-Desmond Co., 41 Cal. App. 586, 183 Pac. 269, recognizes this. It is stated in that opinion:

"Respondent [the broker] assumed the responsibility of losing his commission if said Stewart and Harrison [the vendees] defaulted. But he claimed, and still contends, that his commission became due by reason of the default of appellant [vendor], and, manifestly, to take advantage of that default, he must show that he had not already lost his right in consequence of the forfeiture of the said Stewart and Harrison contracts."

That case differs from the one at bar in the essential respect that the vendor there created the default of which the broker availed himself. Apart from this essential difference, there is some broad language used by Justice Burnett, the writer of the opinion, which we think has misled the respondent. It is said in the opinion:

"If appellant consented to such cancellation, it would, of course, by this voluntary act, in a legal sense prevent the payment of the purchase price. The commission contract necessarily implied that appellant would act in good faith and do nothing to prevent, or even discourage or embarrass the completed purchase of the property. Indeed, according to the plainest principles of honesty and fair dealing, appellant was required to do everything possible to promote the purchase of the land by Stewart and Harrison, and thereby to aid in securing the purchase price, to the end that respondent might receive compensation for the services which he had performed."

The authority cited by Justice Burnett for his broad statement of the rule is section 690 (1426) of Bishop on Contracts, and is as follows:

"If one voluntarily puts it out of his power to do what he has agreed, he breaks his contract, and is immediately liable to be sued therefor, without demand, even though the time specified for performance has not arrived."

In Ratzlaff v. Trainor-Desmond Co., supra, the vendor put it out of his power to perform by voluntarily assigning the contracts with the vendees, so that thereafter it was not entitled to receive further payments thereon, which payments were the source from which the broker's commission was to be paid. Those sums thereafter were paid to the assignee. The vendees were not in default; but the vendor assigned valid subsisting contracts, thus transferring to another the right to receive installment payments which were to be the source of the broker's compensation. This was correctly held to be a voluntary act, which put it out of the power of the vendor to comply with his contract, namely, to pay over to the broker his commission pro tanto as payments on the contracts were received.

The statement in that case that the vendor must do everything possible to aid in the performance of the contract so as to enable the broker to receive his commissions is not to be held to go so far as to forbid the vendor to exercise a right given him by law. It only purports to mean that the vendor must act in good faith in the carrying out of his own obligation to the vendee. He must loyally abide by his contract. This is apparent from the language of Justice Burnett in the same case, when he says:

"But, by this conveyance and the assignment to said company by appellant of all its interest in said Stewart and Harrison contracts, it waived all interest in the payment of said purchase price, and violated its implied obligation to promote the purchase of the property by Stewart and Harrison. The commission contract clearly contemplated that appellant would not change its attitude toward the property to the detriment of the respondent."

[3] In the case at bar, the duty of the vendors to carry out the terms of their contract in good faith was at an end upon the default of the vendee. They were under no obligation to sue upon the contract in an attempt to recover the purchase price, although such action, if successful, would have inured to the benefit of the broker. Prince v. Selby, etc., Co., 35 Cal. App. 684, 687, 170 Pac. 1075; Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 119, 50 N. Y. Supp. 989; McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115, 25 Pac. 266.

[4] Finally—and still assuming that the respondent is correct in his contention that the evidence supports the conclusion that the cancellation of the contract between the defendants and Hagopian was by mutual consent of the parties—such cancellation under the circumstances of this case did not constitute an act of prevention by the vendors of the performance of their contract with the plaintiff to pay him his commission, since it was immediately followed by the execution of a second contract between them and Hagopian, which falls strictly within the agreement between the defendants and the plaintiff for the payment to the latter of a commission for his services. The fact that it was preceded by an abortive contract between the defendants and the purchaser produced by the plaintiff has no significance. The situation is not different from that which would have existed had the vendee, 24 hours after entering into the first contract, come to the vendors and said: "I find I shall not be able to perform the contract. Will you modify it by extending the time of payment?" and the vendors had agreed to such extension and executed a new contract. Would it then be contended that thereby the broker had lost his right to his commission, or that it was confined to the contingency of full performance of the first contract, or that by the modification the vendors' obligation to pay it became absolute and immediate? We think not. And the fact that six months intervened between the first and second contracts makes no difference in principle. If Hagopian should make full payment for the ranch in accordance with the terms of the second contract, the plaintiff will then be entitled to the commission stipulated for in his agreement with the defendants.

There being, as we have seen, no evidence that the performance of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants was prevented by any act of the latter, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff is unsupported, and must be reversed. It is so ordered.

WRIGHT, City Clerk, et al. v. JORDAN, Secretary of State. (S. F. 10940.)

1. Municipal corporations — 34—Duty to file municipal consolidation election returns not affected by pendency of contests.

Pendency of proceedings, to which the secretary of state is not a party, to invalidate municipal consolidation elections, and compel a city clerk to file his certificate of the result, do not excuse the secretary of state's refusal to perform his ministerial duty, under Municipal Consolidation Act, §§ 4 and 5, to file official records of the canvass of the returns and the city clerk's statement of the result.

2. Injunction — 85(1)—Will not lie to restrain secretary of state from filing record of municipal consolidation elections.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 526, and Civ. Code, § 3423, prohibiting injunctions to prevent execution of public statutes by officers of the law for the public benefit, an injunction will not lie to restrain the secretary of state from filing records of municipal consolidation elections.

3. Constitutional law — 45—Wisdom of constitutional provision not for Supreme Court to declare.

Whether a limitation on the reserved power of the people, under Const. art. 4, § 1, as amended in 1911, to initiate constitutional amendments, by requiring that amendments submitted at the same election be presented separately as provided by article 18, § 1, in the case of amendments initiated in the Legislature, would have been wise or prudent is not for the Supreme Court to declare.

4. Constitutional law — 9(1)—Constitutional amendment held not void because changes in several provisions were not presented separately.

In view of Const. art. 4, § 1, as amended in 1911, reserving to the people the power to initiate constitutional amendments without any provision for separate presentation, as provided by article 18, § 1, article 11, § 8½ subd. 7, authorizing assumption of the bonded indebtedness of cities annexed or consolidated by majority vote, and Municipal Consolidation Act, as amended in 1915 and 1917 based thereon, are not invalid, because changes effected by such amendment in several constitutional provisions were not presented separately.

5. Constitutional law — 5—Statutes — 159—Provisions may be impliedly repealed by changes in other portions.

Provisions of a Constitution or statute may be impliedly repealed or abrogated by adoption of changes in other portions rendering provisions not expressly repealed obnoxious or ineffective.

6. Municipal corporations — 34—Power to assume bonded indebtedness by majority vote in case of consolidation held not limited to cities formed under Constitution.

Const. art. 11, § 8½, subd. 7, held not intended to provide for assumption of the bonded indebtedness of cities annexed to or consolidated with others by majority vote in municipalities formed under section 8 only, in view of the provision that it shall apply to all annexations or consolidations "under this section or any other section of the Constitution."

7. Constitutional law — 42—Defects in submission of constitutional amendment not available to defeat mandamus proceedings thereunder.

A constitutional amendment submitted in its entirety to, and adopted by majority vote of, the people, who must be assumed to have duly considered and voted intelligently on it, cannot be collaterally attacked by the secretary of state in mandamus proceedings to compel him to file records of elections held thereunder, because of insufficient recitals in instructions to voters or arguments accompanying the text of the proposed amendment.

8. Mandamus — 153—Interveners held not entitled to urge claims being litigated elsewhere.

Interveners cannot broaden the scope or function of mandamus proceedings to compel the secretary of state to file certificate and records of the canvass of a municipal election by urging claims having their proper forum elsewhere and in litigation there.

Application by Allen H. Wright, City Clerk of the City of San Diego, and such City, for writ of mandate to compel Frank C. Jordan, Secretary of State, to file certain documents. Writ granted.

S. J. Higgins, of San Diego, for petitioners.

Jesse George, of San Diego, for intervener.

Leon French, of San Francisco, and Hugh A. Sanders, Sloane & Sloane and F. G. Blood, all of San Diego, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. The petitioner herein, Allen H. Wright, alleging himself to be the city clerk of the city of San Diego, also petitioner herein, applies for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent herein, as secretary of state of the state of California to forthwith file in his office certain documents purporting to set forth the official record of the canvass of the returns of an election held in the city of San Diego upon the question of a proposed consolidation of the said city of San Diego with the city of East San Diego, together with the official record of the canvass of the returns of an election held in the city of East San Diego upon the same question, together with a statement prepared and duly certified by the said city clerk of the city of San Diego, and by him transmitted and delivered to said respondent, setting forth the date of each such election and the time and result of the canvass of the returns thereof, and showing that each such election had resulted in a majority vote of the qualified electors of each such municipal corporation in favor of such consolidation. The petitioner further shows that the respondent has refused and still refuses to file such documents and statement in violation of his duty as a ministerial officer of the state of California so to do under the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of the Statutes of 1913, as amended in 1915 and 1917, known as the Municipal Consolidation Act.

The respondent, by his return to the alternative writ of mandate issued herein, admits the averments of said petition as to the official position of the petitioner and as to the due incorporation of the cities of San Diego and East San Diego, and also as to the fact that elections were held in the cities of San Diego and East San Diego, respectively, as set forth in said petition; but the respondent denies that said elections, or either of them, or any of the proceedings taken and had in relation thereto, are valid, for the alleged reason that the Municipal Consolidation Act of 1915, under which said elections were held, is violative of the Constitution of the state of California, in that it permits the assumption of a bonded indebtedness in an annexation proceeding by a mere majority vote, and for the further reason that the petition for said election was insufficient to confer jurisdiction for the calling of such election, in that it did not contain the signatures of one-fourth of the qualified electors residing within the said city of San Diego. The respondent further sets forth in his return to said writ certain legal proceedings, which have been commenced, and are still pending in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of San Diego, and also certain legal proceedings which have been commenced and are still pending in the District Court of Appeal of the state of California in and for the second appellate district thereof, as additional reasons why he should not comply with the petitioners' demand; and in that behalf alleges that there has been commenced and is now pending in the said superior court in and for the county of San Diego in an action in quo warranto brought by the people of the state of California upon the relation of one Charles H. Harris against the said city of San Diego, wherein the plaintiff therein seeks to have the special elections described in the petition herein, and all proceedings taken and had in connection therewith declared illegal and void, and that the pendency of said action, involving as it is alleged to do, the exact issues raised in the petition herein, is a bar to this proceeding and to the issuance of a writ of mandate herein. The respondent herein further avers that in said quo warranto proceeding an injunction pendente lite has been issued by said superior court, and is still in full force and effect restraining the city of San Diego and the city clerk thereof and each and every other agent of the said city of San Diego from assuming in any manner any jurisdiction over the city of East San Diego and from interfering with or obstructing in any manner the present or constituted officers and employees of said city of East San Diego in the discharge of their respective functions until the final determination of said quo warranto proceeding; and that by his petition herein the petitioner is seeking to compel the respondent herein to knowingly assist and co-operate with the said petitioners in a willful violation of said restraining order and of the respondent's official duty to regard injunctions issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, in this, that, if respondent accepts and files the certificate of the result of said election, such act by respondent will result ipso facto in conferring jurisdiction upon the officials of the city of San Diego to take over the said city of East San Diego, and deprive the present officers thereof of their offices and authority, and destroy the corporate existence of the said city of East San Diego; and that for this reason this writ should be denied. The respondent also sets forth the fact that there has been commenced and is now pending in the District Court of Appeal of the state of California, in and for the second district thereof, an application for a writ of mandate in a proceeding entitled Drumhiller et al. v. City of San Diego, which is an application for a writ of mandate directing the city clerk of the city of San Diego, petitioner herein, to file his certificate as set forth in his petition herein, which proceeding involves the same issues as those presented in this proceeding, and affords to the petitioner herein plain, speedy, and adequate relief; and that the pendency of said cause constitutes a bar to the maintenance of this proceeding and to the issuance of a writ of mandate herein. The respondent further avers that the issuance of said writ by the said District Court of Appeal has been restrained by an alternative writ of prohibition issued out of this court, returnable on the 8th day of January, 1924, and that, if upon said return day said alternative writ of prohibition is dismissed, the petitioners herein will have a sufficient, plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the said proceeding already pending in the said District Court of Appeal. Wherefore the respondent prays that the petitioners take nothing by the application herein.

Upon the hearing upon the alternative writ of mandate issued herein, certain other parties, including certain electors, property owners, and taxpayers of the said city of East San Diego, and also including the people of the state of California, through the Attorney General, as plaintiffs in the quo warranto proceedings above referred to, applied for leave to intervene in this proceeding, and to set forth in their respective complaints of intervention herein the matters set forth and alleged in the several proceedings above adverted to as pending in the superior court of the county of San Diego and in the District Court of Appeal. They were permitted so to do; and the matter in its several phases as thus presented was, upon the return day of said alternative writ, argued and submitted to this court for decision, at which time certain considerations were urged upon this court as reasons for a speedy determination of the main issues presented herein, which considerations the court deems adequate.

[1] As to the matters urged by the respondent herein, relating to the existence and pendency of certain proceedings in this court and in the District Court of Appeal and in the superior court of the county of San Diego, we are of the opinion that the existence and pendency of such proceedings, to none of which the respondent herein is a party, do not, and neither of them does, furnish to this respondent in themselves an adequate or legal excuse for his failure and refusal to perform his ministerial duty in the matter of the filing in his office as secretary of state the documents and statement officially presented to him for such filing by the petitioner Wright herein, as city clerk of the city of San Diego. It is admitted by the respondent herein that the documents and statement of the said city clerk conform to the requirements of sections 4 and 5 of the Municipal Consolidation Act, under which they are offered for filing. This being so, his ministerial duty to file the same cannot be affected or interfered with by the fact that other interested parties have seen fit to institute proceedings in the several courts of this state, calling into question the validity of the election in the two municipalities to which such documents and statement relate, since the matters which are presented for litigation in such proceedings are matters with which, in his strictly ministerial capacity, he is neither called upon nor qualified to deal. In the early case of Pacheco v. Beck, 52 Cal. 3, this precise question was determined, wherein it was held that when a board of supervisors has canvassed the returns of an election, and when a record thereof is made and entered upon its minutes and has been duly authenticated and transmitted by the clerk of the board to the secretary of state, it is the duty of that official, upon the face of such record, to estimate the votes given to members of Congress as shown thereby, and that he cannot go behind such certified record in making such estimate or issuing his certificates of election thereon, and that his duty to issue such certificates can be compelled by writ of mandate. This decision has been approved by this court, and followed by the District Court of Appeal in the cases of People v. Stewart, 132 Cal. 283, 64 Pac. 285; Napa Union High School District v. Board of Supervisors, 54 Cal. App. 326, 201 Pac. 948. In the case of O. & V. R. R. Co. v. Plumas County, 37 Cal. 354, it was decided that the pendency of proceedings in quo warranto was no defense to a proceeding in mandamus to compel the performance of a ministerial act.

[2] As to the preliminary injunction issued by the superior court in said quo warranto proceeding, it appears from the record herein that said injunction does not purport by its terms or scope to enjoin or otherwise affect the action of the respondent herein in the matter of the filing of the record of said election, but, even if it did purport so to do, and if the said respondent had been a party to said proceeding, it is clear that as to him and his official action such injunction would have no force and effect, in view of the provisions of section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which expressly declares that "an injunction cannot be granted * * * to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit." Section 3423 of the Civil Code contains a similar provision. This court has given precise application to these provisions of the Codes in the cases of People ex rel. v. Board of Supervisors, 75 Cal. 179, 16 Pac. 776, wherein it was held that an injunction would not lie to restrain the board of supervisors of a county from giving notice as required by law of the result of an election, on the ground that the election was illegally ordered by the board by reason of their want of jurisdiction. A like application of these provisions of the Codes was given in Reclamation District, etc., v. Superior Court, etc., 171 Cal. 672, 154 Pac. 845.

[3, 4] The respondent makes the final contention that he should not be required to comply with the demand of the petitioner herein, for the reason that the provision of the act of the Legislature of 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 311) is unconstitutional. This contention has its foundation in the respondent's further contention that the provisions of subdivision 7 of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, upon which the provisions of said statute are based, is itself unconstitutional, for the reason that it was not adopted with the formalities or in the manner required by the provisions of section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution and is therefore itself inoperative and void. Section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution relates to amendments to the Constitution, and is one of its original articles as adopted in 1879. At the time of its adoption, and for many years thereafter, it provided the only method for making amendments to the Constitution, viz. that of initiating such proposed amendments in the Legislature, and, when favorably acted upon by two-thirds of the members elected to both houses, such proposed amendments were to be submitted to the vote of the people. The article provided that "should more amendments than one be submitted at the same election they shall be so prepared and distinguished by numbers or otherwise that each can be voted on separately." But the people of the state of California, in the year 1911, adopted an amendment to section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution, whereby they reserved to themselves the power to propose and adopt or reject amendments to the Constitution "independent of the Legislature," and by "initiative measure to be submitted directly to the electors." The amendment to article 4 of the Constitution provides an elaborate scheme for the formulation and presentation to the electors of initiative amendments to the Constitution, wherein no such limitation as is embodied in the provisions of section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution can be found. Whether such a limitation upon the reserved power of the people to formulate their own amendments to the Constitution, and to present the same to the electors separately, or in the form of a comprehensive measure effecting several independent changes in the Constitution as it then existed, would have been wise or prudent it is not for this court to declare. It is sufficient to show that no such limitation upon the method of exercising the power of amending the Constitution by initiative measures has been embodied in the provisions of the initiative amendment adopted in 1911, and that we cannot import into the same the provisions of article 18 of the Constitution relating to amendments to the Constitution through their initiation in the Legislature and submission by that method to popular vote.

In the light of this conclusion we approach the question as to the constitutionality of subdivision 7 of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, adopted as an initiative measure by the people under their foregoing reserve of power embraced in the amendment to section 1 of article 4 thereof. Subdivision 7 of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, as thus proposed and adopted by the initiative method, reads as follows:

"In all cases of annexation of unincorporated territory to an incorporated city, or the consolidation of two or more incorporated cities, assumption of an existing bonded indebtedness by such unincorporated territory or by either of the cities so consolidating may be made by a majority vote of the qualified electors voting thereon in the territory or city which shall assume an existing bonded indebtedness. This provision shall apply whether annexation or consolidation is effected under this section or any other section of this Constitution, and the provisions of section 18 of this article shall not be a prohibition thereof."

[5] It is to be noted that the foregoing subdivision of said section of said article 11

of the Constitution as proposed to be amended by this initiative measure is but part of a comprehensive and elaborate change to be made in the Constitution with regard to the organization, government, and enlargement of cities by the incorporation therein of additional territory, by the consolidation of adjacent municipalities, or by the formation of city and county governments. It is true that the amendment as thus presented does effectuate changes in several already existing articles, sections, and clauses of the Constitution, and that these are not presented in the form of separate amendments to be voted upon by the electors; but, as we have already seen, this is not required either by the language or intendments of section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution as amended in 1911. But, independent of this conclusion, we are not at all satisfied that, under a liberal interpretation of section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution, the Legislature might not itself have proposed and presented to the people for their adoption in the form of a single amendment to the Constitution the precise measure embodied in this initiative amendment, even though its effect might be to change or abrogate other portions of the Constitution not embodied in the particular article thereof thus sought to be amended. Such an interpretation of said article is in entire harmony with the well-established principle that certain provisions of a constitution or of a statute may be repealed or abrogated by implication arising out of the adoption of changes in other portions thereof, rendering obnoxious, or ineffective the provisions thereof not expressly repealed.

[6] The respondent further urges that subdivision 7 of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, as the latter was amended in 1914, was not intended by the proponents thereof to provide generally for the annexation of unincorporated territory to cities or for the consolidation of contiguous municipalities, but only to provide for the inclusion of such powers in the charters of such municipalities as might be formed under the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution, of which said section 8½ thereof is claimed to be an extension. We cannot adopt this narrow interpretation of said subdivision in said amendment to the Constitution in view of the particular language of said subdivision, by which its provision as to the assumption of bonded indebtedness by either of the cities so consolidated by a majority vote of the electors voting thereon is given application to all annexations or consolidations, whether effected "under this section or any other section of the Constitution."

[7] The criticism which the respondent makes as to the details of the method by which this amendment to the Constitution was adopted constitutes matter which cannot be taken advantage of by him in this proceeding, since it amounts merely to a collateral attack upon an amendment to the Constitution, which has been adopted by a majority vote of the people, who must be assumed to have voted intelligently upon an amendment to their organic law, the whole text of which was supplied each of them prior to the election, and which they must be assumed to have duly considered, regardless of any insufficient recitals in the instructions to voters or the arguments pro and con of its advocates or opponents accompanying the text of the proposed measure. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the contentions of the respondent herein as to the unconstitutionality of the amendment to the Constitution, under which the act of the Legislature was adopted, providing for the election, as to which it is the petitioners' demand that he file the required documents and certificate, are without merit.

We have thus considered the merits of the respondent's said contention, without regard to the petitioners' insistence that the respondent is not entitled to urge the unconstitutionality of the constitutional amendment or of the particular statute under which he is required to act, in a mandamus proceeding, a point which we do not decide.

[8] As to the interveners herein it will suffice to say that, while they were permitted to intervene to the extent and for the purpose of sustaining or opposing the respective contentions of the petitioners and respondents herein, their rights as interveners herein go no further, since they cannot be heard to broaden the scope or function of this special proceeding by urging claims or contentions which have their proper forum elsewhere, and in which forum they are already embattled. McNeil v. Morgan, 157 Cal. 373-377, 108 Pac. 69.

STAFFORD v. MARTINONI (JEWETT, Intervener). (S. F. 10032.)

1. Husband and wife ⚭262(1)—Presumptions in support of widow's claim to property as separate estate apply only to time before husband's death.

Presumptions of law in aid of a widow's claim to property acquired during coverture as her separate property apply only to the time before her husband's death, she being chargeable with community property at the time of his death as trustee for the benefit of his estate and heirs.

2. Husband and wife ⚭247—Act declaring property acquired during coverture community property held not modified as to personalty, "conveyed," "conveyance."

The opening clause of Civ. Code, § 164, providing that "all other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife * * * is community property," was not modified, as relates to acquisition of personalty by succeeding clauses creating the presumption that property "conveyed" to a married woman is her separate property; "conveyed" and "conveyance" referring only to transfers of realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conveyance.]

3. Husband and wife ⚭249—Personalty acquired during coverture is community property at husband's death.

Under Civ. Code, § 164, personal property acquired during coverture is community property at the date of the husband's death, though standing in the name of the wife, who becomes trustee thereof for the benefit of the husband's estate and heirs, and she or her administrator should be held to an accounting for such property and the investment and proceeds thereof.

4. Husband and wife ⚭262(1)—Nature and effect of presumption that property conveyed to wife is separate property, stated.

The presumption raised by Civ. Code, § 164, that property conveyed to a married woman is her separate property, is binding (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1961-2061), unless controverted by other evidence, the sufficiency of which is for the court or jury to determine; such presumption being a form of evidence (section 1957).

5. Husband and wife ⚭264—Finding that realty conveyed to wife was separate property held justified.

A finding that property conveyed to a wife during her husband's lifetime was her separate property, though purchased with community funds, held justified.

6. Husband and wife ⚭273(2)—Realty acquired by widow from community personalty held community property.

Real property acquired by a widow directly from personalty constituting part of the community estate at her husband's death, held community property, and hence the proper subject of an accounting in an action against her administrator.

7. Husband and wife ⚭276(7)—Husband's administrator held entitled to accounting as to community realty set apart to widow.

An administrator of a deceased husband's estate held entitled to an accounting as to confessedly community realty, set apart to the widow on her representation that it constituted his entire estate and was worth less than $1,500.

8. Husband and wife ⚭276(7)—Widow's administrator held to accounting as to what property held by her was community property.

The administrator of a deceased widow held to such an accounting to her deceased husband's estate as to realty held by her at his death, other than that conveyed to her during his lifetime, and personalty consisting mainly of notes and mortgages taken by her for loans made after his death, as would disclose what portion was derived from community property at the date of the husband's death.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by William M. Stafford, as administrator of the estate of Charles R. Brown, deceased, against E. Martinoni, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Caroline R. Brown, deceased, wherein E. B. Jewett intervened. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. F. Stafford and Wm. M. Stafford, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck and Herbert W. Clark, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

Clarence E. Todd and Vincent Surr, both of San Francisco, for intervener.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. In this action the plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of Charles R. Brown, deceased, brings suit against the defendant as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Caroline R. Brown, deceased, and in his complaint herein alleges that Charles R. Brown and Caroline R. Brown were, in the lifetime of both, husband and wife; that Charles R. Brown died intestate in the city of Oakland, Cal., on the 8th day of April, 1910; that at the time of his death he was the owner of certain real estate, consisting of certain parcels of land specifically described in said complaint and was also the owner and possessed of a sum of money in excess of $10,000, all of which real and personal property was the community property of himself and said wife, Caroline R. Brown; that upon his death said Caroline R. Brown took possession of all of the said real estate and personal property and dealt with, controlled, and administered the same thereafter and down to the time of her death on the 21st day of December, 1914, when she died testate; that on the 7th day of November, 1912, said Caroline R. Brown was appointed administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband and duly qualified as such; and that she thereafter filed an inventory and appraisal of the property of her deceased husband's said estate wherein she set forth and stated under oath that the only property belonging to the estate of Charles R. Brown, deceased, was a parcel of land in the county of Fresno, which was appraised in the sum of $1,450 and which she petitioned the court to set apart to her absolutely, as his widow, under the provisions of section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that her petition in that regard was granted by the court having jurisdiction over said estate; that said Caroline R. Brown never during her lifetime accounted otherwise for any other property belonging to the estate of the said Charles R. Brown, deceased, but, on the contrary, by her last will and testament, left all of her property to her own heirs; that upon her death the defendant, herein, E. Martinoni, was appointed administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Caroline R. Brown, deceased, and as such took and holds possession of all of said real estate and personal property for the heirs of said Caroline R. Brown, deceased, who claimed to be the owners thereof; that said Charles R. Brown upon his death left certain heirs whose names are set forth in said complaint; that on the 6th day of December, 1916, the plaintiff herein, Wm. M. Stafford, was duly appointed administrator of the estate of Charles R. Brown, deceased, duly qualified, and has since been acting as such administrator. Wherefore, the plaintiff prays for a judgment declaring that said Charles R. Brown was at the time of his death the owner of an undivided one-half of all of said real estate and personal property as his share of the community property of himself and of his said wife, Caroline R. Brown, and directing that the defendant as such administrator of the estate of Caroline R. Brown, deceased, account to said plaintiff for all of the rents, issues, and profits of said property from and after the date of the death of the said Charles R. Brown, deceased, and for such other and further relief as may be proper in the premises.

The defendant herein, by his answer, specifically denies the averments of the several paragraphs of plaintiff's said complaint in so far as these undertake to set forth the ownership by the said Charles R. Brown of any interest in the real or personal property described in said complaint, and then proceeds to affirmatively allege that all of the real and personal property set forth therein was at all times prior to her death the separate property of the said Caroline R. Brown, and that the same and the whole thereof consisted of property which was held by her before her marriage with said Charles R. Brown or was acquired by her after such marriage by gift, bequest, devise, or descent with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and that, at the time of her death and for a long time prior thereto, said Caroline R. Brown was the owner in fee simple absolute, and was in the possession as such of all of said real and personal property. The defendant also pleads several sections of the Code of Civil Procedure as a bar to said action under the statute of limitations.

In addition to the foregoing answer of the defendant E. Martinoni, as administrator of the estate of Caroline R. Brown, deceased, one of his heirs appeared and filed, with permission of the court, a complaint in intervention, wherein he sets forth substantially the same matters as were averred in the complaint of the said administrator.

Upon the trial of the cause, the plaintiff introduced in evidence certain documents and other evidentiary matter tending to show the origin, ownership, and condition of the real and personal properties of Charles R. Brown and Caroline R. Brown during the period between the date of their said marriage and the date of the death of said Charles R. Brown, and also tending to show the dealings of said Caroline R. Brown with respect to said real and personal property after the death of her said husband, and the present condition thereof or of the proceeds thereof. The plaintiff also offered, and there was admitted in evidence, certain statements, acts, and conduct of said Caroline R. Brown, both before and after the date of the death of her said husband, and which were in the nature of admissions against interest. When the plaintiff rested his case, the defendant offered no documentary or oral evidence in support of the denials and averments of their said pleadings, but rested his defense to said action solely upon certain asserted presumptions of law, to be hereafter adverted to, and also upon his plea of the statute of limitations. The trial court, in deciding said cause, upheld the contention of the defendant based upon said presumptions of law, holding that said Caroline R. Brown was, during her lifetime, the owner of the whole of said real and personal property as her sole and separate estate, with the exception of the said Fresno parcel of land, as property either acquired by her prior to her marriage with said Charles R. Brown, or acquired by her after her said marriage with said Charles R. Brown, by gift, devise, or descent; and that as to said Fresno parcel of land she had acquired the same and the ownership thereto under the provisions of section 1469 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and that the said plaintiff as administrator of the estate of said Charles R. Brown, deceased, had no right, title, or interest in said property. The court further found that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations. A judgment was accordingly rendered and entered in the defendant's favor and for his costs. It is from such judgment that this appeal has been taken.

It is the appellant's contention upon this appeal that the findings and decision of the trial court to the effect that said Caroline R. Brown was at the time of, or at any time prior to, the death of her said husband, Charles R. Brown, the owner of all or of any of the real and personal property set forth in said complaint as her sole and separate property, is not supported by the evidence in the case; that in so far as the said defendant's claim of such ownership is based upon an ownership by her of any portion of said real or personal property prior to her marriage with said husband is concerned, said finding is contradicted by the undisputed evidence to the contrary, and that in so far as the said claim of ownership in said Caroline R. Brown is based upon the presumptions of law solely relied upon by them, said presumptions and the operation and effect thereof as evidence in the case were fully overthrown by the substantial and undisputed evidence educed by the plaintiff upon the trial, and hence were insufficient to furnish any foundation for the findings and judgment in the defendant's favor. The consideration of the appellant's contentions in the foregoing respects requires a brief recital of the practically undisputed facts of the case.

Charles R. Brown and Caroline R. Brown were married in Tombstone, Ariz., on March 17, 1880. At the time of his said marriage Charles R. Brown was conducting a restaurant at said place and was earning therein about a thousand dollars a month. Caroline R. Brown, prior to her marriage, was working for said Charles R. Brown in his said restaurant, and it is clearly shown from the undisputed evidence, including her own statements and admissions, that she had neither money nor property at the time of her marriage with Charles R. Brown. This disposes at the outset of the finding of the trial court that said Caroline R. Brown was the owner of any portion of said real or personal property as her separate property and estate by virtue of having acquired the same prior to her marriage with Charles R. Brown. Subsequent to their said marriage, Charles R. Brown and his wife continued to live for a time in Arizona, but later, and about the year 1886, appear to have removed to Hanford, then in Tulare county, Cal., where they lived between 1886 and 1902, and where for a time Charles R. Brown ran a hotel or boarding house and also purchased and sold real estate. During those years he purchased four separate parcels of real estate, paying therefor in the aggregate $6,100 and taking the deeds therefor in his own name only. During the same period he sold two pieces of real estate for the sum in the aggregate of $11,100. During this period also he opened a bank account with the First National Bank of Hanford, where the total amount of deposits between November 16, 1887, and February 4, 1904, amounted to the sum of $17,224.42. He closed his account at said bank on November 7, 1904. During the period of his residence in Hanford, Charles R. Brown engaged in other transactions of a business character. He borrowed at one time certain money giving as security therefor a mortgage upon real property. This note and mortgage were executed by himself alone. He also granted to the county of Tulare certain rights of way across the lands owned by him, executing the grant in his own name only. Whatever other transactions in the purchase and sale of real estate were engaged in by him during the period of his residence in Hanford, were all conducted in his own name alone, Mrs. Brown taking no active part in any of the foregoing transactions and having no bank account there in her own name.

In about the year 1902, Charles R. Brown and his wife removed to Elmhurst, Alameda county, where they continued to reside up to the time of his death. Prior to his said removal, certain bank accounts had been opened with the Union Trust Company of San Francisco. The first of these was opened on December 31, 1896, and closed on July 11, 1905. It stood in the name of Charles R. Brown and showed a total deposit in the sum of $6,176.86. The second of these accounts was opened on June 26, 1899, in the name of Caroline R. Brown, and was also closed on July 11, 1905, showing a total deposit in the sum of $3,002.73. The third of said accounts was opened May 22, 1903, in the name of C. R. Brown, and was closed on June 1, 1903, showing total deposits in the sum of $3,800. The C. R. Brown referred to in this account was elsewhere shown to be Charles R. Brown. The fourth of said bank accounts stood in the name of Caroline R. Brown or Charles R. Brown, and was opened January 22, 1906, and closed January 2, 1908, and its total deposits aggregated $8,308.05. The fifth of said bank accounts was opened November 18, 1905, in the names of Caroline R. Brown or Charles R. Brown, and was closed on January 1, 1906, with total deposits aggregating $7,214.87. The sources of these several deposits have not been shown, with the exception of one item in the fourth of said accounts which stood in the name of both spouses, which item consisted in a deposit of $3,000 and which was evidently in the form of a draft drawn in favor of the husband, and which had for its source a payment made by one W. R. Wiles upon a piece of land in Tulare county, owned by Charles R. Brown and sold by him to said Wiles. Some light is thrown upon these several bank accounts by the following facts disclosed by the undisputed evidence in the case. The removal of the Browns from Hanford to Elmhurst was apparently caused by the fact that the husband's health was failing. Whether this failure of health on his part had for its cause a kick on the head which he received from a cow, or was due to some other cause, does not very clearly appear; but it does appear, both from the direct evidence of friends of the family and from the express statements and admissions of Caroline R. Brown, that from a date not long after the removal to Alameda county, Charles R. Brown's failing health and mental powers incapacitated him more and more from attending to his business to a degree which seemed to require that Mrs. Brown should increasingly take over the active management of their business affairs.

Upon this point there were statements and admissions by her, testified to by several persons who were intimate friends of the family and whose testimony stands unimpeached in the record, which are most significant. These several witnesses testified to conversations held with Mrs. Brown on various occasions with respect to her husband's mental and physical condition during the several years preceding his death, and they may be summarized as showing that Mrs. Brown, beginning not long after the removal to Elmhurst, undertook for the first time to handle actively the business affairs of the family on account of the failing health and incapacity of her husband, and before long assumed entire control thereof, engaging chiefly in the business of loaning money, and finally and for some time before his death conducting her various transactions without consulting her husband and dealing with respect to both her real estate and personal property transactions in her own name, and to the extent that at the time of his death on April 8, 1910, there was no money in any bank account standing in the name of Charles R. Brown, nor was there any real property standing in his name, with the single exception of the Fresno county parcel of land, which was inventoried as constituting the whole of his estate.

[1] In determining the question presented in this case as to how far the presumptions of law relied upon by the respondents herein in support of their claim that the whole of the property, both real and personal, in respect to which an accounting is sought in this action, was to be held the separate property and estate of Caroline R. Brown, it is important to note that the time and state of the properties of both classes to which said presumptions are to be given application, if at all, is that period of time which lies prior to and up to the time of the death of Charles R. Brown, since it is plain that if Caroline R. Brown, as the wife of Charles R. Brown, was not entitled, prior to his death, to the benefit of said legal presumptions investing her with the title to said properties, both real and personal, as her separate property, by reason of the fact that they had come to be placed in her own name, she could not thereafter become entitled thereto by any changes in the form of said properties or of the proceeds thereof so long as these could be identified as being derived from properties held by the community prior to her husband's death; since as to the whole amount of all such properties treated as community property at the time of the death of her said husband she would be chargeable as the trustee thereof for the benefit of his estate and heirs.

[2] Having this evident proposition in mind, it may be well before dealing with these properties in detail to set forth the two presumptions of law upon which the respondents solely rely in support of their contention that the whole of said properties were separate properties of Caroline R. Brown. The first of these presumptions is that expressly set forth in section 164 of the Civil Code, and upon that clause therein which states:

"Whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property."

The other of said presumptions is the asserted presumption that, when property is purchased with community funds and placed in the name of the wife, it will be presumed to have been a gift from her husband. In determining whether these presumptions can be given application to those properties which had come to be placed in the name of Caroline R. Brown prior to the death of Charles R. Brown, we will first deal with the personal property in the form in which it existed at and prior to the date of the death of Charles R. Brown. As has already been seen, Mrs. Brown had no property prior to her marriage with Charles R. Brown; neither did she acquire any property after her marriage with Charles R. Brown by devise or bequest from any person or by any express gift from Charles R. Brown. Whatever personal property she acquired or held in her own name after her marriage with Charles R. Brown and prior to the date of his death was personal property acquired during the existence of the marriage relation between herself and Charles R. Brown. It must therefore be held to be community property under the first clause of section 164 of the Civil Code, as it read prior to and at the date of the death of Charles R. Brown, unless that portion of said section of the Civil Code can be held to have been modified by the succeeding clauses of said section of the code. If not so modified, it would follow irresistibly that no presumption of any kind could be indulged in which would have the effect of defeating the express language of that portion of said section of the Civil Code. The opening clause of said section of the code reads as follows:

"All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, * * * is community property."

To indulge the presumption that personal property thus acquired and standing in the name of the wife is a gift from the husband and is therefore her separate property, would obviously be to destroy the declared effect of this opening clause of said section 164 of the Civil Code, unless its effect can be held to have been modified as to personal property by the succeeding clauses of said section. It is the contention of the respondents herein that this opening clause of said section 164 of the Civil Code has been modified as to all property, both real and personal, by the succeeding clause thereof, wherein it is stated that "whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property." The scope to be given to this clause in said section of the Code in the way of modifying the preceding clause thereof turns upon the interpretation of the words "conveyed" and "conveyance," as employed in this and in the other clauses of said section which follow after it. It would seem to be obvious, reading these several clauses of said section together, that the terms "conveyed" and "conveyance," as employed therein, have reference only to transfers of real property. Such was the interpretation placed upon these terms as used in said section of the code by this court in the case of Booker v. Castillo, 154 Cal. 672, 98 Pac. 1067, wherein it was held that these terms as used therein had reference to real property only. A like interpretation was placed upon these terms as employed in said section in the case of Peiser v. Bradbury, 138 Cal. 570, 72 Pac. 165, wherein it was held that a mortgage did not come within the meaning to be given to the term "conveyance" in said section of the code.

It is our conclusion, therefore, that the opening clause of section 164 of the Civil Code, in so far as it relates to the acquisition of personal property by either spouse during coverture, other than by gift, devise, or bequest, has not been modified by the terms of the succeeding clauses of said section, the latter having reference solely to transfers of real estate. The authorities fully support this view. Hammond v. McCollough, 159 Cal. 639, 115 Pac. 216; Estate of Pepper, 158 Cal. 619, 112 Pac. 62, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092; Rowe v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., 134 Cal. 405, 66 Pac. 569; Fennell v. Drinkhouse, 131 Cal. 447, 63 Pac. 734, 82 Am. St. Rep. 361; Van Camp v. Van Camp, 53 Cal. App. 17, 199 Pac. 885; Brenneke v. Smallman, 2 Cal. App. 306, 83 Pac. 302.

[3] It follows from this conclusion and from the foregoing authorities in support thereof that, as to all of the personal property which was originally the community property of these spouses standing in the name of the husband, but which came during the years between 1902 and 1910 to stand in the name of the wife, said properties were community property at the date of the husband's death. They consisted of five promissory notes, each secured by mortgage, viz.: The note of Chas. Norling, dated February 24, 1909, for the sum of $1,250; the note of Robert Norling, dated March 16, 1909, for the sum of $1,000; the note of Hulda Mallett, dated June 6, 1909, for the sum of $800; the note of Wm. F. Courtney, dated July 7, 1909, for the sum of $2,000; and the note of A. H. Illiohan, dated July 7, 1909, for the sum of $2,200. These notes amount in the aggregate to the sum of $7,250, and they and the mortgages which secured them were all outstanding on the 8th day of April, 1910, the date of the death of Charles R. Brown, and being community property they became a part of his estate, and standing as they did in the name of his widow, Caroline R. Brown, were held by her in trust for his estate; and they or the proceeds thereof are still so held, and hence should have been accounted for in this action by the administrator of her estate.

The evidence in the case also shows that, in addition to the sums of money which had been loaned by Caroline R. Brown upon the foregoing securities, there was a considerable sum of money which stood in the names of Caroline R. or Charles R. Brown upon the books of several banks during the years between 1905 and 1910, when Charles R. Brown by reason of his failing health and mental powers was retiring from the active management of the community properties and as to which moneys no accounting was ever made by Caroline R. Brown to the estate of her deceased husband. All such moneys were community property, and as to the whole thereof, existing in the form of money or personal property at the time of her husband's death, Caroline R. Brown, upon his death, became the trustee thereof for the benefit of his estate and heirs; and hence she or her administrator should have been held to an accounting therefor and for the investment and proceeds thereof in this action. It follows that, in so far at least as the personal property of the community in being prior to and at the date of the death of Charles R. Brown, the findings of the trial court were erroneous, and hence the judgment based thereon must be reversed as to such personal property.

The next question with which we are called upon to deal is as to the status of the real estate of the community prior to and at the date of the death of Charles R. Brown. Prior to the date of the removal of Charles R. and Caroline R. Brown, his wife, from Hanford to Elmhurst, no real estate stood in the latter's name, nor did it appear that she had any money or personal property in any considerable amount. She had a savings account with the Union Trust Company of San Francisco, opened while she was still residing in Hanford, and with reference to which accretions and withdrawals in sums less than $50 were from time to time made down to July 11, 1905, when the then balance, amounting to $3,002.73, was withdrawn and the account closed. She had, so far as the record discloses, no other account or money or personal property on hand prior to the year 1905. On June 9, 1903, the first piece of real estate to be purchased and taken in her name was the lot acquired from H. C. Morris, by deed of that date conveying lots 46 and 47 of the Warner tract, in the county of Alameda, which property, so far as the record discloses, she still held in ownership and possession at the date of the death of Charles R. Brown. The record shows that the purchase price of these lots was the sum of $500 and that it does not appear to have been derived from any fund on hand in Caroline R. Brown, and it would therefore follow that the purchase price of this property must otherwise have been derived from the community funds which then, with the small exception noted, stood in the name of Charles R. Brown.

The next acquisition of real estate was that of lots 5, 6, 7, and 8 in block A of the Shepardson tract, in Alameda county, purchased from the West End Building Association on July 13, 1905, the deed being taken in the name of Caroline R. Brown and the property still standing in her name at the date of the death of Charles R. Brown in 1910, and also at the date of her death, in 1914, and being one of the tracts of land described in the complaint herein. The purchase price of this property appears to have been $1,800, which must have been drawn from the community funds of that date. The next purchase of real estate was that from Charles Strum, evidenced by deed dated October 31, 1907, to Caroline R. Brown, conveying a lot 35x80 feet on the corner of Eighth street and Haight avenue, in said county, for a stated consideration of $1,000. At this time all of the money of the community had been transferred in the bank accounts either to the name of Caroline R. Brown or of Charles R. and Caroline R. Brown, but since these moneys in either name were community property the amount of the purchase price of this property must be held to have been derived from these funds. The only other piece of real property acquired prior to the death of Charles R. Brown was that purchased from B. Alexander by deed dated January 6, 1910, taken in the name of Caroline R. Brown, describing a portion of lot 7 in block B of the Sloane tract, in said county, and which property was still held by Caroline R. Brown at the time of her death and is set forth and described in the complaint herein. The consideration paid for this property is stated to have been $1,000, which also must have come from the community funds then in the hands of Caroline R. Brown, since there was apparently no other source from which it could have come. As to these four pieces of real estate, acquired during the lifetime of Charles R. Brown, but conveyed to and standing in the name of Caroline R. Brown, it is the contention of the respondents herein that they were and are entitled to the full benefit of the presumption expressly created by the clause in section 164 of the Civil Code reading:

"But whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property."

The respondents further contend that, where it appears that the purchase price of such real estate was derived from community funds, it will be presumed that the property was intended as a gift to the wife from her husband in order to support the presumption that it was her separate property expressly created by section 164 of the Civil Code. The appellant herein does not dispute the existence of these two presumptions nor their applicability in a proper case to real estate conveyed to the wife during coverture; but the appellant insists that these presumptions are disputable presumptions, and that they are susceptible of application only to cases where there is no substantial evidence in the record to the contrary. Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 Pac. 308; Holmes v. Holmes, 27 Cal. App. 546, 150 Pac. 793. Conceding this contention to be correct, we are still confronted with the fact that the trial court has by its findings given full effect to the presumptions upon which the respondents rely and in so doing has treated the evidence in opposition to such presumptions as not sufficiently substantial to overthrow them; and that, therefore, as to the real estate conveyed to Caroline R. Brown in her own name during the lifetime of her husband, such findings of the trial court upon the evidence then before it may be correct, but should, we think, be subject to further consideration and review upon a retrial of the entire cause.

[4] The disputable presumption raised by section 164 of the Civil Code is a form of evidence under the express terms of section 1957 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect, but unless so controverted the court or jury is bound to find according to the presumption. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1961-2061. It is therefore for the court or jury to determine whether or not the evidence against the presumption is sufficient to overthrow it. People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171-179, 54 Pac. 833; Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723-726, 91 Pac. 616; Hitchcock v. Rooney, 171 Cal. 285-289, 152 Pac. 913.

[5] As to the real property conveyed to Caroline R. Brown during the lifetime of her husband, we are therefore disposed to hold that the finding of the trial court that the same was the separate property of Caroline R. Brown was justified by the existing state of the evidence in the case.

[6] As to so much of the real property described in the complaint herein as was acquired by Caroline R. Brown after the death of her husband, a different question is presented, since, as to such property, the presumptions relied upon by the respondent based upon the language of section 164 of the Civil Code, and of the cases construing the same, have no application. As to some of said real estate at least, there is positive and incontrovertible evidence going to show that title to it in Caroline R. Brown was derived directly from the personal property which we have found to be a portion of the community estate at the date of the death of Charles R. Brown. For example: The tract of land described in said complaint as lying on the southeasterly line of Grant avenue and consisting of a lot 50x118 feet, in the county of Alameda, was purchased by Caroline R. Brown on May 26, 1913, at foreclosure sale thereof on account of the mortgage given to her thereon by Charles Norling on February 24, 1909, and which mortgage and the note which it secured we have above held to have been a portion of the community assets of Charles R. and Caroline R. Brown. This piece of real estate, being thus identified as derived from that source, must, therefore, be held to have been the proper subject of an accounting herein.

[7] As to the piece of real estate in Fresno county which was set apart to Caroline R. Brown, deceased, upon her representation that it constituted the entire estate of Charles R. Brown and was of the value of less than $1,500, it would seem that as to this piece of real estate, confessedly community property, and which was thus wrongfully set apart to her, the present administrator of the estate of her deceased husband would be entitled to an accounting in a court of equity.

[8] As to the remainder of the real estate held by Caroline R. Brown at the time of her death, other than that conveyed to her during the lifetime of her husband, and also as to the personal property, consisting in the main of notes and mortgages taken by her for loans made during the four years succeeding the date of her husband's death which she survived him, we think her administrator should be held to such an accounting as would disclose what portion of such real and personal estate, if any, was derived from the community property of Charles R. and Caroline R. Brown as it existed at the date of the death of Charles R. Brown. We think the undisputed evidence in the case sufficient to cast the burden of making such showing upon the administrator of Caroline R. Brown, deceased, since, at the death of her husband, she became the trustee of his portion of the community property for the benefit of his estate and heirs.

The judgment is reversed.

KLATT v. RAILROAD COMMISSION.
(L. A. 7587.)

1. Waters and water courses ⇨249—Service charge for surplus water held not to prove well public utility.

Where landowner, who irrigated his own farm from a well, supplied his neighbors when there was a surplus, but such supply depended on whether the owner could spare water, that there was a monetary consideration for the service, when considered with the circumstance that it only paid for the electricity used to run the pump, did not prove that the water was not surplus or the plant a public utility.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨249—Intention to dedicate wells to public use held not proved.

In proceeding to declare water system and pumping plant on private land to be a public utility, notwithstanding agreement of owner to furnish surplus water to neighbors for monetary consideration, unequivocal intention of owner to dedicate it to public use, or conduct indicative of such intention, held not proved.

3. Waters and water courses ⇨249—Review limited to question whether dedication was made out.

Probative effect of evidence as to whether there was a dedication of a water system and pumping plant on private land as a public utility is for determination of the Railroad Commission, and an appellate survey is limited to the legal question of whether conceding the facts relied on by the commission to be true a case of dedication is made out.

In Bank.

Original application by C. J. Klatt for certiorari to review an order of the Railroad Commission of California, declaring the water system and pumping plant on petitioner's land to be a public utility. Order annulled.

Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for petitioner.

Hugh Gordon and Carl I. Wheat, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. On January 23, 1923, petitioner, C. J. Klatt, brought this proceeding to review the action of the Railroad Commission in declaring the water system and a pumping plant on his land to be a public utility and subject to its jurisdiction. The complainants were Theodore W. Bose, Flake L. Smith, Robert Gerwing, and John Sebastian, and their application to have the water system declared a public utility was filed on December 31, 1921. At the hearing on January 26, 1922, petitioner made an oral objection that the Commission had no jurisdiction of either the person of petitioner or of the subject-matter, and this objection was based on the claim that no copy of the application or summons was ever served upon him in conformity with section 60 of the Public Utilities Act. On March 27, 1922, the Commission filed an opinion and made an order declaring the water system and pumping plant to be a public utility and directing petitioner to resume the service of water for irrigation use to such persons as were formerly served by the pumping plant and that he file a schedule of rates. On April 17, 1922, petitioner applied for a rehearing upon the grounds that the Commission never acquired jurisdiction over his person; that the finding that the water system operated as a public utility subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission is contrary to the evidence; that the uncontradicted evidence conclusively shows "that C. J. Klatt is not a public utility"; that the water system or plant operated by petitioner is not and never had been dedicated to a public use, and that the Commission had no jurisdiction to decree that the pumping plant had ever been dedicated to a public use. An order for rehearing was made on October 5, 1922. On the hearing that followed it was stipulated that the evidence on the first hearing be considered as applying to the second. The only additional evidence on the second hearing related to the service furnished to two consumers under an oral agreement between petitioner and the two consumers, who are not complainants herein; such agreement having for its object the building of a new plant, hereinafter referred to as the "new well" the two consumers to become part owners thereof. In other respects the second opinion and order filed on December 29, 1922, were identical with the first.

It appears the petitioner is the owner of 22.55 acres of land near the city of Santa Ana, Orange county, Cal., which are devoted to the culture of walnuts, apricots, and citrus fruits. The original owner of the property, one H. S. Pankey, first improved the land and developed water thereon, although at the time he purchased it a closed well was on the place. In order to irrigate the property he began a series of experiments with pumps. After developing the water in what is known as the "old well," which was located on the northeast portion of the land, H. S. Pankey laid a main pipe line diagonally to the east; later one to the west. The old well was 10 inches in diameter, 60 feet in depth, and furnished from 35 to 40 inches of water per hour. There were periods when H. S. Pankey was not pumping water for his own use, so he granted permission to several of his neighbors, who were setting out fruit trees, to lay pipe lines to connect with his main pipe line. He testified that the understanding was that they could have the water when he did not need it for his own purposes—in other words, they could have the surplus water. During the eight or ten years H. S. Pankey furnished his neighbors water from his plant for irrigation purposes, he only allowed them to pump it when he had no use for it himself; and, in order to get the water, the consumer had to apply for it in each instance, each consumer to wait his turn. Under this arrangement a charge of 50 cents per hour on an estimated basis of consumption was made for the service, and it is stated this was later raised to 60 or 65 cents. The price for water was fixed without regard to the depreciation of the plant, interest, cost of operation, and the like. However, H. S. Pankey stated that the amount he collected for water just about paid the electric power bill. It appeared he kept no record of the money collected from the consumers. In January, 1919, he deeded the property to his son, J. H. Pankey, and to his two daughters, Pearl Pankey and Dora Glines. During the year these grantees owned the property water was furnished through the pipe lines to the consumers upon the same conditions and at the same rate.

In January, 1920, these grantees sold the property to petitioner. Before he became the owner he knew of the service of water by his predecessors to the neighbors by means of the system of pipe lines, and was informed that a charge was made for such service. He was also informed that this helped pay the electric power bill. Petitioner furnished water from the old well to the complainants and others, at an increased rate of 85 cents per hour. He continued the service for approximately 18 months, that is, until the latter part of August, 1921. During that summer the old well was only pumping 10 or 15 inches of water per hour so petitioner started to drill the new well. The new well is 24½ feet distant from the old and attained a depth of 386 feet. It is 12 inches in diameter and furnishes 70 inches of water per hour. There is no connection in the source of supply of the water in the old and new well. None of the machinery or material, except a few boards from the old pump house, was used in the new plant. For the purpose of testing the capacity of the new well the pump from the old was temporarily installed therein and thereafter sold before the new well went into operation. Petitioner purchased new equipment and machinery for the new plant. After this well was drilled, but before the new pump was installed, petitioner proposed to the former consumers that they buy into the plant. The proposition was oral and was to the effect that those who wanted water must buy an interest on an acreage basis "in the pumping plant as it now exists" at actual cost, and pay a proportionate share of the expense of operation. Petitioner stated that the approximate cost of the installation of the plant "as it now stands" was about $4,200 or $4,300.

No water has been supplied from the new well to the complainants or to others with the exception of the two neighbors already referred to, who agreed to purchase an interest in the new plant. While no water was supplied from the new well, a stipulation was entered into between petitioner and complainants at the first hearing before the Commission to the effect that petitioner will furnish water to them at $1.50 per hour, pending the determination of the matter by the Commission, "without waiving any rights he may have in the matter and without conceding the jurisdiction and without prejudicing his rights in any way whatsoever." It appeared on the second hearing that the service was rendered under the stipulation.

The claims of each of the parties are twofold—petitioner contending that the old well was not a public utility and would not have come under the jurisdiction of the Commission, and that the new well is not a public utility and subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission; and respondent insisting that the service from the old well is impressed with a public use, and therefore subject to regulation by the Commission, and that the sinking of a new well did not relieve petitioner from the duty of continuing the service.

The opinion of the Commission states that the original owner furnished water to other ranchers for compensation; that no applicants were ever refused service; that in one instance at least the owner of adjoining land was advised by H. S. Pankey to set out an orchard and assured him he could depend upon the "Pankey plant" for the water required for irrigation; that all water desired by consumers was supplied to them; that the relation of buyer and seller of water was entered into with an apparent understanding that such relations would continue; that the water was supplied upon application by consumers in the order in which the applications were received, and this method does not thereby differ from the usual practice followed in systems of this type; that it was not shown that any consumer was deprived of water or was subjected to undue delay because of the claim that only surplus water was sold or that the use of water by purchasers was though a right which was inferior or secondary to the right of the owner of the plant; that the claim that no profit was made through sales of water is not a material matter, and that the obligation to render service cannot be avoided through changes in location or equipment of the plant at the option of the owner, because, once assumed, the obligation to serve the public continues. The opinion further states that the only written agreement of record in the matter is a contract, hereinafter detailed, between J. H. Pankey and Myra E. Holderman; that nothing contained therein can be construed to mean that water was furnished as an accommodation, or as a neighborly act, or that the right granted was for surplus water and was inferior or secondary to the right of the owner of the plant; that the possibility that another well might be required was distinctly recognized and it was provided that should the second well be developed the supply of water would be continued; that, if the intention was to sell only surplus water or to sell water only as an accommodation or as a neighborly act, such intention would have been clearly stated. It concludes by stating that:

"A careful consideration of the evidence leads to the conclusion that the proprietor of the original plant willingly assumed the obligation of serving the public; that this obligation was transferred to the respondent [petitioner?] herein when the property was purchased by him; and that service to applicants should be resumed."

The testimony is practically uniform in this case that the understanding throughout was that the consumers could have only the surplus water and take it in the order of their application when the owner was not using it. The witness John Sebastian, however, testified that in the spring of 1918, before he put out his trees and when he asked H. S. Pankey if he could get water, the latter answered: "You can get the water when you want it—that is about the substance of the conversation between Mr. Pankey and I." Sebastian testified later that the trees were planted in the spring of 1919, when the grantees of H. S. Pankey owned the property and furnished him with water. In January, 1920, after petitioner acquired the property the subject of the water was discussed between them. Petitioner was irrigating his own trees at the time, and he told Sebastian that he could have the water after he got through. John Sebastian testified: "That was the agreement all along, that each one go in rotation." He further said the agreement with petitioner was not made at any set time—"it had been handed down"—and that "the system of rotation was a kind of understanding." It is clear from the entire testimony of this witness that when he quoted H. S. Pankey, to the effect that he could have the water when he wanted it, was meant surplus water and that he could have it on the same terms and conditions as the other consumers, namely, when the owner was not using it, and this tallies with H. S. Pankey's testimony that he told Sebastian he could have the water when it was surplus. H. S. Pankey's version is clearly shown by the record:

"Q. You didn't consider the interest on your investment at all? A. Never thought anything about that. Q. Did your own time in caring for the plant—you cared for it yourself didn't you? A. Yes. I turned the water on and let it go. Q. Didn't consider your own time at all? A. Didn't consider my own time because there wasn't much time; only turned the water on when they asked for it. Q. Did you consider depreciation of the machinery or anything of that nature? A. No. Q. And it was understood that all they were to get was your surplus water? A. Yes, sir. Q. If there was no surplus, they would not get any? A. Well, I always told them like this: As long as I have any water to spare you can have it. Q. That was the understanding? A. But there might be another question coming in there. I always told them I expected to have water always. Q. You expected to have water? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, Mr. Pankey, did you expect to dedicate this water to public use, to the public generally? A. No, sir. Q. Did you intend to serve any portion of the public generally? A. Only in the way I have stated. They could have the water any time I didn't need it."

This is supported by the testimony of Sebastian that he had to wait for the water if it was being used by petitioner for irrigation purposes. With the possible exception of Theodore W. Bose, whose testimony showing his attitude at the hearing we will presently consider, the testimony of the remaining consumers is that they were to have the water when it was surplus and in the order of their application when the owner was not using it. Theodore W. Bose testified he thought he had been furnished the service "through the way of being a public utility" because "there has been water furnished for a good many years to this property that I own." He testified that he produced a contract in response to a remark of petitioner that he (Bose) did not have a "scratch of paper of any kind to show that he must give this water." This discussion arose at the time the proposition to have the consumers purchase shares in the new well was under consideration. The contract, dated October 18, 1917, was executed by J. H. Pankey, party of the first part, and Myra E. Holderman, party of the second part. J. H. Pankey was not the owner of the water supply at the time, but H. S. Pankey, who was the owner, also signed the agreement. Subsequently, the party of the second part transferred the seven acres and assigned the contract to Burr Talbert the immediate grantor of Theodore W. Bose, using the name "Myra E. Coate, formerly Myra E. Holderman." The agreement was to the effect that the party of the first part grants the right to purchase water for the seven acres of land belonging to the party of the second part from the pumping plant which is now and has been supplying water to the same seven acres; that the second party pay for the use of water the same rate per hour that is paid by the other parties in the same locality purchasing water from the said plant; that said water be distributed among the various users in the same manner that it has heretofore been used; and that, should the water in said well become insufficient to justify pumping, the first party shall not be required to furnish water for the seven acres until such time as the water in said well shall increase to a point where a reasonable amount can be pumped therefrom or said first party shall have developed another well on the same premises. The testimony that petitioner did not know of the existence of this contract until it was shown to him by Theodore W. Bose, in August, 1921, after the service had been discontinued, is not contradicted. The contract does not by its terms negative the proposition that the water was to be surplus, but, on the contrary, the clause we have italicized above indicates a continuance of the arrangement for surplus water and the manner of distribution which had been in force since approximately 1909 or 1910. It seems clear that under the contract the party of the second part was to receive surplus water only and that her rights and those of her assigns were the same as the other consumers as to surplus water and the distribution thereof. It follows that the rights of all consumers in these particulars were the same—secondary to those of the owner. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that the contract did not obligate the owner to sink a new well when the supply of the first was insufficient to justify pumping. It simply provided that in the event a new well were established the party of the second part would be entitled to the water on the former basis. The contract does purport to bind J. H. Pankey, and possibly H. S. Pankey, to furnish water to the party of the second part or her assigns, provided the supply from the old well is sufficient or a new well takes its place. However, Theodore W. Bose testified that he is not relying on the contract but on the claim that the water supply from the new well is a public utility. It does not appear that he ever claimed the plant was a public utility before he testified at the hearing, and he did not claim when the proposal for joint ownership of the new well was broached or at any other time before the hearing that it was a public utility, and he said he never talked with any one about it. He simply "thought" it was a public utility. This is hardly the equivalent of a statement that the plant had been dedicated to a public use. The only claim he made in the conversation with petitioner when the contract was mentioned was "that he [petitioner] didn't have no right to make those changes," meaning the discontinuance of the service.

It appears from the record that before this proceeding none of the consumers ever claimed that the water was furnished from the public utility. Nor was it ever claimed they had a right to demand the service or that the conduct of the owners indicated an intention to dedicate the plant to a public use. The time to have voiced the demand was when petitioner declined to furnish the water to the consumers from the new well, and made the proposal that they all buy shares on an acreage basis. All of them, with the exception of Theodore W. Bose, whose attitude we have already discussed, expressed themselves in favor of the proposition. Later, when it became apparent that they must either accept petitioner's proposal or get no water, they attempted to persuade him to furnish the water in the old manner, even offering an increased rate. In a letter to petitioner, dated November 1, 1921, Theodore W. Bose stated:

"I must say in regard of this water proposition, I haven't absolutely got the money to put in. I would like to, and would surely do it, if I could. I would have told you the other day, when I talked to you, but I didn't have no chance. I have been to a lot of expense moving out here, I wanted to sell my eastern property, but couldn't under the conditions things are, and that put me so short of money. Isn't it possible Mr. Klatt, that you could let me have the water, I would be willing to pay you $1.25 per hour. I hate to do this, but this is exactly the condition I am in."

Flake L. Smith said he would make arrangements to get the money for his share, and John Sebastian suggested that they try to induce a neighbor of his who owned 20 acres of land to join with them so as to reduce the proportionate cost and expense. John Sebastian testified that he "endeavored to, in a friendly way, show him [petitioner] why he shouldn't cut me or any of us from water; tried to figure and reason with him; that it was all out of the question and really it would be to his advantage to let us have water; I argued along that line, but he continually refused to let me have water. * * *" As already stated, there is no suggestion anywhere in the record that the consumers before the hearing ever claimed the plant to be a public utility, entitling them to demand water as a matter of right.

We quote from the order of the Commission:

"It is hereby found as a fact that the water system operated by C. J. Klatt * * * is a public utility, and that the said C. J. Klatt has been rendering public utility service therefrom, and that such system and service are subject to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission of the state of California; and basing its order upon the foregoing findings of fact and upon the other statements of fact contained in the preceding opinion, and upon the evidence adduced at the original hearing and rehearing herein: It is hereby ordered that C. J. Klatt be and he is hereby directed to resume service of water for irrigation use to such persons as were formerly served by the pumping plant located upon the property of said C. J. Klatt, under such reasonable rates, rules and regulations as may be filed with and approved by this Commission; and it is hereby further ordered that the said C. J. Klatt be and he is hereby directed to file with this Commission, within twenty (20) days after the date of this order, a schedule, setting forth such rates, rules and regulations."

The recent case of Richardson v. Railroad Commission (Cal. Sup.) 218 Pac. 418, wherein the order of the Commission was annulled, is very similar in its facts. In that case, in response to the request of neighbors that the owner sell water to them, he stated in each case that he could only supply them out of his own surplus and when the water was not being used elsewhere. Each consumer was to apply to the owner in each instance and get the water in his turn. The service covered the period from 1913 to 1922. As here, each consumer was to lay his own pipe line. The rate for the service was first 75 cents and then $1 and finally $1.25 per hour. The owner kept no regular accounts. The net income from the service during the entire period varied, being less in some years and in other years slightly more than his outlay in operating expenses without taking into account the depreciation of his plant by use. It was said in that case:

"It is conceded by both the petitioner and the respondent herein that if, upon the undisputed facts as presented before the Railroad Commission, it appears that the individual or corporation complained of is not a public utility, any decision or order of the Commission declaring him or it to be a public utility is void as beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission and may be assailed and vacated by means of a writ of review. The rule, however, is that if there is any substantial evidence before the Commission in the proceeding thus sought to be annulled, which would justify its findings to the above effect, its order must stand. * * * "That the devotion to public use must be of such character that the public generally, or that part of it which has been served and which has accepted the service, has the right to demand that that service shall be conducted, so long as it is continued, with reasonable efficiency under reasonable charges. Public use, then, means the use by the public and by every individual member of it, as a legal right. Such is not only the accepted significance of the phrase by the great weight of authority as expounded by Mr. Lewis (Eminent Domain, § 164 et seq.), but is the definition repeatedly announced by this court. * * * "The court also and in the quite recent case of Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission, supra [184 Cal. 553, 194 Pac. 1003], quoted with approval the further statement in the Allen case that "To hold that property has been dedicated to a public use is no trivial thing," * * * and such dedication is never presumed 'without evidence of unequivocal intention.'"

[1] Referring to the reasons advanced in the opinion of the Commission for holding that the service was of a public utility character this may be said. It is true that no applicant for water had ever been refused it by the successive owners, for it appears there was always a supply of surplus water. In other words, the fact that the water was never refused is entirely consistent with petitioner's theory that the consumers were to have surplus water only. It is a fact that water was not supplied as an accommodation or as a neighborly act, if by those terms is meant that there was no consideration for the water. The water was paid for, and we have seen that the amount received just about paid the cost of electricity used in the operation of the pump and that it did not constitute a return on the investment. The fact that there was a monetary consideration for the service, especially when considered with the circumstance that the receipts only paid for the electricity, does not prove that the water was not surplus or that the plant was a public utility. Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 83, 84, 175 Pac. 466, 3 A. L. R. 249. The statement that in one instance H. S. Pankey advised a neighbor to set out an orchard refers to John Sebastian. John Sebastian testified that before he put in his trees he went to H. S. Pankey and "I asked if I could get water, asked him how much it would take for the trees; how far I should furr out; how I should put my trees, because Mr. Pankey had put in an orchard and was a good authority on putting in trees." He also stated that he would not have put money into the orchard except upon the promise of a supply of water; that he could not afford it, and that he would have allowed his land to remain idle but for such promise. H. S. Pankey's version is thus given:

"Q. Did you ever talk to any of them about their setting out their land in trees, Mr. Pankey? A. Why, yes; I talked to Mr. Sebastian. He wanted to know if I could furnish him water if he had orange trees on his ground, and I told him he could have the water when it was surplus."

Assuming John Sebastian was "advised" to plant his orchard by H. S. Pankey, the evidence does not negative the proposition that the water was to be surplus, nor prove, under the circumstances here shown, that H. S. Pankey intended to dedicate the water supply to a public use. Concerning a similar conversation in Richardson v. Railroad Commission, supra, the court said:

"The mere recital of this interview should suffice to show its insufficiency as any basis for a finding that the petitioner was thereby intending to declare that his water plant was a public utility, or to dedicate it to the * * * public use as such."

It is idle to hold that the intent was clear on the part of H. S. Pankey to render a continuous and permanent service to the consumers, regardless of whether the supply was more than he needed for his own use or whether the supply gave out entirely, or that it was necessary in order to prevent the plant from becoming a public utility that he notify the consumers the service was but temporary or as a mere accommodation. Nor is the claim of surplus water only disposed of by the argument that there always was in fact such a surplus. It is a sufficient answer to the argument that as the plant was at all times handled as a business proposition it must have been a public utility, to point out that it was a business proposition only in the limited sense that approximately the charge for service was sufficient to defray the cost of electricity. We do not assume that in every case the method of service by rotation would negative dedication; but, when considered with the other circumstances, that conclusion is more consistent than one of dedication based on the testimony of John Sebastian that H. S. Pankey told him he could get the water when he wanted it. It is a fact, as already stated, that the service was not rendered as a mere accommodation or as a neighborly act; but the service did depend on whether the owner could spare the water.

[2] We have thus far considered the matter from the standpoint that surplus water only was to be supplied to the consumers. But under the evidence it would make no difference if the element of surplus water did not enter. For if the engagement comprehended the entire supply of water it would be necessary to prove an unequivocal intention on the part of the owners to dedicate it to a public use, or conduct indicative of such intention. No such proof is shown by the record. There is no evidence upon which a finding that the first well had been operated as a public utility could be based, and, there being no independent dedication of the new well, respondent's contention cannot be sustained.

[3] The law requires that there shall be clear proof of an unequivocal intention to dedicate property to a public use before it can be taken from the owner. In the examination of the evidence we have kept in view the rule that its probative effect is left to the determination of the Commission and that our survey is limited to the legal question whether, conceding the facts relied upon by the Commission to be true, a case of dedication is made out. Giving to such facts their full import (there is no finding of unequivocal intention), we think no more is shown than that for a number of years petitioner and his predecessors in interest furnished water to the consumers under private contracts, and that the record is destitute of any evidence which even tends to show an unequivocal intention or conduct on the part of the owners from which a dedication of the water to a public use can be inferred.

The authorities cited by respondent were considered in the Richardson Case, and no useful purpose will now be served by discussing them. The facts in those authorities showed either an unequivocal intention to dedicate or a dedication by conduct, including dedication evidenced by incorporation under a water act (Traber v. Railroad Commission, 183 Cal. 304, 191 Pac. 366), by the invocation of eminent domain (Producers' Transportation Co. v. Railroad Commission, 176 Cal. 499, 169 Pac. 59), by application to the Commission for discontinuance of the service (Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission, 184 Cal. 553, 194 Pac. 1003), by application of a private water corporation to the board of supervisors to fix the rates (Francioni v. Soledad L. & W. Co., 170 Cal. 221, 149 Pac. 161), by contract that the rate for water shall be "the rates fixed by law" (Palermo L. & W. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 380, 160 Pac. 228), and where a corporation whose articles of incorporation declare its purposes to be that of utilizing the water of a river for sale for use generally in cities and towns within a certain zone is established; and its contracts expressly provide that the water furnished be subject to "legal rates," and sells water to the general public thereunder; and that contract consumers accepted and paid the rates established by the Commission, the water company as to all of its water users was a public utility, and that such consumers as complained are estopped to deny it (Brewer v. Railroad Commission, [Cal. Sup.] 210 Pac. 511). H. S. Pankey developed water on his property in the old well. The neighbors were owners of small tracts of land, and they were allowed to lay pipes and use the water when it was surplus. Each consumer was required to apply for the water, was allowed to take it in his turn, and was never seriously inconvenienced by occasional delays in securing permission to use the water. The service was thus uniformly furnished under these conditions for about ten years. During this period there was no deviation in the arrangement, and there never was any lack of surplus water. The money collected for the service was merely sufficient to pay for the electricity used. No consumer ever questioned the arrangement or claimed that the owner had dedicated the water to the public. When the supply of water from the old well was diminished and the owner proposed that the consumers become part owners in the new well which had been sunk, none of the consumers claimed he was entitled to the service as from a public utility. To declare that the water has been dedicated to a public use is to take the property of petitioner in the absence of intent or act on his part to relinquish his right thereto.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the scope of the order in connection with the finding—whether it comprehends the entire water supply or the portion thereof which may be surplus.

While it is important that consumers entitled to the service of water shall not be deprived thereof, it is also important that the property of the citizen shall not be taken from him except in the presence of a clear legal necessity.

The points presented call for no further discussion.

Order annulled.

FRANZEN v. SHENK. (L. A. 7243.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1923.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1924.)

1. Malicious prosecution §71(2)—Probable cause for jury on conflicting evidence.

Whenever defendant's good faith or his knowledge or belief in a state of facts is an element of probable cause, the court should submit such question to the jury, unless there is no dispute as to the facts.

2. Malicious prosecution §20—Actual and honest belief in guilt of accused element of probable cause.

Good faith, which includes actual and honest belief in plaintiff's guilt, is an element of probable cause, irrespective of advice of counsel, and absence of such belief is a matter to be considered whether appearing in plaintiff's prima facie case, or in the presentation of the defense of probable cause.

3. Malicious prosecution §56—Burden of proving want of probable cause on plaintiff.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1981, requiring that evidence in support of an issue be adduced by the party holding the affirmative, the burden is on plaintiff, in an action for malicious prosecution, to show want of probable cause, and defendant may interpose the affirmative defense of probable cause at the conclusion of plaintiff's case.

4. Malicious prosecution §71(2)—Honesty of belief in plaintiff's insanity held for jury.

In an action for malicious prosecution of insanity proceedings, evidence held sufficient to take to the jury the question whether defendant honestly believed that plaintiff was insane when he preferred the charge.

5. Malicious prosecution §64(2)—Evidence of malice may tend to prove want of probable cause.

In an action for malicious prosecution, evidence tending to prove malice may also tend to prove want of probable cause, if it indicates lack of belief by defendant in plaintiff's guilt.

6. Trial §349(1)—Jury's opinion as to probable cause may be obtained by special verdict or hypothetical instructions.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the jury's opinion as to the existence of facts involved in determining probable cause may be obtained by special verdict, which is in many respects the better practice, or by submission of the question with hypothetical instructions as to what facts do or do not amount to probable cause.

7. Witnesses §205—Testimony of attorney as to statements to him by plaintiff to be communicated to defendant held not incompetent as confidential communications.

In an action for malicious prosecution, testimony of attorney as to statements made to him by plaintiff held not incompetent as disclosing confidential communications, where her statements were to be communicated to defendant, and, moreover, it did not appear that plaintiff sought his advice as attorney.

Wilbur, C. J., and Myers, J., dissenting.

On Application for Rehearing.

8. Malicious prosecution §20—Honest belief in guilt not always element of probable cause.

Good faith and an actual honest belief in the guilt of one charged with crime is not always an integral and independent element of probable cause for his prosecution.

Action by Mabel Franzen against A. M. Shenk. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

LENNON, J. This case came here on rehearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second District, First Division, the opinion being written in the first instance by Mr. Presiding Justice Conrey. After much consideration of the principal point presented in support of the appeal, we are constrained to hold that the reasoning and the conclusion of Mr. Presiding Justice Conrey clearly and correctly states the law of the case, and therefore we shall adopt his opinion as the opinion of this court. It is as follows:

"This is an action to recover damages for the malicious prosecution of a proceeding wherein, by affidavit filed by the defendant before a justice of the peace, the plaintiff was charged with being an insane person. Upon hearing of said charge after plaintiff's arrest, the proceeding was dismissed. At the trial of the present action the court instructed the jury to render its verdict in favor of the defendant. From the judgment upon verdict in accordance with that instruction the plaintiff appeals.

"The motion for a directed verdict was sustained by the court upon the stated ground that there were sufficient facts uncontroverted to establish that there was probable cause at the time of the filing of the affidavit to warrant any reasonable person in filing an insanity complaint; and that, in filing the affidavit, the defendant was acting upon the advice of counsel after said counsel had been fully informed of all the material facts. Respondent contends that the court was right upon both of these propositions.

"It is admitted that certain business relations had existed between plaintiff and defendant for two or three years prior to November 30, 1920, the date of said affidavit. The plaintiff further claims, and the defendant denies, that there had been illicit relations between them. The defendant is married and has two children. It appears that several months before November, 1920, the defendant canceled a mortgage indebtedness then owing to him by the plaintiff, and gave her $900, without receiving any consideration therefor. Whether this was a gift, as the plaintiff contends, or whether it was, as the defendant contends, a forced contribution of a blackmailing nature, it is not for us to decide. It does appear that in November there existed some kind of very serious trouble between these parties. The defendant testified that on the night of November 29th the plaintiff had demanded money from him and told him that if he did not comply with this demand 'she would get my children and mutilate them so I would never want to look at them again in my life, and she would get my wife.' Being asked if he considered that she was insane at that time, defendant replied: 'She made these repeated threats, and I could not see how a person—I would say she was insane or unbalanced at times.' Being asked if he ever knew her to have any insane delusions, he replied: 'Only her threats to damage my children.' Mr. Ault, who was the defendant's attorney, testified that on the 30th day of November the plaintiff came to his office and appeared to be very much excited and wrought up; that, among other things, she said that on the night before the defendant had thrown her out of his office and beat her up, and that she was going to get even with him; that she was going to disfigure the defendant's children's faces until he could point to them until his dying day and know that Mabel Franzen put it there; that she would moan and cry and walk the floor, cursing the defendant and making these threats. Mr. Ault testified that he then went down to Mr. Shenk's office, where Mr. Shenk made to him a statement of the events of the night before, and of numerous other circumstances concerning defendant's relations with the plaintiff; that the witness Ault told the defendant what the plaintiff had said to him, and the threats which she had made. Mr. Bitler, a deputy district attorney, held conversations during the same day both with Mr. Ault and with the defendant. They both advised the defendant that there was reason to believe the plaintiff insane, and advised him to make the affidavit charging her with being an insane person. The justice of the peace, after discussion of the matter with the defendant, gave him the same advice.

"The plaintiff testified that she did not state to the defendant that she would mar or mutilate his children in any way, or do any violence to them, or make in substance any statement of that kind, either to him or to any one else. She testified that she never asked the defendant for money, and that what money he gave her he gave voluntarily.

"Without repeating the testimony in further detail, enough has been stated to show the nature of the situation existing between the plaintiff and the defendant at that time on the plaintiff's theory of the case and, alternatively, on the defendant's theory of the case. There is manifestly a conflict in the evidence relating to the facts from which the existence or want of probable cause for the prosecution of the insanity proceeding must be determined. If in truth the plaintiff had not said to the defendant that she would disfigure the defendant's children and injure his wife, his testimony that she had made such threats to him would be false, and this would have a tendency to destroy the effect of the evidence of his good faith in making the affidavit charging insanity of the plaintiff. From this it would follow that the testimony of Mr. Ault that the plaintiff had made the stated threats in his office, and that he had repeated them to the defendant (when taken in connection with the other testimony to which we have referred, including the plaintiff's testimony), was not sufficient to justify the court in determining for itself the truth concerning that testimony without submitting the issue to the jury for decision. And if the 'advice of counsel,' or of the justice of the peace, was in part based upon a false statement of fact by the defendant, then the advice so given, and followed by the action taken by him pursuant to that advice, does not constitute a defense to this action.

"In an action for malicious prosecution of a criminal charge the rule concerning the determination of the question of probable cause has been stated as follows: 'While it is not necessary to show that the crime has in fact been committed, it is necessary to show, not only that the defendant had reasonable ground to believe, but that he did in fact believe, that the crime had been committed, and that the plaintiff had committed the crime. Although the question of probable cause, as we have seen above, is a question of law, yet the belief of the defendant in a state of facts is itself a fact which it is proper to submit to the jury for its consideration; and whenever the good faith of the defendant, or his knowledge or belief in an existing state of facts, is an element in determining whether there was probable cause, the court should submit that question to the jury, as well as the other facts which, in its opinion, bear upon that issue.' Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 234, 28 Pac. 937, 940 (27 Am. St. Rep. 174).

"The principle thus disclosed is equally applicable to an action to recover damages for malicious prosecution of an insanity charge. It may be that in this case the jury would have believed the defendant's testimony, and would have disbelieved the plaintiff's denial that she had threatened to mar or disfigure the faces of the defendant's children, or to injure his wife. And for the purposes of the present question we assume, without deciding, that the making of such threats would have a tendency to justify belief that the person making such threats was of unsound mind. But it was for the jury, and not for the judge, to determine these facts, which upon the evidence were not admitted and were not undisputed. The defendant testified that when he gave her money and canceled the mortgage of plaintiff in May, 1920, he did it 'to get rid of the annoyance and worry.' If that motive, rather than a genuine belief in the plaintiff's insanity, was the sole cause of his action in filing the affidavit and causing her to be arrested on a charge of insanity, then he was not legally justified in so proceeding. We are not intimating any opinion that he was so influenced. Neither are we concerned with the fact that upon her own showing the plaintiff had been sustaining illicit relations with the defendant, or that, according to some of defendant's witnesses, she had been guilty of such relations with other men. These facts, such as they may be, might affect the amount of a just award of damages for her loss of reputation, or on account of the 'humiliation, shame and mortification' suffered by her if she was wronged by the defendant in the matter of this insanity charge. But in any event, she was entitled to have the facts determined by the jury, to which, by law, the issue should have been submitted."

[1] It will be noted that Mr. Presiding Justices Conrey declares the rule in malicious prosecution cases to be that—

"Although the question of probable cause * * * is a question of law, yet the belief of the defendant in a state of facts is itself a fact which it is proper to submit to the jury for its consideration. Whenever the good faith of the defendant or his knowledge or belief in an existing state of facts in an element of probable cause in determining whether there was probable cause, the court should submit that question to the jury as well as the other facts which, in its opinion, bear upon that issue."

This rule emanates from and is supported by the following cases: Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217; Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 144; Eastin v. Stockton Bank, 66 Cal. 123, 4 Pac. 1106, 56 Am. Rep. 77; Fulton v. Onesti, 66 Cal. 575, 6 Pac. 491; Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 194, 29 Pac. 31; Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174; Sandell v. Sherman, 107 Cal. 391, 40 Pac. 493; Booraem v. Potter Hotel Co., 154 Cal. 99, 97 Pac. 65; Runo v. Williams, 162 Cal. 444, 122 Pac. 1082; Fleischhauer v. Fabens, 3 Cal. App. 30, 96 Pac. 17; Montz v. Nevins, 40 Cal. App. 202, 180 Pac. 537; Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 204 Pac. 578; Stein v. Lacassie, 189 Cal. 118, 207 Pac. 886.

The rule recited by Mr. Presiding Justice Conrey is, however, subject to the qualification which the foregoing authorities declare and generally agree, in substance and effect, to be that if there is no dispute concerning the existence of the facts relied upon to show probable cause, the trial court must then determine as a matter of law whether such undisputed facts do or do not warrant an inference of probable cause. On the other hand, it is undoubtedly the rule that when the evidence bearing upon the question of probable cause is in conflict in any essential particular, it is the province of the jury to determine whether or not facts exist which will warrant or reject an inference of probable cause. In short, to the extent that there is any dispute as to the existence of facts which may constitute the basis of a finding for or against probable cause such dispute must be submitted to the jury for its determination. Newell on Malicious Prosecution, § 9, p. 14.

[2] Good faith is undoubtedly an element of probable cause in malicious prosecution cases, and an actual and honest belief in the guilt of the plaintiff is obviously an integral part of good faith. The actual belief of the defendant in the instant case in the insanity of the plaintiff, based upon all of the facts within his knowledge, must therefore of necessity have been an element of probable cause. In other words, "the belief of the defendant in the guilt of the plaintiff, or, which is the same thing, in the truth of the charge made against that person in the prosecution complained of, is a material element in probable cause," and when "that belief is in issue what such belief was is a question of fact for the jury to determine." This is declared to be the rule in a very carefully prepared note to Simmons v. Gardner, L. R. A. 1915D, 79, which reviews all of the authorities on the subject, including many of those cited and referred to herein.

But even if the proposition that the honest belief of a prosecutor in the guilt of the defendant were not declared by numerous authorities, both ancient and modern, to be an element of probable cause, it would seem to be so upon principle, for, as was said in the reasoned and seasoned case of Broad v. Ham, decided in 1839 and reported in 132 English Reprints, 1278:

"It would be a monstrous proposition that a party who did not believe the guilt of the accused, should be said to have a reasonable and probable cause for making the charge."

The rule in this behalf is stated in Fleischhauer v. Fabens, supra, where it is held, in effect, that the good faith of the defendant is an essential element in the defense of probable cause; and that even though a defendant shows reasonable grounds of suspicion, sufficiently strong in themselves as to warrant a cautious man in the belief that there was probable cause for the prosecution, nevertheless, if it be apparent that he did not himself believe in the guilt of the accused, then the circumstances upon which he relied will not suffice to shield and vindicate him.

Good faith is an independent element of probable cause which is not limited solely to a defendant's defense that he had probable cause. "The law requires," says Newell, in his work on Malicious Prosecution (page 325, § 11), "that one in instituting a criminal prosecution shall act in good faith or under an honest belief of the guilt of the party arrested and this notwithstanding he has taken legal advice." That this declaration of the rule was not intended by the author to be limited solely to the question of good faith as an element of the affirmative defense of "advice of counsel" is manifested by the very language in which the rule stated is embodied which declares the necessity of "honest belief in the guilt of the party arrested," notwithstanding that the prosecutor may have taken legal advice. This conclusion is fortified by the fact that the caption of the text which deals with the rule declares that there shall be "good faith independent of legal advice." In Roy v. Goings, 112 Ill. 656, which was cited to support the rule enunciated in Newell, there was involved the correctness of an instruction which. it was contended, "required too much in saying that appellant must have acted in good faith in starting the prosecution, after having obtained the opinion of the state's attorney—that his advice should protect a party commencing such a proceeding, without reference to good faith." The court held the instruction to be correct, saying, in the course of its opinion:

"The law in all cases requires good faith, or, rather, a belief that the accused is guilty of the crime charged. The person claiming the accused is guilty, may know or believe he is not, although the attorney may suppose he is."

To the same effect is the case of Vann v. McCreary, 77 Cal. 434, 19 Pac. 826, wherein it was held that the advice of counsel for the commencement of a prosecution is no defense to an action for malicious prosecution if it appears that the defendant did not believe that the accused was guilty. The case last quoted from was cited with approval in the comparatively recent case of Murphy v. Davids, 181 Cal. 706, 186 Pac. 143, where it was said, in effect, that the defendants therein did not have probable cause for the prosecution there complained of because, "knowing as they did that no crime had really been committed," they could not have depended upon the advice of counsel. The court then proceeded to hold that—

"Whether or not defendants acted bona fide upon counsel's advice is a question [of fact] for the jury. (Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217.)

Advice of counsel is no defense if the person who pretends that he acted upon it did not believe the accused was guilty."

So, therefore, it would seem to be the settled rule that if it appears anywhere during the trial of the case, whether in the prima facie case made by the plaintiff or in the course of the presentation of the defendant's affirmative defense of probable cause, that the defendant did not actually believe in the guilt of the person charged with crime, then that fact is an essential element to be considered in the determination of the question of whether or not the defendant had probable cause.

Conceding that the quotation from Newell was directed to the question of good faith as an element in the affirmative defense of advice of counsel, nevertheless, the rule declared therein has application to the situation presented in the case at bar for the reason that, as the record before us shows, the trial of the case had proceeded to a point where the plaintiff and defendant had completed their respective cases upon all the issues, including that of probable cause, raised and expressly tendered by the answer of the defendant, which pleaded as well the "honest belief by the defendant" that the plaintiff was insane.

[3] Incidentally it should be noted that in keeping with the Code rule that evidence in support of an issue must be adduced by a party holding the affirmative and that, therefore, the burden of proof rests upon the party who would be denied relief if no evidence were given on either side (Code Civ. Proc. § 1981; Carpenter v. Ashley, 15 Cal. App. 461, 115 Pac. 268), it was incumbent upon the plaintiff in this case to assume the burden of showing affirmatively the negative fact of want of probable cause in the defendant at the time he caused her arrest. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case, it was then the privilege of the defendant to interpose the affirmative defense of probable cause, if he deemed it necessary to do so. The instant case had proceeded beyond the point of a nonsuit, and presumably, therefore, the plaintiff had made out a prima facie case. The defendant was sworn and testified as a witness for the plaintiff in her case in chief, and he also took the witness stand and testified in his own behalf, and in so doing evidently supplied whatever deficiency may have been in the plaintiff's case concerning his belief in the insanity of the plaintiff at the time he instituted the prosecution of her upon the charge of insanity. It will thus be noted that in the case at bar no question arises as to where the burden of proof rests in the first instance, and the only question involved is as to when the issue as to the existence of facts bearing upon the question of probable cause must be submitted to the jury for its determination.

Of course, in keeping with the rule above stated, if there had been no evidence whatever from which the jury might have inferred that the defendant did not in fact believe that the plaintiff was insane, the question of his belief should have been determined by the court on the basis of what, under the circumstances, was sufficient to cause a reasonable man to entertain a suspicion of the insanity of the plaintiff.

[4] There is, however, in the record before us sufficient evidence to have justified the jury in finding, had the question been submitted to it, that the defendant did not in fact believe that the plaintiff was insane when he swore to the affidavit charging her with insanity. Thus there is the denial of the plaintiff, which for the moment must be accepted as true, that she did not threaten to mutilate the defendant's children and his family. This denial created an important conflict in the evidence bearing upon the question of defendant's belief in the insanity of the plaintiff. These threats, so the defendant testified, were the only foundation for his belief that the plaintiff was subject to "insane delusions and hallucinations." In addition, there is abundant evidence in the record which tends to impugn the belief of the defendant in the insanity of the plaintiff at the time of the institution of the proceedings which are stated as the basis of the cause of action of malicious prosecution. Thus there is evidence that the plaintiff went to the defendant's office on a certain day at his invitation, and that the defendant then and there said to her:

"Mabel, dear, you remember that you are in business and have a good thing here. Remember what I am telling you. You had better keep still or I will put you where the bowwows won't bark at you."

Certainly this last bit of evidence is some evidence of the fact that the defendant did not in fact believe in the truth of the charge which he had lodged against the plaintiff. Furthermore, there is the testimony of the defendant that when he gave money and canceled the mortgage of the plaintiff in May, 1920, he did it to get rid of the "annoyance and worry." This testimony, when viewed in the light of the meretricious relations, which, it is claimed by the plaintiff, existed, and which, for the purpose of testing the correctness of the trial court's ruling directing a verdict, must be assumed to have existed, might well have justified the jury in finding that the defendant was actuated by a desire to get rid of the plaintiff and to permanently escape "the annoyance and worry" attendant upon her continued attentions, rather than by a genuine belief in the plaintiff's insanity. It cannot, we think, be gainsaid that this evidence, while it may, perchance, have been evidence of malice, was also some proof of the fact that defendant did not honestly believe in the insanity of the plaintiff when he preferred the charge against her.

[5] There is nothing in the cases of Potter v. Seale, Dawson v. Schloss, and Stein v. Lacassie, supra, holding that both malice and want of probable cause must concur and that want of probable cause cannot be inferred from malice, which runs counter to the conclusion expressed herein. We are not holding that want of probable cause may be inferred from malice, but we are holding that the same evidence which tends to prove malice may also, if it indicates a lack of belief on the part of the defendant in the guilt of the plaintiff, tend to prove want of probable cause. The instruction in the case of Stein v. Lacassie, supra, which upon appeal was held erroneous, declared that in the absence of proof of advice of counsel with a fair and full statement of the facts, that a malicious determination of the defendant constituted lack of probable cause. The instruction was clearly erroneous for it, in effect, declared that in the absence of proof of advice of counsel, want of probable cause must be inferred from malice. The criticism made of the instruction was that the defendant may have acted in good faith even though she was acting upon a fixed and malicious determination of her own. This is undoubtedly a just criticism, for malice and lack of belief in the guilt of the accused are not one and the same thing. For example, the defendant, honestly believing in the guilt of the plaintiff, may, with a vindictive motive, prosecute the plaintiff. In such a situation, if, in addition to the honest belief of the defendant in the guilt of the plaintiff, there was the added fact of reasonable grounds for the belief, then there would be probable cause, despite the presence of malice. If, on the other hand, in addition to malice, there was a lack of belief by the defendant in the guilt of the plaintiff, there was want of probable cause, despite the existence of facts which would justify the suspicions of a reasonable man in the guilt of the accused.

[6] The opinion of the jury as to the existence of the facts involved in the determination of probable cause may be obtained in either of two alternative ways. One mode is the use of the special verdict. While this is apparently the less frequent, it is in many respects the better practice. The trial court by this method gets the opinion of the jury as to what facts exist without giving any intimation as to what facts must exist to entitle either party to a judgment. From the facts thus obtained the trial court determines the existence or nonexistence of probable cause as a matter of law.

The prevailing practice, however, seems to be for the trial court to submit the question of probable cause to the jury with hypothetical instructions as to what facts in the particular case under consideration do or do not amount to probable cause. That is to say, the jury are instructed that if they find certain enumerated facts to exist, there was probable cause, and their verdict must be for the defendant; but, if they find certain other enumerated facts to exist, there was want of probable cause, and their verdict must be for the plaintiff. Ball v. Rawles, and other cases supra.

[7] The plaintiff contends that the trial court erred in admitting over her objection the testimony of a Mr. Ault concerning what she said to him. The ground of the objection was that Ault was the attorney for the plaintiff and that whatever she may have said to him was a privileged communication. It is clear that the testimony complained of and objected to does not fall within the category of confidential communications made between attorney and client. This is so because the record shows that whatever was said by the plaintiff to the attorney in question was said with the express understanding that it was to be communicated to the defendant, and, moreover, it does not appear that the plaintiff went to the attorney in question seeking his advice in his capacity as an attorney.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

WILBUR, C. J. I dissent. As the case involves an important question concerning the relative functions of court and jury in cases of malicious prosecution, the grounds of my dissent will be somewhat fully stated, and such statement will involve some repetition of the facts as stated in the main opinion.

The trial court instructed the jury to bring in a verdict in favor of the defendant and the plaintiff appeals from that judgment. The defendant had sworn to an affidavit charging the plaintiff with being insane; that is to say, so far disordered in her mind as to endanger health, person, or property. Pol. Code, § 2168. Upon the hearing of the insanity charge the commission came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not insane and the charge was dismissed by the court.

If the testimony of the defendant is believed, there can be no question about the propriety of the instructed verdict. He testified that the plaintiff, without cause, had threatened to mutilate defendant's daughters; that he had stated all the facts in the matter to his attorney and was advised by his attorney and also by a deputy district attorney, a justice of the peace, and a constable that in their opinion the plaintiff was insane and that he should institute a proceeding for her detention as an insane person. The question of whether or not there is want of probable cause is conceded by the plaintiff to be a question of law to be determined by the court. Davis v. Pacific Telephone Co., 127 Cal. 313, 319, 57 Pac. 764, 59 Pac. 698; McKenna v. Heinlen, 128 Cal. 97, 60 Pac. 668; Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 157 Cal. 333, 107 Pac. 611; and cases hereinafter referred to. Where, however, the question of whether or not there was a want of probable cause turns upon disputed testimony, it was for the jury to determine the facts. The burden of proving want of probable cause rests upon the plaintiff. Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217, 221; Grant v. Moore, 29 Cal. 644; Levy v. Brannan, 39 Cal. 485; Anderson v. Coleman, 53 Cal. 188; Jones v. Jones, 71 Cal. 89, 11 Pac. 817; Lacey v. Porter, 103 Cal. 597, 37 Pac. 635; Davis v. Pacific Telephone Co., 127 Cal. 313, 57 Pac. 764, 59 Pac. 698; McKenna v. Heinlen, 128 Cal. 97, 60 Pac. 668; Lee v. Levison, 173 Cal. 166, 159 Pac. 498; Jirku v. Brod, 42 Cal. App. 796, 184 Pac. 413; Squires v. Southern Pacific Co., 42 Cal. App. 459, 183 Pac. 695.

In the case at bar, as the matter was not submitted to the jury, we must assume that they would have resolved all disputed questions of fact in favor of the plaintiff and upon this assumption determine whether or not the instruction to the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant was justified. The most important conflict in the evidence is that between the testimony of the plaintiff and defendant concerning the threats against the defendant's children, to which he testified. The plaintiff denied that she had made such threats to the defendant. The plaintiff testified that she had been maintaining meretricious relations with the defendant for 3½ years; that the defendant during all that time assured her that he loved her and no longer loved his wife and that he wished to get rid of his wife so that he could continue his relations with the plaintiff. The defendant flatly denied such relationship. We must, however, assume the plaintiff's testimony to be true. These assumptions cut two ways. They tend to show malice on the part of the defendant, that is, a desire to get rid of her for reasons wholly personal to himself; on the other hand, these assumed facts tend to show that the plaintiff was in a dangerous frame of mind.

These assumed facts also have another very significant result, in this, that they deprive the defendant of the defense based upon the advice of his attorney, of the justice of the peace and of the district attorney, for, in each instance, he stated to them that the plaintiff had threatened to mutilate his children. Assuming, as we must, that this statement was untrue, he was not entitled to rely implicitly upon their advice to him to institute proceedings and such advice is not a protection to him in instituting that prosecution.

Before stating in greater detail the various undisputed facts and circumstances relied upon by the defendant as constituting probable cause, it is well to state the rule controlling in the determination of whether or not probable cause exists. The test for the determination of the question in the case at bar is whether or not a reasonable man having the information that the defendant had would be justified in entertaining a suspicion that the plaintiff was so far disordered in her mind as to endanger person or property. The conduct of the defendant must be considered in the light of what a reasonable person would be justified in believing or doing, and if a reasonable person having the information which had been brought to the defendant would have been justified in a suspicion that the plaintiff was insane, then his action was justified in law unless the defendant had information or knowledge derived from other sources which would so far offset the suspicious circumstances and facts brought to his attention as to indicate that a reasonable man having all the information which the defendant possessed would not have entertained the suspicion that the plaintiff was insane. See Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 157 Cal. 333, 107 Pac. 611. The trial judge must place himself in the position of the defendant, knowing what he knew and having the information conveyed to him which was presented to the defendant, and ask the question: Would a reasonable man, knowing what the defendant knew and receiving the information that the defendant received, be justified in entertaining a suspicion that the plaintiff was so far disordered in her mind as to endanger her own person or her own health or her own property or the person or health or property of any other person? This must be the rule if the question of probable cause is one of law for the court and not one of fact for the jury. The standard for comparison must be the reasonable man and not the particular person whose conduct is under investigation if the question is one of law.

Defendant's Belief.

There are, however, statements in some of the decisions in this and in other states in apparent conflict with this view, to the effect that the knowledge or belief or the good faith of the defendant is involved in the question of probable cause, as well as in the question of malice. See Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 144, 149, 150; Runo v. Williams, 162 Cal. 444, 451, 122 Pac. 1082. These statements, however, must be construed in the light of the fundamental proposition acknowledged and enforced by all the decisions, including the very decisions in which these statements occur, that probable cause upon a given state of facts is a question of law to be determined by the court (Harkrader v. Moore, supra, 44 Cal. 152), and consequently, it follows, to be determined by the standard of the ordinary man, and not by the characteristics or belief of the particular person involved in the controversy. The good faith, the belief, and the knowledge of the defendant are questions of fact and as such necessarily questions to be determined by a jury unless established by uncontroverted testimony or admitted by the defendant or his counsel. There may be cases, however, in which the actual knowledge or belief of the defendant is shown by the evidence. For instance, if the defendant admits that notwithstanding the appearance of guilt on the part of the person prosecuted, he nevertheless was certain that the appearances were deceptive and that the person was innocent, he would not be justified in inaugurating the prosecution, although a reasonable man without such belief would be so justified. Here, however, we encounter another difficulty, namely, that a person of ordinary prudence is not bound to believe in the guilt of a person before he can act, but is justified in causing his arrest, or in instituting the prosecution if upon reasonable grounds he suspects that the person is guilty. If therefore the defendant admits that he had no fixed or definite belief in the guilt of the person prosecuted and was uncertain as to such guilt, but also testifies that he suspected him of the offense, such testimony, if credited, must be sufficient to exculpate him if he had reasonable grounds for his suspicion. For illustration, in the case at bar, if the defendant had admitted that he did not have a definite belief in the insanity of the plaintiff because he did not know enough about insanity to judge of that matter, but also testified that he suspected her of being insane, it follows that if such suspicion was founded on sufficient facts, he would be clearly acting with probable cause, notwithstanding his admission.

Perhaps no better illustration of the inaccuracy of the statement that the defendant must believe in the insanity of the person prosecuted can be presented than is shown in this case, where the defendant was compelled to take some action to protect his children from threatened injury, assuming, for purposes of illustration, that his testimony as to plaintiff's threats against his children is true. If she was insane she could not well be prosecuted criminally, and if the defendant suspected her of insanity it was certainly more reasonable to cause her detention as an insane person than to kill or injure her in defending his wife and children from the threatened injury. His suspicion of her insanity would make action on his part the more necessary, for he could not assume, with such a belief or suspicion, that the threats were the result of anger which would speedily pass away.

The rule established by the authorities upon the subject of belief as an element of probable cause would seem to be this: While the question of probable cause is always a question of law for the court and is to be determined by the standard of the ordinary man, yet if there is affirmative evidence of the actual belief of the defendant sufficient to justify a conclusion that he did not in fact suspect the plaintiff of being guilty of the crime with which she was charged, then the question of probable cause to that extent involves a question of fact to be submitted to the jury. The authorities are reviewed in a recent note to the case of Simmons v. Gardner, L. R. A. 1915D, 16, 78, as follows:

"There are some reported cases which appear at first sight to have somewhat relaxed the application of the rule that it is a question for the jury whether the facts brought forward in the evidence be true or not, but that what is reasonable and probable cause is matter of law, by seeming to leave more than the mere question of the facts to be proved to the jury; but upon further examination it is found that, although there has been an apparent, there has been no real, departure from the rule. Thus, in some cases the reasonableness and probability of the ground for prosecution has depended not merely upon the proof of certain facts, but upon the question whether other facts, which furnished an answer to the prosecution, were known to the defendant at the time it was instituted. Again, in other cases, the question has turned upon the inquiry whether the facts stated to the defendant at the time, and which formed the ground of the prosecution, were believed by him or not. In other cases the inquiry has been whether, from the conduct of the defendant himself, the jury will infer that he was conscious he had no reasonable or probable cause. But in these and many other cases which might be suggested, it is obvious that the knowledge, the belief, and the conduct of the defendant, are really so many additional facts for the consideration of the jury, so that in effect nothing is left to the jury but the truth of the facts proved and the justice of the inferences to be drawn from such facts, both which investigations fall within the legitimate province of the jury whilst at the same time they have received the law from the judge, that, according as they find the facts proved or not proved, and the inferences warranted or not, there was reasonable and probable ground for the prosecution or the reverse. Panton v. Williams, 2 Q. B. 169, 1 Gale & D. 504, 10 L. J. Exch. (N. S.) 545; Hess v. Oregon German Baking Co., 31 Ore. 503, 49 Pac. 803.

"And in Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174, 28 Pac. 937, the court said: 'Although the question of probable cause, as we have seen above, is a question of law, yet the belief of the defendant in a state of facts is itself a fact which it is proper to submit to the jury for its consideration; and whenever the good faith of the defendant, or his knowledge or belief in an existing state of facts, is an element in determining whether there was probable cause, the court should submit that question to the jury, as well as the other facts, which in its opinion bear upon that issue.' * * *

The author of the note also states:

"C. Belief of Defendant.

"That the belief of the defendant in the guilt of the plaintiff, or, which is the same thing, in the truth of the charge made against that person in the prosecution complained of, is a material element in probable cause, seems to be clearly recognized, either expressly or impliedly, by all the definitions of that defense.

"And the rule is well established that where that belief is in issue, what such belief was is a question of fact for the determination of the jury. * * *

The view I have expressed is not exactly in accord with that stated by the author of this note in the last paragraph quoted above, but is in substantial agreement with his conclusion in the first paragraph quoted, that it is only when there is proof upon the question of the actual belief of the defendant that such question is involved, and that when so involved it is a question of fact for the jury.

The rule is so stated in a recent English case in the Court of Appeal, King's Bench Division (Bradshaw v. Waterlow & Sons, Ltd. [1915] L. R. 3 K. B. 527), as follows:

"* * * The question of the honest belief of the defendants should not be left to the jury unless there is evidence of the absence of such belief. * * *

The case of Blachford v. Dod, 2 Barn. & Adol. 179, 186, decided in 1831, is quoted from in support of this rule as follows:

"It was not a question of fact for them whether the defendants believed that they had good ground for indicting the plaintiff, but all the material facts being ascertained, it was for the Judge to say whether the defendants had reasonable or probable cause for so doing. * * *

I will presently examine the decisions in this state to show that this rule harmonizes all the decisions, and most of the dicta upon that subject; but, before doing so, for greater clarity, I will consider what sort of evidence would raise the question of fact now under consideration. Evidence of actual ill will, of hostility, of malice, would not alone be sufficient to raise the question of fact as to the defendant's belief, for these elements are always involved in and essential to the other branch of a case of malicious prosecution, namely, malice, and if evidence of malice alone, actual or implied, is sufficient to raise the question of fact as to the defendant's actual belief, then the question of probable cause in every case must be submitted to the jury, and such a conclusion is, of course, in conflict with every decision on the subject. See cases hereinafter cited.

The authorities go no further than this:

That affirmative evidence that the defendant did not in fact believe that the plaintiff was guilty, such as defendant's own testimony or admissions, declarations, or conduct, may require the submission of the question of probable cause to the jury. Let us see if the authorities in this state are in harmony with the rule we have just stated. The rule is in conflict with some of the statements made by the court in the decision of the case of Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 234, 28 Pac. 937, 940 (27 Am. St. Rep. 174). It is there said:

"As a principle of law, this instruction was erroneous in omitting to include therein the further element that the defendant did in fact believe that a crime had been committed by the plaintiff. * * * While it is not necessary to show that the crime has in fact been committed, it is necessary to show, not only that the defendant had reasonable ground to believe, but that he did in fact believe, that the crime had been committed, and that the plaintiff had committed the crime. Although the question of probable cause, as we have seen above, is a question of law, yet the belief of the defendant in a state of facts is itself a fact which it is proper to submit to the jury for its consideration; and whenever the good faith of the defendant, or his knowledge or belief in an existing state of facts, is an element in determining whether there was probable cause, the court should submit that question to the jury, as well as the other facts which, in its opinion, bear upon that issue." (Italics ours.)

There is no doubt that these expressions by the court in that case, taken at face value, declare that unless the defendant in fact believed that the person charged was guilty, there was a want of probable cause, and that he must show that he so believed, but, as already seen, the burden of proving want of probable cause is upon the plaintiff. It is equally clear that the question of whether or not the particular individual who instituted the prosecution in fact believed that the crime had been committed is a question of fact, as is stated in the above excerpt from Ball v. Rawles, and that if the test in every case is the actual belief of the defendant as distinguished from the belief of a reasonable man, every case would have to be submitted to the jury upon the question of whether or not there was a want of probable cause. This conclusion, however, is directly in the teeth of the principle decided in Ball v. Rawles, supra, which was that the question of a want of probable cause was always a question for the judge, and not for the jury; that is, a question of law, and not a question of fact. It was declared there that the question should never be submitted to the jury. The discussion which we have quoted from that decision was provoked by the consideration of an instruction set out on page 233 of 93 Cal., on page 940 of 28 Pac. (27 Am. St. Rep. 174), of the opinion, and the discussion is premised with the following:

"Inasmuch as the question of probable cause is always to be determined by the court from the facts in each particular case, it would seem unnecessary to give to the jury any definition of the term, or any instruction upon abstract propositions relating to this subject. These abstract rules will guide the court in determining the question, but are apt to lead the jury away from their function of passing upon the effect of the evidence in support of the probative facts which the court may direct them to find in order to determine in which way their general verdict shall be rendered." (Italics ours.)

The instruction under consideration in Ball v. Rawles, supra, so far as related to the point now under discussion, is as follows:

"If the facts which come to a person's knowledge are such as to create a belief that a crime has been committed by the person charged, in the mind of an impartial, reasonable man, this would be sufficient to constitute probable cause for making an arrest, although no crime had in fact been committed." (Italics ours.)

The point that the court is there trying to emphasize in pointing out the vice in this instruction is that it ignores the person's own knowledge of the facts as distinguished from "facts which come to a person's knowledge." This is emphasized by a sentence in the paragraph from which we have heretofore quoted and which we omitted in order to emphasize its importance:

"The circumstances in themselves might be such as ordinarily to create such belief in the mind of a person, yet the defendant might not have that belief, for the reason that he had knowledge of other facts or circumstances which would destroy such belief." (Italics ours.)

The court in Ball v. Rawles, supra, again and again declared that the question of a want of probable cause is one for the trial judge as a question of law and not one for the jury, and reversed the case because the trial court had submitted that question to the jury under general instructions defining want of probable cause. In discussing that question the court set out an instruction (93 Cal. 226, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174), given at the request of the plaintiff, to the effect that if the defendant "did not believe that plaintiff was guilty of any crime, and that he did not have sufficient knowledge, as a cautious and prudent man, acting conscientiously and impartially, to believe the plaintiff guilty of any crime, then, as a matter of law, there was no probable cause for the arrest and prosecution of plaintiff." In commenting upon that instruction the court said:

"These were not the only facts of which evidence regarding probable cause had been given to the jury, and the above instructions given at the request of the defendant left to the jury the function of determining this question. The court should have told the jury, either that the evidence which was introduced was or was not sufficient to establish a probable cause, or that, as from the evidence they should find the facts which, in the opinion of the court, would or would not be sufficient to show a probable cause, their verdict should be for or against the defendant."

The effect of the decision in Ball v. Rawles, supra, is that the question of probable cause is always one for the court, even though it involves the belief of the defendant, thus overlooking the fact that the actual belief of the particular defendant is a question of fact. There was, however, no affirmative proof as to defendant's belief in the evidence. The rule upon the matter of the defendant's belief is thus stated in the later case of Griswold v. Griswold, 143 Cal. 617, 620, 77 Pac. 672, in which plaintiff sued the defendant for malicious prosecution in the institution of insanity proceedings. It was there said:

"It was incumbent upon plaintiff to prove both want of probable cause and malice. 2 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 449. On the other hand, the defendant had the right to prove that he acted in good faith, without malice, and upon probable cause; that is, upon such facts and information as would induce a reasonably prudent man to believe that the plaintiff was insane. Probable cause has reference to the common standard of human judgment and conduct, and malice refers to the mind and judgment of the defendant in the particular act charged as a malicious prosecution. Malice need not indicate anger or vindictiveness, but it imports bad faith in a malicious prosecution, or the want of sincere belief that the facts and circumstances justify the prosecution. As said by Chief Justice Redfield in Barron v. Mason, 31 Vt. 197: 'For it is found in almost every book upon the subject, that if defendant, however causelessly, did really act in good faith and without malice in preferring the charge, he cannot be made liable for a malicious prosecution.'" (Italics ours.)

The court also said in that case (Griswold v. Griswold, supra):

"And so in case a party is insane and dangerous to be at large. It would not do to hold honest parties in heavy damages for an error of judgment. If so it would be difficult to get responsible parties to make complaints. All that the law requires as a defense to this kind of an action is the existence of such facts and circumstances as would induce the belief in the mind of a reasonably cautious man that the party was insane at the time the charge was made. If such facts and circumstances existed, the plaintiff ought not to recover." (Italics ours.)

It was said in Lee v. Levison, 173 Cal. 166, 159 Pac. 438:

"This court from the earliest history of the state has adopted the definition for 'probable cause' derived from the discussion in Greenleaf's treatise on Evidence: 'Probable cause is a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true.'"

This definition was approved in Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217, 221, where it was held to be well settled to be a question of law for the court.

Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 144:

The case of Harkrader v. Moore, supra, was an action for malicious prosecution based upon a charge of theft made by the defendant against the plaintiff. Upon the trial of the action for malicious prosecution the defendant "requested an instruction that if the jury should find certain enumerated facts, these would, of themselves, amount to probable cause, and would entitle the defendant to a verdict. These facts were, 'that the defendant had the possession and control of the rails as the agent of the owner, and that plaintiff took said rails and converted them to his own use without the knowledge or consent of the owners or of said defendant, and that plaintiff afterwards denied to defendant that he had taken said rails and endeavored to conceal his act of taking said rails.'" 44 Cal. 149. " * * * The instruction as requested, ignoring, as it did, the actual belief of the defendant at the time he caused the arrest of the plaintiff, and having no reference to the circumstances, or to the appearances of guilt of the plaintiff, then known to the defendant, and under which he laid the charge against the plaintiff, was properly refused." 44 Cal. 151.

The court, in Harkrader v. Moore, supra, also discussed another instruction requested by the defendant and refused, to the effect that if they believed from the evidence "that at the time of the alleged prosecution, the facts of which the defendant, Moore, then had knowledge, were sufficient to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the alleged charge was true, the plaintiff cannot recover in this action." The court criticized and justified its refusal of this instruction because " * * * the defendant may not, in fact, have believed the charge to be true; and if he did not so believe, there could, as to him, be no probable cause for setting the prosecution on foot." See, also, discussion on pages 150, 151, of 44 Cal., supra.

We have quoted the decision thus far somewhat at length because it seems to hold, and it is declared in the syllabus to hold, and is relied upon in the main opinion as holding, that the defendant must, in fact, believe as well as have reasonable grounds for believing at the time that the accusation was made that the charge was well founded. As has been already stated, the actual belief of a particular defendant as to the guilt or innocence of a person is always a question of fact, and can never be a question of law. The logical conclusion to be deduced from the above quoted and cited portions of the opinion in Harkrader v. Moore would seem always to require the submission to a jury of the question of probable cause, because an essential element therein is the actual belief of the actual defendant. But that this was not the view of the court which rendered the decision in Harkrader v. Moore, supra, is clear, for, after criticizing the instruction in the manner hereinbefore stated, it is declared that the instruction was erroneous because it submitted to the jury the question of probable cause. The court thereupon proceeded to enunciate the rule that the question of probable cause was a question for the court and not for the jury. Upon that subject the court stated as follows:

"But the proposed instruction is in another respect objectionable. It sought to submit to the jury the question of the existence of probable cause. * * * The authorities are substantially uniform that the question of probable cause, however presented, is a question of law, and, therefore, one to be determined by the court. When the facts in reference to the alleged probable cause are admitted, or established beyond controversy, then the determination of their legal effect is absolute, and the jury are to be told that there was or was not probable cause, as the case may be. When, however, the facts are controverted, and the evidence is conflicting, then the determination of their legal effect by the court is necessarily hypothetical, and the jury are to be told that if they find the facts in a designated way, then that such facts, when so found, do or do not amount to probable cause. But in neither case are the jury to determine whether or not the established facts do or do not amount to probable cause."

We thus have in this case two entirely inconsistent declarations, one that the question of probable cause is always a question of law, and the other that probable cause involves the belief of the defendant in the truth of the charge made by him. The difficulty arises in part from the fact that the instruction under consideration instead of reciting the facts which, if known to the defendant, would have justified him as a reasonable man in acting in the belief that the charge was true, left them to determine, first what facts the defendant knew, and, second, whether or not they justified him as a reasonable man in believing the charge to be true. This is pointed out in the decision now under consideration in the following language:

"To inquire whether or not such facts as were known to the defendant were sufficient to warrant him as a reasonable man in the belief that the plaintiff was guilty, is to inquire not only what particular facts were known to him, but also, and at the same time, to determine their legal sufficiency * * * as constituting probable cause."

The basic questions under consideration in that case, then, were whether or not the defendant at the time he instituted the prosecution of the plaintiff had knowledge of the facts, which were relied upon by him on the trial as a justification for the prosecution, and, if so, whether the jury should be permitted to first determine what the defendant knew about the matter, and then, whether or not such knowledge so found by them justified him as a reasonable man in believing such facts not stated by the court, but to be found by the jury, to be a true charge. It was held that this could not be done.

This case, then, construed as a whole, in effect, declares that the element of the belief of the defendant in the guilt of the person he was prosecuting, in so far as it entered into the question of probable cause, in that case was a question to be determined by the court. We think this case is not in conflict with the true rule to be as we have heretofore stated in this opinion, that the question of the belief of the defendant should be submitted to the jury only where there is evidence concerning the condition of the mind of the defendant which tends to show that he did not in fact believe in the truth of the charge.

Runo v. Williams, 162 Cal. 444, 122 Pac. 1082:

In the case of Runo v. Williams, supra, the judgment of the trial court in a case of malicious prosecution was reversed "For the error in refusing to permit defendant to testify directly on the subject of his belief, good faith, and motive in making the criminal charge as bearing on the issues of both probable cause and malice. * * *"

The questions referred to are as follows:

"What was your motive and reason for instituting the criminal prosecution against Mr. Runo?" "Whether in instituting the criminal prosecution you were actuated by malice, hatred, or ill feeling or whether you were actuated by an honest belief that he was guilty of the offense that you charged against him?" "When you instituted the criminal prosecution you honestly believed in good faith that he was guilty of the offense as charged against him?"

In discussing and determining the admissibility of this evidence the court said:

"It is not sufficient that the facts and circumstances were such as would lead a reasonable and prudent man to believe that the offense charged was committed, but it must also appear that he acted upon them in an honest and reasonable belief that the plaintiff was guilty. Probable cause is, in effect, the concurrence of the belief of guilt with the existence of facts and circumstances reasonably warranting the belief (Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 144; Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 194 [29 Pac. 31]).

"It is apparent, therefore, that a belief in the guilt of the plaintiff as to the offense charged was one of the relevant and pertinent facts to be shown by the defendant in support of his claim of probable cause in making the accusation.

"Nor can it be claimed that in addition to proof of his honest belief in the guilt of the plaintiff, it is not equally pertinent on the distinct issue of malice for the defendant to show such belief and his reason, motive, and good faith in making the criminal charge."

In determining the effect of this decision it should be noted that the only question passed upon by the court was the admissibility of the testimony of the defendant's belief when offered by himself for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's case and of showing that there was no malice in the prosecution but that it was based upon an honest belief of the defendant in the plaintiff's guilt.

The Supreme Court in that decision was not considering the question of the relative functions of the court and jury. It is clear that the answer of the defendant to the questions propounded to him upon the witness stand would have been relevant upon the question of probable cause or malice and favorable to himself if he testified affirmatively in response to the questions, and, on the other hand, if he should testify negatively and thus establish that he acted without belief in the guilt of the plaintiff and with malice, the evidence would be equally competent.

So far, then, as the discussion of the court in that case relates to the belief of the defendant as an element in the question of probable cause, it must be interpreted in the light of the question under consideration. The court does not attempt to decide how the jury in that case should be instructed upon a new trial, but states upon that subject:

"The law is clearly and definitely settled how a jury shall be instructed in the cases of this character," citing in support of that statement the cases of Grant v. Moore, 29 Cal. 644; Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 144; Eastin v. Bank of Stockton, 66 Cal. 123, 4 Pac. 1106, 56 Am. Rep. 77; Fulton v. Onesti, 66 Cal. 575, 6 Pac. 491; Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174; Smith v. Liverpool Ins. Co., 107 Cal. 433, 40 Pac. 540; and Scrivani v. Dondero, 128 Cal. 31, 60 Pac. 463.

There is another line of cases that should be considered in arriving at a conclusion in this case. The rule as to a want of probable cause for a prosecution in this case is the same rule invoked in cases of false imprisonment where the arrest is made without a warrant. See 3 Cal. Jur. 120, § 65; 12 Cal. Jur. 432, § 4; People v. Kilvington, 104 Cal. 86, 37 Pac. 799, 43 Am. St. Rep. 73; People v. Melendrez, 129 Cal. 549, 62 Pac. 109. In the case of People v. Kilvington, supra, it was held to be the duty of the trial court to determine the question of probable cause for an arrest in a criminal action for false imprisonment. In that decision there is no suggestion that the actual belief of the defendant was material, but the question for determination as there stated is whether or not he had reasonable grounds to believe that the offense had been committed, or, to quote the language of the decision:

"Did the defendant, in view of the facts as presented to him at the time, have reasonable or probable cause to believe that the deceased had committed a felony?" 104 Cal. 92, 37 Pac. 800, 43 Am. St. 73.

In view of the fact that it was held to be error to submit to the jury the question of probable cause in that case, we quote at length from the decision:

"But the court erred in the manner in which it submitted the question of probable cause to the jury. Upon this point the court gave the following instruction: 'It is for the jury to determine from all the facts and circumstances of the case whether the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that a felony had been committed by the deceased. If you find from the evidence that he had such cause for belief, you will then determine whether, in the attempt to arrest the deceased, he used only such means as were necessary to prevent the escape of the deceased, and to effect his arrest.'

"This instruction submitted to the jury the entire question in reference to the existence of probable cause upon the part of the defendant to arrest the deceased, and that body was called upon not only to find whether the facts relied upon by the defendant to show such probable cause were true, but also, if true, to determine whether or not they were legally sufficient for that purpose. The instruction was erroneous, as it is not the province of the jury to decide in any case whether the facts and circumstances which they may find established by the evidence are sufficient to constitute probable cause. This principle of law is now settled beyond doubt or controversy, as a reference to a few of many cases which might be cited on that point will show. 'This question of probable cause, or reasonable ground for suspicion, whether it arises in actions for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment, is one of law, unless the evidence out of which it arises is conflicting, in which event it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury what facts, if established, will constitute probable cause, and submit to them only the question as to such facts.' (Burns v. Erben, 40 N. Y. 463; Bulkeley v. Keteltas, 6 N. Y. 384; Masten v. Deyo, 2 Wend. 425; Pangburn v. Bull, 1 Wend. 345; Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 124; Panton v. Williams, 2 Ad. & E. N. S. 169; Sutton v. Johnstone, 1 Term Rept. 493, 545.) And our predecessors in passing upon the same question in Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 152, said: 'The authorities are substantially uniform that the question of probable cause, however presented, is a question of law, and therefore one to be determined by the court. When the facts in reference to the alleged probable cause are admitted or established beyond controversy, then the determination of their legal effect is absolute, and the jury are to be told that there was or was not probable cause, as the case may be. When, however, the facts are controverted and the evidence is conflicting, then the determination of their legal effect by the court is necessarily hypothetical, and the jury are to be told that if they find the facts in a designated way, then that such facts, when so found, do or do not amount to probable cause.' The same rule is also announced in Grant v. Moore, 29 Cal. 644; Fulton v. Onesti, 66 Cal. 575:

and in the late case of Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174, where the whole question is elaborately discussed.

"As already stated, the facts in this case were undisputed, and the court ought, therefore, to have instructed the jury as to their sufficiency in law to justify the defendant in attempting to arrest the deceased; that is, whether they were legally sufficient to induce a reasonable belief in the mind of the defendant that the deceased had committed a felony. The defendant requested the following charges upon this point: * * * Did the defendant, in view of the facts as presented to him at the time, have reasonable or probable cause to believe that the deceased had committed a felony?"

"There is a substantial agreement in the decisions of the courts as to what constitutes probable cause or reasonable cause such as will justify one in arresting or prosecuting another upon a criminal charge; and perhaps as clear and comprehensive a statement of the rule as can be found is that of Shaw, C. J., in Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 217: 'There must be such a state of facts,' said he, 'as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person is guilty.' Applying this rule to the facts of this case, we think it must be held that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the deceased may have committed a felony. * * *" (Italics ours.)

In that later case of People v. Melendrez, supra, it was held that the question as to whether or not the defendant in a criminal prosecution for false imprisonment had reasonable ground for belief in the guilt of the person arrested could not be taken from the jury where the court was of the opinion that no such ground existed, but could only be invoked in his favor. The court there referred to People v. Kilvington, supra, as follows:

"The court simply applied in favor of the defendant the rule established in civil cases for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment; which is, that to establish probable cause 'there must be such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe or entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person is guilty.' But this rule has never been applied, as against the defendant in a criminal case, to establish a want of probable cause for a mistaken belief, nor should it be. For in such cases the degree of intelligence evinced by the defendant must always be an important element in determining his guilt. Nor is it reasonable that the same rule should be applied to all of a class, including individuals of all grades of intelligence, from the least to the highest." (Italics ours.)

This case holds there that in civil actions the defendant's conduct is to be judged by the standard of an ordinary man to be determined by the court, but in a criminal action while this rule cannot be invoked against him, it can be invoked in his favor. In a recent civil case for false imprisonment the rule is again stated in Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 Pac. 113, decided by this court in bank; all justices concurring. The plaintiff had been arrested by the defendants as a deserter. In that case a judgment had been rendered upon a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. This judgment was reversed by us upon the ground that the defendants were justified as a matter of law in making the arrest. It was there stated:

"The question to be decided, then, is this: Did the defendants, under the circumstances related, have reasonable ground to believe that the plaintiff was a deserter? Probable cause may be defined as a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true. (Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217, 221.) The court must determine, as matter of law, whether the facts and circumstances as they appear, or are found to exist, constitute probable cause. (McKenna v. Heinlen, 128 Cal. 97, 100 [60 Pac. 668]; McCarthy v. De Armit, 99 Pa. St. 63.)" (Italics ours.)

In that case the plaintiff testified that at the time of the arrest he told the officers that he had notified the local board of his new post office address. This statement, if true, showed that the plaintiff was not a deserter. The officers disputed this testimony. It was held by us that the question of probable cause under the circumstances was one for the court to determine as a matter of law. It seems to me that it might be argued with equal force in that case, as in this, that the question of whether or not the particular officers believed the plaintiff guilty turned upon the question of whether or not they believed the plaintiff's statement to them, in effect, that he was not a deserter. This question of their belief would be a question of fact, but the court held that as reasonable men they were not required to accept the statement of the party about to be placed under arrest, and determined the case upon a consideration of what, under the circumstances, a reasonable man was justified in believing and doing. If the defendant officers were not only required to act upon reasonable grounds for a belief, but also upon an actual belief, the decision in that case was wrong. If the rule in Michel v. Smith, supra, conflicts with the earlier cases relied upon in the main opinion, it should control us as the latest decision of this court. If, however, it is consistent with the actual decisions in those cases, as I believe it is, it certainly should be followed, rather than to follow the dicta in our decisions that the belief of the defendant is in all civil cases for malicious prosecution an element of probable cause, and as such must be submitted to the jury. In my opinion the question of the defendant's actual belief should be submitted to the jury only where there is evidence upon the subject of the defendant's actual belief sufficient to support the conclusion that there the defendant did not in fact suspect the plaintiff of guilt, although he had reasonable grounds to do so.

In the case at bar, it seems clear that the defendant was, under all the circumstances of this case, warranted as a reasonable man in suspecting the plaintiff of being insane.

Defendant's Knowledge.

We will next consider the question of the defendant's knowledge as affecting the question of probable cause. Upon the question of the knowledge of the defendant as distinguished from the belief of the defendant, it is clear that the burden of proving what the defendant knew is upon the plaintiff in a case of malicious prosecution, if such knowledge is relied upon to show a want of probable cause. Such proof having been made, the question is whether or not, with the knowledge and information possessed by the defendant, a reasonable man would be justified in instituting the proceedings; that is, would such a man be acting with probable cause? In the case at bar the defendant alone knew of his meretricious relations with the plaintiff. The facts of which they had knowledge persuaded the constable, the district attorney, the justice of the peace, and the defendant's own attorney, all reasonable men, no doubt, that the plaintiff was insane, and they told these facts to the defendant and informed him of their belief, nevertheless, as he alone knew of his meretricious relations with the plaintiff, the question for the consideration of the court is not "did the defendant in fact believe that the plaintiff was or was not insane," but, "would a reasonable man knowing all the facts which were known to the defendant by reason of having them brought to his attention by others and also knowing in addition the facts which he alone knew, namely, that such meretricious relations existed, have reason to suspect as a reasonable man that the plaintiff was insane?"

Good Faith.

The question of good faith is always involved in a case of malicious prosecution, as an element in the question of malice, and when it is shown that the defendant in fact disbelieved the appearances of guilt, it is also an element in the question of probable cause, as heretofore stated.

Public Policy.

The rule that probable cause is a question for the court is based upon consideration of public policy requiring that criminals be prosecuted without the hazard of claim for damages for malicious prosecution where the prosecutor acts upon reasonable grounds. This rule was stated by this court in a case of malicious prosecution growing out of a charge of insanity. Griswold v. Griswold, supra, hereinbefore quoted; see, also, note to L. R. A. 1915D, p. 89.

The cases all hold that where the facts are disputed, the question of probable cause is one for the jury to determine upon proper instructions; but this rule, of course, does not apply where, upon the undisputed facts, and a view of the disputed facts most favorable to the plaintiff, the court can say as a matter of law upon such facts that there was probable cause, and in such case a nonsuit or instructed verdict is proper. We are called upon in this case to determine whether upon the most favorable view of evidence, and of the inference to be drawn therefrom to sustain plaintiff's case, it appears that there was probable cause, and in determining that question we will leave the discussion as to the evidence of defendant's belief until the last.

We must thus assume in this case that the defendant testified falsely when he testified that the plaintiff made threats to him to disfigure his children, that he misrepresented the facts when he made a similar statement to his attorney, and that he was influenced by malice in his proceeding against the plaintiff; yet the question still remains as to whether or not a person of ordinary intelligence, that is, a reasonable man, was justified in believing or suspecting from the facts which were known to the defendant and the information given to him that the plaintiff was sufficiently deranged in her mind to be dangerous to herself or others. See Stein v. Lacassie, 189 Cal. 118, 207 Pac. 886.

In this connection the undisputed evidence tending to create such a suspicion in the mind of a reasonable man may be stated as follows: The plaintiff at the time was under arrest upon a charge of threatening breach of the peace by reason of having made threats to kill a man named Erskine because Erskine had attached her automobile. This charge arose out of the fact when the constable attempted to make the attachment the plaintiff informed him that she intended to kill the attaching creditor and rushed into her apartment and secured a revolver with which she threatened to commit the murder, but the revolver was taken from her by the constable.

The justice of the peace, after conferring with the deputy district attorney, agreed with the latter that there was no doubt that an insanity charge should be made against the plaintiff and he so informed the defendant. The justice of the peace testified concerning this interview with the deputy district attorney, Mr. Bitler, as follows:

"He had seen her there at the courthouse that day and had observed her actions very closely, and he asked me if I had, and I said 'yes' at various times and particularly that day. He said in his opinion that there was no doubt but what a warrant should be issued or affidavit should be filed and a citation into court for an examination should be issued. Q. On the insanity charge? A. Yes, sir; on an insanity charge. Q. What did you say to him? A. I told him from what had occurred that day, I agreed with him."

With reference to the defendant this witness testified:

"Q. Did you not tell him what your views were and advice was? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. And that was the same you had given Mr. Bitler? A. Just the same."

This witness also testified that before he had seen the defendant he had formed the opinion that the plaintiff was insane—

"Q. She accused Shenk of being the instigator of the bondsmen going off? A. Yes, sir; she said it was his work. Q. And, now, did you ever have any dealings with insane people? A. Quite a number of cases have come up down here; yes, sir. Q. What would you say, you considered the defendant here insane, didn't you, on that afternoon of that day? A. Yes; I thought she was at that time."

When asked to give the reason for believing she was insane, he testified as follows:

"Q. Tell the jury what you saw her do, the exact things you saw her do and the exact words you heard her say that led you to believe she was insane. A. Well; after she was taken over to the city jail, I passed over that way, and, at some distance, I heard her there singing and hollering and making a disturbance over there; but I could not repeat the exact words she used, because I didn't pay enough attention to them. Q. Do you know whether or not it was her that was hollering there? A. Yes, sir; I knew her voice. * * * Q. So you decided she was insane, did you? A. I don't know that I came to any decision at that time. Yes, sir; I thought to myself she must be off. Q. She must be off; was she off or insane? A. Mentally unbalanced. Q. And what did you consider—you gave it quite a little consideration? A. Naturally, at the time; yes. She was in court at that time. Q. What did you consider was the cause of this insanity? A. I don't know. Q. Trouble with Mr. Shenk? A. I didn't know what was the cause of it. I didn't attempt to learn at that time any cause. I didn't know enough to know what the trouble was that she was having with Shenk."

The witness in giving his reason for discharging her on the charge of threats to kill:

"I found that in my opinion there was no danger of her killing Dad Erskine and of carrying out her threat to kill."

He further testified:

"My recollection of it (the evidence) is that she said she didn't mean what she said when she said, 'I will kill him.' She was just excited and hysterical, and picked up the revolver and said, 'If that old devil don't quit hounding me, I will kill him,' or something to that effect. But she didn't mean it."

It thus appears that the justice of the peace concluded from his observation of the plaintiff's conduct, and without reference to the threats defendant claims plaintiff made to him and without knowledge of their illicit relations, that the plaintiff was insane. This information was communicated to the defendant. The plaintiff denies that she so conducted herself, but as the justice of the peace so reported to the defendant, the defendant's conduct must be judged by the information given him and not by the fact, if it be a fact, that plaintiff did not create such a disturbance.

The witness Ault, an attorney who represented the defendant on the trial of this action, testified as follows with relation to the conduct of the plaintiff:

"Q. Now, Mr. Ault, start in and state in detail what you observed from the time of the filing of the—from the time you observed the plaintiff and the wind-up of your conversation with Mr. Shenk? A. I cannot give the exact date of this. It was either the 29th or 30th, or along in there; but it was in the morning of the day that the insanity charge was filed, the complaint. In my office, over the White Cross Drug Store, I was in my private room, and the door opened. Miss Franzen came into my room. The moment she came in, she slammed the door after her, and I noticed she had been crying. Her hair was disheveled; she was very much excited and very much wrought up. She said to me, 'I am going to kill Dolph, the son of a —; and I said, 'Who do you mean?' She said, 'I mean Dolph Shenk.' I said, 'Why, now listen, Mabel, I want you to understand I am Mr. Shenk's attorney, and I am his friend, and any statements of that sort you make to me, I am going to convey them back to Mr. Shenk.' She says: 'I don't care if you tell him. I want you to tell him, because I am going to publish it in the newspapers. I will publish it to the whole world. I am going to take it up with his wife.' I said, 'With that understanding, go ahead and tell your story.' I told her to sit down, and she wouldn't. She kept walking back and forth in my office, wringing her hands. She would cry awhile, and I said to her, 'What do you mean by all this, Mabel?' She said that—I don't remember what terms she used then, but she says—'He threw me out of the office last night, and beat me up, and I am going to get even with him.' I said, 'Why don't you get even with him, then?' She says: 'I am not going to take that means of getting even with him; I have another.' I said, 'What is that?' She says, 'I am going to disfigure his children's faces until he can point to them until his dying day and know that Mabel Franzen put it there.' I said, 'Mabel, do you realize what you are saying?' and she says, 'I certainly do.' I said, 'Do you know you are making threats against innocent children that have nothing to do with their father's relations, conceding that you and Dolph Shenk were intimate, and that all you say is true, and that he did kick you out of the office, why pick on his children?' I said: 'Mabel, one of two things is wrong with you; you are either crazy or you are a fool, to make such a statement as that.' She says: 'It doesn't make any difference. That is what I am going to do, and when I get through with these children, I will finish up Mrs. Shenk.' I said: 'Mabel, there is another thing. Why should you make a threat against Mrs. Shenk, conceding this is all true. She isn't to blame for his actions.' She says: 'It doesn't make any difference. She is trying to come between us. Dolph has lived with me and supported me and he has brought me presents and taken me riding, and now he is trying to throw me down.' I said: 'Suppose all of that is true; you wouldn't carry out your threats against his children.' She says, 'I certainly would.' She kept walking up and down in my office, and walking into my library room, and I have a big Morris chair sitting by the desk. She reclined in it. It is a reclining chair, and she would lean over the arm of the chair while she would moan and cry, and then she would get up and start to walk the floor again, cursing him and making these threats, and I would repeatedly ask her not to do that, and try to show her where it was foolish to do such a thing. She must have stayed in my office an hour, all the time making these same threats that she was going to mutilate his children, and then get Mrs. Shenk, and she would break up his relations with Mr. Vosburg. She says, 'Dolph Shenk knows damn well I will do it, because I have already carried out other threats.' She went back into my library again and sat down in the chair, and had a spell of crying. All the time of her abuse of him I was considerably worried about her. She was wringing her hands and twisting her handkerchief, and I sat there and must have talked to her 15 minutes. She finally consented that she would not do anything; that she loved him so much that she would forget this; and that she would not harm a hair of his head. Immediately upon her leaving the place, I went down to Mr. Shenk's office. I don't know whether it was immediately, but it was very shortly afterwards. * * * I believe Mabel made this statement in my office before I went down there; that Shenk thinks he is smart. He is going to try and get his wife out of town, but they are leaving to-night on the train, and I will be Johnny on the spot, and I will do what I have threatened to do. I tried to argue her and discourage her about doing a thing like that, and then when I went down there I told him this, and I think that was when I advised it, or we discussed the advisability of putting an officer on her trail."

Thus, Mr. Ault, defendant's attorney, after an hour's interview with the plaintiff, reported to the defendant that he had had this interview, and, in effect, that after hearing her statement concerning the alleged illicit relations between the plaintiff and defendant and the defendant's denial of such relations, he advised the defendant that in his opinion the woman was dangerous and was insane, advised him to secure a guard to protect his wife and children. The plaintiff denies making these threats to Mr. Ault, but the defendant's conduct is to be judged by the information he had, namely, that the plaintiff had threatened to kill him, disfigure his children, and wreak revenge upon his wife, and that her conduct and conversation had caused Mr. Ault to conclude that the plaintiff was insane.

It is unnecessary to recite other testimony on the subject, because it is clear from what has been said that the defendant as a reasonable man did not act without probable cause in filing the insanity complaint, even when we consider his own knowledge as well as the information and advice given him, unless he in fact did not entertain a bona fide suspicion of her insanity. Upon that subject the defendant testified that as early as May, 1920, the plaintiff secured money from him by threats of making him trouble by "telling his wife" and his principal, Mr. Vosberg, and that from these unwarranted threats he thought she was insane or unbalanced at times, and here it should be said that defendant paid the plaintiff $900 cash, and a mortgage of $2,300, in pursuance of such threats. Defendant testified he knew of no insane delusions on her part except "her threats to damage my children," on November 29, 1920, the day before defendant swore to the complaint charging the plaintiff with being insane. The defendant also testified as to his belief as follows:

"A. He (Mr. Ault) told me that she was going to tell the party that I had had relations with her, and she was going, by reason of that statement, she was going to make me come through, and break up my family and my financial standing. Q. Did she state in what particular way she was going to, how she was going to arrive at that point? A. Yes, sir. Q. State what else you remember, if anything? A. He said she would—he said I would have to come through, and if I didn't she would get my children and mar them for life so I would never want to look at them again, and also get the wife, as he put it. Q. Did you believe from what you had seen, and what had been told you, that your children and family were in danger? A. I most certainly did, sir. Q. Was that belief present when you signed that affidavit? A. Positively so, sir."

The defendant was also asked by his counsel when on the stand, "Did you, when you signed this affidavit, do it in good faith?" but the plaintiff objected to the question on the ground that the question called for a conclusion and that the defendant must be judged by his acts and not from his conclusions stated on the stand. The objection was sustained. The only direct evidence as to the actual belief of the defendant was thus favorable to the defendant. There was no evidence of his belief which contradicted this direct evidence. In no instance was he shown to have declared or admitted that he did not believe in fact that the plaintiff was insane.

Plaintiff, however, did testify that the day before Thanksgiving in response to her threat to meet his wife, defendant said, "You had better keep still, or I will put you where the bowwows won't bite you." The conversation was related by her, in part, as follows:

"A. So, I told him I was going over. I said, 'Dolph, I am going over to the train, and my car will be up next to yours, and I am going to tell your wife the truth. You are lying to one of us. You have kept this up for 3½ years, and I am going to tell her the truth.' Q. What did you mean by that? A. He told me he and his wife were separated. Q. When did he first tell you that? A. When I first met him. Q. How long had he continued telling you the same thing. A. All the time. Q. Go ahead. A. He said: 'Mabel, dear, remember you are in business and have got a good thing here. Remember what I am telling you. You had better keep still, or I will put you where the bowwows won't bark at you.' Q. Tell all you said and what he said. A. I said, 'I didn't give a damn.' Q. Was that all that was said? A. So he said, 'Remember I am warning you.'"

In connection with that conversation she also denied any threats or statements concerning his children, except the following:

"Q. Tell what you said and what he said? A. Well, I said I hoped to God somebody would do his daughters the way he did me, and that is when he turned wrathly. He got mad. Q. Was that all you said about his family? A. Yes, sir. Q. That was what was said that night? A. Yes, and then he struck me when I said that."

These declarations and threats by the defendant, while tending to show malice against the plaintiff and a purpose on his part to prevent the plaintiff from coming into contact with his wife and children, are insufficient, directly or inferentially, to raise a conflict upon the question of the defendant's actual belief in the insanity of the plaintiff, as distinguished from the belief to be attributed to him as a reasonable man from the facts and circumstances known by him and called to his attention at and before the time he filed the insanity charge. The most that can be said of this evidence is that it shows a private motive for his prosecution, and this alone is not sufficient to overcome the other evidence of probable cause. A want of probable cause cannot be inferred from malice (see cases cited 33 Century Digest, Malicious Prosecution, § 39; 12 First Decennial Digest, § 23, p. 1970; Malicious Prosecution, vol. 14; Second Decennial Digest, § 23, p. 1761; Redgate v. Southern Pacific Co., 24 Cal. App. 573, 141 Pac. 1191; Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217, 220, supra), although malice may be inferred from a want of probable cause (12 First Decennial Digest, § 32, p. 1982; Griswold v. Griswold, 143 Cal. 617, 77 Pac. 672, supra).

I think the judgment should be affirmed.

MYERS, J. I dissent upon the grounds and for the reasons stated in the dissenting opinion of the CHIEF JUSTICE herein. In addition thereto, I dissent in toto from the conclusion of the main opinion herein that "good faith is undoubtedly an element of probable cause in malicious prosecution cases." I do not think that the question of good faith bears any relation to the issue of probable cause. It is in my opinion relevant solely to the issue of malice. To say that the defendant acted in bad faith in filing the charge against the plaintiff is but to say that he acted maliciously in so doing. When a wrongful act is done from a wrongful motive, it is done maliciously in the eyes of the law, and it matters not whether that wrongful motive be an express desire to injure the plaintiff, or whether it be a wish to gain an undue advantage to the defendant, or whether it spring from sheer wantonness. In either event it is equally wrongful, and in either event it constitutes malice in fact as the same is known to the law. Malice consists in the evil motive, the "malus animus," which inspired the act. Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 164, 116 Pac. 530; Griswold v. Griswold, 143 Cal. 617, 620, 77 Pac. 672; Vesper v. Crane Co., 165 Cal. 36, 43, 130 Pac. 876, L. R. A. 1915A, 541; Redgate v. Southern Pacific Co., 24 Cal. App. 573, 584, 141 Pac. 1191. If this be conceded, as I think it must, it seems to me to follow that the conclusion of the main opinion is in conflict with the rule concurred in by substantially all of the American cases and substantially all of the English cases during the past hundred years. There is much confusion and apparent conflict in the decided cases upon malicious prosecution, but there are three points upon which they are substantially all in perfect accord. These are: (1) That to justify recovery of damages for a malicious prosecution there must be a concurrence of two elements, namely, malice and want of probable cause; (2) that the burden is upon the plaintiff to allege and prove the existence of both of these elements; (3) that proof of malice is no evidence whatever of the want of probable cause (or, as it is sometimes stated, that want of probable cause cannot be inferred from malice). These three rules have been regarded as fundamental for more than a hundred years. But if the main opinion herein is to stand, it will have the effect, as it seems to me, of utterly destroying the third rule above stated, and of rendering the first entirely inconsequential. If good faith is an essential element of probable cause, then proof of bad faith is proof of the want of probable cause. But bad faith is nothing else than malice, from which it must follow that proof of malice is evidence of the want of probable cause, and suffices to prove both of the essential elements above mentioned, notwithstanding that practically all of the decisions are to the contrary.

I have found no reasoned decision rendered within the last hundred years which decides that good faith is an essential element of probable cause. There are statements to that effect in numerous decisions, but those statements will be found, I think, in each case to have been the product of an unreasoned reliance directly or indirectly upon ancient precedents which have been rendered entirely valueless by the important and substantial changes which took place in the law of malicious prosecution during the eighteenth century. Under the ancient common law, malicious prosecution was an action on the case in the nature of a conspiracy for falsely and maliciously procuring the plaintiff to be indicted and imprisoned. The want of probable cause was not then an element of plaintiff's cause of action. He was required to allege and prove only that the defendant had maliciously instigated a prosecution against him, that the same had terminated in his favor, and that he was damaged thereby. It was for the defendant to plead as an affirmative defense in the nature of justification that he had probable cause for the prosecution, and the burden of proving the existence of probable cause was upon the defendant. This rule was found to be subversive of the public welfare, in that it resulted in criminals going unpunished because responsible citizens would not incur the risk incident to filing complaints against them. The rule was accordingly changed at some time prior to 1797 (Savil v. Roberts, 1 Salk. 13, 1 Ld. Raym. 374; Panton v. Williams, 2 Q. B. 169, 1 G. & D. 504, 10 L. J. Ex. 545), so as to require the plaintiff to allege and prove the want of probable cause as an essential element of his cause of action, to which declaration the plaintiff could enter a general plea of not guilty. This change had the effect, of course, of shifting the burden of proof upon the issue of probable cause from the defendant to the plaintiff, and such has been the rule ever since. The occurrence of this fundamental change in the law is adverted to in Ball v. Rawles, supra (93 Cal. at page 229, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174), and in Panton v. Williams, supra (2 Q. B. at page 193). It has happened not infrequently that long since that change occurred courts have continued to rely upon the authority of precedents established prior to the change, without realizing that the change in the law had rendered these precedents valueless. This is illustrated by the passage relied upon in the majority opinion herein from Ball v. Rawles, supra, wherein this court said:

"While it is not necessary to show that the crime has in fact been committed, it is necessary to show, not only that the defendant had reasonable ground to believe, but that he did in fact believe, that the crime had been committed and that the plaintiff had committed the crime."

That statement assumes that the burden rests upon the defendant to show probable cause, and it evidently grew out of a consideration of the old English cases prior to 1797. Of course, it is not necessary for the defendant to show anything whatever, unless and until the plaintiff shall have produced prima facie evidence of both malice and a want of probable cause, and it is then necessary for the defendant only to rebut the showing made by the plaintiff. Statements are to be found in Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 144, Ball v. Rawles, supra, Runo v. Williams, 162 Cal. 444, 122 Pac. 1082, and Fleischhauer v. Fabens, 8 Cal. App. 30, 96 Pac. 17, each of which does, when considered alone and taken at its face value, give support to the conclusion of the main opinion herein. But each of the decisions in Harkrader v. Moore and Ball v. Rawles is in conflict with itself, as is pointed out in the dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice herein. The same thing is true in Runo v. Williams, and for like reasons. When it is said, in effect, in one paragraph of an opinion, that proof of malice is no evidence of want of probable cause, and in another paragraph thereof it is said in effect that proof of malice is proof of want of probable cause, one of these two statements must be wrong. In Fleischhauer v. Fabens the District Court of Appeal merely followed, without questioning it, the rule as stated in Harkrader v. Moore and Ball v. Rawles.

The passage in Newell on Malicious Prosecution (section 11, p. 325) to the effect that "the law requires that one in instituting a criminal prosecution shall act in good faith or under an honest belief of the guilt of the party arrested; and this notwithstanding that the party prosecuting has received legal advice and proceeded in accordance therewith," is directed to the question of good faith as an element in the affirmative defense of "advice of counsel." This is apparent not only from the context but from a consideration of the case of Roy v. Goings, 112 Ill. 656, which is the sole authority cited by the author in support of this passage. The question of good faith as an element of the defense of "advice of counsel" has no relevance to the question of bad faith as an essential element of plaintiff's cause of action. Advice of counsel is an affirmative defense by way of confession and avoidance. By pleading it the defendant, in effect, confesses plaintiff's allegation of want of probable cause and seeks to avoid the same by showing that, notwithstanding the absence in fact of probable cause, he was advised by counsel that it did exist and that he acted in reliance upon such advice. Good faith is therefore an essential element of his claim that he relied upon the advice of counsel. It is not in this respect an element of probable cause, but is rather an element of that which the defendant offers as a substitute therefor.

The definition of "probable cause" given by Newell as the accepted definition thereof, by its very terms, negatives the contention that good faith is an element hereof. It is as follows:

"Reasonable or probable cause is defined to be such a state of facts in the mind of the prosecutor as would lead a person of ordinary caution and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person is guilty." Newell on Malicious Prosecution, § 1, at page 252.

It is true that the author adds thereto the explanation that—

"It does not depend on the actual state of the case in point of fact, but upon the honest and reasonable belief of the party commencing the prosecution."

It is apparent from the context that the "honest and reasonable belief" there referred to is not a belief in the guilt of the plaintiff, but is rather a belief in the actual existence of the facts and circumstances which go to make up probable cause. Good faith and bad faith are purely subjective and relate solely to a state of mind. It seems to me equally clear that probable cause is wholly objective and must consist in those external facts and circumstances which are known to the defendant or which are believed by him to exist.

The cases of Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217; Eastin v. Stockton Bank, 66 Cal. 123, 4 Pac. 1106, 56 Am. Rep. 77; Fulton v. Onesti, 66 Cal. 575, 6 Pac. 491; Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 194, 29 Pac. 31; Sandell v. Sherman, 107 Cal. 391, 40 Pac. 493; Booraem v. Potter Hotel Co., 154 Cal. 99, 97 Pac. 65; Montz v. Nevins, 40 Cal. App. 202, 180 Pac. 537; Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 204 Pac. 578; Stein v. Lacassie, 189 Cal. 118, 207 Pac. 886; and Murphy v. Davids, 181 Cal. 706, 186 Pac. 143—do not, as I read them, lend any support to the conclusion of the main opinion upon the point here under consideration. The cases of Potter v. Seale, Dawson v. Schloss, and Stein v. Lacassie seem to me to be in such irreconcilable conflict with the main opinion herein that they must be considered as overruled thereby. In Potter v. Seale, it was said that—

"Public policy and public security alike require that prosecutors should be protected by the law from civil liabilities; except in those cases where the two elements of malice in the prosecutor, and want of probable cause for the prosecution, both concur."

"Though malice be proved, yet if there was probable cause, the action must fail. Malice may be inferred from want of probable cause, but want of probable cause cannot be inferred from malice, but must be affirmatively shown by the plaintiff. As to the question of malice, it is one solely for the jury, and to sustain this averment the charge must be shown to have been wilfully false." (The italics are the court's.)

In Dawson v. Schloss it was held that the following instruction, "If you find in this case that malice existed upon his (defendant's) part, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover," was clearly erroneous; but that inasmuch as it appeared upon the record to have been given at defendant's request, defendant could not complain thereof upon appeal. In Stein v. Lacassie the following instruction had been given by the trial court:

"You are instructed that if you find from the evidence in this case that the criminal proceedings against plaintiff were instituted by defendant over a fixed and malicious determination of her own, and not from the advice of counsel, or that she did not communicate a full, fair and true statement of all the facts known to her to the sheriff and the district attorney, and that the district attorney did not advise her there was probable cause for the arrest, then such would constitute lack of probable cause."

And this court said:

"It would seem to require no argument to show that this instruction is erroneous, and is prejudicially so, since it might well be that the defendant herself might have had abundant cause for insisting upon and procuring the plaintiff's arrest upon the charge of having poisoned her horse, even though, in so doing, she was acting upon a fixed and malicious determination of her own and without the advice of counsel; and even though she had not communicated all of the facts known to her to the sheriff and district attorney, or made a full, fair and true statement of the facts to these officials; and even though the district attorney had not advised her that there was probable cause for the plaintiff's arrest."

If, as is held in the main opinion herein, "good faith is undoubtedly an element of probable cause in malicious prosecution cases," it seems to me to follow inevitably that the instruction last quoted was correct and that the decision in Stein v. Lacassie is now overruled.

Turning now to the evidence in the instant case, I concede that there is some evidence tending to prove that defendant acted in bad faith in filing the insanity complaint. In other words, there is some evidence of malice. I concede also that there is substantial conflict in the evidence directed to the defense of advice of counsel, and that defense is therefore properly eliminated from further consideration upon this appeal. But I find no evidence whatever tending to prove a want of probable cause. There is an abundance of evidence to prove the existence of probable cause, but that also may be eliminated from our consideration because the burden did not rest upon the defendant to prove the existence of probable cause. It rested upon the plaintiff to prove the absence of probable cause, and even though there were no evidence whatever tending to prove the existence of probable cause, it would still be the duty of the trial court to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant unless the plaintiff produced some substantial evidence tending to prove a want of probable cause. The circumstance that defendant's testimony was contradicted by the plaintiff and, to that extent, impeached, has no tendency whatever to prove a want of probable cause. The fact that a witness lied in 1923 is no evidence that he stole a pig in 1920. By the same token, proof that the defendant testified falsely in 1923 would be no evidence that he acted without probable cause in 1920. (It is not intended to suggest hereby that the defendant did in fact testify falsely, but merely that the jury might have so inferred from the conflict in the evidence.)

It is not necessary to here review the evidence upon the question of probable cause. The main opinion herein concedes, in effect, that there is no evidence of a want of probable cause except that which tends to prove only that the defendant acted in bad faith; in other words, that which tends solely to prove malice. But proof of malice is no evidence of a want of probable cause unless we are prepared to overrule practically all of the decided cases upon that subject, including our own decisions above referred to, as well as the following: Grant v. Moore, 29 Cal. 644, 698; Anderson v. Coleman, 53 Cal. 188; Jones v. Jones, 71 Cal. 89, 91, 11 Pac. 817; Smith v. Liverpool Ins. Co., 107 Cal. 432, 436, 40 Pac. 540; McKenna v. Heinlen, 128 Cal. 97, 102, 60 Pac. 668; Lee v. Levison, 173 Cal. 166, 159 Pac. 438; Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 204 Pac. 578; Redgate v. Southern Pacific Co., 24 Cal. App. 573, 584, 141 Pac. 1191; Jirku v. Brod, 42 Cal. App. 796, 798, 184 Pac. 413.

I am convinced that it was the duty of the trial court to grant the motion for the directed verdict and that the judgment thereon should be affirmed.

On Application for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying a petition for rehearing we wish it to be understood that we are in agreement upon the rule of law invoked in a decision of this case, stated in the main opinion as follows:

"* * * If there had been no evidence whatever from which the jury might have inferred that the defendant did not in fact believe that the plaintiff was insane, the question of his belief should have been determined by the court on the basis of what, under the circumstances, was sufficient to cause a reasonable man to entertain a suspicion of the insanity of the plaintiff."

And otherwise, but to the same effect, stated in the dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice as follows:

"The rule established by the authorities upon the subject of belief as an element of probable cause would seem to be this: While the question of probable cause is always a question of law for the court and is to be determined by the standard of the ordinary man, yet if there is affirmative evidence of the actual belief of the defendant sufficient to justify a conclusion that he did not in fact suspect the plaintiff of being guilty of the crime with which she was charged, then the question of probable cause to that extent involves a question of fact to be submitted to the jury."

[8] It may not be amiss to say further that we do not wish to be understood as holding that good faith and an actual and honest belief in the guilt of the party charged with crime is always an integral and an independent element of probable cause. The point upon which we disagree is as to whether there was sufficient affirmative proof, direct or circumstantial, to be submitted to the jury upon the question of whether or not the defendant actually suspected the plaintiff of being insane. Upon that question the members of the court adhere to the respective views stated in the original and dissenting opinions heretofore filed.

WILBUR, C. J., and LAWLOR, LENNON, KERRIGAN, and SEAWELL, JJ., concur.

MYERS, J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing and adhere to the conclusions expressed in my dissenting opinion, supra. Respondent in his petition for rehearing has cited two recent decisions not theretofore cited herein, each of which gives full support to those conclusions. The case of Director General of Railroads v. Kastenbaum (decided November 12, 1923, by the Supreme Court of the United States), 44 Sup. Ct. 52, 68 L. Ed. —, was an action for false imprisonment. In the opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Taft that court said:

"The want of probable cause, certainly in the absence of proof of guilt or conviction of the plaintiff, is measured by the state of the defendant's knowledge, not by his intent. It means the absence of probable cause known to the defendant when he instituted the suit. But the standard applied to defendant's consciousness is external to it. The question is not whether he thought the facts to constitute probable cause, but whether the court thinks they did." (Italics added.)

The case of Barton v. Woodward, 32 Idaho, 375, 182 Pac. 916, 5 A. L. R. 1093, is so strikingly similar to the case at bar both in its facts and in the questions of law presented upon the appeal as to be substantially identical therewith. It was an action for malicious prosecution in the institution of lunacy proceedings against the plaintiff by the defendants. In that case, as in this, there was evidence of malice, evidence that the prosecution was instituted in bad faith, and evidence that the defendants did not actually believe that the charge was true. Thus the question there presented was identical with the one upon which this case must turn, namely, whether or not evidence that the defendant acted in bad faith, or from an improper motive, or without an actual belief in the truth of the charge, can be regarded as evidence tending to prove a want of probable cause. Upon this question that court said:

"It is true there is evidence which would justify a finding of malice, but it is too well established to admit of argument that want of probable cause cannot be inferred from malice. It has been said in some cases that the fact a criminal case is prosecuted from some private or personal motive, other than a public motive, is of itself evidence of want of probable cause. This is not a logical statement. Probable cause depends upon what the prosecuting wit- ness knew, or ought, as a reasonably prudent man, to have known, when he instituted the proceeding. If he had no sufficient information to justify a reasonably prudent man in believing the defendant was guilty, then the inference may be drawn he was acting from improper motive. However, improper motive is proof of malice, but not, of itself, proof of want of probable cause. * * * We conclude the evidence is insufficient to establish want of probable cause." (Italics added.)

Ex parte CAMPBELL et al. (Cr. 736.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1923.)

1. Constitutional law ☞90—Insurrection and sedition ☞2 — City ordinance prohibiting publication of I. W. W. literature invalid.

Ordinance No. 813, § 4, city of Eureka, prohibiting printing or distribution of membership cards or literature of I. W. W., held to violate Const. art. 1, § 9, guaranteeing freedom of speech.

2. Insurrection and sedition ☞2—City ordinance prohibiting publication of I. W. W. literature invidious discrimination.

Ordinance No. 813, § 4, city of Eureka, prohibiting printing or distribution of membership cards or literature of I. W. W., held a discrimination as against a particular organization or society.

3. Insurrection and sedition ☞2—City ordinance prohibiting publication of I. W. W. literature held invalid as unreasonable exercise of legislative power.

Ordinance No. 813, § 4, city of Eureka, prohibiting printing or distribution of membership cards or literature of I. W. W., held invalid as an unreasonable exercise of legislative power.

4. Criminal law ☞304(2)—No judicial knowledge of specific nature of principles of I. W. W.

Judicial knowledge cannot be taken of what the specific nature of the principles or doctrines or propaganda of the I. W. W. organization is.

5. Criminal law ☞315—No presumption that I. W. W. doctrines, if pernicious, will always remain so.

If it may be assumed that principles of the I. W. W. have been pernicious, there is no presumption that they will always remain so, or that the organization has not so changed as to make the principles accord with rights guaranteed by Constitutions to all citizens.

Original application by Jack Campbell and others for a writ of habeas corpus, against the Sheriff of Humboldt County. Writ granted.

T. F. Allen, of Bakersfield, and R. W. Henderson, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

James W. Henderson, City Atty., and Hans C. Nelson, both of Eureka, for respondent.

HART, J. Petitioners, claiming that they are illegally restrained of their liberty by the sheriff of Humboldt county, ask this court for an order discharging them from such restraint through the writ of habeas corpus.

The return of the sheriff discloses that his authority for holding and restraining the petitioners is derived from an order, made by the police judge in and for the city of Eureka, Humboldt county, committing the petitioners to his custody pending their trial for the alleged violation of the provisions of section 4 of Ordinance No. 813 of said city, or until a bail bond in the sum of $500 each was furnished and duly filed by them.

The question presented here is whether section 4 of the ordinance, under which the petitioners are being held, represents the exercise of valid legislative power. So much of said section as is pertinent to the present consideration reads as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any person within the city of Eureka to print, publish, edit, issue, distribute, circulate, sell or offer for sale or give away, or to have in his or her possession, any membership card in, or any book, paper, pamphlet, document, handbill, poster, or any written or printed matter in any form whatever, containing or carrying any written or printed matter advocating, advising, teaching, containing or claiming to contain, set forth, explain or narrate the doctrines, precepts, principles, teachings, dogma, songs or sentiments, work, acts or activities of the organization, body or group of individuals known as the Industrial Workers of the World, or the I. W. W., or any branch, subdivision, section or local organization affiliated with or a part of or in any way connected with said Industrial Workers, or the I. W. W., by whatever name the same may be known or called."

Section 8 of the ordinance makes the violation of any of its provisions a misdemeanor and the offender subject to a fine of $500, or to imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

The complaint filed against the petitioners in the police court and upon which they are being held in the custody of the sheriff is substantially in the language of section 4 of said ordinance.

Manifestly, if section 4 of the ordinance is invalid, or defines no public offense, the complaint, which is based thereon, is likewise invalid, or, in other words, fails to state a public offense.

The contention of the petitioners is that said section involves such special legislation as is inhibited by our Constitution, is wanting in uniformity of operation, and is therefore discriminatory, in that it is specifically directed against a single organization, and, furthermore, that it is opposed to section 9 of article 1 of the state Constitution, in that, in its enforcement, its effect would be to abridge the freedom of speech. As to the last-stated proposition, the respondent declares that the ordinance, or the particular section thereof involved herein, does not in any manner or form attempt to impinge upon or destroy or impair the right of free speech, as guaranteed by our Constitution.

[1-3] There can be no doubt that the section in question is violative of section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution, guaranteeing to every citizen the right freely to speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects.

Furthermore, it clearly involves an invidious discrimination as against a particular organization or society of people. But, however this all may be, the section is so far afield of any reasonable conception of the exercise of the legislative power of this country, as it is defined, qualified, and limited by our Constitutions, that the specific ground upon which or reason for which its invalidity is to be declared is of no material consequence. It requires but passing reflection to note that the language of the section is so far-reaching in its scope that its effect would be to penalize the action of a citizen in circulating, distributing, or by other means publishing, or having in his possession, any of the literature or publications issued by and under the authority of a particular organization, setting forth and advocating the principles thereof, howsoever innocent or legitimate such literature or principles and teachings may be. In short, the legislative body of the city of Eureka, in incorporating section 4 in the ordinance in question, seems to have proceeded upon the presumption or presupposition that the organization known as the "Industrial Workers of the World" is a combination of persons organized or associated together for the purpose of teaching and advocating the commission of unlawful acts or lawful acts by unlawful methods. The legislative department clearly transcends its constitutional powers, when in the enactment of penal statutes, as in this case, it proceeds upon the theory that an essential element of a crime, whether falling within the category of crimes mala in se or that of crimes mala prohibita, may be assumed to exist without proof of its existence, save, perhaps, in a few exceptional cases coming within or peculiarly subject to the control of the power of police. If section 4 of the ordinance before us could upon any possible theory be upheld as a valid enactment, the question whether the Industrial Workers of the World constitute a society of persons organized for unlawful or criminal purposes, or the publications or printed documents mentioned in said section set forth and advocated principles which, when executed, would result in the commission of some unlawful act or crime, would not be an issue in the case in the trial of petitioners. In other words, to justify a conviction under the complaint, framed as it is according to the provisions of said section, all that the people would be required to prove would be that the documents or publications set forth the principles of the I. W. W. organization, that the publications were issued by or under the authority of that organization as the teachings and precepts thereof, and that the petitioners had them in their possession or were engaged in selling or otherwise distributing the same. As above suggested, it would not be material whether the principles so advocated and taught were in perfect accord with the right of any citizen or set of citizens to stand for, advocate, and teach any lawful doctrines or rules or platform of principles relating to any subject with which either the temporal or spiritual welfare of mankind is concerned. The trial court could, under said section, instruct the jury called to try those proceeded against under said section to the following effect:

"If you find from the evidence, beyond all reasonable doubt, that the defendants did, at the time mentioned in the complaint, 'sell, deliver, and possess certain papers and literature published and printed for and by the Industrial Workers of the World, * * * which said papers did then and there contain and carry written and printed matter, setting forth, explaining, and narrating the doctrines, teachings, acts, and activities of the Industrial Workers of the World,' it will be your sworn duty to find the defendants guilty."

[4, 5] Such a situation in the trial of a person upon a criminal charge in an American court would be abhorrent to every conception of fair play and justice. We do not judicially know, nor is it within the province of any judicial tribunal, whether of trial or appellate jurisdiction, so to know, what the specific nature of the principles or doctrines or propaganda of the I. W. W. organization is; but if it may be assumed that those principles or doctrines or propaganda in and of themselves have at some time been pernicious in their effect or opposed to the well-being of society or of mankind, still there is no presumption that they will always remain so, or that the said organization has not so changed, modified, or amended them as to make them accord with a proper understanding of the rights guaranteed by our Constitutions to every citizen of this country. This court, however, in the past has had occasion to review and learn something of the alleged principles of the I. W. W. organization in cases involving the prosecution and conviction of certain members of said organization under the State Syndicalism Act, St. 1919, p. 281 (People v. Roe, 58 Cal. App. 690, 209 Pac. 381; People v. Wismer, 58 Cal. App. 679, 209 Pac. 259; People v. La Rue et al. [Cal. App.] 216 Pac. 627); and, while it is true that those principles disclosed that said organization and the members thereof entertained and stood for a paradoxical and singularly drastic notion of what a system for the government of the peoples of the earth should be—a notion which there is every reason to believe is far beyond any hope of practical attainment—we cannot say that the mere teaching or advocacy of that system is beyond the pale of the constitutional right of any citizen guaranteed to all citizens or organization of citizens to advocate any change in our system of government or any principles antagonistic to our present system of government by peaceable methods. Thus it is to be observed that, even if the system proposed to be substituted for our present system of government by the said organization is the same now as it was at the time of the trial and hearing of the cases above referred to, there is nothing in the scheme itself which is inherently wrong or indicative of any criminal purpose in the organization or its members in advocating and teaching the same. But in the Roe and other like cases there was evidence which showed, or sufficiently tended to show to support the conviction, that the members of said organization habitually taught and advocated the carrying out of its principles by criminal means of the most atrocious character, and, as said in that case, this was the fundamental vice of the system advocated by said organization, and which justly subjected its members to prosecution and punishment. But there is no necessity for further abstract discussion of the question which is to be determined in this case. The Supreme Court and this court have held, as obviously it could not otherwise justly be held, that the alleged or claimed criminal or illegal purpose of the I. W. W. organization is an essential element of the crime either of selling or distributing or circulating its literature, containing a statement of the principles of the organization, or of being a member thereof, and that that question is one to be determined by the jury. See People v. Taylor, 187 Cal. 378, 385, 203 Pac. 85; People v. Wismer, 58 Cal. App. 679, 209 Pac. 259; People v. Steelik, 187 Cal. 361, 203 Pac. 78; People v. Thornton (Cal. App.) 219 Pac. 1020. The theory of those cases was, as the theory must always be, to support a criminal prosecution under the Syndicalism Act, or any valid local ordinance whose general object is the same as that of said act, that the organization in its nature "is a criminal conspiracy to change industrial control and government by unlawful and criminal methods." People v. Steelik, supra.

The case here is no different in principle from that of the case of In re Hartman, 182 Cal. 447, 188 Pac. 548, wherein the petitioners were convicted of, and sentenced to, serve a term of 120 days' imprisonment for the violation of the provisions of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, which provided that any person who displayed or caused or permitted to be displayed, publicly or privately, or had in his possession, within the limits of said city, "any flag, insignia, emblem or device of any nature whatsoever representative of any nation, sovereignty, society, association or organized or unorganized effort of any nature whatsoever which in its purposes, practices, official declarations, or by its constitution, by-laws or regulations, espouses for the government of the people of the United States of America * * * principles or theories of government antagonistic to the Constitutions and laws of the United States of America or to the form of the government thereof as now constituted, * * *" shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment or by both. The specific charge against the petitioners in that case was that they unlawfully displayed and had in their possession a flag or an emblem and device representative of "an organized effort antagonistic to the Constitution of the United States of America and the form of government thereof." Holding that there was nothing inherently wrong in advocating a principle or theory which is antagonistic to our present Constitution and form of government, the Supreme Court said:

"Nothing would seem to be more certain than that the inhabitants of the United States have both individually and collectively the right to advocate peaceable changes in our Constitution, laws, or form of government, although such changes may be based upon theories or principles of government antagonistic to those which now serve as their basis. And it seems equally certain that an organization peaceably advocating such changes may adopt a flag or emblem signifying its purpose, and that the display or possession of such flag or emblem cannot be made an unlawful act."

It follows from the foregoing considerations that section 4 of Ordinance No. 813 of the city of Eureka is unconstitutional and void, and that the petitioners are entitled to be discharged from their present restraint.

Accordingly, the writ is granted, and the petitioners are discharged.

HANSEN v. MARKET STREET RY. CO.
et al. (Civ. 4683.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 17, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 16, 1924.)

1. Municipal corporations ⚡821(19)—Whether water company guilty of negligence proximately contributing to injury of pedestrian struck by street car held for jury.

Where defendant water company, in digging a trench, piled dirt therefrom, in violation of ordinance, less than a foot from the rail of a street car track, and blocked street so that plaintiff had either to cross it or skirt the dirt pile along the track, and while skirting the dirt pile he was run down and struck by the side of a street car, whether negligence in so piling the dirt was concurring cause of injury was for jury.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡821(25)—Pedestrian injured when skirting dirt pile wrongfully on street held not negligent as matter of law.

Where plaintiff, in passing along a street in the morning, noticed a pile of dirt therein taken from a trench by defendant water company, and on return at night found the street barricaded and had either to cross the street or skirt the edge of the dirt, he could assume there was safe passageway between the dirt and the car track for those leaving the sidewalk; and fact of his having noticed dirt in the morning would not make his attempt to skirt the dirt pile at night, when he was injured by street car striking him, negligent as matter of law.

3. Street railroads ⚡117(17) — Pedestrian held not negligent as matter of law in failing to look for approaching street car.

Where a pedestrian could assume that dirt was lawfully piled in the street, leaving space along the car track to walk, he was not negligent as matter of law when he failed to look for approaching street car when stepping from sidewalk to skirt the pile, in view of San Francisco Ordinance No. 581 (N. S.) § 19, requiring motorman to give timely warning of street car's approach to persons about to cross the track; what was "timely" warning being for jury.

4. Street railroads ⚡117(34)—Whether failure to sound warning of street car's approach was a proximate cause of pedestrian's injury held for jury.

Where a water company, in violation of ordinance, piled dirt on the street near the outer rail of street car tracks, and a pedestrian, in attempting to skirt the pile, was run down by a street car and struck by its side, in view of evidence that no warning of any kind of the car's approach was sounded, and that pedestrian became aware of proximity of the car when it was almost on top of him, a jury might have found that such failure to sound timely warning of street car's approach to pedestrians about to cross the street, as required by San Francisco Ordinance No. 581

(N. S.) § 19, jointly with negligence of water company in blocking the track, proximately caused the injury.

5. Negligence ⚡15—One or both tort-feasors liable.

Where direct personal injury is occasioned by the separate but concurring negligence of two parties at one and the same time, an action lies against one or all of them.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Christ Hansen against the Market Street Railway Company and another. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. S. Young and R. G. Hudson, both of San Francisco, for respondent Spring Valley Water Co.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff and alleged to have been proximately caused by the negligence of defendants. The facts appearing from the evidence are in part as follows:

Defendant Market Street Railway Company operated a single-track cable railway along the center of Sacramento street from the Embarcadero to Drumm street, and beyond, on which its cars traveled westerly. Prior to the accident defendant Spring Valley Water Company had excavated a trench about 5 feet wide and 6 to 8 feet deep on the north side of Sacramento street, which commenced about 2 feet east of Drumm street and extended easterly some 30 feet. The dirt from the trench was piled upon the south side thereof, and at the time of the accident the pile came to a point less than a foot from the northerly rail of the car tracks and to the northerly edge of the running board of the cable cars. The pile was 30 feet long and about 5 or 6 feet high. At the time of the accident the water company had not placed any lights on the top of the pile, or at any place where light could be thrown on its southerly side. This work of excavation was being done by the water company without a permit from the board of public works, in violation of an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco (Ordinance No. 1461, N. S.). Furthermore, the position of the dirt pile, less than a foot away from the car track, was also violative of said ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, which provided that—

"In no case shall they [materials and appliances] be placed within four feet six inches of the outer rail of any street railroad track."

On the afternoon of October 22, 1921, plaintiff, a man then about 73 years of age, left his residence at the Scandinavian Sailors' Home on the east side of Drumm street, between Clay and Sacramento, to go to Alameda, Cal. He proceeded along the sidewalk (which was then open) on the north side of Sacramento street on his way to the Ferry building. He attempted to return to his residence about 9 o'clock upon the same evening. Upon leaving the Ferry building he walked along the northerly sidewalk on Sacramento street until he reached a point about 40 feet easterly from Drumm street, where he found that a barricade had been thrown across the sidewalk. He did not then know and had no means of knowing the position of the dirt with relation to the car track. Because of the barricade across the sidewalk plaintiff left the sidewalk and skirted the dirt pile looking for a passage to go through until he came to the easterly end of said pile, when he again turned westerly toward Drumm street, walking along the south side of the dirt pile, with his left foot on the northerly rail of the car track and his right foot in the dirt. The south side of the street was obstructed by a line of dirt wagons which came to about 5 feet of the southerly car rail. Plaintiff had thus walked halfway along the pile—some 15 feet—when he heard the noise of a cable car approaching him from behind. No warning bell had been sounded by the motorman, and plaintiff was not made aware of the proximity of the car until, as he testified, it was almost "on top" of him, or within 3 or 4 or 5 feet of him, when the noise incidental to the operation of the car arrested his attention. Plaintiff explained upon the witness stand that, as the street car with its running board was about 6 feet wide, and traveling faster than he could move, he could not cross the track to the south side thereof—a place of safety—and so he attempted to get off the track upon the north side by climbing upon the piled-up dirt which blocked his escape. He attempted to climb upon this pile of dirt because the water company had not left sufficient space between the track and the dirt upon which he could stand. He succeeded in getting partly up the dirt pile, which was several feet high and sloped away from the track. The front of the car passed plaintiff, but before the car had cleared him the dirt slid and he was brought into such a position that he was struck by the side of the moving street car, sustaining severe injuries.

Plaintiff testified that before leaving the sidewalk he did not look toward the Ferry building to see if a cable car was approaching on Sacramento street, because he did not intend to cross the street, but merely intended to find a passage through the dirt pile. Because of the position of the dirt pile, however, plaintiff found no place along which he could proceed westward until he had reached the northerly rail of the street car track.

Upon substantially these facts the trial court granted the motions of defendants for nonsuits. Appellant contends that the order granting the motions for nonsuits was improperly made, as the facts hereinbefore set forth warrant a finding by a jury that the defendant water company was negligent in creating a nuisance in dangerous proximity to the car track, in violation of an ordinance, and that the defendant railway company was negligent in failing to maintain a lookout and to give plaintiff timely warning and notice of the approach of the car, as required by ordinance, and in failing to stop the car after discovering plaintiff's position of danger so as to afford him an opportunity of placing himself in a position of safety, and that the plaintiff's injuries were proximately caused by such concurring negligence upon the part of both defendants.

[1, 2] It seems to us that a jury might have drawn a reasonable conclusion that the negligence of the defendant Water Company in maintaining a dirt pile so close to the railroad track in violation of law was a concurring cause of the injury to plaintiff. Said defendant had blocked the sidewalk, thus requiring pedestrians either to cross the street or to skirt the dirt pile and proceed upon their way along its southern edge. Plaintiff chose to do the latter, and no contention is made that his action in selecting this route was negligent as a matter of law. Plaintiff had no knowledge of the extent or position of the dirt pile or of its proximity to the street car track, and the mere fact that he had noticed the dirt piled upon the street when he left his home to go to Alameda in the morning does not charge him with such knowledge as would make his attempt to skirt the dirt pile negligent as a matter of law. Meindersee v. Meyers, 188 Cal. 498, 502, et seq., 205 Pac. 1078. Plaintiff had the right to assume that the defendant water company would not leave the street in a dangerous condition, but would allow a safe passageway for those having occasion to use the sidewalk who were forced to walk upon the street because of the blockade erected by said water company. Meindersee v. Meyers, supra. Had said defendant, in obedience to the mandate of the ordinance, left a clear space of $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet between its dirt pile and the north car rail, plaintiff might have proceeded upon his way in safety. Had such a distance been left free to plaintiff, when he heard the car close to him, he could have stepped to the north into a place of safety; but under the existing conditions the only egress from the track which was open to him in the short time available was blocked unlawfully by said defendant. Plaintiff had no choice but to take his chance and climb upon the dirt pile, with the result already narrated. Since a jury might have found the defendant water company to have been guilty of negligence proximately contributing to plaintiff's injury, the order granting said defendant's motion for a nonsuit was improperly made.

[3] We now come to a consideration of the evidence with reference to the liability of the defendant railway company. We shall eliminate at the outset the contention of respondents that plaintiff was guilty of negligence as a matter of law in failing to look toward the Ferry building for an approaching car before stepping upon the track. It is important in this connection to recall that plaintiff testified that he did not look toward the Ferry building to discover an approaching car, if any, because he did not intend to cross the street. He expressed his belief that the water company should have left a place for one to walk between the dirt obstruction and the track. It is fair to assume from his testimony that he expected to find the pile of dirt at a safe distance from the track, as required by law; and, had he found this space clear and proceeded along it, there would have been no necessity for him to look behind for an approaching car. But, quite apart from these considerations we do not think that plaintiff's failure to look for this car convicts him of contributory negligence as a matter of law. In the case of Bidwell v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 169 Cal. 780, 148 Pac. 197, it was said:

"The failure of a person to look or listen for an approaching car before crossing a street car track in a city is not always and under all circumstances an act of negligence. [Citing cases.] According to the authorities above cited, the failure of plaintiff to look and listen, if it is assumed that he did fail, was therefore not, as matter of law, negligence on his part, but at most a question to be determined by the jury."

In the case of Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 182 Pac. 281, it was said:

"There is no positive duty to stop, look, and listen when a pedestrian is about to cross a city street."

To the same effect, see, also, Driscoll v. Market Street Cable Railway Co., 97 Cal. 553, 32 Pac. 591, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203; Runnels v. United Railroads, 175 Cal. 528, 166 Pac. 18; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 Pac. 125; Park v. Orbison, 43 Cal. App. 74, 184 Pac. 428; Blackwell v. Renwick, 21 Cal. App. 131, 131 Pac. 94.

[4] Our only consideration, then, is whether or not, from any of the facts and circumstances appearing in the record, a jury might have found, properly, that the railway company was guilty of negligence. The negligence with which the appellant seeks to charge this defendant is its failure to sound a warning at a time which would have allowed the plaintiff to cross the track to a place of safety on the north side thereof. An ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco was pleaded, providing:

"The motorman, gripman or other person in charge of a car in motion must always, by ringing the bell or striking the gong on such car, give timely warning of the approach of such car to pedestrians, drivers of vehicles and others who may happen to be on or about to cross the track in front of such car." Section 19 of Ordinance 581 (N. S.), approved Oct. 23, 1908.

What is "timely" warning would be a question of fact under all the circumstances of the case, and would present a question for a jury. In view of the fact that a jury might have believed from testimony appearing in the record that no warning of any kind was sounded, and that plaintiff only became aware of the proximity of the street car when it was "almost on top of him," or within 3 or 4 feet from him, when he had no time to cross to a place of safety, we think the jury might have concluded, reasonably, that the failure of the defendant railway company to sound a timely warning as required by ordinance, jointly with the negligence of the water company in blocking the space on the north side of the track, proximately caused the injury to the plaintiff.

In the case of Fujise v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 12 Cal. App. 207, 216, 107 Pac. 317, 321, it was said:

"Seeing a man driving along the track, the motorman may assume that he will turn aside and out of the way of the car, but he cannot rest on the assumption so long as to allow his car to reach a point where it will be impossible for him to control his car or give warning in time to prevent injury to the man or vehicle."

That one driving a vehicle over or in proximity to a street railroad track has a right to expect and rely upon some warning to be given him by the motorman of a car approaching him from behind and that this right should be taken into consideration by a jury as an element in determining the question of contributory negligence on the part of a plaintiff is established in this state. O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 49, 141 Pac. 809.

[5] We think the question of whether or not the negligence of the defendants proximately caused the injury to the plaintiff was one for a jury, which might have found, properly, upon the testimony, that the defendants were guilty of concurring negligence proximately causing the accident and injury to plaintiff.

"Where direct personal injury is occasioned by the separate but concurrent negligence of two parties at one and the same time, an action will lie against one and all of them." Doeg v.

George G. Graham, of Fresno, for appellant.

N. Lindsay South, of Fresno, for defendants.

E. C. Laughlin, of Selma, and M. F. McCormick, of Fresno, for respondent.

HART, J. This is a motion to dismiss the appeal herein. The action was one for the quieting of the title to certain real property situated in Fresno county as against the defendants and also for the recovery of certain personal property. The complaint also asks for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of said real and personal property. The court appointed a receiver, and the latter, by virtue of the authority vested in him by the court, took possession of the real property and also certain personal property. The action grows out of a certain contract whereby the plaintiffs and the defendants agreed to exchange and sell to each other certain real and personal property. The agreement, among other things, provided that, immediately upon its execution, the defendants were to take possession of the premises exchanged or sold to them by the plaintiffs, and the complaint alleges that the defendants did take such possession. The agreement further provided that, in case of the violation by the defendants of certain of the covenants or conditions thereof, the plaintiffs should be at liberty to declare the agreement forfeited and that all payments theretofore made should be treated as liquidated damages and that the plaintiffs might enter said premises, "remove all persons therefrom, and be released in law as well as in equity to convey said premises." The appellant, by leave of the court, was permitted to intervene. The complaint in intervention alleges that the defendants, on the 1st day of June, 1921, and after the execution of the agreement above mentioned, borrowed from the intervener the sum of $2,500, and gave their promissory note therefor, payable on or before two years after date, with interest from March 1, 1921, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum; that, to secure the payment of said note, the defendants, on said 1st day of June, 1921, executed and delivered to the intervener a mortgage on 55 per cent. of the crop of alfalfa, Thompson and Muscat grapes and raisins for the year 1921, and all other crops for the year 1922 grown and produced upon said premises. It is alleged in said complaint in intervention that said defendants "have failed, neglected and refused to pay the amount due on said note, or any part thereof, and that the same is now justly due and owing in full over and above all offsets of every nature." The prayer of said complaint is that the intervener have judgment against the defendants and the plaintiffs for the possession of the crops raised on said premises for the year 1922, and that the mortgage of the intervener be foreclosed, and that said crops be sold as provided by law and the money applied to the payment of said note.

The court's findings and judgment were in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants and the intervener. The notice of appeal, which was filed on the 28th day of June, 1923, by the intervener, states that the latter "appeals from the judgment of the trial court given in favor of the plaintiffs on the 27th day of June, 1923," and also appeals "from the order of the court made June 26, 1923," ordering and directing the moneys and property mentioned in intervenor's complaint be paid and turned over by the receiver to the plaintiffs.

The defendants have not appealed, so far as this record shows.

The motion to dismiss is based upon the ground that the purported appeal was not taken within the time prescribed by law, and is supported by an affidavit made and filed by the attorney for the plaintiffs. From said affidavit it appears that the judgment in the action is dated November 29, 1922, and was filed and entered in the office of the county clerk on December 1, 1922; that no motion for a new trial in said cause was ever made, "and no other action or proceeding by defendants, or either of them, or of said intervenor, was taken with respect to said judgment, except that defendants did, on January 20, 1923, give notice of appeal from said judgment and file the same in said court, and the said intervenor did thereafter give his notice of appeal as hereinbefore stated; * * * that said notice of appeal is the one and only notice of appeal filed in this proceeding by said intervenor." The affidavit further alleges that no order of the court by which said cause was heard and tried was entered on the 26th day of June, 1923, "but that there was an order and decree of said court settling the account of the receiver appointed therein and distributing the assets and property coming into the hands of said receiver, which order bears date January 30, 1923, and was filed in the office of the said county clerk on said date; * * * that no appeal from said order has ever been taken except the attempted appeal of the intervenor by giving the notice hereinbefore referred to; that no other or subsequent order has been made respecting the property mentioned in intervenor's complaint; that no judgment or order of any character has been made or entered by the trial court in said action subsequent to the 30th day of January, 1923; that no motion to set aside, modify, or vacate said order has ever been made by any of the parties to this action; that the same has been at all times since the entry thereof in full force and effect."

The appellant practically made no counter showing. Indeed, in an affidavit made by his attorney in purported resistance to the motion to dismiss, he admits that the facts stated in the affidavit of the attorney for the respondents are true; but he complains in said affidavit that no judgment has ever been entered by the clerk "on the findings of the court disbursing the funds in the hands of the receiver, dated January 3, 1923," and, further, that the judgment entered "on the 27th day of June, 1923," does not dispose of or refer to the finding of the court that the intervenor and the defendants are and each of them is barred from setting up or asserting or claiming title, etc., in or to any of the crops produced thereon (on the land in controversy) subsequent to the commencement of this action or any possession thereof adverse to the plaintiffs. He further states in his affidavit that he has "many times requested respondents' attorney to get these judgments entered for this appeal and the county clerk * * * refused in this case, and refuses in all other cases, to enter any judgment unless the same is first signed by the judge trying the case." Upon these statements he asks this court to enter an order "requiring the respondents to have a judgment entered on the findings of the court as hereinabove set out if the same shall be regarded necessary by this court to render complete justice to the appellant herein, and that said judgments be certified to this court by the county clerk of Fresno county," etc.

[1] Obviously, the facts set out in the affidavit of the attorney for the appellant involve matters with which this court cannot concern itself. Nothing could be clearer than that this court in a proceeding of this character cannot order a judgment to be entered in a case. If an erroneous judgment or a judgment which derives no support from the findings has been entered, the remedy for the correction of the same is by appeal properly taken therefrom.

[2] The fact is, however, that a judgment and an order were entered; but the difficulty confronting the appellant is that he allowed the time to pass for taking an appeal from either before attempting to do so. It will be noted that a period of over seven months elapsed from the time of the entry of the judgment until the date of the filing of the purported notice of appeal, and that from the date of the making and filing of the order from which the intervenor attempts to appeal to the date of the filing of his notice of appeal a period of nearly five months elapsed. It follows that the attempt to appeal both from the judgment and the order was abortive. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939 and 953a.

Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

HART, J. Counsel for the intervenor appellant prefaces his petition for a rehearing of the above-entitled cause with the statement that this court, in its judgment dismissing the appeal herein evidently went off on an erroneous understanding of "the matters contained in the record on appeal." We had no misunderstanding of what the record contained. Indeed, counsel for the intervenor himself stated in his affidavit resisting the motion to dismiss that he had "read the affidavit of M. F. McCormick and that the same is true." Said affidavit was filed in support of the motion to dismiss, and if the facts therein stated are true, then there was no alternative left to this court but to grant the motion to dismiss the appeal, for it is therein and thereby plainly shown that, even if the judgment and the order really rendered and entered were or either of them was subject to appeal by the intervener, the latter's appeal was too late. But it appears that the judgment referred to affected the rights of the defendants only and not the rights of the intervener. Moreover, as shown in the original opinion, the judgment was rendered on the 29th day of November, 1922, and entered of record on the 1st day of December, 1922. If the intervener's rights had been affected by said judgment, it is obvious, as pointed out in the former opinion, that his attempted appeal therefrom, on the 28th day of June, 1923, was too late and wholly nugatory. The order mentioned was made on the 29th day of November, 1922. If such order be appealable, and as to it the intervener was an aggrieved party, the attempted appeal was too late. Counsel, however, calls attention to findings and conclusions of law made by the court on June 23, 1923, whereby the court decided, and concluded, as a matter of law, that the intervener (appellant herein) is entitled to take nothing "by reason of his complaint in intervention"; but, so far as the present record shows to the contrary, no judgment was ever rendered upon those findings and conclusions of law.

[3] It is too obvious to require more than a mere statement of the proposition that an appeal does not lie from findings and conclusions of law or from either. But special emphasis is placed on section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the same was amended by the Legislature of 1915. Stats. 1915, p. 205. The particular provision of said section upon which counsel lays stress reads as follows:

"No appeal, however, shall be dismissed on the ground that it was taken after the rendition of such judgment or order and before formal entry."

We are unable to see what application said section has to the situation presented by the record before us. As stated, there was no judgment rendered upon the findings and conclusions of law filed on the 23d day of June, 1923, and which were the only findings and conclusions of law affecting the rights of the intervener or attempting to dispose of the claim made in his complaint in intervention.

It is not the duty of this court to point out the course which should be pursued in such circumstances, but it may not be improper to say that, if the court below has refused and still refuses to render a judgment upon the findings and conclusions of law made June 23, 1923, a ready remedy is available to the intervener for compelling the court to do so. Or, if in point of fact the court has rendered a judgment on said findings and conclusions of law, the same might have been included in the record here upon a suggestion of a diminution of the record. The alleged failure of the clerk to enter the judgment which counsel intimates was rendered on the findings and conclusions of law made June 23, 1923, is, in view of the provision of section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, above quoted herein, a matter of no consequence, in so far as the right of the intervener to take an appeal from said judgment is concerned.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

PEOPLE v. RAMIREZ. (Cr. 1027.)

(District Court of Appeals, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 8, 1923.)

1. Criminal law — 312—Specific intent as element of offense must be proved.

Except in murder cases, whenever a specific intent is an element of an offense, no presumption as to its existence can arise, and it must be shown like any other fact.

2. Homicide — 292(1)—Instruction on intent, where defendant shot at one person and struck another, held proper.

In prosecution for assault with intent to kill, where facts showed defendant's shot, which struck prosecuting witness, was directed toward another, in view of Pen. Code, § 217, providing that every person who assaults another with intent to commit murder is punishable, it was not error to instruct that, when one intends to assault a certain person and by mistake assaults another, the intent is transferred, and the party making the assault will be deemed guilty the same as if he had originally intended to assault the person so assaulted by mistake.

3. Homicide — 292(1)—Instruction that person assaulting intended all natural consequences of his act held not error.

In prosecution for assault with intent to kill, where facts showed that shot which struck prosecuting witness was intended for another, and included in the information was the charge of assault with a deadly weapon, a crime which may be committed without intent to kill, it was not error to instruct that a person may be presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does do and must also be presumed to intend all the natural consequences of his act.

4. Criminal law — 823(2)—Instruction held not expression of opinion on question of fact.

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, where facts showed that shot which struck prosecuting witness was intended for another, an instruction that defendant urges that, although he may have been guilty of technical violation of law, he was innocent of guilty purpose, was not an expression of opinion that defendant was guilty of violation of law, in view of another instruction that court did not intend to intimate any opinion as to facts or inferences from evidence.

5. Criminal law — 823(2)—Instruction held not invasive of jury's province.

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, an instruction that defendant's testimony tended to prove he was at a certain place at the time of crime charged, and that state has introduced evidence connecting defendant with commission of crime, at another place, is not objectionable as an expression of opinion that the evidence was sufficient to connect defendant with the commission of a crime, where the court further informs the jury that in this contradiction of witnesses the jury must determine for themselves where lies the truth.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Guadalupe Ramirez was convicted of assault with intent to commit murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 219 Pac. 73.

W. W. Judd, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Defendant was accused and convicted of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, in that he made an assault with a deadly weapon upon one Lorenzo Ramirez with intent to kill and murder the said Lorenzo Ramirez. Defendant appeals from the judgment. There was no motion for a new trial. The points relied upon in support of the appeal are those hereinafter stated.

[1, 2] It is admitted by counsel for appellant that the evidence is sufficient to prove (although there is evidence to the contrary) that appellant fired the shot which struck Lorenzo; but he contends that the murderous intent, if any, was directed toward one Laura Salcido. From the evidence on which the verdict depends the facts appear to be that appellant fired at Miss Salcido; that the shot missed her and hit the boy Lorenzo; and that there is no evidence that appellant actually intended to hit Lorenzo.

Taking into consideration this state of the evidence, appellant contends that the court erred in giving to the jury the following instruction:

"When one intends to assault a certain person with a deadly weapon and by mistake or inadvertence assaults another person with such deadly weapon in his stead, it is nevertheless a crime; the intent is transferred from such other person so assaulted, and the party committing such assault will be deemed guilty of assault with a deadly weapon the same as if he had originally intended to assault the person so assaulted by such mistake or inadvertence."

He claims that this rule of the transfer of intent is confined to murder trials, where the general malice constitutes the intent, and is not applicable in the trial of a case like the present, where (so he contends) the only charge is that of assault with intent to kill. It is true that, except in the case of murder, it is the law that whenever a specific intent is an element of an offense, no presumption of law can arise, and that the specific intent is a fact to be shown like any other fact in the case. People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 370, 117 Pac. 176. But it does not necessarily follow that in the case at bar the conviction cannot be sustained without proof that the defendant intended to murder the person assaulted. "Every person who assaults another with intent to commit murder, is punishable," etc. Pen. Code, § 217. "Where one intends to assault or kill a certain person, and by mistake or inadvertence assaults or kills another in his stead, it is nevertheless a crime, and the intent is transferred from the party who was intended to the other." People v. Wells, 145 Cal. 138, 140, 78 Pac. 470, 471. This rule has been affirmed in many states, although it is denied in others. 30 Corpus Juris, p. 25; also, State v. Thomas, 127 La. 576, 53 South. 868, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1063.

[3] The court instructed the jury that—

"A person must be presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do and must also be presumed to intend all of the natural, probable, and usual consequences of his own acts."

Appellant contends that this instruction violates the rule that where specific intent is an essential element of the crime, the fact of such intent must be proved. There is no doubt that the rule is correctly stated. Where the specific intent to kill and murder is an element of the offense charged, it is necessary that the existence of that intent be established as a fact by such evidence as will warrant the conclusion to that effect by the jury. It is not to be presumed from the commission of the unlawful act, though the jury may infer it from the acts and conduct of the defendant. This is true wherever the crime falls short of homicide, even if it be the crime of assault with intent to commit murder. 8 Cal. Jur. p. 26, and cases there cited. But it does not follow that the instruction as given in this case is in conflict with the law. Included within the information charging the offense of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder there is the charge of assault with a deadly weapon, a crime which may be committed without intent to kill. 3 Cal. Jur. p. 225. The court gave instructions under which, without proof of "intent to kill and murder," the jury might have found the defendant guilty of assault with a deadly weapon. The instruction complained of, referring to the presumptions arising from a voluntary and willful act is a correct instruction, applicable to this lesser offense. If the defendant desired to limit this instruction by a declaration that it did not apply to an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill and murder, he should have requested the court to so declare.

[4] The next instruction criticized by appellant involves the question of intent in connection with the definition of the words "knowingly" and "willfully." For the same reasons given in discussing the last preceding instruction mentioned herein, we hold that the giving of such instruction was not erroneous. The further contention of appellant that the court in this instruction invaded the province of the jury by expressing an opinion on a question of fact is not well founded. The court in this instruction suggested:

"That the defendant urges that although he may have been guilty of a technical violation of the law, he was innocent of any guilty purpose connected therewith."

This was not an expression of opinion by the court that the defendant was guilty of any violation of the law. In another instruction the judge directly informed the jury that he did not intend to intimate any opinion as to what facts were or were not established or what inferences should be drawn from the evidence adduced.

[5] It is further contended that the court invaded the province of the jury in the second sentence of the following quotation:

"The defendant has introduced testimony tending to prove that he was at 512 California street, at time of commission of crime charged in the information. The state has introduced evidence connecting defendant with commission of crime at 1017 No. Broadway."

But immediately following the quoted statement the court informed the jury "that in this contradiction of witnesses the jury have to determine for themselves where lies the truth." From this and other portions of the same instruction, it is plain that the court was not expressing an opinion that the evidence was actually sufficient to connect the defendant with the commission of any crime.

The judgment is affirmed.

POULTRY PRODUCERS OF CENTRAL CALIFORNIA, Inc., v. MURPHY.
(Civ. 4649.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 20, 1923.)

1. Agriculture ☞6—Option of co-operative association to purchase own stock held not to invalidate produce sale agreement with subscriber.

A clause in subscription agreement purporting to give co-operative poultry association to be incorporated the optional right to purchase its stock from any of its shareholders, if illegal and void, was intended for the benefit of the corporation and not for the subscribers, and did not render invalid an agreement of subscribers to sell all of his eggs to the corporation or stand liable for liquidated damages.

2. Specific performance ☞68 — Promise of subscriber to sign agreement for sale of produce to co-operative poultry producers' association may be specifically enforced.

Promise of subscriber in subscription agreement, purporting to give to a poultry association to be incorporated to promote and foster the business of raising poultry and marketing eggs and poultry by co-operative method, to sign the "produce sale agreement," requiring him to sell all of his eggs and poultry to the corporation, may be specifically enforced, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 580, and Civ. Code, § 3529.

3. Appeal and error ☞1009(2)—Finding of fact supported by evidence conclusive upon appeal.

In suit to specifically perform contract, a finding of the lower court upon a question of fact amply supported by the evidence is conclusive upon appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the Poultry Producers of Central California, Inc., against John M. Murphy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Kierce and W. E. White, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sapiro, Levy, Hatfield & Hayes, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ST. SURE, J. The plaintiff is a nonprofit association of poultry producers, organized for the purpose of promoting and fostering the business of raising poultry and marketing eggs and poultry by co-operative methods. The defendant, together with other producers of poultry products, signed a subscription agreement which provided for the organization of a corporation under which each producer agreed to purchase stock on the basis of one share for each 1,000 hens owned by the subscriber. The agreement further provided that the corporation (plaintiff herein) have an option to repurchase its stock; that the corporation should be organized upon the securing of subscriptions in a certain amount; and it also made provision for the number of directors, the manner of their selection, and various other matters usually contained in such a subscription agreement.

The defendant, owning about 1,000 hens, subscribed for one share of stock at the time he signed the subscription agreement, and paid $2.50, representing 25 per cent. of the subscription price, which, in accordance with the terms of the subscription agreement, was to be credited for the stock if the organization was completed.

To the subscription agreement was attached a "produce sale agreement" providing that the signer should sell and deliver to the plaintiff corporation all eggs produced by him during the years 1917, 1918 and 1919; that the plaintiff should pool the eggs delivered with eggs of like grade and quality, market the eggs so delivered, and, after making proper deductions for marketing costs and overhead expenses, pay over the net resale price to the stockholders who had delivered the eggs; also, that plaintiff might recover liquidated damages for the eggs sold by the signer in violation of the terms of the agreement. The requisite number of subscriptions was secured and the corporation was organized. The defendant refused to sign the "produce sale agreement," and sold 11,400 dozen eggs in violation of its terms.

This suit was commenced for the purpose of compelling the defendant to execute the "produce sale agreement" which he had agreed to execute in the subscription agreement; to secure specific performance of the provision in the "produce sale agreement" that the defendant should sell and deliver all eggs produced by him to the plaintiff; to recover liquidated damages for the eggs sold by the defendant in violation of the terms of the agreement; and to recover the balance of $7.50 due on the defendant's stock subscription. The period of performance of the "produce sale agreement" had elapsed before the case was brought to trial.

The lower court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, directing defendant to sign the "produce sale agreement," and awarding the plaintiff $577.50, which sum represents a balance of $7.50 due on a subscription for stock, and $570, liquidated damages for the failure to deliver eggs to the plaintiff in accordance with the terms of the "produce sale agreement."

[1] Defendant appeals, attacking the judgment upon the grounds: First, that the provision of the subscription agreement giving the plaintiff an option to repurchase its stock is illegal, and that this renders the entire contract void; second, that because of the absence of mutuality in the "produce sale agreement," it cannot be specifically enforced; third, that as the contract is illegal no damages can be recovered for the breach thereof.

Counsel for defendant call our attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in Poultry Producers of Southern California, Inc., v. Barlow, 189 Cal. 278, 208 Pac. 93. For the sake of brevity we will designate and hereafter refer to the cited case as the Barlow Case. In the Barlow Case plaintiff corporation recovered judgment in the lower court against the defendant, one of the contracting stockholders, for liquidated damages for breach of contract by reason of sale of eggs to other purchasers, and for specific performance of the contract to sell and deliver eggs to plaintiff during the unexpired term covered by the contract, and enjoining defendant from making sales of his product to other persons. The District Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court for recovery of damages, but granted a reversal as to injunction and specific performance. The Supreme Court took the matter over for hearing. "We were in accord with the part of the decision affirming the judgment for damages," say the Supreme Court, "but were not satisfied at the time that plaintiff was not also entitled to the equitable relief by injunction and specific performance. On further consideration of this part of the judgment we have reached a conclusion in accord with that of the District Court of Appeal."

The purpose of the plaintiff corporation in the Barlow Case, and the purpose of the plaintiff corporation in the instant case, are identical. Each corporation was organized for the purpose of promoting the raising of poultry and the production of eggs through and by means of co-operative methods that had been suggested by the state market director. Counsel for defendant assert that in both cases the subscription agreement is substantially identical, and that the only difference between the Barlow Case and the instant case is that a "produce sale agreement" was executed by both parties in the former, while in the latter it was not signed by the defendant until he was compelled to do so by the judgment of the lower court.

In the Barlow Case the Supreme Court held that the clause in the subscription agreement, purporting to give to the corporation to be formed thereunder the optional right to purchase its stock from any of its shareholders, was illegal and void, and consequently unenforceable. We quote from the opinion:

"The defendant, as well as each of the other poultrymen who joined with him in the execution of the subscription agreement and the produce sale agreement, promised to do several things, one of which was to give to the corporation about to be incorporated and organized the optional right to purchase its own stock at any time that it elected so to do. The corporation was not obligated to buy its own shares. It could do so or not at its option. It is here seeking to recover damages for the breach of and to specifically enforce one only of several promises made by defendant—a promise that, considered by itself, is legal and valid. The exercise by the corporation of its optional right to purchase any of defendant's stock is no part of the consideration for any of the promises made by defendant. The option was intended for the benefit of the corporation, not defendant. Each of the valid promises made by defendant is supported by a legal consideration. Defendant's illegal and unenforceable promise to give to the corporation, when formed, the optional right to purchase any of his stock at any time after its issuance to him is not so mingled and bound with the other and valid promises that they cannot be separated. All of the consideration moving from the corporation to defendant for his legal promises is legal and valid."

The obvious and conceded similarity between the Barlow Case and the one at bar makes the opinion in the Barlow Case decisive of the first point urged by defendant, and renders further discussion thereof by us unnecessary.

[2] The next contention of defendant is that the trial court erred in requiring him to sign the "produce sale agreement." His counsel argue that this action of the trial court compelled him to specifically perform the provisions of the signed subscription agreement, and that, upon the authority of the Barlow Case, this cannot be done. In the Barlow Case, as we have seen, the lower court gave a decree of specific performance, compelling defendant to deliver his eggs to the plaintiff corporation in accordance with the terms of the "produce sale agreement." The Supreme Court held that, in this particular, the contract called for services on the part of the plaintiff corporation of a highly personal nature, requiring the exercise of skill and discretion and covering repeated transactions to extend over a number of years, and declared that it has not been the practice of courts of equity to attempt to enforce such complicated personal obligations, or to burden themselves with the supervision of frequently recurring duties of contracting parties. The Supreme Court therefore held that such a decree of specific performance was improper. Concerning the promise of the defendant to sell and deliver to plaintiff corporation all the eggs produced from his poultry during a given period of time, the Supreme Court held that such promise was a valid one, and that plaintiff corporation was entitled to damages which the trial court found were suffered by it by reason of defendant's breach. As we have heretofore stated, in the Barlow Case the producers' agreement was signed by all of the parties, while in this case the defendant refused to sign it. We think that the promise of defendant to sign the "produce sale agreement" is valid and enforceable (Wharton v. Stoutenburgh, 35 N. J. Eq. 266), and that there is nothing in the decision of the Barlow Case to the contrary. This case is one in equity, and the trial court was authorized to grant any relief consistent with the case made and embraced within the issues. Section 580, Code Civ. Proc.; Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 57, 68, 33 Pac. 786. And if this were not so, plaintiff might invoke that maxim of jurisprudence which reads:

"That which ought to have been done is to be regarded as done, in favor of him to whom, and against him from whom, performance is due." Section 3529, Civ. Code.

[3] Upon the question of damages the court found that under the provisions of the agreements it was impractical and extremely difficult to fix and determine the actual damages resulting to and suffered by the plaintiff from the failure and refusal of defendant to deliver eggs to plaintiff, and that the liquidated damages provided for in said agreements were valid liquidated damages. This finding, upon a question of fact, amply supported by the evidence, is conclusive upon us. If more need be said, it seems to be settled that the propriety of liquidated damages in a case such as this is recognized in Poultry Producers of Southern California, Inc., v. Barlow, supra, and Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association v. Yeoman, 51 Cal. App. 759, 197 Pac. 959.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. MITCHELL. (Civ. 2595.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 21, 1923.)

I. Husband and wife ⚭ 335.—Instruction in alienation suit on "enticement" of wife held erroneous.

In an action for alienation of affections, brought against a stranger in blood, an instruction that plaintiff must prove that defendant intentionally enticed plaintiff's wife away from him and in doing so acted maliciously, and that merely giving advice was not actionable if given honestly and with a view to the welfare of both parties, by one who had no influence or authority, held erroneous in view of Civ. Code, § 49, forbidding the enticement of a wife from her husband, and sections 47 and 48, relating to privileged communications.

2. New trial — 90—Properly granted when witness swore testimony was false and induced by successful party.

In an alienation of affections suit, it was not error to grant a new trial where the wife, after testifying that defendant had nothing to do with alienating her affections and that she left her husband on account of his cruel and abusive treatment, made an affidavit that such testimony was false and induced by defendant.

3. New trial — 159—Question one of law where uncontradicted evidence shows misconduct prevented fair trial.

On motion for new trial in an alienation of affection suit, where it appeared by uncontradicted evidence that defendant had induced the wife to give false evidence and thereby prevented a fair trial, the question was one of law.

4. Appeal and error — 856(5)—Supreme Court may affirm order for new trial though trial court granted it on other grounds.

That the trial court granted plaintiff a new trial on other grounds did not preclude the court from affirming the order on ground of defendant's misconduct.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by T. D. Smith against Louis Mitchell for damages for alienation of wife's affections. Judgment for defendant, a new trial was awarded, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. F. Gill and G. W. Zartman, both of Tulare, and Farnsworth, McClure & Burke, of Visalia, for appellant.

Russell & Heid, of Tulare, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for the alienation of his wife's affections by defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiff moved for a new trial upon the following grounds, among others:

"(1) Irregularity of the proceedings of the court, jury and adverse party, to wit, the defendant, by which the plaintiff was prevented from having a fair trial. * * * (7) Error in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the party making the application."

The court granted the motion "upon the ground of errors in the instructions given to the jury by the court." This appeal is from the order granting a new trial.

The evidence is sufficient to sustain a judgment for either party. In view of the necessity of a new trial, the evidence will not be discussed further than is necessary to an intelligent understanding of the questions of law involved. The plaintiff and his wife and their three little children were living on a ranch belonging to defendant, who was boarding with them. The plaintiff became jealous because of the relations, real or imaginary, between his wife and defendant, resulting in domestic quarrels and culminating in the separation of plaintiff and his wife on the 17th of June, 1921. Shortly thereafter Mrs. Smith went to her former home in Oklahoma. The defendant furnished Mrs. Smith with money to go to Oklahoma and sent her money while she was there. A few weeks after Mrs. Smith left, the plaintiff found a letter, inclosed in a sealed envelope, near the post office at Tipton, Cal., addressed to Mrs. Smith at Carney, Okl. The letter was dated July 7, 1921, and was signed "L. M." Inclosed with the letter was a money order, dated July 7, 1921, designating Mrs. Smith as payee and the defendant as remitter. The contents of the letter were such as to indicate that the plaintiff's suspicions concerning the relations between his wife and the defendant were well founded. Thereafter, on August 5, 1921, this action was commenced. In October, 1921, Mrs. Smith left Oklahoma for California in company with her sister and the latter's husband. They came through in an automobile and arrived in California about three weeks before the trial of the action, which was commenced November 29, 1921. Mrs. Smith was the most important witness for defendant at the trial. She denied the material parts of her husband's testimony and testified that defendant had in no manner influenced her conduct toward her husband or caused her to lose her affection for him. Her testimony was, in effect, that she had lost her affection for plaintiff by reason of his cruel and abusive treatment of her.

At the hearing of plaintiff's motion for a new trial the affidavit of Mrs. Smith was admitted in evidence. She therein stated:

"That at the time of said trial she was under the dominion and influence of the defendant to such an extent that at said time by reason of the persuasion, promises and influence of the defendant to and for her, she testified at said trial to facts material to said issue that were not true and in particular as follows, to wit."

Then follows a statement of the material facts testified to by affiant at the trial. Affiant then proceeds to state that the defendant was the sole cause of her separation from her husband; that their married life had been happy and harmonious until defendant "gained her love and affection"; that defendant "promised affiant that if she would separate from her husband and obtain a divorce from him that he would place her in a more comfortable home, surrounded by luxuries than could ever be given to her by her said husband; that he promised her jewelry, a ranch and a choice of living wherever she might see fit; * * * that said Louis Mitchell gave her a gold ring; that he promised her a gold watch and chain and immediately after the trial of this action and on the day of the closing of such trial gave her such gold watch and chain, thereby carrying out his promises"; that he took her to the office of an attorney to ascertain whether she could secure a divorce and promised to pay all costs of securing a divorce from her husband; that he persuaded her "to go to her people in Oklahoma and leave said plaintiff" for the "purpose of obtaining a divorce in the state of Oklahoma"; that with money furnished by defendant she went to Oklahoma and there instituted an action for divorce; that defendant sent her money to pay the costs thereof; that just prior to the separation of plaintiff and affiant the defendant expressed the desire to marry her; "that for the purpose of retaining his dominion over her and for the purpose of controlling her testimony in the trial of the above-entitled action said Louis Mitchell did prior to said trial meet affiant in the state of Arizona and there joined her on her return to California, and at such time in many conversations had between affiant and said Louis Mitchell he still insisted that he loved affiant and desired her to become his wife, and that in order that he might prevail in the trial of the above-entitled action she would have to testify as she did upon the stand in said trial, and that affiant on said trip and at various times up to the date of said trial agreed with said Louis Mitchell to testify falsely as she did at said trial."

A few counter affidavits were filed to the effect that Mrs. Smith had made statements prior to the trial which were inconsistent with some of her statements in the affidavit, and her testimony given at the trial is wholly inconsistent with that contained in the affidavit; but her statements in the affidavit to the effect that defendant had induced her to testify falsely at the trial stand without substantial contradiction. Many of the facts stated in the affidavit, from the nature thereof, must have been within the exclusive knowledge of Mrs. Smith and the defendant; yet the defendant wholly failed to deny any of them. No affidavit of the defendant was presented on the motion for a new trial. The only rational inference is that the defendant could not truthfully deny such statements.

The only instruction pointed out by respondent to justify the order granting a new trial reads as follows:

"You are instructed that before you can find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff it is necessary that plaintiff prove by a preponderance of evidence and to your satisfaction that the defendant intentionally enticed plaintiff's wife away from him, and also that in doing so he acted maliciously.

"Merely giving advice to a wife, which induces her to leave her husband, is not actionable if given honestly, with a view to the welfare of both parties, by one who has no special influence or authority."

[1] Section 49 of the Civil Code provides: "The rights of personal relations forbid

* * * the abduction or enticement of a wife from her husband." The definition of the word "entice," as given in 15 Cyc. 1054, is "to allure to ill, to attract, to seduce, to coax. A word which may import an initial, active, and wrongful effort." It is apparent that the word "enticement," as used in section 49, imports wrongful conduct. The effect of the instruction given, therefore, is that it is not enough for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant intentionally and wrongfully induced Mrs. Smith to leave plaintiff, but that he must further prove that defendant acted maliciously in so doing. Defendant is a stranger in blood to Mrs. Smith. Section 47 of the Civil Code provides:

"A privileged publication is one made * * * (3) in a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information."

Section 48 provides:

"In the cases provided for in subdivisions three, four, and five, of the preceding section, malice is not inferred from the communication or publication."

The defendant was not "interested" in Mrs. Smith's marital affairs, in the sense in which the word is used in section 47, and he was not privileged to intermeddle voluntarily therein. Had any advice, which defendant may have given her, been given at her request, then, under section 48, malice could not be inferred from the mere fact that he gave the advice; but when a stranger wrongfully volunteers to advise or encourage one party to the marriage to leave the other malice may be inferred without further proof. The principles of law announced in sections 47 and 48 are variously expressed by the authorities in actions for alienation of affections:

"The decisions require a much stronger case to be made out where the defendant is a parent of the spouse alleged to have been enticed." Cripe v. Cripe, 170 Cal. 91, 93, 148 Pac. 520, 521.

"The privilege accorded to parents, relatives, and guardians of a spouse in their communications and conduct with reference to the marital relation does not exist in favor of strangers. In the former case advice which may lead to a separation is presumed to have been given in good faith, but in case of a stranger malice is presumed." 21 Cyc. 1620.

"In case of a stranger in blood the causes must be extreme that will warrant him in interfering with the relation of husband and wife. * * * The burden is on him to show good cause and good faith for his conduct." Boland v. Stanley, 88 Ark. 562, 569, 115 S. W. 163, 165, 129 Am. St. 114, 119.

"While a stranger may, without liability, harbor a wife who has left her husband, he may not persuade her to leave him, or not to return to him. Though she may have just grounds for a separation, yet she may choose to return, and a stranger has no right to intermeddle, and if he does so voluntarily, he must answer the consequences." Oakman v. Belden, 94 Me. 280, 281, 47 Atl. 553, 80 Am. St. 396, 397; 13 R. C. L. 1465.

"If a wife has good ground for a separation from her husband, or for a divorce from him, and she voluntarily seeks the advice, shelter, and protection of a stranger, and he gives her his advice and protection in good faith, and from motives of kindness and humanity, the husband cannot recover in an action for the alienation of her affections; although it would be otherwise if she would not seek the separation or sue for divorce except for the intentional and unsolicited interference of such third person inducing her so to act." Note, 44 Am. St. Rep. 851; Modisett v. McPike, 74 Mo. 636. See, also, note, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465.

"Where the action is against a stranger, the plaintiff need only show that it was wrongfully brought about. * * * Where the defendant is a stranger and intended to cause a separation, the burden of proof, in one sense, is upon the defendant to give a proper explanation for inducing the wife (or husband) to leave. If the advice was given honestly and for the best welfare of the parties, the defendant must show this fact." Elliott on Evidence, § 1643.

"The motive of the parent is presumed to be good until the contrary is proved, but where the alienation is caused by a stranger, the defendant must generally show that his conduct was actuated by proper motives." Id., § 1645.

"A stranger must explain his motive. * * * Whenever there is a deliberate intention of causing a separation of the husband and wife and doing a grievous wrong, without legal justification or excuse, malice or evil intent may be implied, as the very essence of malice is a disposition or willingness to do a wrongful act injuring another." Id., § 1646.

[2, 3] The uncontradicted evidence presented at the hearing of the motion for a new trial was such as to entitle the plaintiff to a retrial. When a party to an action induces a witness to give perjured testimony in matters material to the case, he thereby prevents the other party from having a fair trial. Since the misconduct of defendant in preventing a fair trial is shown by uncontradicted evidence, the question presented is one of law.

[4] The fact that the trial court granted a new trial on other grounds does not preclude this court from affirming the order on the ground of defendant's misconduct. Stell v. Sun Insurance Office, 171 Cal. 795, 798, 155 Pac. 72. Plaintiff is entitled to a new trial on the ground of defendant's misconduct and also on the ground that the foregoing instruction is erroneous.

The order is affirmed.

64 Cal. App. 314

SHAY, Sheriff, v. ROTH, County Auditor.
(Civ. 4415.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 31, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 27, 1923.)

1. Constitutional law ☞35—Constitution binding on all state departments.

The provisions of the Constitution, being by article 1, § 22, mandatory and prohibitory unless by express words declared to be otherwise, are binding on every department of the state government.

2. Constitutional law ☞14—Words given meaning in ordinary use.

In construing the Constitution, words employed therein are given the meaning they bear in ordinary use.

3. Counties ☞3½, New vol. 14A Key-No. Series—Right to amend limited by powers granted in freeholders' charter.

What may not be done in a freeholders' charter framed under Const. art. 11, § 7½, may not be done in amendment thereto in absence of constitutional authority for such enlarged power by amendment.

4. Officers ☞100(1)—Charter amendment increasing sheriff's salary subject to clause forbidding increase after election and during term; "consistent with"; "subject to."

Amendment to freeholders' charter framed under Const. art. 11, § 7½, increasing salary of sheriff, must be "consistent with" and "subject to" section 9, providing that compensation shall not be increased after election or during term; "consistent with" meaning in harmony with, and "subject to" meaning subordinate to, obedient to, and hence amendment increasing salary ratified by the Legislature after election was inconsistent with section 9.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Consistent; Subject to.]

5. Officers ☞100(1)—Constitutional inhibition against increase of salaries held to apply to approval of charter adopted by people of county.

Inhibition of Const. art. 11, § 9, providing salaries of county officers shall not be increased after election or during term, applies not only to acts of the Legislature but also where the act of the Legislature approves a charter adopted by the people, since the action of the county in ratifying such charter and the Legislature in approving it classifies the result as governmental action within the legislative department as defined by article 3, § 1.

6. Constitutional law ☞13—Court cannot substitute its ideas of legislative intent.

Courts cannot, by construction, substitute their ideas of intent of the law when that intent is unmistakably expressed in legislative words.

7. Sheriffs and constables ~~§~~29 — Repealing clause in charter amendment held not to deprive sheriff of salary.

Notwithstanding repealing clause in amendment to freeholders' charter increasing sheriff's salary effective after election, a sheriff, elected before amendment became effective, was not thereby denied a salary, since Const. art. 11, § 7½, provided that compensation should be provided either by charter or by supervisors, and, charter not providing for fixing salary by supervisors, the amendment will be held in abeyance until incumbency of officer on whom increase would operate.

8. Counties ~~§~~3½, New, vol. 14A Key-No. Series—Constitution providing for charters contemplated legislation by subordinate governmental subdivisions.

Original Const. 1879, art. 11, § 8, providing for adoption of municipal charters by vote of the people and prescribing the same general plan as is outlined in the present Constitution, contemplated legislation by subordinate governmental subdivisions.

Conrey, P. J., dissenting.

Original application for writ of mandate by W. A. Shay, Sheriff of San Bernardino County, against Vincent Roth, Auditor of San Bernardino County. Peremptory writ denied.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for petitioner.

George H. Johnson, Dist. Atty., of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice pro tem. Application for writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as auditor of the county of San Bernardino, to issue a warrant on the county treasurer directing the payment of the sum of $300 to petitioner as salary due him for the month of May, 1923, as sheriff of said county.

Petitioner was elected to the office of sheriff at the general election held November 7, 1922. His term of office commenced on the 8th day of January, 1923. At the same general election of November 7, 1922, the people of the county of San Bernardino ratified a proposed amendment to the charter of said county. The amendment added two new sections to article 2 of the charter which read as follows:

"Sec. 5a. The salary of the sheriff shall be and is hereby fixed at thirty-six hundred dollars per annum.

"Sec. 5b. Section 5a hereof shall take effect and be in force and the salary fixed shall be effective from and after 12 o'clock noon on the 8th day of January, 1923. All provisions of said article II in said charter in conflict with the foregoing section are hereby repealed."

The amendment so ratified was approved by the Legislature on the 29th day of January, 1923. Prior to the amendment the salary attached to the office of sheriff as established by the charter of the county was $2,-400 per annum.

It is the contention of the respondent that the charter amendment increasing the petitioner's salary did not take effect or become a law until January 29, 1923, a date subsequent to the election of petitioner and after the commencement of his term of office, and that the increase in salary did not and does not apply to him, because of the following provisions of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution:

"The compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office."

The charter of the county is a freeholders' charter framed and adopted pursuant to the provisions of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution, and the foregoing amendment was ratified and approved in all respects as required by that section. It is the position of the petitioner that the prohibitions of said section 9 do not apply to the amendment to the charter so adopted, and this is the only question for determination.

[1,2] The provisions of the Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise (Const. art. 1, § 22), and are binding upon every department of the state government, legislative, executive, and judicial. People v. California Fish Co. 166 Cal. 587. 138 Pac. 79. It is said in Cake v. City of Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 709, 130 Pac. 725, that the declarations of the Constitution "are all mandatory and prohibitory unless the contrary is expressly declared." The section is plain and unambiguous. There is therefore no room for construction. The intent is to be found in the language itself. It is the general rule that in construing the provisions of the Constitution the words employed therein shall be given the meaning which they bear in ordinary use. 5 Cal. Jur. 595. In City of Pasadena v. Railroad Commission, 183 Cal. 532, 192 Pac. 28, 10 A. L. R. 1425, it is said:

"The Constitution, 'unlike the acts of our Legislature, owes its whole force and authority to its ratification by the people; and they judged of it by the meaning apparent on its face according to the general use of the words employed, where they do not appear to have been used in a legal or technical sense.'"

To the same effect, see Turlock Irrigation District v. White, 186 Cal. 186, 198 Pac. 1060, 17 A. L. R. 72.

We find no words in section 9 which could be termed legal or technical and the prohibitions of the section must be enforced as written, unless it may properly be concluded that they have no application to a county charter or an amendment thereto, as urged by petitioner.

[3] It is first contended that under section 7½ of article 11 the power of the people of the county to amend a charter is unrestricted. It is clear that what may not be done in the charter as originally adopted may not be done in an amendment to the charter in the absence of constitutional authority for such enlarged power by amendment. No such enlarged power is found in the Constitution. The provisions of section 7½ must therefore be examined in order to determine their effect, if any, upon the prohibitions of section 9.

[4] As to matters which must be included in the county charter and as to matters which in addition it is competent to include in such charter, section 7½ is definite and specific. So far as applicable to this proceeding, it provides as follows:

"Any county may frame a charter for its own government consistent with and subject to the Constitution * * * and relating to matters authorized by provisions of the Constitution. * * * If a majority of said qualified electors [of the county] voting thereon, * * * shall vote in favor of such proposed charter, it shall be deemed to be ratified, and shall be forthwith submitted to the Legislature * * * for its approval or rejection as a whole, without power of alteration or amendment. Such approval may be made by concurrent resolution, and if approved by a majority vote of the members elected to each house, such charter shall become the charter of such county and shall become the organic law thereof relative to the matters therein provided. * * * The charter, so ratified, may be amended"—with the same provisions for ratification by the electors of the county and approval by the Legislature as is specified for the original charter.

It will be noted that the section requires that the charter shall provide for sheriffs and for their compensation or for the fixing of their compensation by boards of supervisors. It will also be noted that the provisions of such charter must be consistent with and subject to and must relate to matters authorized by the Constitution. That the provisions of the charter must be consistent with the Constitution is recognized in Jones v. De Shields, 187 Cal. 335, 202 Pac. 137. There is nothing in section 7½ which would authorize a violation of section 9 of the same article, nor is the amendment as applied to petitioner's claim consistent with that section. The phrase "consistent with" means "in agreement with; harmonious with." The amendment must also be subject to section 9. The phrase "subject to" means "subordinate to; obedient to." The amendment did not become a law until its approval by the Legislature on January 29, 1923. See Apple v. Zemansky, 166 Cal. 83, 134 Pac. 1149; Snyder v. Murray, 170 Cal. 656, 151 Pac. 128. The increase in salary, if allowed, would become fixed by law both after the petitioner's election and after the commencement of his term of office, and would therefore constitute legislation as to him in a manner inconsistent with, not subordinate to, and, in fact, contrary to the provisions of said section 9.

[5] It is contended that the inhibitions of section 9 apply to the Legislature and not to the people. Reliance is placed on the case of People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238, 24 Pac. 718, wherein it is stated that in approving a charter the Legislature is not the lawmaker, but exercises a power similar to that delegated to the governor with reference to bills passed by the Legislature, namely, that of approval or rejection. There is nothing in that case which would sanction a charter provision in violation of a constitutional mandate. Although the action of the Legislature in approving a charter is not a legislative one, the action of the county in ratifying the charter and of the Legislature in approving it would classify the result as governmental action within the legislative department of the state government as defined by section 1 of article 3 of the Constitution. The same declaration may be applied to a charter of a county as has been applied to the charter of a city adopted under section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. In Sheehan v. Scott, 145 Cal. 687, 79 Pac. 351, it is said:

"The authority to provide a municipal government for a city is referable to the lawmaking power of the state, and the enactment of a charter for a municipality is a legislative act."

Such a charter has for some purposes been declared to be a statute. Frick v. Los Angeles, 115 Cal. 512, 47 Pac. 250.

Petitioner relies upon the case of Kingsbury v. Nye, 9 Cal. App. 574, 99 Pac. 985, wherein it is said with reference to the effect of section 9 of article 11 as applied to the facts in that case:

"The policy has been, we think, not that salaries may not be increased during the term of the incumbent, but that the Legislature shall not exercise the power. * * * When, therefore, we find a limitation or restriction of legislative power, it is directed to the Legislature and not to the people, the source of all power."

It is therefore urged that the judicial declaration of that case has the effect of removing the amendment to the charter from the prohibitions of section 9. That case involved the validity of an increase by constitutional amendment of the salaries of certain incumbent state officers, and it was held, in conformity with the views expressed in Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 69, 82 Pac. 674, that salaries could be changed at any time by constitutional amendment. This proposition is not disputed by respondent. When the language of the Kingsbury Case is viewed in the light of the facts involved therein, it must be concluded that what was meant to be adjudicated was no more than that the prohibitions of section 9 do not apply to the people of the state—the source of all power—when exercising that power by constitutional amendment. Such language must also be held to mean that the restrictions of section 9 are directed against the exercise of legislative power as distinguished from power exercised by the people of the state by constitutional amendment. It certainly may not be properly urged that, because the language of the Kingsbury case apparently limited the prohibitions of section 9 in terms to "the Legislature," it was intended to construe the effect of the prohibitions of section 9 so that the same would not apply to other bodies subordinate to the Constitution and exercising legislative functions, such as boards of supervisors, city boards of trustees, and city councils, nor to exclude from the operation of that section cities or counties legislating by initiative ordinance or charter provisions by direct vote of the people. Furthermore, the court said in that case that the organic law of the state is framed for the guidance of all persons and bodies subordinate to its will. In Cameron v. City of Richmond, 42 Cal. App. 262, 183 Pac. 604, it was held that section 9 prohibited the increase in salary of an incumbent city councilman of the charter city of Richmond.

Petitioner also cites Puterbaugh v. Wadham, 162 Cal. 611, 123 Pac. 804, to the effect that the prohibitions of section 9 of article 11 are directed to the Legislature, but likewise what is said in that case obviously was not intended to exclude from the operation of section 9 other governmental bodies legislating subject to constitutional restraint. In that case it was held that section 9 of article 11 had no application to an automatic increase in official salary due to the passing of a city by increased population from one class to another. It was there said:

"The salary of an officer which may not be increased 'during his term of office' has reference only to his compensation as fixed by law when his term of office began."

The compensation claimed by the petitioner in that case was the salary as fixed by law at and prior to the commencement of his term of office.

In the case of Gibson v. Civil Service Commission, 27 Cal. App. 396, 150 Pac. 78, also relied upon by petitioner, it is said in referring to the adoption of said section 7½:

"The constitutional provision so adopted was comprehensive to the end that the counties should have the power to provide a complete system for the election and appointment of their officers and for the fixing of their compensation."

Such, no doubt, was the purpose of the section. And it may be assumed that the result has been accomplished so far as interference by general laws is concerned. But that broad general statement of the purposes of the section should not be held to sanction such a system for the control of county officers as would do violence to the provisions of the instrument under which the system was authorized.

There are no exceptions which may be read into the language of section 9 so as to exclude from its operation legislation by any subordinate body. In People v. Campbell, 138 Cal. 15, 70 Pac. 920, the Supreme Court said:

"The Constitution is to be interpreted by the language in which it is written, and courts are no more at liberty to add provisions to what is therein declared in definite language than they are to disregard any of its express provisions."

If counties acting in a legislative capacity in adopting a charter are not bound by the prohibitions of section 9, what is to prevent them from transcending any other provisions of the Constitution? For instance, section 21 of article 4 of the Constitution provides that no person convicted of embezzlement or defalcation of public funds shall ever be eligible to any office of profit in this state. Could a county charter provide for a county treasurer and assuming to exercise complete control over the election and appointment of its county officers install and retain in the office of treasurer a person who had been convicted of embezzlement of public funds? Again, section 20, art. 4, provides that no person holding any lucrative office under the United States shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this state. Assuming, also, to exercise such complete control over its officers, could a county provide in its charter for the election of a sheriff and elect and retain in office one who at the same time held the office of United States marshal? And, again, section 2 of article 22 provides that any person who shall fight a duel shall not be eligible to hold any office of profit under the Constitution. The reasons for this prohibition may not now be as apparent as in the olden days when such deadly personal combat was more in vogue. Even so, but may it be said that a county charter could provide for the election or appointment of a coroner or any other salaried official and install and retain in office one who was disqualified under that section?

We think the questions answer themselves. Reference to other sections of the Constitution might be multiplied, but sufficient has been said to illustrate the point that a county is not wholly unrestricted in exercising control over its charter officers. It seems clear that under present law a county is not clothed with immunity from constitutional obedience, whether it act by charter adoption or amendment thereto. Whatever political autonomy a county may enjoy and whatever means it may employ in exercising self-government must be consistent with the grants and limitations of such powers prescribed by the organic law of the state.

It is contended that the reasons for the enactment of section 9 do not apply to an increase of salary accomplished by a vote of the people of the county. In Puterbaugh v. Wadham, supra, also cited in support of this contention, it is declared that section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution "was designed to protect taxpayers from legislative interference with their rights by increasing the compensation paid to their elected officers without consent of the electorate," and it is argued that when the increase is accomplished by a vote of the electorate of the county there could be no such legislative interference. The reason indicated in that case for the adoption of the section is very apparent, but it cannot be said that such was the only reason. It may be that it was also designed generally to set at rest the question of compensation of public officers after their election in all subdivisions of the state when an increase might be sought by any method of legislative action. It was said in Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111, with reference to the mandatory provisions of section 15 of article 4 of the Constitution:

"But we are not permitted to consider the policy of a provision, where its language, as in the present instance, seems to us plain and positive. The whole of this line of argument is disposed of by the phrase, 'Ita lex scripta est.'"

Judge Cooley says, in his work on Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) at page 88:

"A Constitution is not to be made to mean one thing at one time, and another at some subsequent time when the circumstances may have so changed as perhaps to make a different rule in the case seem desirable."

The same author says, at page 89:

"The meaning of the Constitution is fixed when it is adopted, and it is not different at any subsequent time when a court has occasion to pass upon it."

[6] The court has no right, by construction, to substitute its idea of the intent of the law when that intent is unmistakably expressed in legislative words. Chenoweth v. Chambers, 33 Cal. App. 111, 164 Pac. 428.

It is further contended by the petitioner that section 7½ confers upon the county unrestricted power in fixing the compensation of the sheriff for the reason, so it is claimed, that section 9 prescribes a general rule applicable to officers of all counties and that in conflict therewith is the alleged special provision of section 7½ applicable only to officers of counties operating under a freeholders' charter. The familiar rule that a special provision controls an inconsistent general provision on the same subject is sought to be applied. We discover no inconsistency in the two sections, and consequently find no place for the application of the rule. Section 7½ does not confer unrestricted special power in dealing with the subjects of sheriffs and their compensation, but the power conferred by the language of the section itself must be exercised in a manner consistent with and subject to the Constitution. There is no conflict when the two sections are read together. When so read and relating to the matter in controversy the two sections would mean: "Consistent with and subject to the prohibitions of section 9 of this article said charter shall provide for sheriffs and fix their compensation."

[7] It is suggested that because of the repealing clause in the charter amendment the sheriff must receive the increased compensation or be denied any and all compensation whatever. But this result cannot follow for two reasons: In the first place, it is the mandate of section 7½ that the compensation of the sheriff must be provided for either in the charter itself or by the board of supervisors in a manner to be indicated in the charter. The charter of San Bernardino county as now framed contains no provision for the fixing of the salary of the petitioner by the board of supervisors after the commencement of his term of office. It would therefore be contrary to the constitutional provision to so amend the charter as to deprive the sheriff of the county of all compensation. In the second place, it has been held that when an increase in salary is provided for contrary to the provisions of section 9, the law providing for the increase is held in abeyance until the incumbency of an officer upon whom the increase may constitutionally operate, and until such time the salary in effect at the time of the election and the commencement of the term of the officer as to whom the increase cannot apply shall be the salary fixed by law for him until the expiration of his term. Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 73, 82 Pac. 674.

The fact that there is an attempted direct repeal of the former salary provision in the charter amendment instead of an implied repeal usually applicable in such cases is of no moment. The result in either case is the same. The charter amendment deals with but one subject, to wit, the increase in salary of the sheriff, coupled with the expressed intent to have it supersede the former charter provision on the same subject. The same intent is implied and is given equal effect when the increase in salary is provided for and the repeal is effected by implication. See Kingsbury v. Nye, supra.

[8] There is no force in the suggestion that when section 9 of article 11 was adopted legislation by subordinate governmental subdivisions by direct vote was not contemplated. The original Constitution of 1879, in section 8 of article 11, provided for the adoption of a municipal charter by a vote of the people of the city and prescribed the same general plan as is now outlined for that purpose in the Constitution, including the provision that the charter should be consistent with and subject to the Constitution.

It is unnecessary to determine the effect of the provision of section 5b of the amendment where it is declared that the increased compensation shall be in effect on January 8, 1923, a date prior to the time the amendment became a law, for the reason that section 9 of article 11 prohibits the increase after the election of the officer as well as after the commencement of his term. Assuming, but not deciding, that the increase in salary could be made retroactive and operative from and after January 8, 1923, still that date was more than two months after the election of petitioner and equally contrary to the constitutional provision.

It is therefore concluded that the petitioner is entitled only to the compensation fixed by the charter and in effect immediately prior to his election, and that the increased compensation provided for by the amendment is not applicable to him.

The petition for a peremptory writ is denied.

I concur: HOUSER, J.

CONREY, P. J. I dissent. The Constitution, in article 11, § 7½, provides that the charter of a county, when duly adopted and approved, "shall become the organic law thereof relative to the matters therein provided." The amendment to the charter of San Bernardino county, having been so adopted and approved, is a part of that organic law. The provisions of said section 7½ were contained in that section as adopted in the year 1911, and remain unchanged in the same section as amended in 1914. Section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution has not been amended since the adoption of the Constitution in 1879. It reads as follows:

"The compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed."

Respondent contends that this provision of section 9 is applicable to officers of county governments operating under freeholders' charters. This proposition is denied by petitioner. This presents the only question in the case.

Said section 7½ of the Constitution provides that—

"It shall be competent, in all charters, framed under the authority given by this section to provide, in addition to any other provisions allowable by this Constitution, and the same shall provide, for the following matters:
* * * (2) For sheriffs, * * * for the election or appointment of said officers, or any of them, for the times at which and the terms for which, said officers shall be elected or appointed, and for their compensation, or for the fixing of such compensation by boards of supervisors. * * *

In framing the charter for San Bernardino county, advantage was taken of the authority thus given to fix the salary of the sheriff at a sum named in the charter, instead of leaving the control of that matter to the board of supervisors.

The charter amendment attaching to the office of sheriff a salary of $3,600 per annum is in force as a part of the charter. Therefore it is operative as applied to the sheriff now in office, unless it plainly appears in the amendment itself, or by virtue of some controlling provision of the Constitution, that such operation is intended to be postponed to some subsequent time. No such intention to postpone is contained in the charter amendment, or in said section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution. On the contrary, the charter amendment itself affirmatively declares the intention that it shall go into effect and be in force, "and the salary fixed shall be effective" on and after January 8, 1923. And then, not content with the implied repeal of the former salary provision for the sheriff, the amendment affirmatively states that all provisions of said article 2 in conflict with the amendment "are hereby repealed." The effect of a direct repeal of the salary clause, standing alone, would be to immediately revive the provisions of the general law (the operation of which is now suspended) which give to the sheriff of San Bernardino county, as a county of the ninth class, a salary of $4,500 per annum. Pol. Code, §§ 4005c, 4006 and 4238; Jones v. De Shields, 187 Cal. 331, 202 Pac. 137.

It is not claimed that there is any other provision of the Constitution outside of section 9 of article 11 that would interfere with the complete and present effectiveness of the charter amendment now under consideration. It has been held by this court that the constitutional provision authorizing counties to adopt freeholders' charters for purposes of local government "was comprehensive to the end that the counties should have the power to provide a complete system for the election and appointment of their officers and for fixing of their compensation." Gibson v. Civil Service Commission, 27 Cal. App. 396, 150 Pac. 78. Again, in the same decision, this court said that—

"Plainly, the intent was of the people when they adopted the amendment to give to counties in their charter government complete control of all officers thereof as to their election or appointment and the compensation to be paid to them."

In Puterbaugh v. Wadham, 162 Cal. 611, at page 616, 123 Pac. 804, 806, the Supreme Court said:

"Section 9 of article 11 is an inhibition directed to the Legislature because it applies not only to attempted increases of salaries but to efforts to extend terms of office. The latter part of the section is unquestionably a limitation upon legislative power and the former from its association should be similarly construed."

Consequently, it was there held that the section could have no application to a change in salary due to the passing of a city, not by legislative act, but by increased population, from one class to another—not a legislative act, but an automatic change. While in the present instance the change of salary is not due to any automatic change of conditions, it is due to a constitutionally authorized act of the people of the county, which became effective upon the approval thereof by the Legislature. But such approval was not itself an act of legislation. In Mesmer v. Board of Public Service Commissioners, 23 Cal. App. 578, 138 Pac. 935, this court, relying upon the authority of earlier decisions of the Supreme Court, held that the Legislature does not exercise lawmaking power when it approves freeholders' charters. It was pointed out that the Legislature has no power to mold or change a freeholders' charter when such instrument is before it for consideration, and that the approval is by resolution and not by bill. In Puterbaugh v. Wadham, supra, the Supreme Court declared that section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution "was designed to protect taxpayers from legislative interference with their rights by increasing the compensation paid to their elected officers without consent of the electorate. * * *"

Since it appears from the decisions to which I have referred that the adoption and approval of the charter amendment did not include any legislative act by the Legislature of the state, or any legislative interference with the control by the electors of the county, of the allowance of compensation to their elected officers, I think it should be held that the right of petitioner to receive compensation at the rate provided in the amended section accrued immediately when the amendment became a part of the charter. In coming to this conclusion, I am not unaware of the fact that in Cameron v. City of Richmond, 42 Cal. App. 262, 183 Pac. 604, it was assumed by the court (there being apparently no contention made to the contrary) that the right of a city operating under a freeholders' charter to increase the compensation of a municipal officer was subject to the provisions of said section 9 of article 11. On that unchallenged assumption the actual question presented for consideration was decided. The attempted increase of salary in that case was by municipal ordinance, adopted by the city council, and not approved by the electors as provided by the charter in the case of an attempt to vary the compensation specified in the charter.

Also, I am of the opinion that that part of section 7½ of article 11, which grants authority by a freeholders' charter to provide for the compensation of the sheriff and of certain other officers, is a special provision granting an express power for a specific purpose, and that by reason of that character it would prevail over more general provision, adopted at an earlier date, like that contained in section 9 of article 11, which, by its terms, refers to "any county, city, town, or municipal officer," and does not take into account the formation of a county government by freeholders' charter.

I think that the peremptory writ should issue.

1. Specific performance ~~103~~—Jurisdiction of specific performance of contract to convey lands.

A Kentucky court has jurisdiction to entertain a bill for specific performance of contract to convey California lands.

Under the full faith and credit clause (Const. U. S. art. 4, § 1), a decree of a Kentucky court directing conveyance of land in California may be pleaded as a cause of action or defense in a California court, and is entitled to be given the force of record evidence of the equities therein determined, unless impeached for fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Redwood Investment Company of Stithton, Ky., against Rose Exley and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

G. E. Redwine, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Clarence A. Linn, of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal from a judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint. A demurrer interposed by defendants was sustained by the trial court, and 10 days were granted within which to amend. Plaintiff declined so to do, and the judgment of dismissal followed.

The action concerns the title to certain lands in this state. It appears from the complaint, which was filed May 18, 1921, that on July 9, 1913, Robert P. Daugherty, R. A. Viers, and M. C. Triplett were the owners in common of a certain tract of timbered land situated in Mendocino county. On that day they entered into an agreement in writing in the state of Kentucky, whereby they agreed to convey the same to plaintiff, a Kentucky corporation. Viers and Triplett executed conveyances according to their agreement, but Daugherty, who owned an undivided one-half interest in the lands, refused to do so, notwithstanding he had been paid the full consideration agreed upon. In consequence of such refusal plaintiff on the 20th day of May, 1914, commenced an action in specific performance against Daugherty in the circuit court of Hardin county, state of Kentucky, and in that action it was sought to compel Daugherty to convey to plaintiff his interest in the lands in question according to the terms of his contract. Plaintiff in the meantime had gone into possession, and had erected fences and constructed roads, buildings, and other improvements upon the land which it had occupied. Daugherty filed an appearance in the Kentucky action, and made defense. The complaint herein sets forth the entire record in that action. It appears therefrom that after proceedings had to that end judgment was rendered against Daugherty, directing that he convey the property in question to plaintiff on or before April 15, 1915. Appeal was taken, but this judgment was affirmed, and it became final January 11, 1917. Daugherty never complied with this judgment and decree, but, on the contrary, prior to the time limited for him to make a conveyance, he executed a deed purporting to convey his interest in the land to one Rose Exley, one of the respondents herein. Upon receiving this conveyance, Rose Exley and her husband, Martin D. Exley, executed a mortgage to Daugherty of the land so conveyed to them as security for payment of the sum of $7,000. This mortgage was subsequently assigned by Daugherty to defendants Thomas B. Daugherty and Frank McConnell. It is alleged that these several conveyances were made without consideration and with full knowledge by the various parties of the terms and effect of the Kentucky judgment and of R. P. Daugherty's lack of title. The complaint then goes on to allege that as a consideration for the contract to convey the land to plaintiff Daugherty was to and did receive the sum of $1,000 in cash and 100 shares of the capital stock of plaintiff corporation, the equivalent of the sum of $10,000, which sum was the reasonable value of Daugherty's interest in the land, all of which he has retained.

Plaintiff prayed that it be decreed to be the owner in fee in Daugherty's interest; that his deed to Rose Exley and the mortgage executed by her to Daugherty, together with the assignment thereof, be declared null and void; that Rose Exley be compelled to convey the land to plaintiff; and that her husband be decreed to have no interest therein. General relief is also prayed for.

To this complaint defendants Rose Exley and her husband—who are the only defendants who have appeared—filed a demurrer, both general and special, raising various objections to its sufficiency. It was alleged thereunder as one of the grounds of demurrer that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The statute of limitations was also pleaded. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and, plaintiff refusing to amend, judgment of dismissal followed.

[1] It is the claim of appellant that the trial court erred in that it failed to accord to the Kentucky judgment the full faith and credit and the effect to which it was and is entitled under the Constitution of the United States and the general laws of Congress enacted in pursuance thereof.

It must be conceded that the Kentucky court had jurisdiction to entertain the bill for specific performance of the contract of the parties, although the land is situated in this state. 2 Story Eq. Jur. § 743 et seq. It is claimed, however, that, although full faith and credit must be given to the judicial proceedings of the several states, it has never been held that the "full faith and credit" clause of the Constitution permits the courts of one state to control the title to real property situated in another; that to give such a construction to the judgment would be to surrender to the Kentucky court the power to control the title to real property in this state. Accordingly, it is contended by respondents that the judgment here sued on is impotent as the basis of plaintiff's action, and the demurrer was properly sustained. In support of this position, we are cited to the case of Fall v. Eastin, 215 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 3, 54 L. Ed. 65, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 924, 17 Ann. Cas. 853, and the recent case of Taylor v. Taylor, decided by our own Supreme Court September 14, 1923, 218 Pac. 756.

The case of Fall v. Eastin was one wherein a Washington court, in an action where it had jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter, determined the equities in certain property situated in Nebraska; the successful litigant in the Washington court sought to enforce the judgment in Nebraska against persons who succeeded to the property with full knowledge of the Washington judgment and without a consideration; the Nebraska court refused to directly enforce the Washington judgment, and the Supreme Court of the United States sustained its action. It was held that, while a court of equity acting upon the person of the defendant may decree a conveyance of land in another jurisdiction and enforce the execution of the decree by process against the defendant, neither the decree nor any conveyance under it except by the party in whom title is vested is of any efficacy beyond the jurisdiction of the court; that to concede such power would be to attribute to such a decree the force and effect of a judgment in rem by a court having no jurisdiction of the res. It was there further held that the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution does not extend the jurisdiction of the courts of one state to property situated in another, but only makes the judgment conclusive on the merits of the claim or subject-matter of the suit; and the courts of the state in such a case do not deny full faith and credit to a decree of courts of another state by holding that it does not operate directly upon and transfer the property.

Such, in effect, is the rule laid down in the Taylor Case, supra, where it is held that the courts of one state cannot make a decree which will operate to change or directly affect the title to real property beyond the territorial limits of its jurisdiction, such decree being effectual only by means of the court's power over the person of the parties before it. The reason for the rule is there stated to be that jurisdiction to affect the title to real estate by a judgment in rem or directly against the thing itself exists only in the courts of the state wherein the land is situated.

[2] There can be no question that real property is exclusively subject to the laws and jurisdiction of the state where located, and that no other laws or courts can affect it by an attempt to create, transfer or vest title thereto. Judgments or decrees, therefore, which are rendered in one state cannot of themselves affect title to lands in another. From the very nature of the property land must be governed by the lex loci rei sitæ.

[3] But this does not mean that a decree directing a conveyance is without its effect per se. It may be pleaded as a basis or cause of action or defense in the courts of the state where the land is situated, and is entitled in such a court to the force and effect of record evidence of the equities therein determined, unless it be impeached for fraud. 2 Black on Judgments, § 872; Burnley v. Stevenson, 24 Ohio St. 474, 15 Am. Rep. 621.

The complaint, therefore, states a cause of action upon the judgment. It also contains allegations to the effect that respondents herein took with notice of the infirmity of Daugherty's title, and that Rose Exley was not a bona fide purchaser. These allegations must be deemed true for the purposes of demurrer. This being so, it follows that the court committed error in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

No question of the statute of limitations is involved. The Kentucky judgment became final January 11, 1917, and the action was commenced within five years thereafter.

The judgment is reversed.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1923.
Modified on Rehearing Jan. 28, 1924.)

1. Appeal and error §447 — Court cannot grant injunction pending appeal from order denying injunction, except as part of latter order.

A court refusing an injunction pendente lite cannot grant an injunction pending appeal, except where the latter order is to be deemed a portion of that denying the injunction pendente lite.

2. Appeal and error §447—Further notice of application for restraining order pending appeal from order denying injunction pendente

Since the trial court's power to continue a restraining order in effect pending appeal from an order denying an injunction pendente lite is only incidental to the right of appeal, no other notice than that given of the hearing on the motion for the injunction pendente lite is necessary.

3. Appeal and error §447—Order restraining

An order continuing in effect a restraining order against a transfer of property by a corporation pending appeal from an order refusing an injunction pendente lite held not invalid, because the required bond was executed to transferor, instead of transferee; such order being made in pursuance of the court's inherent power to preserve the status quo pending appeal and not under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.

In Bank.

Application by the American Trading Company (Pacific Coast) for a writ of review directed to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and others to annul an order of the Superior Court continuing a restraining order pending an appeal from an order denying an injunction pendente lite. Affirmed.

Knight, Boland, Hutchinson & Christin, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank J. Golden and Humphrey, Grant, Zimdars & Warren, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. Petitioner seeks a writ of review to annul an order of the superior court continuing in force a restraining order pending an appeal from an order denying an injunction pendente lite in an action brought by certain stockholders of the La Zacualpa Hidalgo Rubber Company to prevent that company from executing a deed of certain of its properties to the American Trading Company as provided by an agreement of December 20, 1921, between the La Zacualpa Hidalgo Rubber Company and the American Trading Company, wherein and whereby it was agreed that at the expiration of 18 months, to wit, on June 20, 1920, the La Zacualpa Hidalgo Rubber Company would transfer its properties to the American Trading Company. On June 19, 1923, certain stockholders of the La Zacualpa Hidalgo Rubber Company began an action for an accounting and for an injunction to restrain the proposed transfer, and in connection therewith secured a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue. Upon the hearing of this application the superior court denied the application for the injunction pendente lite and dissolved the restraining order. The plaintiff stockholders appealed from the order denying the temporary injunction and secured an injunction pending the appeal restraining the La Zacualpa Hidalgo Rubber Company from transferring the property to the American Trading Company. In accordance with the order granting the injunction pending the appeal, plaintiffs gave a bond in the sum of $2,500, payable to the La Zacualpa Hidalgo Rubber Company.

[1-3] The American Trading Company petitions this court to annul the order granting the injunction pending the appeal, upon the ground that the order was void because no notice of the application was given and the bond does not protect the American Trading Company. Upon the argument it was conceded that the superior court had authority to grant an injunction pending the appeal in order to preserve the status quo. City of Pasadena v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 781, 109 Pac. 620, 21 Ann. Cas. 1355; Pierce v. City of Los Angeles, 159 Cal. 516, 114 Pac. 818. The jurisdiction of the superior court to grant such an injunction pending an appeal, after having refused an injunction pendente lite, can only be sustained on the theory that the order granting the injunction pending the appeal is a portion of the order denying the injunction pendente lite; for, where the court has refused an injunction, it could not subsequently grant the injunction, because the order refusing the injunction is an appealable order. This principle is established in the case of United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 151 Pac. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199, where it was held that the trial court, having granted a preliminary injunction without reserving the power to modify the same, could not subsequently suspend the effect of the temporary injunction, for the reason that such injunction could only be modified or set aside on appeal. If the order under attack in this proceeding be regarded as the result of a separate and distinct application for an injunction after the refusal to grant an injunction pendente lite, it was clearly beyond the jurisdiction of the superior court for the reason stated. Assuming, as it is conceded, that the trial court had the power to make the order, such power exists only because it is incidental to the right of appeal from the order refusing the injunction pendente lite, and is necessarily based upon the notice and hearing for the injunction pendente lite, consequently no other notice was necessary. It is also contended that the order is invalid because the bond required by the superior court was executed to the La Zacualpa Hidalgo Rubber Company and not to the American Trading Company, and that the latter company, the petitioner herein, would be injuriously affected by the injunction without any security. It is a sufficient answer to this contention to call attention to the fact that the court in making the order in question was acting in pursuance of its inherent power to preserve the status quo pending the appeal and not under section 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure. City of Pasadena v. Superior Court, supra.

Order affirmed.

KORNBLUM et al. v. BANK OF ITALY.
(Civ. 4689.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 19, 1923.)

1. Evidence ⚡410—Parol evidence admissible to prove agreement between bank and special depositor, notwithstanding written instrument signed merely by depositor.

In action against a bank for conversion of a portion of a special deposit, testimony as to what was said by the depositor and the bank's manager at the time the deposit was made was admissible on behalf of the bank to prove the agreement between the bank and the depositor, notwithstanding written instrument signed merely by the depositor containing instructions to bank.

2. Banks and banking ⚡90—Damages ⚡62 (4)—Damages must be minimized; measure of damages recoverable by special depositor because of bank's payment for more goods than were purchased by depositor stated.

Where purchaser of grapes deposited a certain amount with a bank with directions to pay designated amounts to designated sellers and the bank received a bill of lading for grapes in excess of the poundage purchased and paid therefor, the purchaser could not recover the amount so paid, but was required to minimize the damages by receiving the grapes and selling them for the best price obtainable, and could recover merely the loss, if any, proximately caused by bank's act, under Civ. Code, § 3300.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by S. J. Kornblum and another against the Bank of Italy. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jack Greenberg, of Los Angeles, and Everts, Ewing & Wild and O. A. Tuttle, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Harris, Johnson, Willey & Griffith, of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action to recover a judgment against the defendant for $2,849.60 alleged to have been converted. The trial court rendered a judgment in favor of the defendant and the plaintiffs have appealed. The trial court, according to the appellants, made two errors. The first alleged error is that it received oral evidence to vary the terms of a written instrument, and the second error is that one of the principal findings is not supported by the evidence. As the case was presented in the trial court, and as it is presented in this court, it is difficult to treat the two points separately.

On the trial of the case the plaintiffs produced the deposition of one of the plaintiffs, S. J. Kornblum. In that deposition the witness deposed as follows: That his name was S. J. Kornblum, and that he resided at 426 East Third street, Brooklyn, New York. He was in Fresno October 26, 1920, and during that month and the two previous months he had business dealings with the branch of the Bank of Italy located at Fresno. On October 26th the witness went to Mr. Heaton, the manager of the branch bank, and told him that he had negotiated with several merchants in Fresno for some grapes that were about to be shipped. The conversation took place in Mr. Heaton's office. The witness told Mr. Heaton that the grapes were about to be shipped, but that he had to go back east, and that it was urgent for him to go home, and that he wanted to be protected so that they would not ship him any more grapes than he had bought, and he wanted to leave $30,000 in Fresno. He drew a check and deposited it with Mr. Heaton for $30,000. Mr. Heaton asked him how the bank was going to pay—supposing the stuff was not good. And the witness answered that the buyers had to take these chances whether the stuff was good or not, but to pay simply on presentation of a bill of lading for fresh grapes. Mr. Heaton stated they had better have that in writing, and the witness remarked that that was the very thing he wanted to do. Mr. Heaton called the stenographer, and the witness just specified the different merchants and the different amounts to be paid to each one. That writing stated:

"I hand you herewith, $30,000, to be credited to my account with you. Upon receipt of the bills of lading to the order of Samuel J. and William Kornblum, with invoices for fresh grapes, you are hereby authorized and instructed to pay out of these funds the following amounts to the following firms: Arkelian Bros. $8,000; Bedig Produce $6,000; E. Maljan $3,000; San Joaquin Growers' and Shippers' Co. $10,000. You are also instructed to pay E. F. Ardzooni, upon receipt of bill of lading and invoice for grapes, $2,000, which must be, however, inspected by Mr. Cook, inspector, and same O. K. ed by him. S. J. Kornblum."

November 19, 1920, S. J. Kornblum wrote to Mr. Heaton that on November 5th he wired to Peter Maljan:

"See if you can obtain five or ten cars second muscats at $100 a ton. Now Maljan is no agent of mine. He receives his brokerage from the San Joaquin Growers and Shippers Company. Take notice that I did not tell him to buy, only to see if he could obtain, and if he succeeded in doing so he might have answered me accordingly. But instead he wired that he bought five cars from San Joaquin and one car has been shipped, the balance to follow one a day. Have wired him back what has been already shipped I would accept, but don't want any more."

It was stipulated by counsel in the trial court that the defendant paid to the San Joaquin Growers' & Shippers' Company $13,477.76, and that all of the payments were made upon receipt of bills of lading to the order of Samuel J. and William Kornblum. It was also stipulated that the excess payments for which the plaintiffs claimed judgment was $2,849.60, being payments on two cars, 10259 and 10238. Mr. Heaton, called as a witness on behalf of defendant, testified that his name was R. S. Heaton, that he resides at Fresno, and was connected with the Bank of Italy on October 26, 1920. He stated:

"S. J. Kornblum came into the bank along about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and gave some oral instruction regarding the disposition of $30,000 that he placed with me. He asked me to accept certain carloads of fruit that were to be shipped from Fresno. Well I thought we should have more specific instructions, so I asked him to put them in writing. He said it wasn't necessary, it obstructed his agents here, but I insisted on putting it in writing, which he did. He told me from whom he had purchased fruit in Fresno. Those parties are named in the letter dated October 26, 1920."

Counsel stipulated that the bills of lading were received for each shipment and were duly forwarded, and each one was made for fruit, and that the plaintiffs received all of the cars excepting car 10238 and car 10259, which they refused to receive, and that the amount paid for the grapes in those two cars was $2,849.60. Continuing, the witness testified that the bank paid E. Maljan $3,194.65. It was also stipulated by counsel that the amounts designated in the letter of October 26, 1920, to wit $8,000, $6,000, $3,000, $10,000, $2,000, are not in any instance exact multiples of the value of a carload of grapes according to the price being paid by the plaintiffs.

[1] Over the objection and exception of the plaintiffs, the trial court received evidence as to what was said by Mr. Kornblum and by Mr. Heaton at the time that the letter dated October 26, 1920, was being written and signed. The appellants now assign those rulings as error and claim that the effect of the rulings was to vary the terms of a written instrument. It will be noted that the written instrument was unilateral, it was signed by the agents of the appellants, but Mr. Heaton was not asked to sign, nor to accept in writing the terms of the instrument, and, furthermore, he did not do so. Under these circumstances, the letter was but a part of the parol evidence going to make up the agreement between the parties. Austin v. Wilcoxson, 149 Cal. 24, 29, 84 Pac. 417. In the case of Neresheimer v. Smyth, 167 N. Y. 202, 60 N. E. 449, there was before the court a bill of sale made by a debtor in behalf of his creditors. Moreover, there was a side agreement reduced to writing as to what the assignees were to do. Oral testimony was also received. On page 207 of 167 N. Y., on page 451 of 60 N. E., the court said:

"Parol evidence was admissible to prove the purpose of the bill of sale, and that it was made with the consent of the creditors and for their benefit. It did not tend to contradict the writing but to show the trust arrangement between the defendant and the creditors."

The appellants cite finding No. 2, which is quite long, and complain that the same is not supported by the evidence. In this behalf the appellants' grievance rests on the language "that thereafter, said defendant, pursuant to said instructions, and also further instructions given by plaintiffs to defendant, did pay out of said deposit to San Joaquin Growers' & Shippers' Company the aggregate sum of $13,477.76," and appellants contend that the bank was limited in its instructions to pay $10,000, and no more. We think the point is without merit. When Mr. Kornblum called on Mr. Heaton, it is patent that he wanted to pay for the grapes he had bought. He mentioned the names of the parties, but did not, until questioned by Mr. Heaton, disclose the probable amount payable to each vendor. He was purchasing grapes in carloads. Until each carload was weighed, the amount of the invoice could not be ascertained. As the facts later transpired, no one purchase exactly met the figure named in the letter as to any one vendor. Mr. Kornblum was particularly concerned to the effect "that they (the vendors) would not ship me any more grapes than I am buying. * * *" To that end he was employing the services of the plaintiff bank. The evidence shows that the plaintiffs have not been injured in that respect, and that the bank in no way deprived the plaintiffs of the protection which they sought. These views are further emphasized by the fact that although the plaintiffs deposited $30,000, the expenditures authorized amounted to only $29,000, and the expenditures actually made amounted to a still smaller sum.

[2] The appellants assume, and the respondent apparently concedes, that if the bank received a bill of lading from one vendor for a car of grapes in excess of the poundage purchased from that vendor, and paid out of the appellants' funds the price thereof, then and in that event the measure of damages is the amount so paid out. We do not agree with this view of the law. Non constat but what the carload of grapes was needed to fill plaintiffs' purchase and was of the full value of the price paid therefor, and that the appellants were not damaged in the least. In other words, if the bank received more cars from one vendor than that vendor's proportion, that fact alone would not warrant a judgment for the price paid for such car. But the appellants' right to damages "is the amount which will compensate" them "for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." Civ. Code, § 3300. In such a case the duty rested upon the appellants to minimize the damages. They were bound to receive the grapes and sell them for the best price obtainable, and then, if they suffered damage by defendant's act, their right to recover would be, not the total sum so paid out, but the loss, if any, incurred on the particular car, proximately caused by the defendant's act. There is not in the record any evidence showing the facts touching this element of the case. On the other hand, there is evidence showing that when two of the cars arrived at their destination the appellants refused to receive the same and claimed that the contents of the cars were the property of the respondent. There is also evidence to the effect that the grapes were then left in the cars until they had greatly deteriorated in value and were then sold by some other person.

We find no error in the record.
The judgment is affirmed.

In re CARD'S ESTATE.

KESSLER et al. v. STEWART.

(Civ. 4220.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 29, 1923.)

1. Executors and administrators $\S$ 77—May sometimes be allowed credit for payments on unverified claims before appointment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1632, providing that an executor or administrator may be allowed credit, on settlement of his account, for amounts paid, under certain circumstances, on demands not founded on verified claims, as required by sections 1493-1496, credit may sometimes be given for voluntary payments made by individuals who later become executors or administrators.

2. Executors and administrators $\S$ 522—When creditors may exhaust local estate of non-resident decedent stated.

Creditors in California may exhaust the estate of a nonresident decedent therein for payment of their claims, after payment of administration costs, and perhaps expenses of the funeral and last illness, if administration in the state of his residence demonstrates that they cannot be paid thereby, unless the whole estate is insolvent, in which case creditors of the same grade must prorate the proceeds of the property in both states.

3. Executors and administrators $\S$ 3(1)—Settlement of decedent's affairs without aid of courts not favored.

Settlement of a decedent's affairs without the aid of the courts is not favored by the laws.

4. Executors and administrators $\S$ 526—Administratrix held not entitled to credit for expenditures and payments made without verified claims.

The administratrix of the estate of one dying in another state, wherein he resided and left property, held not entitled to credit for amounts expended without presentation of verified claims as against California creditors, whose claims exceeded the amount of decedent's estate in this state, in the absence of any domiciliary administration.

5. Executors and administrators $\S$ 180—Minor children of decedent may be awarded allowance for past period of maintenance from other sources.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1464, an allowance may be made to minor children of decedent for a past period during which they were maintained from other sources.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William Perry Card, deceased. From orders granting a family allowance and settling the final account of Addie V. Stewart, administrator, M. Kessler, her successor as administrator, and another, appeal. Affirmed in part and reversed in part, with directions.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Henry E. Carter, of Los Angeles, and Leonard Wright, of San Diego, for respondent.

WORKS, J. William Perry Card died intestate in Oklahoma. At the time of his decease he was a resident of that state. When he was in his last illness as it afterward transpired, he wired his daughter, Addie V. Stewart, who resided in Los Angeles county, Cal., that he was ill, and she immediately proceeded to Oklahoma by train. Mrs. Stewart had no reason to suppose her father's death was imminent, and prepared to remain in Oklahoma long enough to nurse him back to health. Unfortunately, however, he passed away before she reached his bedside. Card had been married twice, and Mrs. Stewart was a child of his first matrimonial union. His second marriage had been dissolved by divorce. At the time of his decease he had residing with him two minor sons, the fruits of this latter union. Up to within a few days before his death Card was the owner of 180 acres of land in Oklahoma, but at that time he transferred the property to his sons in consideration of love and affection. At his decease he left in Oklahoma certain cash, cattle, and other personal property. The cash was in bank, and was by Mrs. Stewart, immediately upon her arrival in the state, withdrawn by means of signed checks which Card had prepared prior to his decease. She also converted into cash the cattle and other personal property. These steps toward a summary administration of the estate of Card were all taken without the sanction of the laws of Oklahoma providing for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons. Out of the proceeds thus arising from her father's Oklahoma property Mrs. Stewart then paid out certain amounts, for purposes which are specifically shown below, and departed for California with the balance remaining in her hands, the sum of $600. This amount was consumed by the order for family allowance hereafter to be mentioned. On her return to California Mrs. Stewart was accompanied by her two minor half-brothers.

Card left real property in the county of San Diego, in this state, appraised at $750. He left no other property in California. After her arrival in this state Mrs. Stewart applied for letters of administration in San Diego county, and they were issued to her. Upon the presentation of her first and final account, after the settlement of which her trust as administrator was terminated, she was allowed credit for certain amounts which she had expended on and in connection with her journey to Oklahoma and return. The items constituting these expenditures are stated thus in the account:

"Amount of railroad fare to Oklahoma and return to conserve property of deceased, $103.64. Railroad fare for Perry Madison Card and William Purl Card from Denison, Texas, to Los Angeles, $99.82. Expense of berths for said minors from Denison, Texas, to San Antonio, $8.42. Railroad fare from Caney, Okl., to Denison, Tex., $2.50. To doctor's fees paid to Dr. Henderson, of Oklahoma, for services to deceased in his last illness, $65. Paid to druggist for medicine for the deceased during his last illness, $1.60. Paid to Mr. Cooper of Oklahoma for coffin and funeral expenses of deceased, $60. Paid for groceries being an indebtedness of deceased, $7.48. Paid to C. L. Skinner of Oklahoma for pasturage of decedent's cattle, $3.50. Paid for writing contract and telephone bill at Oklahoma, $1.40. Paid to [six named persons] for gathering cattle upon range at Oklahoma, $39. Paid to Mr. Cooper for feed and care of cattle, $6.50. Paid to T. M. Akers, notary public, $2.50. To A. L. Childress for board for said minors, $11.40. For grave marker for decedent, $35. Amount paid for coats and caps for minors, $14.50. For taxes on property in Oklahoma, $29.80. To two pairs of stockings for said minors, $.50. For suits, shirts, underwear and overalls for said minors at Oklahoma, $40. To expenses for board, etc., for said minors from Oklahoma to Los Angeles, $15.39. J. A. Dirke for horse hire for gathering cattle, $4.50."

These items make a total of $587.55, and it will be observed that they alone, without regard to attorney's and administrator's fees and other costs of administration, practically consume the California estate, appraised, as we have already remarked, at $750. There is a difference of but $162.45 between the two amounts. One Clara Card asserts a claim against the estate upon a California judgment for $1,380, together with $16 costs, rendered in March, 1919, with interest from that date. That creditor and the present administrator of the estate appeal from the order of the trial court settling the account of Addie V. Stewart, as the former administrator, and from a certain order granting a family allowance to the minor sons of decedent.

[1] Appellants contend that the trial court erred in giving Mrs. Stewart credit as administrator for each of the items set forth above and totaling $587.55. No verified claim was presented against the estate as to any of these items, and appellants insist for that reason that none of them may be allowed. We see no escape from this contention. The necessity for the presentation of verified claims by creditors of the estates of deceased persons is fixed by sections 1493-1496 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but it is provided in another section of the same Code (section 1632) that executors or administrators may be allowed credit upon the settlement of their accounts for amounts paid under certain circumstances upon demands not founded upon verified claims. The section reads, in part:

"If * * * it appears that debts against the deceased have been paid without the affidavit and allowance prescribed by statute * * * and it shall be proven by competent evidence to the satisfaction of the court that such debts were justly due, were paid in good faith, that the amount paid was the true amount of such indebtedness over and above all payments or set-offs, and that the estate is solvent, it shall be the duty of the said court to allow the said sums so paid in the settlement of said accounts."

Although the application of this enactment is limited, in strictness, to those cases in which executors or administrators make voluntary payments of demands, there are instances in which such payments, when made by individuals who later become executors or administrators, will be approved and due credit given. It is said in an opinion of the District Court of Appeal which was adopted by the Supreme Court:

"There was allowed to the administrator credit for a payment of $1,500 to the Portuguese-American Bank. * * * This payment was made * * * four days subsequent to the date of filing his petition for letters of administration. Whether a payment could be allowed when made by a stranger to the administration and before he had become connected therewith need not be at this time determined, although some California authorities incline to their allowance. In re Galland's Estate, 92 Cal. 293, 28 Pac. 287. In Estate of Heeney, 3 Cal. App. 553, 86 Pac. 842, this court uses the following language: 'One thing is certain, and that is that the law does not contemplate that the claims of an administrator for reimbursement for moneys expended before his appointment, can be established by his uncontradicted evidence.' But in the instant case the petitioner had already filed his petition and the widow had consented in writing to his appointment. At the time of making the payment there existed practically no doubt that in a few days he would be appointed. The estate was paying interest on the amount and it was clearly for the best interest of the estate that the obligation should be liquidated without delay. Under these circumstances we find no embarrassment in holding that the appointment subsequently made related back, for the purposes of this payment, to the date of filing the petition for letters. This view finds support in 11 R. C. L. p. 464, where we read: 'In effect the subsequent granting of letters of administration relates back to the death of the intestate, and makes valid acts which otherwise would or might have been tortious.' This payment was properly allowed." Estate of Machado, 186 Cal. 246, 199 Pac. 505.

[2-4] It is plain to us that respondent cannot come within the rule announced in this quotation. As decedent departed this life in Oklahoma, as that state was the place of his residence, and as he left property there, Oklahoma was the jurisdiction within which the principal or domiciliary administration of his estate should have taken place and may yet have to take place. His Oklahoma estate was properly the fund out of which, primarily, his Oklahoma debts should have been settled. His California estate bears legally the same relation to his California debts, with the proviso that any administration of the California estate should have been merely ancillary to an Oklahoma administration. It is plain that the California estate is insufficient to pay the claim of Clara Card, to say nothing of the claims of other California creditors, if such there are. The creditors here have the right to exhaust the California estate for the payment of their claims, after the payment of the costs of administration and, perhaps, the funeral expenses and expenses of the last illness, provided that a due and formal administration of the Oklahoma estate should demonstrate that they could not be paid by the estate located in that jurisdiction, all this, however, with the proviso that, if the estate as a whole were insolvent, creditors of the same grade must prorate from the proceeds derived from the property in both California and Oklahoma. By her summary methods of procedure while in Oklahoma respondent did all she could to nullify these rules of law. Moreover, she essayed to settle the affairs of decedent in Oklahoma without the aid of the courts, a thing not favored by the laws. Whether she actually accomplished all these results we cannot know. There may be creditors in Oklahoma whom she did not reach. Those creditors may already have taken out letters of administration there, or they may hereafter do so. The deed conveying the Oklahoma real property to the minor sons, executed a few days before Card's death in consideration of love and affection, may have been set aside or it may hereafter be set aside, at the suit of Oklahoma creditors, or, if sufficient grounds existed, it might be set aside by California creditors whose claims could not be satisfied out of the California estate. All these considerations will serve to show the lamentable condition in which the estate of Card now stands. They will also demonstrate the necessity of our conclusion that the California estate should not be saddled with the liquidation of the items making up the total of $587.55, or, at least, that estate should not be called upon to meet them in the absence of verified claims presented by the original creditors. The rules of law which we have stated as bearing upon the relationship between a domiciliary and an ancillary administration of the estate of a deceased person are epitomized in a standard law publication. See 24 C. J. 1110-1128.

[5] The only remaining point relates to the order for family allowance. On July 21, 1922, the court made its order awarding to each of the minor sons of decedent the sum of $25 per month from January 27, 1918, to January 27, 1919, or the total sum of $600. Appellants contend that the court was without jurisdiction to make such an order for a period of time which had already passed and during which the minors had been maintained from other sources. The order was proper under section 1464, Code of Civil Procedure, as construed in Estate of Moore, 170 Cal. 60, 148 Pac. 205.

The order for family allowance is affirmed. The order settling the first and final account is reversed, with directions to the trial court to disallow the credits above mentioned, amounting to $587.55.

64 Cal. App. 523

PEOPLE v. HALE. (Cr. 1113.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California, Nov. 27, 1923.)

1. Robbery — 24(3)—Accused held sufficiently identified as person who committed robbery.

Testimony of prosecuting witness and another who was an ex-convict, both of whom were robbed by two men, held sufficiently to identify accused as one of the two who committed the robbery.

2. Robbery — 23(1)—Admission of evidence as to identification of accused at city prison held not error in absence of showing identification was not bona fide.

In a robbery prosecution in which alibi was a defense, admission of testimony as to the identification of accused by prosecuting witness at the city prison held not error, in absence of a showing that the identification was not a bona fide one.

3. Criminal law — 1163(2)—Question propounded by district attorney after ruling of exclusion presumed not prejudicial.

In prosecution of accused, a former bootlegger, for robbery, in which the defense was alibi, as supported by testimony of defendant's witness, in which the court ruled against questioning defendant's witness as to her former employment, question thereafter propounded by district attorney to witness, "Did you ever work down in South City selling drinks?" to which court sustained objection, while improper, held not prejudicial in view of necessary assumption jury disregarded the question when objection was sustained, and because it could not be assumed on appeal that of two meanings possible to be attached to the question the jury took a sinister and unlawful one.

4. Criminal law — 726—District attorney's remarks in objecting to final argument of accused's counsel held not misconduct.

In a robbery prosecution in which defense was alibi and accused admitted he was a bootlegger, and in which defendant's counsel during final argument lauded accused's character, saying he had no police record, was never in jail because if he had been state would have produced record of his arrest, to which district attorney objected that such statement was improper "coming from counsel, as he knows the facts, and as he knows the defendant in this case," remarks of district attorney held not misconduct, but the whole incident was within the scope of legitimate argument.

5. Criminal law — 730(16)—If district attorney's remarks were misconduct, error was not prejudicial in view of admonition by court.

If remarks of district attorney in objecting to statements in final argument of accused's counsel were misconduct, such error was not prejudicial in view of court's admonition that jury must confine themselves to what was proved.

6. Criminal law — 419, 420(10), 1186(4)—Admission of hearsay description of persons committing robbery erroneous, but not prejudicial.

Where identity of accused was the principal issue, testimony of the police officer to whom complaint of robbery was made, over accused's objection, as to the description of the robbers, furnished by the holdup victims, was based on hearsay, if given to prove identity of accused as the guilty party, and was incompetent, and, had such evidence been the sole proof of identification, its admission would have been reversible error; but, there being other sufficient evidence to support jury's verdict, the error, if any, was not prejudicial, and hence did not require reversal in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

7. Robbery — 17(5)—As respects ownership, information charging property belonged to one other than accused is sufficient.

With respect to the ownership of the property alleged to have been robbed, the information is sufficient if it lays ownership in some one other than accused.

8. Criminal law — 1173(2)—If trial court erred in failing to instruct as to ownership of property robbed, error was harmless.

If, in a prosecution for robbery, the trial court erred in failing to instruct that the property stolen belonged to prosecuting witness and was not the property of the accused, such error was harmless, where the information which charged the property belonged to prosecuting witness was read to the jury, and the trial court told jury accused pleaded not guilty, thereby putting in issue all of the material allegations contained in the information "which has been read to you," and the entire prosecution was conducted on the theory the property belonged to prosecuting witness and his cousin.

9. Criminal law — 785(16), 1163(4)—Instruction held compliance with statute, but giving or failure to give it would not be error in absence of showing of prejudice.

An instruction that, if the jury believed that any witness willfully testified falsely in regard to any fact material to issue, the jury could disregard the whole testimony of that witness in arriving at a verdict, held a compliance with Code of Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3; but the giving or refusing to give such instruction does not constitute prejudicial error unless injury is shown.

10. Criminal law $\S$ 823(15)—If instruction on reasonable doubt was partially wrong, error was cured by further sentence therein.

If the first sentence of the trial court's instruction did not correctly state the law on the subject of reasonable doubt, the error was cured where, in the same instruction, the court gave a stock instruction which contained a correct statement of the law upon the subject.

11. Constitutional law $\S$ 58 — Pardon $\S$ 2 — Indeterminate Sentence Law held not void as interfering with the distribution of governmental powers or the Governor's pardon powers; "pardon."

Indeterminate Sentence Law, which under limitations named authorizes a board of a prison or reformatory to which one is confined to shorten term of sentence, held not to interfere with Governor's pardon powers and is not in conflict with Const. art. 3, $\S$ 1, and article 7, $\S$ 1, as the act of the board only shortens the term of sentence, leaving the conviction of guilt unaffected; "pardon" meaning the remission of guilt, amnesty, oblivion, or forgetfulness.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Pardon.]

12. Constitutional law $\S$ 250 — Criminal law $\S$ 1206(1) — Indeterminate Sentence Law held not violative of equal protection clause.

Indeterminate Sentence Law, which gives powers to the governing authority of a prison or reformatory, in which accused is confined, to shorten the term of sentence under certain conditions, held not violative of the equal protection clause of the federal and state Constitutions.

13. Statutes $\S$ 87 — Indeterminate Sentence Law held not void as special legislation.

Indeterminate Sentence Law applies alike to all persons who have been convicted of a public offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, and it is general in its purpose, because it gives to all persons similarly situated equal opportunity to avail themselves of its benefits, and hence does not violate Const. art. 1, $\S\S$ 11, 21, or article 4, $\S$ 25, subds. 2, 26, 33.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Roy Hale was convicted of robbery, and he appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

ST. SURE, J. Defendant was convicted by a jury of the crime of robbery. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The points urged for reversal are stated in the opening brief as follows: Insufficiency of identification; error of court in admitting evidence as to identification in city prison; misconduct of district attorney; error in admitting testimony of police officer; error in instructions.

Defendant filed a supplemental brief in which he urges, in addition, that the Indeterminate Sentence Law (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1168) is unconstitutional and void, because, in effect, a usurpation by the state board of prison directors of the exclusive executive power of the governor to commute sentences or grant pardons, and also as obnoxious to the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, and to article 1, $\S\S$ 11 and 21, and article 4, par. 25, subds. 2, 26, and 33, of the state Constitution.

[1] Briefly, the record tells the story of the crime as follows: Two men entered a soft drink place on Bryant street, in San Francisco, on October 5, 1922, at about 8:30 o'clock in the evening. The entry was peaceful, there was no immediate display of weapons, nor did either of the men wear masks. One, identified as defendant herein, asked for cigarettes, and when the proprietor turned from getting them, thrust a gun against his body and commanded him to hold up his hands. At the same time his companion pointed a gun at the proprietor's cousin (prosecuting witness herein) who sat at a table near by. The cash register was emptied and each victim relieved of his watch and money. The victims were then shut into a back room and the holdup men left. About 20 minutes later the robbery was reported to the police officer on the beat. He searched the neighborhood for two suspected holdup men, failed to find them, and made written report of the robbery about 25 minutes after the complaint to him. Defendant was arrested about 6:30 o'clock in the evening of the following day. The prosecuting witness visited the city prison and recognized, while crossing the corridor, the defendant as one of the robbers. Later the same witness picked defendant as one of the robbers out of 12 or 15 prisoners. At the trial both of the victims positively identified the defendant and gave substantially the same description of the robbers and their dress on the occasion of the holdup. The defendant was dressed slightly differently at the prison. The defense was alibi, one witness (Mrs. Sheehan) beside himself testifying for the defendant that he spent the entire day and night on which the robbery took place at the home of witness and her husband. She also testified that he spent most of the next day there.

We cannot agree with counsel for defendant that his client was not sufficiently identified as one of the robbers. The evidence shows that the holdup men peacefully entered the premises. They were unmasked. Defendant was arrested the following day upon description furnished by the victims. The prosecuting witness visited the city prison and recognized the defendant, and both victims, at the trial, positively identified the defendant as one of the offenders. We cannot indulge the presumption, as counsel seems to wish, that the place of the robbery was a bootleg liquor shop and the prosecuting witness customer, and his cousin, proprietor thereof, intoxicated with its product. These things were not proved, though defendant's counsel attempted to elicit testimony to that effect at the trial. True, one of the witnesses was an ex-convict, but this does not establish the innocence of one charged with robbing him, nor stamp the entire story of the robbery false. The fact that one witness could not say with certainty that there was or was not wood on the stock of the gun with which he was held up does not blot out the identification of the robbers. That the witness was frightened and excited was but natural, and, under the circumstances, we think he could not be expected to establish that he examined minutely a gun pressing against his body to enforce inactivity, and which was also partially concealed in the hand of the robber.

The jury had the witnesses before them and were given opportunity to pass on the sufficiency of their identification and their general credibility. This court cannot say that the story of the robbery was too improbable for belief by a reasonable person.

[2] The next complaint of defendant is that the court committed error in admitting evidence as to the identification of defendant by the prosecuting witness while in the city prison. It cannot be assumed that any irregular methods were used in connection with the visit of the witness to the city prison, nor that the identity of the defendant was suggested to him in any improper manner. The record discloses only the testimony of the witness that while at the elevator he identified the defendant crossing the corridor and called him to the attention of a detective companion; that he later picked defendant out of a lineup of 12 or 15 prisoners. Though counsel for defendant objected to the testimony on the ground that there was no showing of the "ins and outs" or how the lineup was made, and that the identity of the defendant had been suggested to the witness beforehand, he made no particular effort to follow the court's suggestion that these matters could all be brought out on cross-examination, but went instead into an examination calculated to show that the memory and perception of the witness were so weakened by drinking intoxicating liquor that his statements were not to be believed. The jury evidently chose to believe the story of the identification at the prison as first told by the witness.

[3] Defendant next assigns for reversal misconduct of the district attorney in the asking of defendant's witness the question, "Did you ever work down in South City selling drinks?" to which the court sustained an objection. The question was asked after the court had ruled against questioning as to the employment of the witness prior to her immediate employment. While the question was improper after such ruling and the conduct of the district attorney is not to be commended, we do not think that it was prejudicial. We must assume that the jury disregarded the question when the objection was sustained, and we cannot assume that of two meanings possible to be attached to the question they took a sinister and unlawful one.

[4, 5] Further misconduct is assigned on the part of the district attorney in referring to defendant's counsel and his knowledge of the facts in the case, and of the defendant. Defendant's counsel, during his final argument, proceeded to laud the character of the defendant, saying:

"Hale has no police record, has never been in jail before in his life, because if he had they would have produced the record of his arrest."

The district attorney objected, saying that such statement was improper, "coming from counsel, as he knows the facts, and as he knows the defendant in this case." The remarks of the district attorney were assigned as misconduct and defendant asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard them. The court then said:

"Well, eliminating statements of both counsel, ladies and gentlemen, of course, you have had some experience here and you know that counsel are assumed to talk about the evidence, and not what might have been proven or what might not have been proven. It is what has been proven; that is all you are entitled to discuss here. Go ahead."

Defendant complains that this admonishment was insufficient. The retort of the district attorney may have been occasioned by the facts adduced at the trial. Defendant admitted that he was not working at the date of the robbery and had not worked at any legitimate business for a long time. He testified:

"To tell you the truth, I was in the bootleg business. * * * We was running a still. * * *"

The whole incident may be regarded as within the scope of legitimate argument. And further, it appears, that the court suggested to the jury that statements of both counsel should be eliminated, and that, in arriving at a verdict, they must confine themselves to what has been proved. Under all of the circumstances of the case, we believe the defendant was in no way prejudiced by the occurrence, and that the court's admonishment was sufficient.

[6] Error is assigned in the admission of the testimony of a police officer descriptive of the robbers, as hearsay. The record shows there was some confusion as to the date of the commission of the crime. The information charged the 6th day of October and all the parties in the early stages of the case assumed this to have been the correct date. During the trial a police officer was called to clear up this matter. It was finally made clear, by the officer's report to headquarters, that the crime was committed on the evening of October 5th. The arrest occurred on the following evening, October 6th. The court, over the objection of defendant, allowed the officer to testify that he had a conversation with the victims of the holdup on the night of its occurrence, that he searched the neighborhood immediately thereafter for two men, and, finally, permitted him to give descriptions of these two men furnished by the victims. The receipt of the complaint by the police officer, and his written report at the time thereon, was an act in the line of his duty and may have been admissible to show that complaint of the robbery was made on that date. The descriptive testimony based on hearsay, if given to prove the identity of the accused as the guilty party, was incompetent. People v. Johnson, 91 Cal. 265, 27 Pac. 663; People v. McNamara, 94 Cal. 509, 29 Pac. 953. Had such evidence been the sole proof of identification, its admission would clearly have been reversible error. Aside from the complained of evidence, there was sufficient direct testimony on the subject, unshaken by defendant, to justify the verdict of the jury. But in view of the rule laid down by our Supreme Court in the Johnson and McNamara Cases, supra, it would appear that the action of the trial court in refusing to exclude the hearsay testimony verged on prejudicial error, and we feel constrained to invoke section 4½ of article 6 of the state Constitution, and in so doing, we believe, upon a consideration of the entire evidence, the error, if any, was harmless.

[7, 8] Errors are assigned in three instructions. It is asserted that the trial judge omitted a vital element from a part of his charge to the jury, in that he did not state that the property stolen was that of the prosecuting witness, and not the property of the defendant. The court gave a résumé of the information, containing the statute definition of robbery, but omitted that part of the information declaring the ownership of the property taken. The court then went on to say, however:

"The defendant entered a plea of not guilty, thereby putting in issue all of the material allegations contained in the information which has heretofore been read to you. The minutes of the court set out in the record show the following:

"* * * Thereupon the roll of the jury was called and all answered present.

"Thereupon the clerk read the information.
* * *"

The copy of the information set out in the clerk's transcript contains the language: " * * * And of the personal property of the said Pasquale Laureti. * * *"

If the information lays the ownership of the property in some one other than the defendant, it is sufficient. People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 50 Pac. 15. The entire prosecution was conducted on the theory that the property was that of the prosecuting witness and his cousin, and no contention was made by defendant that this was not the fact.

[9] The second instruction complained of is as follows:

"If you believe that any witness in this case has willfully testified falsely in regard to any fact material to the issue, you are at liberty to disregard and entirely discard the whole testimony of such witness in arriving at your verdict."

The instruction complained of is, in effect, a compliance with section 2061, subdivision 3, Code of Civil Procedure. People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 491, 494; People v. Clark, 84 Cal. 573, 583, 24 Pac. 313. It is settled law that the giving or refusing to give this instruction, unless injury is shown, does not constitute prejudicial error. Poor v. Fuller & Co., 30 Cal. App. 650, 655, 159 Pac. 233.

[10] The third instruction attacked is one given by the court upon the subject of reasonable doubt. Counsel for defendant quotes only the first sentence of the instruction, and contents himself with saying it is not the law. The court gave a stock instruction which contained a correct statement of the law upon the subject, and the assignment of error is therefore without merit.

[11] The last contention of defendant is that section 1168 of the Penal Code, under which appellant was sentenced, is unconstitutional and void as violative of article 3, § 1, and article 7, § 1, of the state Constitution. In the case of In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 Pac. 958, the Supreme Court of this state had under consideration the constitutionality of the Indeterminate Sentence Law, especially as violative of article 3, § 1, of our Constitution. The court there held that the actual carrying out of the sentence under the law, and the application of the various provisions for ameliorating the same, are administrative in character and properly exercised by an administrative body; that the indeterminate sentence is not a delegation to the prison directors of judicial authority, the judicial branch of the government being intrusted with the function of determining the guilt of the individual and of imposing the sentence provided by law for the offense of which he may have been found guilty; that the act itself, in effect, becomes a part of every judgment, and the state board of prison directors only one of a series of agencies for the execution of the judgment. The conclusion of the court was that the Indeterminate Sentence Law does not violate the constitutional provision such as ours (article 3, § 1), providing for a segregation of governmental powers into the three departments—legislative, executive, and judicial.

It is contended that the provisions of the statute are in direct and irreconcilable conflict with article 3, § 1, and article 7, § 1, for the reason that they interfere with the exclusive right of the executive to commute or pardon sentences for crime after conviction. The statute (paragraph d) provides that the governing authority of the prison "shall determine after the expiration of the minimum term of imprisonment has expired, what length of time, if any, such person shall be confined, unless the sentence be sooner terminated by commutation or pardon by the Governor of the state; and if it be determined that such person so sentenced be released before the expiration of the maximum period for which he is sentenced, then such person shall be released at such time as the governing * * * authority may determine."

Nowhere does the statute give the prison board the right to commute or pardon, nor does it attempt to impair such power reposing exclusively in the Governor; indeed, the statute expressly recognizes that such power remains with the Governor, where it has been placed by the Constitution. One who attacks the constitutionality of such an enactment must not only overcome the strong presumption in favor of its validity, but he must show that by the natural and necessary import of the language it is clearly in conflict with the supreme law. If the language employed is capable of two or more constructions, any one of which is in harmony with the Constitution, it is our duty to give it that construction. People v. Hayne, 83 Cal. 111, 23 Pac. 1, 7 L. R. A. 348, 17 Am. St. Rep. 211.

There is now, and there has been for more than half a century, a statute in force in this state allowing credits to convicts which are deducted from their terms of imprisonment. These credits, shortening very materially the term of the sentence, are given, not by the court, nor by the Governor under his power to commute or pardon, but purely and simply by administrative officers—the prison board. The validity of such legislation was upheld by the Supreme Court in Ex parte Wadleigh, 82 Cal. 518, 23 Pac. 190. Says the Supreme Court:

"The statute provides, in express terms, that certain credits or deductions from the term of imprisonment imposed shall be allowed for good conduct. (Supplement to Deering's Codes, p. 490, § 20.) This statute does not require any action on the part of the Governor, nor is any such action necessary. The statute, by its terms, entitled the petitioner to his discharge, the same as if his term of imprisonment had expired without such commutation as he is allowed by its provisions. The statute is not unconstitutional as an infringement of the power of the executive to pardon. It does not take away or interfere with such power in any way. The statute simply fixes the term of imprisonment in certain cases and upon certain conditions. This provision enters into and becomes a part of the judgment of the court below."

The power to pardon is something more than the power to release from servitude. "Pardon" is the remission of guilt, amnesty, oblivion, or forgetfulness. And. Law Dict. 745. The act of the board only shortens the term provided by the sentence, and leaves the conviction of guilt unaffected. "The effect of such pardon by the king is to make him, in effect, a new man; to acquit him of all corporal penalties and forfeitures annexed to that offense for which he obtains a pardon, and not so much restore his former as to give him a new credit and capacity." Bl. Comm., book 4, p. 402. "A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender; and when the pardon is full, it releases the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. If granted before conviction, it prevents any of the penalties and disabilities consequent upon conviction from attaching; if granted after conviction, it removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights; it makes him, as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity." Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 380, 18 L. Ed. 386; U. S. v. Padelford, 9 Wall. 531, 19 L. Ed. 788; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 20 L. Ed. 519; Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. 147, 21 L. Ed. 426.

Statutes similar in meaning to our Indeterminate Sentence Law, and some of them in practically the same language, have been enacted in many of the states, and while the courts of last resort in a few of these states have declared the acts unconstitutional, like courts of a majority of them have upheld their validity. Wilson v. Commonwealth, 141 Ky. 341, 132 S. W. 557; Murphy v. Commonwealth, 172 Mass. 264, 52 N. E. 505, 43 L. R. A. 154, 70 Am. St. Rep. 266; Oliver v. Oliver, 169 Mass. 592, 48 N. E. 843; Commonwealth v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 45 N. E. 1; George v. People, 167 Ill. 447, 47 N. E. 741; State v. Page, 60 Kan. 664, 57 Pac. 514; People v. Warden of Sing Sing Prison, 39 Misc. Rep. 113, 78 N. Y. Supp. 907; State v. Duff, 144 Iowa, 142, 122 N. W. 829, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, 138 Am. St. Rep. 269; People v. Madden, 105 N. Y. Supp. 554, 120 App. Div. 338;

People v. Nowasky, 254 Ill. 146, 98 N. E. 242; Commonwealth v. Kalck, 239 Pa. 533, 87 Atl. 61; Miller v. State, 149 Ind. 607, 49 N. E. 894, 40 L. R. A. 109.

[12] The contention that the statute is violative of the equal protection clause of the federal and state Constitutions is untenable. In People v. Finley, 153 Cal. 59, 94 Pac. 248, the defendant, while undergoing a life sentence in the state prison, was indicted under section 246 of the Penal Code, tried, found guilty, and the death penalty imposed. The defendant on appeal advanced the proposition: First, that section 246 denied to him the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment; second, that it contravened the provisions of article 1, § 11, of the Constitution of this state. The Supreme Court said (page 62 of 153 Cal., 94 Pac. 249):

"This amendment [Fourteenth] means simply that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons, or other classes, in the same place and under like circumstances. (Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22.) Paraphrasing the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 676, at 677, 678, 16 Sup. Ct. 179, we cannot perceive that appellant was denied the equal protection of the laws for every other person in like cases with him and convicted as he has been would be subjected to like punishment."

[13] The further contention that the statute is obnoxious to article 4, § 25, subds. 2, 26, and 33, of the state Constitution, prohibiting local and special laws, is also without merit.

"The distinction between a special and a general law may not be capable of being formulated in a definition which will be exhaustive of the subject and applicable to every case; and the question may be better determined upon a consideration of each particular case presented for its application by taking into view the purpose and character of the law, as well as the individuals upon which it is to operate. The Legislature, in its function of providing for the public welfare and the benefit of the entire people of the state, must determine the character of the laws which it will enact, and, except in so far as it is prohibited by the Constitution, should adapt these laws to the condition or necessities of different portions of the state or the different classes of its citizens. The Constitution does not require that all the laws which the Legislature shall pass shall have a uniform operation in every part of the state, nor does it prohibit legislation for different classes of citizens. The requirement that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, and that the Legislature shall not pass special laws upon certain subjects, still leaves open for determination whether any particular statute is a general or a special law. A law which operates only upon a class of individuals is none the less a general law, if the individuals to whom it is applicable constitute a class which requires legislation peculiar to itself in the matter covered by the law.

* * * If the conditions of such a class are such as to require legislation which would be inappropriate or injurious to others, or such as to require the enactment of laws which, either in their mode of enforcement or the remedy they provide, are inapplicable to others than the designated class, laws enacted for that class are not special for the reason that they apply to all of the individuals within the conditions." People v. Central Pacific Railroad Co., 105 Cal. 576, 583, 38 Pac. 905, 906.

The statute is general in its application, for it applies alike to all persons who have been convicted of a public offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, and it is general in its purpose, for it gives to all persons similarly situated equal opportunity to avail themselves of its benefits.

For the reasons given, we are of the opinion that the Indeterminate Sentence Law is not violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, nor of article 3, § 1; article 7, § 1; article 1, §§ 11 and 21; article 4, § 25, pars. 2, 26, and 33, of the California Constitution.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; NEEDHAM, Justice pro tem.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. STATE.
(Civ. 2574.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1923.)

1. Reformatories ⇨11—Amendment to Juvenile Law held to compel counties to support wards at state schools; "may."

An act approved March 26, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 123) § 2, provided that for each person committed to either state school the committing county shall pay into the state treasury $132 annually. Amendment of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 476) to the Juvenile Court Law, § 11, provided that the court may pay a sum not exceeding $20 monthly. Held, that the word "may" in the amendment had a mandatory meaning equivalent to must, and the trial court could not deny provision for the support of the wards or shift the burden to other counties of the state by adding to the state's expense, since the amendment did not expressly repeal the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, May.]

2. Evidence ⇨18—Court takes cognizance of increased cost of living to determine meaning of amendment to Juvenile Court Law.

In construing the word "may" in an act (St. 1919, p. 476) amending Juvenile Court Law, § 11, which provided that counties shall pay a certain sum for maintenance of each person committed by it to state schools, so as to read that the court "may" direct an additional amount, etc., the amount designated being an increase, the court may take cognizance that between 1895 and 1919 the cost of living and necessarily the cost of maintaining inmates at any of the state institutions practically doubled.

3. Statutes — 227—Word "may" takes on mandatory form when rights of public or other persons require performance of the act.

While the word "may" is ordinarily a permissive term, and not peremptory, when the rights of the public or of other persons are dependent upon the exercise of the power conferred, it takes on a mandatory form, and performance of the act is neither optional nor discretionary upon the person or officer designated.

4. Reformatories — 11—Payment to state by county auditor without order from court held not to vitiate his act under statute.

Under the 1919 amendment (St. 1919, p. 476) to the Juvenile Court Law, § 11, requiring payment of $20 monthly into the state treasury by counties committing boys to state schools, the fact that a county auditor made such payment irregularly, without an order of the court, did not vitiate the state's claim, since it was the court's duty to make the order.

5. States — 193—Payment to state by county auditor of funds as required by statute, though without court order, did not raise implied contract by state to refund.

Under St. 1893, p. 57, § 1, authorizing all persons having contract or negligence claims against the state not allowed by the State Board of Examiners to sue the state, the act of a county auditor in drawing warrants for the maintenance of boys committed by his county to state schools, though done irregularly, without authority of the court, did not raise an express or implied contract between state and county authorizing a suit for refund, since the auditor acted under a mandatory statute requiring the court to order the payments.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by the County of Los Angeles against the State of California. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Edward T. Bishop, Asst. Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guarena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

PLUMMER, J. In this action the county of Los Angeles seeks to recover from the state of California the sum of $12,963.48, and bases its action upon the following facts: During the period between the 9th day of February, 1918, and the 28th day of December, 1920, a number of boys from the age of 18 and under the age of 21 years were committed to the Preston School of Industry by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles under the provisions of the Juvenile Court Law of the state (St. 1915, p. 1225). No finding of the court was made in any of the cases concerning the ability of the parents or guardians of the wards, or as to the ability of the earnings of any of the wards, or of the estates belonging to any of them, to pay in whole or in part any of the maintenance charges at the Preston School of Industry. After commitment as aforesaid, and without any orders made by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles directing such payment, the auditor of the county of Los Angeles drew warrants upon the treasurer of that county in favor of the state of California, and the sum heretofore mentioned was accordingly paid to the state through the Preston School of Industry. Payments were made at the rate of $20 per month for the cost and maintenance of each ward.

On or about the 16th day of May, 1921, the county of Los Angeles filed with the State Board of Control of the state of California a claim for the refund of the said sum of $12,963.48, alleging that each and all of the various monthly payments to the state were illegal, and were made in the absence of the findings and orders for payment above referred to. This claim was disallowed by the State Board of Control. Action against the state was thereupon begun by the filing of the complaint setting forth the foregoing facts, to which complaint the defendant demurred, which demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. The matter is now on appeal to this court from the judgment of the trial court entered after sustaining the defendant's demurrer. In order to sustain its contention that a right of action existed on the part of the county of Los Angeles against the state of California, plaintiff lays down three propositions: First, that the payments of the county moneys were illegally made to the state; second, a cause of action for money had and received has arisen against the state; and, third, an action against the state for money had and received is authorized by statute. If any one of these propositions is faulty, then the action must fail, and for that reason consideration need not further be given if such is found to be the case.

Were the payments illegally made to the state? We think this question can be answered by a consideration of the law relating to the Preston School of Industry and the maintenance of wards committed thereto.

By an act by the Legislature provided March 11, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 100), the state of California provided for the establishment of an educational institution to be designated as the Preston School of Industry to be located at Ione, in the county of Amador. This act, however, made no provision for the maintenance or support of the wards committed to said school.

By the act approved March 26, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 123), the Legislature provided in section 2 of said act:

That "for each and every person hereafter committed to either the Whittier State School or the Preston School of Industry, the county from which the commitment is made shall pay into the state treasury the sum of one hundred and thirty-two dollars per annum, and at that rate for each fraction of a year."

The Juvenile Court Law as originally adopted provided, in substance, for the court making the commitment to direct the payment of the same amount per month. In 1919, economic conditions having undergone such a radical change, and the sum of $11 per month being manifestly insufficient for the maintenance of any ward committed to either Preston or Whittier, the Legislature amended section 11 to read as follows:

"Any order providing for the care and custody of a ward of the juvenile court may provide that the expense of support and maintenance of said ward shall be paid by the parent, parents, guardian of said ward or other person liable therefor, after citation thereto, or from the earnings, property or estate of said ward, and in such case shall state the amount to be so paid. If it is found, however, that the parent, parents, guardian of said ward or other person liable therefor, are unable to pay or that the earnings, property, or estate, of said ward is insufficient to pay the whole expense of support and maintenance of said ward, the court may direct such additional amount as may be necessary for the maintenance and support of said ward to be paid from the county treasury of the county for the support and maintenance of said ward, the amount so ordered to be paid from the treasury of said county not to exceed, in the case of any one ward, the sum of twenty dollars in any one month. * * *"
(St. 1919, p. 476.)

[1] These orders are valid for six-month periods. Provision is then made by the act for the keeping of books and reimbursements of the county by parents or guardians if found able, etc. On the part of the appellant, and in order to establish the illegality of the state's claim, it is necessarily argued that the making of any order by the superior court in relation to the maintenance of the wards being dealt with is purely optional or discretionary. Is this interpretation correct? The Juvenile Court Law does not directly repeal the provisions of section 2 of the act of 1895, making it mandatory for the counties to pay to the state the sum of $11 per month for each ward committed either to the Preston School of Industry or the Whittier State School. Our attention has not been called to any portion of the Juvenile Court Law which repeals the act of 1895 by necessary implication, and for the purpose of this decision we do not deem it necessary to refer to the act of 1895 further than to call attention to its mandatory provisions, in which it is made obligatory upon the counties to pay the sum of $11 per month irrespective of any order or orders made by the superior court. In this connection we deem it proper to inquire as to the intent and purposes of the Legislature in amending section 11 of the Juvenile Court Law in 1919.

[2] It is a matter of common knowledge, a knowledge of which we think the court may take cognizance, that between the period of 1895, the date of the enactment of the law providing for the payment of $11 per month for the maintenance of the wards, and the year 1919, the cost of living and necessarily the cost of maintaining inmates at any of the state institutions practically doubled, and we think the Legislature must have had this in mind in providing for the payment of a sum not exceeding $20 per month for each ward by the counties from which the wards were committed. There is another matter which must also be taken into consideration when determining the meaning of the word "may" as used in section 11 of the amendment to the Juvenile Court Law, and that is the uniform operation and effect to be given to such section. If the words contained in that section, relating to paying the state for the maintenance and support of wards committed to it from the different counties, are purely optional and discretionary, then in that case it is possible for the larger counties, through the failure of the trial courts to exercise such option or discretion, to saddle the entire expense of maintaining their numerous wards upon the state, while other and smaller counties of the state, where the commitments are few in number, may exercise the option or discretion of providing for payment by the county; and thus a number of the counties of the state might be supporting their own wards, and also contributing to the expense of maintaining wards committed from other counties where the option or discretion was either not exercised, or, if exercised, determined in favor of the county. It is scarcely probable that the Legislature intended by the words used to adopt a system that would have no uniformity of operation, and leave the burden of maintaining the wards sent to the different institutions subject to any such shifting process. It seems to us the more reasonable conclusion that the Legislature intended not to relieve the counties from the burden of maintaining their own wards, but simply intended to limit the amount to a sum not exceeding $20; and also that the word "may" as used in section 11 of the amendment to the Juvenile Court Law has a mandatory meaning, and that the trial courts are not at liberty either to deny provision for the support of the wards committed to said institutions under the terms of that act or to shift the burden of maintaining such wards to other counties of the state by adding to the state's expenses in failing to exercise such power. In the Matter of Cencinino, 31 Cal. App. 238, 160 Pac. 167, this court, in considering the meaning of the word "may," where the purpose of the law was to clothe a public officer with power to be exercised for the benefit of the public, said:

"The word 'may' as used in a statute or constitution is often interpreted to mean 'shall' or 'must.' Such interpretation always depends largely, if not altogether, on the object sought to be accomplished by the law in which that word is used. It seems to be the uniform rule that, where the purpose of the law is to clothe public officers with power to be exercised for the benefit of third persons, or for the public at large—that is, where the public interest or private right requires that the thing should be done—then the language, though permissive in form, is peremptory. As was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Supervisors v. United States, 4 Wall. 436, 18 L. Ed. 419, construing a statute of the state of Illinois similarly phrased to the provision in question here: 'What they (public officers) are employed to do for a third person, the law requires shall be done. The power is given, not for their benefit, but for his. It is given as a remedy to those entitled to invoke its aid.' See, also, Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, 99 Cal. 74 (33 Pac. 766)."

In Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, 99 Cal. 74, 33 Pac. 766, the court, in construing section 3804 of the Political Code, where it is stated that the board of supervisors may by order, etc., provide for the refunding of taxes, used the following language:

"It is urged by respondent that the Code, by providing that the board of supervisors may by order provide for refunding taxes, etc., paid more than once, made it optional with that body whether to do so or not, and that the board in this instance, having refused to refund, its action is conclusive upon the plaintiff. Where the public interest or private right requires that the thing should be done, then the word 'may' is generally construed to mean the same as 'shall.' People v. Supervisors, 68 N. Y. 119. Where the statute directs the doing of a thing for the sake of justice or the public good, the word 'may' is the same as the word 'shall.' Rex v. Barlow, 2 Salk. 609. Where a statute directs a thing to be done for justice's sake may means shall. Selvey v. United States, 7 Court of Claims, 334. Where persons or the public have an interest in having the act done by a public body, may in such a statute means must. Phelps v. Hawley, 52 N. Y. 27; People v. Supervisors, 51 N. Y. 401. See Estate of Ballentine, 45 Cal. 696. In Supervisors v. United States, 4 Wall. 436, a statute of Illinois provided that the board of supervisors 'may, if deemed advisable, levy a special tax,' etc. Mr. Justice Swayne sums up the authorities on the question as follows: 'The conclusion to be adduced from the authorities is, that where power is given to public officers, in the language of the act before us, or in equivalent language—whenever the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise—the language used, though permissive in form, is in fact peremptory. What they are empowered to do for a third person, the law requires shall be done. The power is given, not for their benefit, but for his. It is placed with the depository to meet the demands of right, and to prevent a failure of justice. It is given as a remedy to those entitled to invoke its aid, and who would otherwise be remediless.'"

To the same effect is the case of Brenner v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 72, 79, 116 Pac. 397, where the previous California cases are cited with approval. In Estate of Ballentine, 45 Cal. 696, the court construing the provisions of the probate law, where it says that the trial court may set aside for the widow a homestead, it was held that the word "may" should be interpreted as a mandatory expression, a provision intended by the Legislature to be made for the support of the family. It can scarcely be doubted that the Legislature, in amending section 11 of the Juvenile Court Law, intended likewise to make provision, or at least that provision should be made by the court having to do with juvenile cases, for their support and maintenance. In states outside of California it seems, also, to be held by an almost unbroken line of authorities that wherever the word "may" is used in reference to courts and officers such words will be regarded as imperative in cases where the public or individuals have the right to demand the exercise of the power conferred. Note to State v. Henry, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340.

[3] It thus appears that, while the word "may" is primarily and ordinarily a permissive term and not peremptory, nevertheless, when the rights of the public or of other persons—in this case the state of California—are dependent upon the exercise of the power conferred, the word "may" takes on the mandatory form, and that the performance of the act provided for is neither optional nor discretionary upon the person, or officer designated and authorized to perform the act.

[4] While the payments were undoubtedly irregularly made by the auditor and treasurer of the county of Los Angeles, does that necessarily vitiate the claim of the state for payment of expenses incurred by the maintenance of the wards committed to the Preston School of Industry by the superior court of Los Angeles county? We think not. It was the duty of the court of Los Angeles county to make the order, and, under the law, as we read it, it was also the duty of Los Angeles county to provide for the maintenance of its own wards and not to shift that burden upon the state or upon other counties of the state who, following the statute, had made provision for the support and maintenance of their wards.

[5] This brings us to the consideration of section 1 of the act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 57), which reads as follows:

"All persons who have, or shall hereafter have, claims on contract or for negligence against the state not allowed by the State Board of Examiners, are hereby authorized, on the terms and conditions herein contained, to bring suit thereon against the state in any of the courts of this state of competent jurisdiction, and prosecute the same to final judgment. The rules of practice in civil cases shall apply to such suits, except as herein otherwise provided."

There is no question of an express contract or obligation on the part of the state to refund or pay any money to the county of Los Angeles. It can only arise, if at all, by implication. Can it arise in this manner in this case?

The earliest case in the state of California upon this subject to which our attention has been called is that of Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 255, where it is held that if one obtains or if the city obtains money from another by mistake, or without authority of law, or property which does not belong to it, the moral duty immediately arises to make restitution. This doctrine is supported by a large number of California cases and cases from other states. If applicable to the present case, and, assuming as the Supreme Court did in the case of the County of San Luis Obispo v. Gage, 139 Cal. 408, 73 Pac. 174, that a county is a person having the right to maintain an action under the act of 1893, then in that case the judgment of the trial court should be reversed. But is the doctrine of the Argenti Case and others of similar import applicable? We think not. There is no express contract existing between the state of California and the county of Los Angeles for the payment of any part or portion of the sum claimed by the appellant. The moral obligations, as we have seen, all rest upon the county of Los Angeles. There is no violation of the principle of good conscience or right dealing on the part of the state in accepting and receiving the money from the county of Los Angeles which should have been paid to it by orders of the superior court of that county, for the maintenance of wards transferred from the county of Los Angeles and placed within the care, custody, and control of the institutions of the state, in which institutions, as we have seen, the costs of maintaining the several wards were intended to be borne by the counties making the commitments. If it was the intent of the Legislature, as evidenced by the acts to which we have referred and the interpretation which we think should be given by these acts, that the several counties should bear the burden of maintaining their own wards sent to the Preston School of Industry, not exceeding the sum of $20 per month, then, and in that case, the state had a moral and a legal claim against the county of Los Angeles, and therefore has received nothing from the county of Los Angeles which in good conscience it should restore. This being true, then there is no contract, either express or implied, arising under the provisions of section 1 of the act of 1893 heretofore referred to. That the county auditor of the county of Los Angeles before drawing warrants in favor of the state, and the treasurer of said county, before paying the same, should have been fortified by orders of the superior court, does not affect the claim of the state. In other words, the irregularity in payment does not reach down into and affect the validity of the claim itself or taint it with any moral turpitude which would cause or necessitate the court to attach to the receipt of money an implied contract to refund the same to the county of Los Angeles. As to whether a county is or is not a person within the meaning of the act of 1893, and is entitled to prosecute a suit against the state, we express no opinion, the determination of that question not being necessary to the decision herein. For the reason hereinbefore given, we are of the opinion that the judgment of the trial court, following its order sustaining the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. DANIELS et al.
(Civ. 2546.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 31, 1923.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Mandamus by the County of Los Angeles against the State of California. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Edward T. Bishop, Asst. Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guertena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

PLUMMER, J. This is an action praying for the issuance of a writ of mandate requiring the board of control to audit and allow the claim of the county of Los Angeles for the sum of $12,963.48. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the petitioner's petition without leave to amend. The matter is now before this court on appeal from the judgment entered after the sustaining of the respondents' demurrer as aforesaid. The same questions are involved in this action as were presented for determination in the case of County of Los Angeles v. State of California (No. 2574) 222 Pac. 153, this day decided. For the reasons therein given, we think the writ of mandate was properly denied, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PUTTY. (Cr. 1023.)

1. Criminal law ☞252(4)—That charge of two offenses was combined in one complaint held not deprivation of right to have offense clearly charged.

The fact that a charge of two offenses, one for illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, as to which the justice of the peace had jurisdiction to try the case, and the other for illegal manufacture of liquor, as to which the justice had jurisdiction merely to sit as a committing magistrate on preliminary examination, was combined into one complaint, could not of itself deprive accused of any of his rights specified in Pen. Code, § 1426, requiring an offense to be charged with such clarity so that accused may understand the character of the offense.

2. Criminal law ☞1186(4)—Hearing and disposition by justice of the peace of two offenses at the same time in the capacities of justice of the peace and of committing magistrate not ground for reversal in absence of prejudice.

The fact that, in a hearing before the justice of the peace of a complaint charging in the first count the illegal manufacture of intoxicating liquor, as to which the justice had jurisdiction only to sit as a committing magistrate on preliminary examination, and in the second count charging the illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, as to which the justice had jurisdiction to try, the justice, instead of hearing evidence piecemeal as to each count in his respective capacities of justice of the peace and of committing magistrate, heard the evidence en masse, and on termination of that hearing, sentenced accused on one count and held him over to the superior court on the other count, pursuant to which an information was filed in that court charging illegal manufacture, held not ground for setting aside judgment of conviction in the superior court where it was amply supported by evidence, and in the procedure adopted by the justice of the peace accused was not deprived of any substantial right within Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Victor Putty was convicted of illegally manufacturing intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Mart Coles, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of defendant for the commission of the offense of illegally manufacturing intoxicating liquor. The original complaint, which was filed in the justice's court, contained two counts, the first of which charged defendant with manufacturing liquor contrary to the provisions of the statute, and the second of which accused defendant with illegally having intoxicating liquor in his possession. When the matter came on for hearing before the justice of the peace attention was directed to the fact that as to the second count the justice's court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the same, while as to the first count the only province of the court was to sit as a committing magistrate for the purpose of conducting the preliminary examination provided for by the statute. Counsel for defendant then offered a suggestion that, in view of the fact that defendant had never been in trouble before, and as the officers appeared "to have a case" against defendant, he be permitted to plead guilty to the second count, with the understanding that the action be dismissed as to the first count of the complaint. The prosecuting attorney declined to accede to such suggestion; whereupon the following occurred between counsel:

"Mr. Coles (attorney representing defendant): Very well; we are ready to proceed.

"Mr. Jamieson (prosecuting attorney): You have seen the complaint?

"Mr. Coles: I have seen the complaint. I am just going to let you go ahead.

"Mr. Jamieson: Have you any objection to trying these together? If you have, we will try each one separately.

"Mr. Coles: We are here to answer to the complaint.

"Mr. Jamieson: We will present the case as we have it."

[1, 2] Evidence was then introduced; the defendant was found guilty as to count 2, upon which he was sentenced by the justice's court; and as to count 1 he was held to answer to the superior court. After the information had been filed and the superior court had gained jurisdiction, defendant moved to set the information aside on the ground "that before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate," which motion was denied by the court. From a judgment of conviction in the superior court as to count 1, defendant has appealed to this court—his contention being that the justice of the peace, in conducting a trial of defendant as to count 2 of the complaint, and at the same time holding a preliminary examination as to count 1 thereof, was acting in excess of his jurisdiction.

The statutes of this state provide for two separate and distinct functions of a justice of the peace, one of which being to hear and determine certain matters of either a civil or of a criminal nature, and the other being that of sitting as a committing magistrate in cases triable before the superior court. There can be no question but that, if in the present instance the defendant had been charged in one complaint with the commission of the offense of illegally having intoxicating liquor in his possession, and in another complaint with the offense of illegally manufacturing intoxicating liquor, the justice of the peace would have had jurisdiction thereof acting in his separate respective capacities of trial judge and as committing magistrate; and the fact that the charge of two offenses was combined into one complaint could not have the effect in itself of depriving defendant of any of his rights as specified in section 1426 of the Penal Code, requiring that there be set forth "the offense charged with such particulars of time, place, person, and property as to enable the defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of, and to answer the complaint."

The case of People v. Swain, 5 Cal. App. 421, 90 Pac. 720, is cited by appellant in support of his contention that the justice of the peace was without jurisdiction; but, as we read that case, all it holds, so far as is here applicable, is that, where a justice of the peace in his capacity of committing magistrate conducts a preliminary examination of a defendant upon a charge of grand larceny, he has no jurisdiction, after ordering the discharge of the defendant on such charge, to further order him to appear on a subsequent day before the justice's court on a charge of petty larceny arising out of the facts developed on the preliminary examination. No such question, nor one analogous thereto, arises herein.

The question here presented is that of the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace sitting as a committing magistrate to hold the defendant to answer to the superior court, taking into consideration the fact that contemporaneously therewith he also assumed to act as a justice of the peace in determining the guilt of the defendant on another charge. What possible difference could result as affecting any substantial right of defendant because the justice of the peace heard all the evidence en masse, and upon which he reached the conclusion that as to one count defendant was guilty, and as to the other he should be held to answer to the superior court, rather than that he should have heard the evidence piecemeal, first, as justice of the peace, as affecting the count in which as justice of the peace he had jurisdiction, and immediately thereafter (by some mental process, and perhaps by oral pronouncement, divesting himself of such capacity, but retaining his identical physical position on the bench with the same surroundings and attachés of his court) permitted the introduction in evidence of exactly the same statements by the same witnesses and the same exhibits as were used in the former hearing, is not readily apparent. The law adhors idle acts. In the course which was adopted the defendant was accorded every right and every privilege which he might have possessed assuming that the technical and more burdensome procedure obtained. He complains of no lack of fairness in any respect. His claim is founded entirely upon the possible violation of technical procedure which neither worked to his hardship nor to his disadvantage. If there is nothing here that genuinely requires remedial action because of procedure which has resulted in injury to defendant, no valid reason appears for disturbing the judgment. The whole intent of the law is that no one shall receive unjust treatment. Even though it be conceded that there was some deviation from the beaten path of the law regarding the procedure before the committing magistrate, if in the end the result attained has been identical with the result had the regular course been pursued, no just cause for complaint can be said to exist. The judgment of the superior court was amply supported by the evidence. In such circumstances there is a clear application of the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, to the effect that "no judgment shall be set aside or new trial be granted * * * for any error as to any matter of procedure * * * unless such error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

In addition to what heretofore has been set forth as having occurred at the hearing before the justice of the peace, the following statements were made by counsel for defendant:

"This matter which we have before us now, the testimony would compel the court to bind the man over, would it not? That is to say, the testimony in regard to the high-grade misdemeanor [count 1]. * * * Now, under the testimony here, there is nothing for the court to do but bind the man over for further hearing; but I don't see testimony here which would entitle the court to find on the low-grade misdemeanor charge [count 2]. I suppose the simplest solution, if Burke [deputy district attorney] wants him tried in the superior court, let's try it all in the superior court. Why use the law as a means of oppression? It certainly is one offense, no question about that. * * * We would like this court, if it would see fit, to pass sentence on this defendant for the low-grade misdemeanor of having liquor in his possession, contrary to the Volstead Act (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, § 10138¼ et seq.), or the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), and also, if the court should see fit, to bind the defendant over for having a still and operating a still at the same time. It appears to me there is sufficient proof of the high-grade misdemeanor so that the court might see fit to bind the defendant over."

The record of the proceedings had before the justice of the peace shows a tacit agreement among counsel and the court respecting the procedure which was adopted and carried to completion by the justice of the peace sitting in the dual capacities of justice of the peace and of a committing magistrate. Without further considering the possible estoppel of defendant by reason of his apparent acquiescence in the procedure before the justice of the peace, the fact that no substantial right of defendant was in any wise invaded by reason of the course adopted by the committing magistrate is a sufficient reason for the denial of his appeal to this court.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be, and the same is, affirmed.

GRILLICH v. WEINSHENK et al.
(Civ. 4530.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 22, 1923.)

1. Municipal corporations §705(2)—Driver approaching intersection at speed which would cause contact with automobile at right must yield right of way.

Where the relative speeds of a motorcycle approaching a crossing from the north and an automobile from the west were such that, at the point of intersection of their respective paths they would be brought into contact if such speed were continued, Motor Vehicle Act, § 20, subd. "f," as amended by St. 1919, p. 214, § 12, required driver of motorcycle to yield right of way; and if his omission so to yield proximately caused or contributed to his injury in an ensuing collision he could not recover.

2. Trial §295(3)—Failure of instruction laying down general rule to include qualifications stated elsewhere not cause for reversal.

If instructions, when considered together, harmonize as a whole, and fairly and correctly present the law bearing on the issues, judgment will not be disturbed because a separate instruction does not contain all the conditions and limitations which are to be gathered from the entire text.

3. Trial §229—Repetition in instructions not ordinarily ground for reversal.

If instructions given are correct statements of the law, repetition will not ordinarily be ground for reversal.

4. Master and servant §332(4)—Instruction on father's liability for child's use of automobile held not misleading.

In action against a father and daughter for injury from an automobile collision, instruction that a father, who is not guilty of personal negligence, is not liable for injuries to third persons from negligent driving of an automobile by an adult member of his family for her own purpose, and not that of the father, the automobile being owned and maintained by the father for use and pleasure of his family, was neither misleading nor confusing, and not objectionable in use of word "personal" as conveying idea that father was not liable unless participating in act causing injury.

5. Trial §295(7)—Instruction on motorcycle driver's contributory negligence held without error.

In action for injury to a motorcycle driver from collision with an automobile approaching from the right at a street intersection, defendant's instruction that, if plaintiff saw defendant about to cross the intersection in time to have stopped or slowed down, or could, by the exercise of reasonable care, have stopped and slowed down and avoided the collision, he was guilty of negligence, and if such negligence contributed to the injury he could not recover, held, when read with the entire charge, to be neither misleading nor confusing, and not to withdraw question of contributory negligence from the jury.

6. Appeal and error §843(2)—In negligence case, question of agency of one defendant for another held immaterial in view of finding of no negligence.

In action against a father and daughter for injury from collision with automobile at a street intersection, where the jury found against plaintiff on the issue of negligence, question of the daughter's agency for the father in driving the automobile becomes immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Max E. Grillich against Sydney Weinshenk and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles S. Wheeler, Jr., A. D. Schaffer, and Anthony Podesta, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Chas. W. Haswell and Haswell & Pierce, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

ST. SURE, J. Action for damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff as the result of a collision between a motorcycle operated by himself and an automobile operated by defendant Dorothy Weinshenk, who was giving her sister-in-law a ride in the open air for health's sake. The complaint alleged that the damages were caused through the negligence of Dorothy Weinshenk. Sydney Weinshenk, her father, was made a codefendant by reason of his ownership of the automobile. There was a plea of contributory negligence in the answer. The cause was tried before a jury, which gave a verdict in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appeals, basing his demand for a reversal upon the ground that the trial court gave certain instructions, at the request of defendants, which were erroneous and prejudicial.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Cabrillo street and Twelfth avenue, in San Francisco, at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Cabrillo street is 50 feet wide from curb to curb, and Twelfth avenue is 40 feet wide from curb to curb. Plaintiff was operating a motorcycle and Miss Weinshenk was operating a seven-passenger Cadillac touring car. Plaintiff was traveling on Twelfth avenue, approaching the intersection from the north. Defendant Dorothy Weinshenk was traveling on Cabrillo street, approaching the intersection from the west. From aught that appears the streets were otherwise clear of traffic. A two-story building was situated on the northwest corner of Twelfth avenue and Cabrillo street.

Plaintiff testified that he was going at a speed of 14 or 15 miles an hour; that as he passed the two-story building on the corner he saw a Cadillac car coming about 75 feet away, and that he kept going right along; that the Cadillac was traveling at a speed of 20 or 25 miles an hour; that the Cadillac turned to the right, he turned to the left, and there was a collision. Upon cross-examination plaintiff further testified that he never slackened his speed or applied his brakes after seeing the approaching automobile, but kept going ahead at the same speed; that he could have stopped his motorcycle within a distance of 6 or 8 feet, and that he had a distance of 62 feet in which he could have brought it to a stop; that after he passed the property line of Cabrillo street he saw the automobile all the time, and kept watching it; that the position of the automobile and the motorcycle was such that when they reached the intersection of their paths a contact was inevitable; that the automobile and the motorcycle reached the intersection at the southwest corner of the streets at the same time; that the Cadillac was directly across the path of the motorcycle; that both reached the southwest corner at the same time, when the Cadillac swung to the right and the motorcycle to the left.

Mr. Braunagel, who came upon the scene immediately after the accident, testified that he saw the automobile standing in the street 20 or 30 feet from the corner of Cabrillo street and Twelfth avenue, and that the motorcycle was lying 15 or 20 feet to the rear of the automobile.

Miss Weinshenk testified that as she reached the point of intersection she was driving at a speed of approximately 12 miles an hour; that as she neared the center of the street she saw the motorcycle coming at a speed of 25 miles an hour; that the motorcycle seemed to be wavering in its path; that she watched the motorcyclist until she saw him turn, and then she turned onto the curb to get out of his way; that she could have stopped the car without going onto the sidewalk, but she was endeavoring to avoid a serious accident.

Mrs. Ruth Weinshenk, sister-in-law of Miss Weinshenk, was the only passenger in the automobile. She testified that in her opinion the automobile was traveling at a speed of about 15 miles an hour at the intersection, and that the motorcycle was coming very fast.

[1] Plaintiff complains that the court erred in giving the following instruction:

"I instruct you that, if you find from the evidence the relative speeds of plaintiff's motorcycle and the defendant's automobile were such that at the point of intersection of their respective paths would have brought them in contact if continued, in such case the Motor Vehicle Act of this state required the plaintiff to yield the right of way to this defendant, and if you further find that such omission on his part proximately caused or contributed to this accident, your verdict must be in favor of the defendants."

This instruction embodied defendants' interpretation of section 20, subd. "f," of the Motor Vehicle Act (Statutes of 1919, p. 215), which reads as follows:

"Excepting where controlled by such traffic ordinances or regulations as are permitted under this act the operator of a vehicle shall yield the right of way at the intersection of their paths to a vehicle approaching from the right unless such vehicle approaching from the right is further from the point of the intersection of their paths than such first-named vehicle."

It is urged that the interpretation contained in the instruction is contrary to that stated in Hill v. Jacquemart, 55 Cal. App. 498, 203 Pac. 1021, and Whitworth v. Jones, 58 Cal. App. 492, 209 Pac. 60. In Hill v. Jacquemart the court merely held that a person having the right of way upon entering an intersection does not, under the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 215, § 20, subd. "f"), continue to have it until he has passed out of the intersection, notwithstanding a complete change of course of his vehicle. In Whitworth v. Jones it was held, under certain evidence adduced at the trial, that the court was justified in concluding, as between two machines, which had the right to pass first.

The language of the statute of 1919 refers to the intersection as the "intersecting of their paths." It is the idea of counsel for plaintiff that the statute should be interpreted so that the words "further from the point of intersection of their paths" shall be construed to mean "further from the intersection of the streets upon or along which they are traveling." In addition to the complained-of instruction, and contrary to it, the court also gave an instruction, at the request of plaintiff, adopting plaintiff's construction, which we believe is contrary to the express wording of the statute.

In defense of the complained-of instruction counsel for defendants argue that any rights at a street intersection are correlative, and that the correlative basis of these rights involves the elements of relative position, relative speed, and relative distance from the point of intersection.

In Hilton v. Iseman, 212 Ill. App. 255, it is said that it is axiomatic that the rights of vehicles at street intersections are correlative. In other words, none has the right of way to the exclusion of others; all must proceed with due circumspection so as not to come into collision with other vehicles.

In Barnes v. Barnett, 184 Iowa, 936, 169 N. W. 365, the court said:

"The right of precedence at a crossing, whether given by law or established by custom, has no proper application, except where the travelers or vehicles on the intersecting streets approach the crossing so nearly at the same time and at such rates of speed that, if both proceed, each without regard to the other, a collision or interference between them is reasonably to be apprehended. In such case it is the right of the one having the precedence to continue his course, and it is the duty of the other to yield him the right of way."

Greater Motors Corporation v. Metropolitan Taxi Co., 115 Wash. 451, 197 Pac. 327, was an action for damages for negligence resulting from a collision of two automobiles at a street intersection. An ordinance of the city of Seattle required drivers of automobiles to look out for and give the right of way to vehicles simultaneously approaching a street intersection from the right. The court held that the right of an automobile driver who has the right of way is not exclusive, but is at all times relative and subject to the common-law doctrine that the law must be so used as not to injure another, citing Paulsen v. Klinge, 92 N. J. Law, 99, 104 Atl. 95, and Ray v. Brannan, 196 Ala. 113, 72 South. 16.

This court, in Kinney v. King, 47 Cal. App. 390, 392, 190 Pac. 834, had under consideration a traffic ordinance of the city of Los Angeles which provided:

"The drivers of all vehicles must look out for and give right of way to vehicles approaching simultaneously from their right at street intersections."

This court said, at pages 392, 393, of 47 Cal. App. (190 Pac. 835):

"It may be taken as established by the plaintiffs' evidence in the case that the defendant, in approaching the intersection of the two streets in question at a rate of speed exceeding 30 miles per hour, was guilty of negligence per se, but conceding this to be true, it must also be admitted, in view of the plaintiffs' own evidence, that when the plaintiff, F. E. Kinney, driving his automobile, approached the westerly line of intersection of these two streets, he saw the defendant's automobile traveling at such rate of speed and at such a point on Lake street as would bring the defendant's car in collision with his own if each proceeded on his respective line of approach at his respective rate of speed across such intersecting streets. This being so, the plaintiffs and the defendant must be held to have been 'approaching simultaneously such intersection' within the meaning and intent of the provision of the ordinance above set forth. It was, therefore, the plaintiff's plain duty under such ordinance to give to the defendant the right of way across such intersection."

We are of the opinion, in view of the law and the evidence in the instant case, that the instruction complained of was a proper one.

[2] Plaintiff next complains that the "court erred in giving several instructions directing a verdict and omitting from said instructions the element of the doctrine of last clear chance." It is contended that these instructions, although stating correctly the general rule relating to negligence, were erroneous because they did not include a statement of the "last clear chance" doctrine. We must take the charge together, and, if, without straining any portion of the language, it harmonizes as a whole, and fairly and correctly presents the law bearing on the issues tried, we will not disturb the judgment because a separate instruction does not contain all the conditions and limitations which are to be gathered from the entire text. People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85, cited repeatedly with approval. The evidence establishes the fact that the operators of the vehicles were watching each other as they approached the intersection of their paths. The plaintiff testified that he might have stopped his motorcycle, and thus avoided an accident. Miss Weinschenk did not say that she could have stopped, but she did say she drove onto the sidewalk in an endeavor to avoid a collision. Both continued in their paths until the impact occurred. In Konig v. Lyon et al., 49 Cal. App. 113, 192 Pac. 875, this court held that the doctrine of last clear chance has no application to a case of personal injuries resulting from a collision between a bicycle and a truck, where each driver saw the other approaching and each held to his course. In Blackburn v. Marple, 43 Cal. App. 236, 184 Pac. 873, a case arising from an accident where one driver turned to the left and the other turned toward the right in an effort to avoid a collision, it was held that, under the evidence, there was nothing which would make the doctrine of the last clear chance applicable to either party. An examination of the record before us shows, too, that the jury were instructed on the doctrine of last clear chance at the request of the plaintiff; so we must hold that this assignment is without merit.

Counsel for plaintiff next complain:

That "of the eighteen instructions given at the request of defendants, fourteen embodied the doctrine of contributory negligence in some form; that all of them were read by the court immediately following the instructions given at plaintiff's request, and their effect could not have been otherwise than to saturate the minds of the jurors with this principle and leave with them as a last impression that this emphasis and constant repetition by the court implied fault on the part of plaintiff."

It may be, as suggested, that the order in which the trial court read the instructions made the "last impression" on the minds of the jurors, although we have heard it persuasively maintained that first impressions are the most lasting. This objection, however, borders on the realm of psychology, wherein the law seems loath to enter. And, as we are not permitted to speak ex cathedra upon the subject, we must refrain from further pursuing the discussion.

[3] The court gave 59 instructions, 19 at the request of plaintiff, a like number at the request of defendants, and the remainder of its own motion. It does appear that several propositions of law were separately stated, whereas they might have been contained in a single instruction. A few plain, simple propositions, clearly stated, give a jury a more satisfactory understanding of the principles involved than pages of dissertation. People v. Ah Fung, 17 Cal. 377, 379. Respective counsel, undoubtedly through partisan fervor of advocacy, iterated such forms as, "if you find from the evidence," thus and so and thus and so, "your verdict must be for the defendants," or "for the plaintiff," as the case may be. Plaintiff complains that prejudice resulted to him from such repetition, and he cites the following cases as supporting his view: Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Alexander, 47 Wash. 131, 91 Pac. 626, 629; Kahl v. Chicago, Milwaukee, etc., Ry. Co., 125 Ill. App. 294, 298; Munsey v. Marnet (Tex. Civ. App.) 199 S. W. 687, 690; Storr v. Janes, 84 Md. 282, 35 Atl. 965, 967; Robbins v. Fugit, 189 Ind. 165, 126 N. E. 321, 322; Powell v. Messer, 18 Tex. 402, 406; Murray v. White, 82 Cal. 119, 23 Pac. 35.

C., M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Alexander was an action to condemn land. The court held that certain evidence admitted as to damages was erroneous and upon that ground sent the case back for retrial. In passing, the court said:

"Appellant contends that the trial court erred in unnecessary repetitions of its instructions, especially of those favorable to respondents. It contends that such action had a tendency to place undue and particular stress upon such instructions, was prejudicial to appellant, and constituted reversible error. The instructions were frequently and unnecessarily repeated. In view of the new trial to be granted herein, we will state that such a course should be avoided by trial judges. * * * Although a judgment might not in every instance be reversed for such unnecessary repetitions, it might in furtherance of justice sometimes become necessary to grant a reversal. 1 Blashfield on Instructions to Juries, § 108; 2 Current Law, 470."

Kahl v. C., M. & St. P. Ry. Co. was an action for damages for negligence. The court considered a series of instructions, and held that the jury was improperly instructed with respect to the duty of the railroad company to give crossing signals. An instruction on ordinary care was also held erroneous. The court said:

"Eleven of defendant's instructions contained repetitions of the doctrine that to entitle plaintiff to recover the evidence must show that deceased was in the exercise of due care for his safety, that his death was caused by the negligence of defendant and that his own negligence did not cause or contribute to it. We are of opinion that the frequent repetition of the same principle coming from the learned and able judge, whose fairness cannot be questioned, tended to create the impression that the court thought this element of the case should be particularly emphasized and was calculated to have an undue influence on the minds of the jury. While repetitions are not always avoidable and are not necessarily erroneous, when they are so frequent upon a vital point, as is the case in this record, we think the effect could not be otherwise than harmful."

Munsey v. Marnet was a suit for the purpose of canceling oil leases. The court reversed the judgment primarily for the reason that a single instruction on the subject of forfeiture was deemed to be prejudicial. The court commented as follows:

"In reference to the manner of submitting the issue to the jury, it is sufficient to say that, while in a general way either side is entitled to a full affirmative presentation of the case or defense, and a special grouping of facts in certain cases, any repetition or emphasis thereof that essentially gave such case, issue, or defense prominence would be erroneous, and the rule should be observed upon another trial."

Storr v. James was an action for trespass quare clausum fregit. The judgment was affirmed. The court, in passing upon a complaint that the court erred in refusing additional instructions, said:

"A refusal to grant other prayers which reiterate the same principles, though couched in different words, is not erroneous."

Robbins v. Fugit involved the contest of a will; issue undue influence and unsoundness of mind. The judgment was reversed because of inaccuracy of instructions on the subjects of monomania and hallucination. The court also expressed the opinion that the instructions were entirely too voluminous, and further observed that, while needless repetition is not always reversible error, it is always bad practice.

Powell v. Messer was a suit upon a promissory note. One of the grounds relied upon for reversal was error of the court in refusing to give certain instructions. The court held that it was proper to refuse the instructions, remarking that it was the court's duty to guard against repetitions.

Murray v. White (the only California authority cited on this point) was an action to set aside a transfer of property in fraud of creditors. The court said:

"It is apparent from appellant's brief that his main objection to the instructions of the court on this point is, that they 'placed too prominently before the jury the law applicable to partnership relations.' But that would be an unsubstantial ground for the reversal of a judgment, unless in a case much more extreme in that respect than the one at bar."

The general rule seems to be that the mere fact of repetition is not alone, in every case, reversible error. And we are not permitted to reverse a case because of an erroneous instruction unless it shall appear from the record that such instruction was prejudicial, and also that by reason of such instruction the party complaining suffered substantial injury, and that a different result would have been probable if such an instruction had not been given. There shall be no presumption that error is prejudicial, or that injury was done if error is shown. Section 475, Code Civ. Proc.

In the case of Gandy v. Bissell's Estate, 5 Neb. Unof. 184, 190, 97 N. W. 632, 634, it appears that the instructions given by the trial court contained conclusions similar to those complained of in the case at bar. The court, in affirming the judgment, said:

"The complaint that these instructions are almost identical seems to be well founded, but we are unable to say as a matter of law that the repetition of the same legal principle in the manner here given was prejudicial error calling for a reversal of the judgment."

While the practice of repetition has been frequently disapproved, yet, if the instructions given are correct statements of the law, repetition will not ordinarily be ground for reversal. Lecklieder v. Chicago City Railway, 172 Ill. App. 557, 564. We have read the entire charge given by the court in the case before us; we have considered therewith the evidence adduced at the trial, and we are constrained to believe that the instructions attacked are not open to the objection that they were prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff.

[4] Plaintiff next complains that the following instruction was erroneous:

"I instruct you that a father who is not guilty of personal negligence in the matter is not liable for damages sustained by third parties by reason of the negligent driving of an automobile by an adult member of his family, when such member of the family is using the same for his or her own purposes, and not those of the father, the automobile being owned and maintained by the father for the general convenience, use, and pleasure of his family, and the particular member of the family operating the same having his permission to use the same at his or her pleasure."

It is contended that the instruction is misleading and confusing; that the use of the word "personal" conveys the idea that the defendant Sydney Weinschenk is not liable to plaintiff unless he, himself, actually participated in the act of negligence causing the injury, and the phraseology is involved and confusing. The instruction is neither misleading nor confusing. It contains a clear statement of the law. The objection to the use of the word "personal" is trifling. The instruction follows the rule laid down in Spence v. Fisher, 184 Cal. 209, 193 Pac. 255, 14 A. L. R. 1083.

[5] Plaintiff also attacks the following instruction given at the request of defendants:

"If you find from the evidence the plaintiff saw the defendant about to cross the intersection of Twelfth avenue and Cabrillo street in time to have stopped or to have slowed down, or that by the exercise of reasonable care the plaintiff could have stopped or slowed down his motorcycle and have avoided this accident, then I instruct you that he was guilty of contributory negligence; and if you further find that such negligence either proximately caused or contributed to this accident your verdict must be in favor of the defendant."

It is contended that this instruction is not only misleading and confusing, but withdraws from the jury the question whether plaintiff was or was not guilty of contributory negligence. This instruction, like others singled out for criticism, should be read in conjunction with the entire charge. So read it is neither confusing nor misleading, nor does it withdraw any question from the jury. Construed in reference to the proof, the instruction was a proper one. Plaintiff's further objection that the instruction deprived him of the benefit of the doctrine of last clear chance has heretofore herein been discussed and disposed of.

[6] In his last assignment plaintiff digresses from the line of attack stated in his opening brief, to the effect that he would "rely upon, and confine himself to, errors in law, consisting of the giving, at the request of defendants, of erroneous and prejudicial instructions to the jury." He asserts that the "evidence is sufficient to justify a finding by the jury that Dorothy Weinschenk was acting as agent for defendant Sydney Weinschenk in operating the Cadillac." The facts upon the subject in the instant case are quite similar to those mentioned in the case of Spence v. Fisher, 184 Cal. 209, 210, 193 Pac. 255, 14 A. L. R. 1083. The court, at the request of plaintiff, fully and elaborately instructed the jury upon the question of express or implied agency. The jury having found against plaintiff upon the issue of negligence, the question of agency becomes immaterial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

BEARDSLEY v. JOHNSON et al. (two cases).
(Civ. 4130.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 24, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨434—Appeal dismissed where no appearance made or points and authorities filed by appellants.

An appeal will be dismissed where there is no appearance on part of appellants and no points and authorities are filed in their behalf.

2. Costs ⇨260(1)—Court may award damages for frivolous appeal.

Where it appears from the record that there is no merit in an appeal and that the same is frivolous, the court may award damages in favor of respondents against appellants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Actions by John Beardsley and Charles Edward Beardsley, by John Beardsley, his guardian ad litem, against F. O. Johnson and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, and F. W. Nightingill, of San Francisco, for appellants.

John Beardsley, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

CURTIS, J. [1] There being no appearance on the part of appellants and no points and authorities being filed in their behalf, the appeal is dismissed.

[2] It further appearing to this court, after examination of the record herein, that there is no merit in this appeal and that the same is frivolous, it is hereby ordered that respondents recover of appellants as damages the sum of $100.

SOARES v. DAVIS, Agent. (Civ. 4414.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 22, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 21, 1924.)

Master and servant ⇨278(18)—Evidence held insufficient to prove negligence of railroad in not warning section hand.

In action for death of section hand struck by train, in which it was claimed that the railroad was negligent in not giving the section hand warning of the train's approach, evidence held insufficient to sustain finding of negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Marie Louise Soares, also known as Marie Louise Sorce, administratrix of the estate of Joseph C. Soares, also known as Joseph C. Sorce, deceased, against James C. Davis, as Agent designated by the President of the United States of America, under the Transportation Act of 1920. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Louis O'Neal and Wm. F. James, both of San Jose, for appellant.

Archer Bowden and John J. Jones, both of San Jose, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff, as administratrix of the estate of Joseph C. Soares, recovered judgment in the sum of $1,500, as damages for his death caused by being struck by a railroad train operated by the defendant as Agent for the United States government under the Federal Transportation Act of 1920 (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, § 10071¼ et seq.). The case was tried without a jury, and the trial court returned findings to the effect that the death of Soares resulted from his being struck by a locomotive attached to a train, and operated by the defendant, and that it was caused by the negligence of the defendant, "by his negligent operation, direction, and control of said engine and coaches and said railroad track." The defendant had specially pleaded the defenses of contributory negligence and assumed risk, but upon these issues no findings were made.

Upon this appeal appellant assigns as error the failure of the trial court to find on these two special defenses, and error in the findings upon the defendant's negligence. It is not necessary to discuss the points relating to the court's failure to find upon the two special defenses because a review of the evidence conclusively shows that the finding upon appellant's negligence is not supported.

Briefly, the facts are that the deceased was employed in a section gang of 7 men under the charge of a foreman, and at the time of the accident was working on the railroad tracks of the Southern Pacific Company at a point just outside of the city of Santa Clara. He was working at a point about 250 or 300 feet from the rest of the section gang as the train operated by the appellant approached. The foreman, who was stationed near the body of the section gang, warned them to get out of the way of the train and also called to the deceased, warning him of the approaching danger. The deceased was looking directly at the foreman at the time this warning was given, and no contention is made that he failed to hear the warning. In addition to this the engineer of the train gave several loud sharp whistles of warning, and the bell upon the engine was automatically ringing throughout the approach of the train and until after the deceased was struck. All the evidence goes to show that the deceased was in possession of all his faculties of seeing and hearing, that he could not have failed either to have heard or seen the various warnings of danger which were given him. There is no conflict in the evidence except as to the giving of the whistles by the engineer. In this respect both the engineer and a number of other witnesses testified positively that the whistle was sounded several times during the approach of the train, and always at a time which would have enabled the deceased to get out of a place of danger. Two witnesses on behalf of respondent testified that they did not hear the whistle sounded until after the deceased was struck. There is, however, no denial of the positive testimony that the foreman gave a timely warning and that the bell on the engine was continually sounding the approach of the train.

There is no contention that the appellant violated any ordinance, statute, or other regulation in the operation of the train, that the tools, appliances, or equipment were unsafe or inefficient, that the train was operated at an illegal or unreasonable rate of speed, or, in fact, that any specific act on the part of the appellant in the operation of the train was careless or negligent.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed.

DRUMHILLER et al. v. WRIGHT, City Clerk, et al. (Civ. 4612.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 23, 1923.)

1. Parties $\S$ 40(2)—“Interest” necessary to intervene in suit between others, stated.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 387, restricting right to intervene to persons having an interest in the matter in litigation or success of either party, or an interest against both, such interest must be of such direct and immediate character that intervenor will gain or lose by the direct operation of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interest.]

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 36(3)—Bonds of city consolidated with another are not a lien on private property.

Assuming that, after consolidating two municipalities, all property within both will be taxable to meet outstanding bonds of one city as they become due, such bonds are nevertheless not a lien on private property, though they may lead to the creation of a tax lien.

3. Mandamus $\S$ 153—Property owner held not entitled to intervene in proceeding to compel city clerk to transmit records of election to consolidate cities; “interest.”

Where electors and taxpayers after proceedings for consolidation of their city with another in attempted conformity to St. 1913, p. 577, as amended by St. 1917, p. 20, petitioned for mandate compelling the city clerk to transmit records of the election to the secretary or state as required by statute and the clerk demurred, another property owner, who had brought a quo warranto proceeding to test the election, held not entitled to intervene, as he had no “interest in the subject-matter of the litigation,” as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 387.

4. Injunction $\S$ 85(1)—Superior court without power to restrain city clerk from transmitting record of special election to secretary of state.

The superior court was without power to enjoin execution of St. 1913, p. 577, as amended by St. 1917, p. 26, requiring city clerks to transmit the records of special consolidation elections to the secretary of state, though the election were illegal in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 3423.

Application by Dora V. Drumhiller and another for writ of mandate directed to Allen H. Wright, City Clerk of San Diego, and another. Writ granted.

Jesse George, of San Diego, for petitioners. S. J. Higgins, City Atty., and Arthur F. H. Wright, Deputy City Atty., both of San Diego, for respondents.

Sloane & Sloane, Crouch & Sanders, and F. G. Blood, all of San Diego, amici curiæ.

CONREY, P. J. Petition for writ of mandate to compel respondent city clerk of the city of San Diego to certify and transmit to the secretary of state copies of certain records and a statement of facts concerning a special election relating to a proposed consolidation of the city of East San Diego and the city of San Diego. The consolidation proceedings were in attempted compliance with an act to provide for consolidation of municipal corporations as adopted in the year 1913 and amended in the year 1917. Stats. 1913, p. 577; Stats. 1917, p. 26.

The petition herein sets forth proceedings conducted by the city of East San Diego and by the city of San Diego, prima facie sufficient to establish the conditions which, under the provisions of section 4 of said act, as amended in the year 1917, imposed upon the clerk of the city of San Diego the duty to make and certify and transmit to the secretary of state the documents and statement demanded by petitioners herein. The law requires that the same shall be filed by the secretary of state, and provides that from and after the date of the filing of said documents in the office of the secretary of state "the annexation of such territory shall be deemed to be and shall be complete," etc. The petitioners are residents, electors, and taxpayers of the city of East San Diego.

Without formal notice of application for a peremptory writ, and without the issuance of an alternative writ, counsel for petitioners and for respondents, together with Mr. Sanders, one of the attorneys appearing here as amici curiæ, severally waived notice and agreed on presentation of this matter to the court at a stated time. At that time respondents demurred to the petition on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or to entitle petitioners to any relief against respondents. At the same time Sloane & Sloane, representing one Charles H. Harris, a resident and taxpayer of the city of East San Diego, asked leave to file a petition for intervention by said Harris and requested that he be allowed to intervene in this proceeding. The petition proposed for filing sets forth the pendency in the superior court of San Diego county a quo warranto action wherein people of the state ex rel. Charles H. Harris are plaintiffs, and the city of East San Diego and the city of San Diego are defendants. Petitioner Harris in said proposed complaint in intervention sets forth facts upon which he contends that the granting of the writ of mandate in this proceeding will injuriously affect and damage the said Harris and prevent the relief prayed for in said quo warranto action. The court announced that the application for leave to intervene would be submitted, for decision, at this time.

[1] Section 387, Code of Civil Procedure, provides for intervention in an action or proceeding, by any person "who has an interest in the matter in litigation, or in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both." It is an established rule that—

"The interest mentioned in the Code which entitles a person to intervene in a suit between other persons must be in the matter in litigation and of such a direct and immediate character that the intervener will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment." Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 62, 73 Am. Dec. 569; Elliott v. Superior Court, 168 Cal. 727, 734, 145 Pac. 101.

[2, 3] We may assume it to be true that (as contended by counsel for Mr. Harris), upon completion of the consolidation proceedings, if the same are valid, all property within the present city of East San Diego, equally with all property within the present city of San Diego, will be subject to taxation to obtain funds with which to meet certain outstanding municipal bonds of the city of San Diego as they become due. But those bonds are not a lien upon private property, although they may at some time lead to the creation of a tax lien. The completion of the annexation proceedings will not create any lien upon the property of Mr. Harris. Therefore, we are of the opinion that the proposed intervener can lose nothing by the direct legal operation or effect of a judgment granting the writ of mandate demanded in this proceeding.

Moreover, it does not appear that there exists any collusion or fraud whereby the respondents are failing to defend against the granting of the writ demanded. It being conceded that they are acting in good faith, they are not bound to interpose objections which they may think cannot be sustained, even though others in the situation of Mr. Harris or his counsel may be of a different opinion.

For the foregoing reasons the application for leave to file the proposed petition in intervention is denied. It was understood, however, that in the event of denial of the proposed intervention, the argument presented by counsel for Mr. Harris against the granting of a writ of mandate would be considered as an argument presented by counsel as amici curiæ. That argument will be thus considered by the court in disposing of this case.

The petition for writ of mandate in the paragraph thereof showing reasons for making the application to this court, and not to the superior court of the county of San Diego, states that in an action entitled Tocque v. City of San Diego et al., now pending in said superior court, a judge of that court, without jurisdiction and contrary to the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 3423 of the Civil Code and the provisions of the second subdivision 4 of section 526, Code of Civil Procedure, has issued an order restraining the city clerk of the city of San Diego, respondent herein, "from so performing his duties under the statute hereinabove described."

[4] Assuming that said restraining order was issued by reason of some alleged illegality of said annexation proceedings, nevertheless we are of the opinion that said court was without power to restrain said city clerk from performing the acts demanded of him by petitioner for the writ of mandate in this proceeding. Therefore the existence of such restraining order does not affect the obligation of the clerk to file said documents and statement, or the right of petitioner to a writ of mandate compelling the performance of said duty. "An injunction cannot be granted: * * * Fourth. To prevent the execution of a public statute, by officers of the law, for the public benefit." Civ. Code, § 3423.

We think that our conclusion on this question is in accordance with the law as set forth in People v. Board of Supervisors, 75 Cal. 179, 16 Pac. 776. In that action it was sought to enjoin the defendants from declaring the result of an election and from giving notice thereof as provided by law upon the question of removal of a county seat. It was alleged that the election was illegally ordered by the board when it had no jurisdiction so to do. The question as stated by the court was:

"Did or did not the court below have any right to grant an injunction to prevent the board of supervisors from announcing and publishing the result of an election?"

First setting out the provisions of the statute under which the duties of the board were declared with reference to announcing the result of such an election, the court observed that the board of supervisors had acted upon what appeared to them a legal petition as prescribed by law, and had ordered the election, which was held in due form of law. "The board of supervisors, whose good faith is nowhere questioned, believe they legally ordered the election; it was held under all the requisite forms of law, but the appellants seek to enjoin them from announcing the result of such election, which was ordered and held in good faith; and to do this they seek, in effect, to have determined the question as to whether the old county seat is to remain such, or another place has been duly elected to be such county seat. * * * The board of supervisors are simply endeavoring to perform a duty enjoined on them by law to announce the result of an election, which in good faith they believe to have been duly ordered and legally held, and we think it would be a most dangerous interference by the courts to prevent them from performing a legal duty, and in effect, to determine the result of a contested election, in this action for an injunction." It was therefore determined that the superior court was right in refusing the injunction. See, also, Reclamation District v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 681, 154 Pac. 845; Randolph v. County of Stanislaus, 44 Cal. App. 322, 326, 186 Pac. 625.

The demurrer to the petition herein is overruled. There being no further answer, the relief demanded should be granted.

Let the peremptory writ issue.

WOODS v. HYDE, City Treasurer.
(Civ. 2639.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 17, 1923.)

I. Appeal and error §664(1)—Reversal of judgment on demurrer held unwarranted.

That the file mark on defendant's demurrer as it appeared in the transcript bore a later date than the judgment based thereon held not to warrant a reversal of the judgment on the theory that the demurrer was oral and not written as required by law, where the judgment itself recited the fact of filing and sustaining of the demurrer; there being no other evidence as to the date of filing.

2. Judgment §279—Minute order no part of judgment roll.

A minute order is no part of the judgment roll.

3. Records §7—Placing file mark on paper ministerial act not affecting date of filing.

The placing of a file mark on a paper is a ministerial act, delay in which does not change the time of filing, a paper being deemed filed when presented at the proper office, especially when deposited with directions to file.

4. Judgment §525—Recitals presumed correct.

In a direct attack, a judgment and its recitals will be presumed correct in absence of any showing as to what the true facts are.

5. Mandamus §143(1)—Proceeding one at law subject to bar by limitations.

Mandamus is an action at law subject to the rules applicable to common-law proceedings and within the statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 343.

6. Limitation of actions §34(7), 39(10), 66(15), 167(1)—Mandamus to compel sale of property in satisfaction of bond held barred by limitations.

An action to compel a city treasurer to make a sale of a particular lot and apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of a bond covering the cost of street improvement work, and made a lien upon that particular lot, held barred by the statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 338, 343), where more than six years had elapsed after the maturity of the bond before making demand for the sale, notwithstanding the act in accordance with which the bond was issued (St. 1893, p. 36, § 4) provided that the assessment should be a lien on the property until fully paid; the lien being deemed still to exist though the remedy for its enforcement was lost.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Mary Woods for writ of mandamus to be directed against L. C. Hyde, City Treasurer of the City of Visalia. Judgment for defendant, on demurrer, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Earl A. Bagby, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

E. I. Feemster, of Visalia, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff and appellant in this action is the owner and holder of a certain street improvement bond No. 5, series No. 2 of the city of Visalia, of the par value of $117.76, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, issued by the city of Visalia, on the 12th day of April, 1911, covering street improvement work in the city of Visalia under the provisions of an act providing a system of street improvement and issuance of bonds therefor, approved February 27, 1893. The bond in question was given to cover the expenses for street improvement chargeable to lot No. 5 of block No. 92 in the city of Visalia. The term of the bond was fixed at 5 years. It was further provided that an even annual proportion of the whole amount due should become payable on the 2d day of January of each year after date until the whole bond should be paid with all accrued interest. Interest coupon called for semiannual payment. The bond further provided that should default be made in the annual payment upon the principal or in any payment of interest, the holder of said bond should be entitled to declare the whole amount remaining unpaid due and payable and to have said lot advertised and sold as provided by law. Only one payment was ever made on said bond, to wit, the sum of $23.55, covering interest from the 12th day of April, 1911, until the 2d day of January, 1912. On the 16th day of May, 1922, the plaintiff demanded in writing that the city treasurer, the defendant in this action, proceed to advertise and sell said lot and apply the proceeds of such sale toward the payment of the principal and interest due on the bond held by the plaintiff. The defendant refused to comply with the demand of the plaintiff, and thereupon the plaintiff filed her complaint herein praying for an order of the court directing and commanding the defendant to make sale of said property or to show cause upon a certain date why a writ of mandate should not be issued compelling him so to do.

[1] To the plaintiff's petition the defendant demurred on the ground that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the provisions of sections 337, 338, and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. The first point made for reversal in this action is that the demurrer interposed by the defendant was oral and not a written pleading as provided by law. The transcript on appeal shows the following file marks on the records in said action: Complaint indorsed filed May 22, 1922; order for alternative writ of mandate indorsed filed May 22, 1922; writ of mandate with return indorsed filed June 5, 1922; judgment of dismissal indorsed filed November 1, 1922; certificate of judgment roll dated November 20, 1922; notice of appeal indorsed filed November 21, 1922; demurrer indorsed filed November 22, 1922. From this recital it appears that the file mark indorsed upon the paper denominated defendant's demurrer bears the date subsequent to the notice of appeal in this action, and upon this fact the appellant contends a showing is made from which this court must conclude that there was no demurrer interposed by the defendant at the time the hearing was had in the court below, and that the order of the court sustaining the defendant's demurrer was made at a time when it had no jurisdiction so to do, and that the judgment based thereon has no foundation in law upon which to rest and should be reversed.

The judgment itself bearing the signature of the trial court is as follows:

"Whereas this cause was regularly heard by the court on the 5th day of June, 1922, upon the issues of law made and joined by plaintiff's petition for writ of mandate and the defendant's demurrer thereto; and whereas the court by its order duly made and entered upon the minutes on said 5th day of June, 1922, sustained the said defendant's demurrer on the ground that it appears on the face of said petition that the cause of action sought to be alleged therein is barred by the provisions of sections 337 and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"Now, therefore, it is ordered by the court that the said cause be, and the same is hereby, dismissed."

[2, 3] The minute order referred to in the judgment recites that the demurrer of the defendant to plaintiff's petition having come on regularly for hearing, etc., the court proceeded to hear the same and then made its order as recited in the judgment. The minute order is no part of the judgment roll (see De Pedrarena v. Hotchkiss, 95 Cal. 636, 30 Pac. 787), and for just what purpose this minute order was inserted in the record does not appear. The judgment of the court as herein set forth recites the fact of the defendant's demurrer being before it upon the hearing and that such demurrer was sustained. Whether the demurrer was in fact or was not in fact before the court has not otherwise been made to appear. Appellant apparently relies upon the file mark of the clerk hereinbefore referred to. This court, however, has held that—

"A paper is deemed to be filed when presented at the proper office, especially when there deposited with directions to file it." Dillon v. Superior Court, 24 Cal. App. 760, 142 Pac. 503.

The placing of the file mark on the paper is a ministerial act to be performed by the clerk, and the fact that such file mark is not indorsed on the paper until a subsequent date does not change the time of filing.

Outside of the judgment itself there is no other evidence of the date of filing of the defendant's demurrer. The judgment itself recites the fact of filing, and, there being nothing to contradict such recital, it will be presumed to be correct. This principle was enunciated in the early case of Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742, and has been followed ever since.

[4] This is a direct attack upon the judgment, but in the absence of any showing as to what the true facts are the judgment and its recitals will be presumed to be correct. Kahn v. Matthai, 115 Cal. 689, 47 Pac. 698;

Perry v. Noonan Furniture Co., 8 Cal. App. 35, 95 Pac. 1128.

Has the statute of limitations run in this case? Section 4 of the Act of 1893, in accordance with which the bond in this case was issued, contains the following provision:

"The assessment shall be a first lien upon the property affected thereby, until the bond issued for the payment thereof, and the accrued interest thereon, shall be fully paid." St. 1893, p. 36.

Relying upon this provision of section 4 of the Act of 1893 and the case of Lantz v. Fishburn, 17 Cal. App. 583, 120 Pac. 1068, counsel for appellant argues that the statute has not run and that this proceeding in mandamus may be maintained. An examination of the case of Lantz v. Fishburn, supra, discloses that the question of whether the bar of the statute had arisen in a case similar to this was not before the court and therefore was not decided. The action in Lantz v. Fishburn was one to quiet title and followed the equitable rule that where a lien exists the owner of the property is not entitled to have a decree of the court entered quieting title to his property until he has done equity by paying off all liens which in good conscience should be discharged. It is also held that section 2911, Civil Code, relating to the extinguishment of liens by the lapse of time, was inapplicable by reason of the wording of the statute which continued the lien until actual payment. Under such circumstances, there could, of course, be no judgment entered quieting title as against such lien until it had been extinguished in the manner provided by section 4 of the Act of 1893.

The rule established in this state, however, makes a distinction between the existence of a right and the exercise of a remedy. In other words, a person may be possessed of a right and by reason of inaction or failure to proceed lose his remedy. The provision of section 4 of the act referred to is very similar in purpose and expression to section 3716 of the Political Code relating to liens created by taxes. That section reads:

"Every tax has the effect of a judgment against the person, and every lien created by this title has the force and effect of an execution duly levied against all property of the delinquent; the judgment is not satisfied nor the lien removed until the taxes are paid or the property sold for the payment thereof."

The right of a city or county or state to its taxes under this section would seem to be extinguishable only by actual payment, and such seems to be the rule. But the existence of the remedy has no such indefinite period of time and is not made to rest upon the fact of actual payment. The leading case upon this question and the one followed by the Supreme Court of this state is that of the State of Nevada v. Yellow Jacket Silver Mining Co., 14 Nev. 220. All phases of the running of the statute as against the remedy or proceedings for enforcing their collection were thoroughly considered. The Nevada statute is practically identical with that of this state, and it was there held that while the lien continued the remedy by action was barred. In San Francisco v. Luning, 73 Cal. 610, 15 Pac. 311, in an action brought to recover judgment for delinquent taxes, it was held that such an action was barred by the statute of limitations; that such an action was not an action to foreclose the lien. The distinction was drawn between an action to foreclose the lien and an action to collect the taxes. In Lewis v. Rothchild, 92 Cal. 625, 28 Pac. 805, in an action involving a contract of sale, it was held that tax liens were not extinguished by mere lapse of time; but the question of the existence of a remedy by action was not considered. The only question before the court and the one really decided was that the liens created a cloud upon the title and the purchaser could not be required to accept title and make payment while the liens remained undischarged. The next case upon the subject which has come to our attention is that of San Diego City v. Higgins, 115 Cal. 170, 46 Pac. 923. The court there squarely met and decided the question which is presented to us in this case. It is there held that an action to recover municipal taxes and to enforce the lien thereof is subject to the limitation of subdivision 1 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure respecting an action upon a liability created by statute and is barred by the statute of limitations. The case of Lewis v. Rothchild, supra, was taken up and considered, and it was said that the language used in that case was to be read in the light of the facts thereof. The Nevada case to which we have referred was also considered and the reasoning therein contained approved. The court in the case of San Diego City v. Higgins also refers to the case of San Francisco v. Jones (C. C.) 20 Fed. 188, and adopts the following language as its own:

"Under these and other provisions of the Political Code no action is necessary to collect a valid tax. But it is claimed that these provisions take the case of an action under the statute to recover a tax out of the statute of limitations. In the case already cited the Supreme Court of Nevada, on a similar statute, decided otherwise, and we think correctly. * * * The lien is but an incident to the tax—the money due—and, like the case of a mortgage, when an action to recover the debt is barred, the suit to enforce the lien is also barred. This has long been the settled doctrine in this state in relation to a mortgage. Neither the debt nor the lien is extinguished in the case of a mortgage, in any other sense than in the case of a tax, and the statutory lien incident to it. The remedy by action is barred, whatever the case may be as to other remedies. * * * We see no good reason, at this day, and under our laws for the levy and collection of taxes, for allowing the state to vex parties with suits for taxes after the lapse of many years that is not equally applicable to private parties. The state has officers specially appointed to attend to these particular duties, and no others, and if they neglect their duties the state which appoints them, if anyone, should be the party to suffer."

The case of San Diego City v. Higgins was followed by the case of Barnes v. Glide, 117 Cal. 1, 48 Pac. 804, 59 Am. St. Rep. 153, where the plaintiff sought by mandamus to compel the trustees of the swamp land district to levy a tax to pay warrants issued 14 years before the commencement of the proceeding. It was held that the action was barred. It was also held in that case that where an officer's duty to take a prescribed action was dependent upon a demand being made, a party entitled to make the demand cannot by failure so to do prevent the running of the statute. In Vickrey v. Maier, 164 Cal. 384, 129 Pac. 273, it is held:

"That where an actual demand is essential as a condition precedent to a complete right of action for the recovery of money, such demand must be made within a reasonable time after it can lawfully be made, or within a reasonable time after the contract by its terms contemplates that it should be made, and that, unless there are peculiar circumstances affecting the question, a time coincident with that of the statute of limitations, will be deemed reasonable." Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 Pac. 899; Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 60, 47 Pac. 877.

[5] It is also held in this state that an action in mandamus is barred by the provisions of section 343, Code of Civil Procedure. Dodge v. Police Com., 1 Cal. App. 608, 82 Pac. 699; Jones v. Police Com., 141 Cal. 96, 74 Pac. 696; Barnes v. Glide, 117 Cal. 1, 48 Pac. 804, 59 Am. St. Rep. 153. The rule appears to be also that mandamus is an action of law subject to the rules applicable to the common-law proceedings. 18 R. C. L. 89; Barnes v. Glide, 117 Cal. 1, 48 Pac. 804, 59 Am. St. Rep. 153.

[6] The transcript shows that more than six years elapsed after the maturity of the bond upon which this action is based and the date of making demand upon the treasurer of the city of Visalia for sale of the property upon which the bond constituted a lien and also before the beginning of this action. Under the authorities which we have cited, there is but one conclusion to be reached. The statute of limitations had run at the time of the institution of the plaintiff's action, and even though the lien for the amount of the bond may still exist upon the property the remedy by mandamus to enforce sale is now barred by the provisions of the Code to which we have referred.

The judgment of the trial court is hereby affirmed.

84 Cal. App. 390

PEOPLE v. WALLER. (Cr. 707.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 15, 1923.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1167(1)—Conviction of one offense under information charging two offenses held not to require reversal.

Where an information based on Pen. Code, $\S$ 154, charged first that accused sold property with intent to defraud, hinder, and delay creditors, and then that he fraudulently removed the proceeds of and receipts from sales to defraud, hinder, and delay his creditors, and the jury found him guilty under the first charge as alleged, the alleged defect in the information held not ground for reversal, where all of the evidence tending to show a fraudulent removal of the proceeds and receipts from sales was admissible to prove the first charge.

2. Indictment and information $\S$ 110(59)—Averment of means employed in committing crime held not necessary.

Where, in a prosecution under Pen. Code, $\S$ 154, the offense is charged in the language of the statute, section 952, requiring a statement of the particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense, does not make it necessary to allege the manner or means employed to perpetrate the crime.

3. Indictment and information $\S$ 110(3)—Allegations describing offense in statutory language sufficient when statute describes offense.

When a statute defines or describes the acts constituting a particular offense, an indictment describing those acts in the language employed in the statute, by applying them concretely to the person charged, is sufficient.

4. Fraudulent conveyances $\S$ 329—Pen. Code, $\S$ 154, held to completely define offense sought to be prevented.

An act which is done with intent to defraud creditors is necessarily fraudulent, and hence, if the word "fraudulently" were omitted from Pen. Code, $\S$ 154, prescribing the punishment for one "fraudulently" removing, selling, conveying, assigning, or concealing property with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, the remaining parts of the section would completely define the offense sought to be prevented.

5. Indictment and information $\S$ 110(59)—Information charging offense in language of statute held sufficient.

An information charging, in the language of Pen. Code, $\S$ 154, the offense of fraudulently selling and conveying property with intent to defraud, hinder, and delay creditors, as prohibited by that section, held sufficient in view of the rule applicable to charging embezzlement, which may be charged in the language of the statute (section 503).

6. Witnesses $\S$ 337(5)—Not proper for district attorney to ask accused if he had been charged with commission of felony.

District attorney, if acting in good faith, had the right, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2051, to ask accused on cross-examination if he had been convicted of a felony, but it was not proper to ask him if he had been charged with the commission of a felony.

7. Criminal law ⚡1170½(2)—Question whether accused had been charged and convicted of felony held not prejudicial in view of negative answer.

Since one cannot be convicted of a felony without first having been charged with the commission, the charge is implied by the question whether he had been so convicted, and, where accused answered in the negative both parts of the double question as to whether he had been charged and convicted of a felony, no prejudice could have resulted from the question.

8. Criminal law ⚡728(1)—Accused held to waive district attorney's alleged misconduct in asking improper question.

Accused must be deemed to have waived the alleged misconduct of the district attorney in asking him an improper question, where accused's counsel previously withdrew his objection to a like question after the court had sustained it, and thereafter permitted, without objection, a line of similar questions.

9. Criminal law ⚡1037(1)—Alleged misconduct of prosecuting attorney not assignable as error for first time on appeal.

The alleged misconduct of the district attorney not having been assigned as such at the trial, it could not be assigned as error on appeal.

10. Witnesses ⚡277(2)—Cross-examining accused with reference to aliases held proper.

Where on his direct examination accused testified he had never assumed the various aliases set forth in the information, the district attorney's questioning of accused on cross-examination along the same line held not improper.

11. Constitutional law ⚡48—Invalidity of statute must be clear before it will be declared void.

To justify a court in declaring a law unconstitutional, its invalidity should appear with the greatest clearness and certainty.

12. Criminal law ⚡304(2)—That stock in trade may be removed or sold without observance is common knowledge.

The facility with which a part of a stock in trade may be removed or sold without attracting attention is a matter of common knowledge.

13. Constitutional law ⚡205(1), 250—Fraudulent conveyances ⚡329—Statutes ⚡74(1)—Statute making it a felony under some circumstances and under others a misdemeanor held not discriminatory.

Contention that the proviso in Pen. Code, § 154, making it a felony fraudulently to sell or remove a part of a stock of trade of a value exceeding $100 while the fraudulent sale or removal of other property is made a misdemeanor only, violates Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 11, 21, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, held without merit, because the circumstances attending the commission of the offense constitute a reasonable basis for the classification made in Pen. Code, § 154.

14. Criminal law ⚡885—Function of jury is to determine guilt or innocence without regard to punishment.

The sole function of a jury is to determine the guilt or innocence of accused independently of the extent of the punishment to be imposed.

15. Criminal law ⚡1144(16)—Not presumed that jurors convicted accused without sufficient proof on theory he would receive light sentence.

It will not be presumed that jurors violated their oaths by convicting accused without sufficient proof of guilt in the belief that he would receive a light sentence or that they would have violated their oaths by voting for an acquittal, when satisfied of defendant's guilt, merely because of the severity of punishment provided for the offense.

16. Criminal law ⚡1175—Accused not entitled to reversal because jurors misunderstood extent of or duty of determining punishment.

One convicted of a felony is not entitled to a reversal on the ground jurors were mistaken as to the extent of the punishment provided or mistaken as to whose official duty it was to determine the punishment; as where the jury, not apprehending that under the indeterminable sentence law the court did not fix the term of imprisonment, appended to the verdict a recommendation to leniency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

George Waller was convicted of fraud, and he appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

R. R. Fowler and T. B. Scott, both of Modesto, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant has appealed from the judgment herein and the order denying his motion for a new trial. The parts of the information material here are as follows:

"J. Waller, alias Wallen, alias Wallach, alias Wallenstein, is accused * * * of the crime of fraudulently selling and conveying part of a stock in trade of a value exceeding $100 with intent to defraud, hinder, and delay his creditors of their rights, claims, and demands, a felony, committed as follows: That the said J. Waller, alias Wallen, alias Wallach, alias Wallenstein, on or about the 3d day of December, A. D. 1922, at and in said county of Stanislaus, * * * was then and there the owner of and was in possession of a large stock in trade, consisting principally of men's furnishings, goods, shoes, hats, caps, clothing, suit cases, and leather goods, * * * and was then and there indebted to a large number of persons in an amount exceeding $7,000, the purchase price of said stock in trade (naming the creditors and stating the respective sums owing to them), and he * * * did then and there * * * willfully, wrongfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and fraudulently sell and convey a large part of said stock in trade, to wit, a part thereof of a value exceeding $100, * * * and of the value of approximately $4,000, * * * to various and sundry persons and customers, with the felonious and fraudulent intent then and there and thereby to defraud, hinder, and delay his said creditors * * * of their rights, claims, and demands, *and did then and there and thereupon, willfully, wrongfully, unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously, and with the fraudulent and felonious intent then and there and thereby to defraud, hinder, and delay his said creditors * * * of their rights, claims, and demands, flee, abscond, and depart from the state of California with and did take with him, and remove from said state of California, the proceeds of and receipts from said sales."*

Though there are some contradictions, the evidence sufficiently shows the following facts. August 5, 1922, the defendant opened a store at Modesto for the sale of merchandise of the character described in the information. He deposited $5,400 in a bank in that city. In order to purchase goods on credit, the defendant exhibited his bank book, showing such deposit to a large number of wholesale merchants in San Francisco and Los Angeles, and, on the strength thereof, they sold him merchandise on credit to the value of many thousands of dollars. He continued to make purchases on credit for about three months after he commenced business, making partial payments from time to time on some purchases, but generally putting off payment on various pretexts. In the latter part of September the defendant placed a large sign in front of his store, reading as follows: "Everything being sold at factory prices. You will save 50 per cent. on all purchases." One witness testified that before opening his store the defendant put up a sign reading: "Will sell merchandise fifty cents on the dollar." There is direct evidence to the effect that defendant sold some articles below wholesale cost, and that he kept on display certain articles marked below cost. The defendant purchased goods from wholesale merchants of the approximate value of $12,000 and paid on the purchase price thereof about $4,000. The goods on hand in his store when he ceased to do business were of a value under $4,000. The defendant testified that he sold goods on credit to the value of about $1,500, but he was unable to give the name of a single person to whom he had sold on credit, and hence the jury was justified in treating his testimony as unworthy of belief. Defendant left about the first of December, and went to Montreal, Canada, where his family resided. It seems that he informed no one of his intention to leave or of the place to which he intended to go. He mailed the key of his store to the board of trade in San Francisco, stating in an accompanying letter: "I regret to state that it has been impossible for me to continue business." No books or accounts were found in the store after the departure of defendant. He had from time to time drawn on his bank account to such an extent that only a few dollars remained therein when he closed his store and left. It thus appears that during the three months he conducted the business, on the assumption that he sold goods at wholesale cost, his receipts, together with his original bank deposit, were approximately $9,000 in excess of the amount he actually paid to the wholesale merchants. There is no contention that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the verdict.

Appellant urges five grounds for reversal:

(1) That two offenses are charged in a single count of the information; (2) that the acts constituting the fraud charged are not specifically alleged; (3) that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct; (4) that the provision of section 154 of the Penal Code making certain acts a felony is unconstitutional; (5) that the verdict of the jury was returned under a misapprehension of the law.

[1] Section 154 of the Penal Code reads:

"Every debtor who fraudulently removes his property or effects out of this state, or fraudulently sells, conveys, assigns or conceals his property with intent to defraud, hinder or delay his creditors of their rights, claims or demands, is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by both; provided, however, that where the property so removed or sold or conveyed or assigned or concealed, consists of a stock in trade or a part thereof, of a value exceeding one hundred dollars, the offense shall be a felony and punishable as such."

If it be conceded that the language of the information herein italicized states facts which constitute a different offense from that charged in the preceding parts of the information, it is clear that the defendant was not prejudiced by its inclusion in the information. The jury did not convict the defendant of the crime of fraudulently removing his property from the state, but found him "guilty of fraudulently selling and conveying part of a stock in trade of a value exceeding $100 with intent to defraud, hinder, and delay his creditors of their rights, claims, and demands, a felony, as charged in the information." All evidence tending to show that the defendant fraudulently removed "the proceeds of and receipts from said sales" was admissible to prove that he sold the property with intent to defraud, hinder, and delay his creditors. Under such circumstances the alleged defect in the information is not ground for reversal. People v. Barrios, 52 Cal. App. 528, 199 Pac. 58. It is at least doubtful whether the demurrer to the information is sufficient to present the objection here urged. The demurrer, relative to the question under consideration, is "that more than one offense is charged." It is permissible to charge more than one offense in an indictment or information. Pen. Code, § 954. The statutory ground of demurrer in such a case is "that more than one offense is charged, except as provided in section nine hundred and fifty-four." Pen. Code, § 1004.

[2-5] The offense is charged in the language of the statute. Appellant contends that the particular facts constituting the alleged fraudulent conduct should have been set forth, citing People v. McKenna, 81 Cal. 158, 22 Pac. 488, and similar cases. In that case the defendant was charged with obtaining property by false representations, and it was held that such representations should have been alleged. Any one of innumerable false representations may constitute the basis of such an action, and it is elementary that a defendant is entitled to be informed of the particular representations with which he is charged in order that he may prepare his defense. They are among "the acts constituting the offense" required by section 950 of the Penal Code to be alleged "in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." Section 952 requires a statement of "the particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense." No circumstances other than those charged are necessary to constitute the complete offense alleged in the information. It is not necessary to set forth the manner or means employed to perpetrate the crime. Section 154 sets forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense therein defined.

"When the statute defines or describes the acts which shall constitute a particular offense, it is sufficient in an indictment to describe those acts in the language employed in the statute, applying them, of course, concretely to the person charged." People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 369, 372, 42 Pac. 894; People v. Mahony, 145 Cal. 104, 78 Pac. 354.

"Embezzlement is the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted." Pen. Code, § 503.

It has been held that such "fraudulent appropriation" may be charged in the language of the statute. People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 344, 5 Pac. 509; People v. Gordon, 133 Cal. 328, 65 Pac. 746, 85 Am. St. Rep. 174; People v. Holder, 53 Cal. App. 45, 199 Pac. 832. No reason appears why the same rule should not apply here. If the word "fraudulently" were omitted from section 154, as it is in a number of similar statutes of other states, the remaining parts of the section would completely define the offense sought to be prevented, because an act which is done with intent to defraud creditors is necessarily a fraudulent act. Where a statute denounces as criminal an act which is done with intent to defraud, the authorities all agree that it is sufficient to allege the intent to defraud in the language of the statute.

[6-8] The district attorney asked the defendant a number of improper questions on cross-examination, without objection, and finally asked him if he had not been indicted on account of a certain business transaction. To this last question the defendant objected, and the court promptly sustained the objection. Counsel for defendant then withdrew the objection, and the defendant answered that he had not been so indicted. The district attorney then, after further questions along the same line, asked the defendant if he had not been charged with grand larceny and convicted. While this last question was least objectionable of any asked, counsel for defendant made objection to it, assigned the asking thereof as prejudicial misconduct, and asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard it. The court declined to so instruct. The defendant had answered the question in the negative before the objection was made. The district attorney, if acting in good faith, had the right to ask the defendant on cross-examination if he had been convicted of a felony. Code Civ. Proc. § 2051. The question, however, was double. It was not proper to ask the defendant if he had been charged with the commission of a felony. If the defendant had answered that he had been charged with the offense of grand larceny but not convicted, then it might reasonably be argued that he was prejudiced by the mere asking of the question. But since one cannot be convicted of a felony without first having been charged with its commission, the charge is implied by the question whether he had been so convicted, and, the defendant having answered both parts of the double question in the negative, it does not appear that any prejudice resulted from the question. Besides, by withdrawing his objection to a like question after the court had sustained it, and by thereafter permitting, without objection, a line of similar questions, the defendant must be held to have waived the alleged misconduct.

[9, 10] On his direct examination the defendant testified that he had never assumed the various aliases set forth in the information. On cross-examination the district attorney questioned him along the same line. It is urged that this was prejudicial misconduct. It was not assigned as misconduct during the trial. Neither were the questions improper.

[11-13] It is contended that the proviso contained in section 154, making it a felony fraudulently to sell or remove a part of a stock in trade of a value exceeding $100, while the fraudulent sale or removal of other property is made a misdemeanor only, is violative of section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution, providing that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," and section 21 of the same article, providing that no citizen or class of citizens shall "be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens," and of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." In Selowsky v. Superior Court of Napa County, 180 Cal. 404, 409, 181 Pac. 652, 655, in discussing section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution, it is said:

"This provision only requires a law to operate uniformly upon all persons in the same category. * * * It is satisfied if the statute applies alike to all persons or objects within a class founded upon some natural and intrinsic distinction. * * * Operation differently upon different classes is proper if there is a reasonable basis for the distinction. * * * The application of these principles to the particular legislation here involved has been correctly stated by Mr. Justice Hart as follows: 'We know of no constitutional limitation upon the right of the Legislature to fix reasonable penalties for contempts of the judgments, decrees, orders, or processes of courts of justice, and, in admeasuring such punishments, to assign, as it may do and has done in cases of public crime, to certain acts of contempt a greater or less penalty than is annexed to others, according to the nature of the contempt with respect to the subject-matter of the adjudication violated and the consequences of such violation to the public or to individual rights.' * * * The Legislature has power to classify with respect to the penalty to be imposed, not only upon the basis of the inherent nature of the offense, but also upon the basis of the nature of the circumstances attending the commission of the offense considered in their relation to the public welfare."

To justify a court in declaring a law unconstitutional, its invalidity should appear with the greatest clearness and certainty. It cannot be said that the classification relative to the punishments provided for in section 154 is not founded upon natural and intrinsic distinctions. The facility with which a part of a stock in trade may be removed or sold without attracting attention is a matter of common knowledge. The discovery of such removal or sale would generally require an inventory of the remaining stock. It is a common practice for retail merchants to purchase their stocks of goods on credit and from those engaged in the wholesale trade at places far distant from the retailers' places of business, thus enabling the unscrupulous retailer to defraud such creditors with a minimum likelihood of detection. These are among the "circumstances attending the commission of the offense" defined in section 154 which constitute a reasonable basis for the classification therein made.

[14-16] The jury appended to the verdict a recommendation "to the leniency of the court." After the verdict had been returned and the court had fixed the time for sentence, the trial judge referred to the recommendation, and informed the jury that under the indeterminate sentence law he had no discretion to determine the length of imprisonment. One of the jurors replied that they had been under the impression that the court determined the sentence. Based on this reply, appellant argues that the verdict was returned under a misapprehension of the law. The sole function of the jury was to determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant, without giving any consideration to the extent of punishment to be imposed. It is not to be presumed that the jurors violated their oaths by convicting the defendant, without sufficient proof of guilt, in the belief that he would receive a light sentence, or that they would have violated their oaths by voting for an acquittal, when satisfied of the defendant's guilt, because of the severity of punishment provided for the offense. Courts have frequently and properly refused to instruct juries as to the punishments which the law imposes for the commission of offenses being tried, and it would be anomalous to hold that a defendant is entitled to a reversal on the ground that jurors were mistaken as to the extent of punishment provided or the official whose duty it was to determine the same.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

ELLIOTT v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. et al.
(Civ. 3931.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California, Division 1. Nov. 26, 1923.)

1. Frauds, statute of —71—Contract for sale of land invalid unless same or some note or memorandum thereof is in writing.

A contract for the sale of land is invalid unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, in view of Civ. Code, § 1624.

2. Escrows —1—Validity of proposed escrow dependent upon binding contract.

The validity of a proposed escrow is dependent upon the existence of a binding contract between the parties to such escrow.

3. Escrows —1—Escrow held invalid where no binding contract ever consummated.

Where, at the time the parties to a proposed contract for the sale of land orally agreed that certain bonds should be deposited in escrow to be forfeited to vendor if the sale should not be consummated, the parties had not agreed on the terms of the proposed contract and did not thereafter reach an agreement, held, that the agreement of escrow was invalid.

4. Escrows →5—Written agreement held conclusive of rights of parties.

Where written instructions in regard to a deposit of bonds in escrow were silent as to any forfeiture thereof and contained the only written agreement between the parties, under the rule that all prior oral negotiations were merged in the written document, it was conclusive with reference to the ownership of the bonds.

5. Damages →79(5)—Agreement fixing damages for breach of proposed contract of sale of land held void.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, prohibiting contracts by which the amount of damages for breach of an obligation is determined in anticipation thereof, except where it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage, held, that an agreement fixing the damages to which a vendor would be entitled if the purchaser defaulted was void; there being no difficulty in fixing the vendor's damage, in view of Civ. Code, § 3334, providing that such damage is the value of the use and occupation of the land for the time that the vendor is deprived of its possession.

6. Damages →81—Deposit of bonds in escrow held to provide for penalty rather than compensation.

Where the purchaser in a proposed contract for the sale of land deposited certain bonds in escrow to secure the performance of the agreement, if the bonds were to be considered as rent for use of the land if sale was not completed, the agreement held one for a penalty within Civ. Code, § 1671, rather than for actual reasonable compensation in view of the uncertainty as to the time of occupancy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles county; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Harry William Elliott against the Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation, in which the Title Company interpleaded Arthur F. Levitt, and W. J. Conner. From a judgment in favor of Arthur F. Levitt, plaintiff and W. J. Conner, respectively, appeal. Appeal of W. J. Conner dismissed, and judgment reversed.

Harry William Elliott and Gerald F. H. Delamer, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Elliott.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Levitt.

HOUSER, J. Early in the month of July, 1920, as a result of oral negotiations between W. J. Conner and Arthur F. Levitt regarding the sale of certain real property, the latter, in an attempt to create an escrow agreement between him and Conner, deposited certain instructions with the Title Insurance & Trust Company. No action having been taken thereon by Conner, either by way of written acceptance or by filing independent instructions with the title company, on August 24, 1920, Levitt canceled the instructions which had theretofore been given by him. Two days later—that is, on August 26, 1920—a conference was held between Levitt, Conner, and J. Moores Jones, as a result of which and on the same day Levitt gave new instructions to the title company, which were followed four days later by Conner's instructions to the same company. Pending the negotiations between Levitt and Conner, it appears that Conner had taken physical possession of a part of the property and had erected some temporary structures thereon which were used by Conner in making some moving pictures. At the conference on August 26, 1920, it was orally agreed between Levitt and Conner (and to which Jones assented) that Conner would deposit with the title company two Liberty bonds of $500 each to cover any damages that theretofore might have been or might thereafter be caused by Conner's use and occupation of the property, to be forfeited to Levitt as liquidated damages in case the sale was not finally consummated. Accordingly the two bonds were so deposited. Aside from a possible understanding of the parties, as shown by their respective written instructions as to the forfeiture to Levitt of the two Liberty bonds in case of the failure to carry the sale to completion, there was no "meeting of the minds" of the contracting parties on any other essential part of the proposed agreement; and during the month of September, 1920, Levitt gave to the title company several instructions, the effect of each of which was to cancel the transaction. On October 15, 1920, the parties held a second conference at which they agreed to "wipe the slate clean and start again"—immediately following which Conner gave written orders to the title company to cancel the prior instructions. Consequently new written instructions to the title company were signed by each of the parties. These new instructions, while referring to the Liberty bonds as figuring in the transaction in the way of part compensation for the property proposed to be conveyed, contained no mention of them in connection with their forfeiture to Levitt as liquidated damages or otherwise. The terms of these instructions (and being the only ones on which the parties had agreed in writing) not having been carried out, on April 14, 1921, Levitt again caused the transaction to be canceled. It appears in evidence that the two Liberty bonds deposited by Conner were not his property, but that, unknown to Levitt, they belonged to J. Moores Jones, who was present at the conference on August 26th, and assented to their deposit with the title company, and which bonds were agreed to be and were deposited with the title company to be forfeited to Levitt in the event that no sale was finally consummated. On December 17, 1920, Jones assigned and transferred whatever interest he had in the two bonds to the plaintiff herein. After the final cancellation of the matter, plaintiff brought an action in claim and delivery against the title company for the two bonds. The title company interpleaded Levitt and Conner. From a judgment in favor of Levitt both plaintiff and Conner have filed separate appeals; but as Conner has failed to perfect his appeal, this court is concerned only with the appeal of plaintiff.

[1, 2] That a contract for the sale of land is invalid unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged is settled not only by statute (Civ. Code, § 1624), but as well by a long line of decisions. It is equally well established in this state that before a proposed escrow may have any validity there must be a binding contract in existence between the parties to such escrow. Fitch v. Bunch, 30 Cal. 209; Miller v. Sears, 91 Cal. 282, 27 Pac. 589, 25 Am. St. Rep. 176; Holland v. McCarthy, 173 Cal. 597, 160 Pac. 1069; Thomas v. Birch, 178 Cal. 489, 173 Pac. 1102.

[3-5] Tested by such rules, it is clear that, in view of the fact that no valid contract for the sale of the land ever had been entered into between the parties, no valid escrow ever existed between them. At the time the parties orally agreed that the bonds in question should be deposited with the title company, to be forfeited to Levitt if the sale should not be consummated, Levitt was the only one who had even attempted to create an escrow; and after such oral forfeiture agreement came into existence and the deposit of such bonds with the title company there was no "meeting of the minds" of the parties on the question of the terms of the proposed contract of sale of the property, or otherwise than an inchoate agreement as to the forfeiture of the bonds to Levitt in case the deal was not completed. Neither was there any valid contract for the sale of the land in existence between the parties at the time the final instructions were signed by them. But even if a valid contract had been operative at that time, such instructions were silent as to any forfeiture of the bonds; and such instructions being the only instrument which contained any agreement in writing between the parties which under any circumstances might be considered as binding upon them, under the rule that all prior oral negotiations were merged in the written document, the agreement which they both signed is conclusive and must be the measure of the rights of the respective parties with reference to the ownership of the bonds. But considering the existence of a legal foundation for the escrow as being established and, in addition thereto, that the instructions, documents, etc., composing the attempted escrow, were sufficient in form to warrant the conclusion that a forfeiture of the bonds was provided therein, as against such forfeiture becoming effective, another insuperable obstacle exists in Civil Code, §§ 1670 and 1671, where the law is laid down that—

"Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made, for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except" that "the parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage."

There was neither pleading by either of the parties nor finding by the court which would bring the case within the exception of the statute. Moreover, the adjudicated cases of this state are to the effect that in circumstances such as are shown by the facts of this case a contract which provides for liquidated damages is void. In the case of Eva v. McMahon, 77 Cal. 467, 19 Pac. 872, the facts as stated by the court were:

"On the 15th day of August, 1883, the defendant sold and conveyed to the plaintiff a tract of land in Contra Costa county, described as containing about 200 acres. On the same day, defendants executed and delivered to plaintiff an agreement called 'Exhibit A,' by which it was stipulated that they might remain in possession of the premises until the first day of October, 1883, and that if they should fail or neglect to surrender to the plaintiff the possession of the described premises on that day, then they would pay to him all costs, charges, and expenses to which he might be put to gain such possession, including a reasonable attorney fee, and would also pay the further sum of $200 per month for such time as plaintiff might be deprived of or prevented from gaining possession of the premises, by reason of any act or thing done, suffered, or committed by the defendants while in possession thereof."

The court said:

"From these facts the court found as a conclusion of law: 'That from the nature of the case it was neither impracticable nor difficult to fix the actual damages which would arise from the failure of either of the parties interested to perform any of the terms or conditions of the contract on their part to be performed, and for that reason that part of the stipulation contained in Exhibit A providing for damages for the breach of other provisions therein contained is void.' This conclusion is in accord with the provisions of sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code, and if warranted by the facts, is decisive of the case. It is assailed by appellant, but we think it must be sustained. We see no difficulty in fixing the actual damages which one sustains by being deprived of the use of the land to which he is entitled. Ordinarily the damage is the value of the use and occupation of the land for the time he is deprived of its possession. Civ. Code, § 3334. There are exceptions to this rule, provided for in other sections of the Code, but they do not affect the result. Here the plaintiff had sustained no damage at all, and it would seem to violate all rules of honesty and fair dealing to allow him to take from the defendants the large sum claimed."

And see, also, Easton v. Cressey, 100 Cal. 75, 34 Pac. 622; Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 Pac. 749, 22 Am. St. Rep. 257.

[6] It is contended by respondent that the bonds were not to be taken as a forfeiture for failure on the part of Conner to carry the deal through to completion, but that they were to be considered as rental for the property. It is true that one of the witnesses did state that the bonds were to be "put up to cover any damages that might have been done to the land," and that another witness testified that during the negotiations he "volunteered the statement that if Mr. Conner would pay Mr. Levitt a sufficient amount of money to compensate him for the use of his property in the event the escrow did not go through, that we would reopen the escrow"; but in every other of the many references to the matter—in the testimony of witnesses, as well as in the pleadings, the instructions to the title company, and even in the findings by the court—the subject is treated as liquidated damages and as a forfeiture for failure on the part of Conner to consummate the sale. But even assuming as against the law and the facts that there was a contract between the parties and that the intention was that the bonds were to be considered as rent for the use of the property in the event the sale was not completed, under the rule laid down in the case of Eva v. McMahon, 77 Cal. 467, 19 Pac. 872, Levitt would not be entitled to recover the bonds. After the final cancellation of the transaction by Levitt on April 14, 1921, it would have been a comparatively easy matter to determine what was the value of the use of the property for the time it had been occupied by Conner; but to attempt to determine in advance what it was worth in a lump sum when the time the property would be occupied by Conner was wholly uncertain and problematical, demonstrates that the intention was to provide for a penalty rather than for actual reasonable compensation. To paraphrase the language of the statute (Civ. Code, § 1671), from the nature of the case it would have been neither impracticable nor extremely difficult to fix the actual damage.

From the foregoing it follows that the appeal of W. J. Conner should be dismissed, and the judgment should be reversed. It is so ordered.

COX v. DAUGHERTY, State Commissioner of Corporations. (Civ. 4784.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 5, 1923.)

Brokers — Evidence held to authorize revocation of license as broker.

Evidence that after the termination of his connection with his employer, a broker continued to transact business in his employer's name without authority, thereby committing a fraud on his former employer, held to authorize the commissioner of corporations, in view of Code and General Laws Supp. 1917-21, Act No. 1700, § 6, and section 2, subd. 8, to revoke his license as a broker.

Application for certiorari by Harry P. Cox against Edwin M. Daugherty, as Commissioner of Corporations of the State of California, to review an order of the Commissioner revoking petitioner's license as a broker. Writ denied.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Petition for writ of review to determine the lawfulness of an order of the commissioner of corporations revoking petitioner's license as a broker.

The petition recites that on the 19th day of January, 1923, in accordance with the terms of the Corporate Securities Act, respondent as commissioner duly issued to said petitioner, Harry P. Cox, a certificate authorizing him to offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of, and otherwise deal in, securities in the state of California, and generally to carry on the business of a broker in said state for and during the period ending the 31st day of December, 1923; that on the 29th day of April, 1923, petitioner was served with an order dated the 28th day of April, 1923, by the commissioner of corporations at the city and county of San Francisco, directing him to show cause why his said license should not be revoked on the grounds charged in the complaint attached to said order to show cause; that a hearing was had by said commissioner of corporations in the city and county of San Francisco, the petitioner appearing in person and by his attorney; that at said hearing evidence was adduced on behalf of said complainant and the matter submitted to the respondent herein for consideration and decision; that thereafter on the 2d day of July, 1923, the said respondent, as such commissioner, duly made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law; that in pursuance of said findings of fact and conclusions of law an order was duly made by respondent, as such commissioner, on the 2d day of July, 1923, revoking petitioner's broker's certificate theretofore duly issued to him.

Petitioner claims that said findings of fact upon which said conclusions of law and said order of revocation were predicated are, and each of them is, totally unsupported by the evidence adduced at said hearing, and that said respondent in making the said findings of fact and order of revocation acted without and in excess of his powers.

Under certain provisions of the Corporate Securities Act, which were designed to prevent fraud in the sale of securities, a broker is required to have a license in order to conduct his business. This license may be revoked by the commissioner of corporations. The grounds for revocation are three in number. The act in relation thereto reads in part as follows:

"The commissioner may at any time revoke any broker's or agent's certificate issued by him if he shall find that the holder thereof is of bad business repute, or has violated any provisions of this act, or has engaged, or is about to engage in any fraudulent transaction." Code and General Laws 1917-21, p. 1451.

The complaint against petitioner filed with the state corporation department charged him with all three of the offenses mentioned in the act. The matter came on regularly for hearing. Oral and documentary evidence was introduced and the matter was submitted for decision, and the following findings were made by the commissioner:

"(1) That on the 19th day of January, 1923, in accordance with the authority vested in the commissioner of corporations of the state of California, under and by virtue of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California and amendments thereto, said commissioner of corporations issued to Harry P. Cox a certificate, authorizing him to offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of and otherwise deal in securities in the state of California, and generally to carry on the business of a broker in said state for and during the period ending the 31st day of December, 1923; that prior to said date, to wit, the 19th day of January, 1923, and at all times hereinafter mentioned, said Harry P. Cox did not hold a broker's certificate and was without authority to engage in the brokerage business in the state of California.

"(2) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about November 16, 1922, in the county of Alameda, state of California, violate section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California in that the defendant did then and there act as a broker without having first obtained a broker's certificate authorizing him so to do as required by said act, and did offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of and sell to Mrs. Mary Stewart Smith, 2711 Ashby street, Berkeley, California, one $1,000 Ochocho irrigation district 6 per cent. bond at par for cash, and 30 shares of the common capital stock of the California Ink Company at par for cash.

"(3) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about the 12th day of December, 1922, in the county of Alameda, state of California, violate section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California in that the defendant did then and there act as a broker without having first obtained a broker's certificate authorizing him so to do as required by said act, and did offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of and sell to Mrs. Katherine A. Roach, Regillus Apartments, Oakland, California, 50 shares of the preferred capital stock of Stephens & Co., receiving in exchange therefor 50 shares of the common capital stock of the California Ink Company and $1,500 cash.

"(4) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about the 9th day of January, 1923, in the county of Alameda, state of California, violate section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California in that the defendant did then and there act as a broker without having first obtained a broker's certificate authorizing him so to do as required by said act, and did enter into an agreement with Mrs. Rosa Wrangham, 1421 Arch street, Berkeley, California, wherein and whereby said defendant received from Mrs. Rosa Wrangham 300 shares of the capital stock of Elk Hills Consolidated Oil Company, said stock to be exchanged by said defendant for either common stock of United Cigar Stores or a bond.

"(5) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about the 10th day of January, 1923, in the county of Alameda, state of California, violate section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California, in that the defendant did then and there act as a broker without having first obtained a broker's certificate authorizing him so to do as required by said act, and did enter into an agreement with Mrs. Auguste W. Laidlaw, 540 Boulevard Way, Oakland, California, wherein and whereby said defendant received from Mrs. Auguste W. Laidlaw 100 shares of the capital stock of Elk Hills Consolidated Oil Company, said stock to be exchanged by said defendant for either common stock of United Cigar Stores or a bond.

"(6) That for some months prior to October 1, 1922, said defendant Harry P. Cox was employed by Stephens & Co., investment brokers, as its agent, and that during said time and in the scope of said employment he met and became acquainted with Mrs. Mart Stewart, 2711 Ashby street, Berkeley, California; Mrs. Katherine A. Roach, Regillus Apartments, Oakland, California; Mrs. Rosa Wrangham, 1421 Arch street, Berkeley, California, and Mrs. Auguste W. Laidlaw, 540 Boulevard Way, Oakland, California, and that at said times all of said persons knew that he was an agent of Stephens & Co. and dealt with him as such agent.

"(7) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about November 16, 1922, engage in a fraudulent transaction in that on or about said date and in consummating the transaction hereinabove described in paragraph 2 hereof, the defendant issued and delivered to Mrs. Mary Stewart Smith a receipt in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"'Stephens & Company, Investment Securities, Merchants' National Bank Building.

"'San Francisco, Nov. 16th, 1922.

"'Mrs. Mary Stewart Smith:

"'This day we credit your account with $2,-017.50 covering balance due on purchase of 1000 Ochocho Irr. District 6% bond and thirty (30) shares Calif. Ink Co. com. stock.

"'Stephens & Company,

"'By H. P. Cox.'

"That the employment of defendant by Stephens & Company as its agent terminated October 1, 1922. That on the date the above described receipt was issued, to wit, November 16, 1922, defendant was without authority to issue and/or deliver said receipt for and/or on behalf of Stephens & Co.

"That Mrs. Mary Stewart Smith at the time hereinabove stated, to wit, November 16, 1922, was without knowledge of the termination of the employment of the defendant by Stephens & Co., but, on the contrary, she was led to believe by the conduct of said Harry P. Cox that he was still employed by said Stephens & Co., and she consummated said transaction believing that the defendant was an employee of Stephens & Co. That Mrs. Mary Stewart Smith relied upon the business reputation of Stephens & Co., and would not have consummated the transaction with the defendant had she known that he was no longer an employee of Stephens & Co. That the defendant did not inform Mrs. Mary Stewart Smith that he was no longer in the employ of Stephens & Co., but on the contrary, and without authority, he issued and delivered the above-described receipt to her, thereby inducing and causing said Mary Stewart Smith to transact the above mentioned business with him.

"(8) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about the 14th day of December, 1922, engage in a fraudulent transaction in that on or about said date he executed and delivered to Mrs. E. M. Appa, Sunnyside Apartments, Oakland, California, a receipt in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"Stephens & Company, Investment Securities.

"San Francisco, Dec. 14th, 1922.

"Mrs. E. M. Appa:

"This day we credit your account with $2,-650 Buenos Aires 3½s as per list of 9/25/22 Cert. #B6344 for exchange into Brazil 4½s '88 on basis of 2140 L of latter for Buenos Aires 3½s and full interest on B-A Pan. 1st coupon against BRAZIL interest flat.

"Stephens & Company,

"By H. P. Cox."

"That the employment of defendant by Stephens & Co. as its agent terminated October 1, 1922; that on the date the above described receipt was issued, to wit, December 14, 1922, defendant was without authority to issue and/or deliver said receipt for and/or on behalf of Stephens & Company.

"(9) That at the time of the issuance of the broker's certificate to Harry P. Cox as herein described in paragraph marked 1 said commissioner of corporations of the state of California was without knowledge of all of the facts hereinabove set forth, and that all of said facts have been brought to his attention since the date of the issuance of said certificate, to wit, January 19, 1923."

From the foregoing facts the Commissioner of Corporations of the state of California found as conclusions of law:

(1) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about each of the following dates, to wit, November 16, 1922, December 12, 1922, January 9, 1923, and January 10, 1923, violate section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California.

(2) That the defendant, Harry P. Cox, did on or about November 16, 1922, and December 14, 1922, engaged in fraudulent transactions.

By virtue of the facts found and the conclusions of law hereinabove given, an order revoking the broker's certificate theretofore issued to said defendant on the 19th day of January, 1923, was entered, and said certificate was revoked.

Petitioner here claims that all the findings except No. 1 are unsupported by the evidence. This contention is based principally upon his construction of certain provisions of the Corporate Securities Act. It is his claim that when he made the sales of securities he did so merely as an agent or salesman of a broker, for which reason no license was required of him.

The provision of the act with reference to agents in force at the time the sales were made read as follows:

"The word 'agent' as used in this act means and includes every person or company employed or appointed by a company or a broker who shall, within this state, either as an employee or otherwise, for a compensation, sell, offer for sale, negotiate for the sale of, or take subscriptions for any security of any company of its own issue offered for sale by it." Section 2, subd. 8, General Laws, p. 1448.

By an amendment in 1923 this subdivision was changed by omitting therefrom the words "of its own issue" (Stats. 1923, p. 89), so that since this change an employee or appointee of a broker who sells securities, whether they are the broker's own issue or otherwise, is an agent as defined by the act, and under section 5 thereof is required to have a certificate.

This being so, we do not consider a discussion of the question as to whether a person selling securities for and on behalf of a duly licensed broker prior to the amendment of 1923 required a license or not, for there is sufficient evidence in the record to support the findings that after the employment of petitioner with Stephens & Co. as its agent had terminated he transacted business in the name of that company without its authority, and that he issued receipts in the company's name for securities received by him in such transactions. While it is true that the persons dealing with him were not defrauded and that one of them made a profit in her transactions, still the evidence shows that Mrs. Smith (mentioned in finding 7) would not have employed petitioner in the transactions had she known that he was not then acting as a salesman for Stephens & Co. In pretending to act for Stephens & Co. when his employment with that firm had terminated, petitioner committed a fraud upon his former employer which justified the Commissioner in revoking his license. Findings 7 and 8, with reference to these acts, find full support in the evidence.

The writ is denied.

TOCQUE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 4613.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 23, 1923.)

Judges 44—Judge not disqualified by residence therein from sitting in pending action against municipal corporation; "public agency."

A city being a municipal corporation of general powers and not an agency organized for a special purpose similar to those mentioned in Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 5, it is not included therein as a "public agency," and hence, in action to restrain a city from performing certain acts necessary to complete consolidation with another city, residence within such city did not disqualify judges.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Public Agency.]

Original application for writ of prohibition by Arthur Tocque against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of San Diego and another. Writ denied.

Crouch & Sanders, Sloane & Sloane, and F. G. Blood, all of San Diego, for petitioner.

S. J. Higgins, City Atty., and Arthur F. H. Wright, Deputy City Atty., both of San Diego, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. It appears that there is pending in the superior court of the county of San Diego an action wherein Arthur Tocque is plaintiff and the city of San Diego and certain of its officers are defendants. In that action plaintiff questions the validity of certain proceedings for the consolidation of the city of San Diego with the city of East San Diego, and seeks to obtain an injunction to restrain and prevent the city of San Diego and its officers from performing certain acts necessary to complete the consolidation proceedings, and from in any manner assuming jurisdiction over the city of East San Diego or hindering or obstructing the present constituted officers and employees of the city of East San Diego in the discharge of their respective functions. It is alleged in the complaint in that action that the consolidation election in the city of East San Diego and the consolidation election in the city of San Diego were illegal and defective for various reasons, one of which was that at the time when the board of trustees of the city of East San Diego adopted its ordinance calling the election, the petition on which said ordinance was founded did not contain the names of one-fourth of the registered voters of said city of East San Diego. It was further alleged in said complaint that by reason of various facts alleged, the city of East San Diego and the plaintiff and other residents or citizens thereof will lose their property and property rights by reason of the threatened acts of the defendants.

The object of the present proceeding is to prohibit each and all of the judges of the superior court of the county of San Diego from sitting or acting in said action pending therein, and it is claimed that each and all of said judges are disqualified under the provisions of subdivisions 1 and 5 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondents have demurred to the petition on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or to entitle the petitioner to any relief.

No facts are alleged which would disqualify a judge of that court under subdivision 1. It is not made to appear that either of them is a party to or interested in said action.

Subdivision 5 of said section 170 reads as follows:

"In an action or proceeding brought in the superior court or justices' court by or against the reclamation board of the state of California, or any reclamation, levee, swamp land or drainage district, or any public agency, or trustee, officer or employee thereof, affecting or relating to any real property or an easement or right of way, levee, embankment, canal, or any work provided for or approved by the reclamation board of the state of California, the judge of the superior court of the county, or justice of the peace of the township in which such real property, or any part thereof, or such easement or right of way, levee, embankment, canal or work, or any part thereof is situated shall be disqualified to sit or act, and such action, if brought in the superior court, shall be heard and tried by some other judge of the superior court requested to sit therein by the Governor, or if brought in the justices' court, by some other justice of the peace requested to sit therein by the Governor; unless the parties to the action shall sign and file in the action or proceeding a stipulation in writing, waiving the disqualification in this subdivision of this section provided, in which case such judge or justice of the peace may proceed with the trial or hearing with the same legal effect as if no such legal disqualification existed. If, however, the parties to the action shall sign and file a stipulation agreeing upon some other judge of the superior court or justice of the peace to sit or act in place of the judge or justice disqualified under the provisions of this subdivision, the judge or justice agreed upon shall be called by the judge or justice of the peace so disqualified to hear and try such action or proceeding; provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing the judge of the superior court of such county from issuing a temporary injunction or restraining order, which shall, if granted, remain in force until vacated or modified by the judge designated by the Governor as herein provided."

It is evident that the disqualification relied upon by petitioner does not exist unless the clause "or any public agency," near the beginning of subdivision 5, was intended to include a city as a public agency within the meaning of said subdivision. We are of the opinion that a city, being a municipal corporation of general powers and not an agency organized for a special purpose similar to any of those mentioned in the subdivision, is not included therein; and that a judge of the superior court of the county in which such city is located is not thereby disqualified in an action by or against such city, notwithstanding that the action may affect or relate to real property. While this question has not been directly decided, the conclusion at which we have arrived has been indicated by the Supreme Court in Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 Pac. 1056. At page 335 of 182 Cal., at page 1064 of 187 Pac., referring to subdivision 5 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court held that irrigation districts are included within the meaning of the phrase "or any public agency," although they are not specifically mentioned. The court said:

"They are public agencies of the same character as those particularly named, and they are organized for the same general purposes to accomplish similar objects. There is no essential difference in these respects between an irrigation district and a reclamation district or a swamp-land or drainage district. The latter are organized to reclaim land by draining off the surplus water. Irrigation districts are organized to reclaim land by supplying water thereto. In the desert land regions the word 'reclamation' is in common use to indicate the bringing of water on the land for the irrigation thereof. If we apply the ejusdem generis rule of interpretation as is proper in such cases, we must hold that the above phrase was intended to include irrigation districts, although it may not include public corporations in general."

We do not think that the said phrase was intended to include cities and other public corporations in general. If such had been the intention, it would not have been necessary with such particular care to limit and define the particular kinds of public agencies, boards, or districts to which the subdivision was intended to refer. In the principal case wherein the validity of said subdivision 5 was sustained, it was evidently understood by the Supreme Court that the Legislature made a separate class of the corporations mentioned in the subdivision, and it was held that for the reasons there stated by the court there was sufficient justification for the legislation whereby that classification was made. Sacramento, etc., Drainage Dist. v. Rector, 172 Cal. 385, 156 Pac. 506.

RADICH v. RADICH. (Civ. 4681.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 4, 1923.)

1. Divorce ⇨169, 249(1)—No actual disposition of homestead and community property to be made until actual dissolution of marriage.

A marriage is not dissolved by an interlocutory decree of divorce, and therefore, on granting such a decree the court could not, under Civ. Code, § 146, make any actual disposition of the homestead and community property of the parties, but must wait until the marriage was dissolved absolutely by the final decree of divorce.

2. Divorce ⇨249(1)—Court may on interlocutory decree provide for disposition of property in case of marriage dissolution.

The court has power upon the entry of an interlocutory decree of divorce to provide for the disposition of the homestead and community property of the parties to the action in case of the dissolution of the marriage by final decree.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action for divorce by Katie Radich against Martin Radich. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for appellant.

William H. Schooler, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. Plaintiff was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from the defendant upon the ground of his extreme cruelty, and no objection is made by the appellant to the findings upon this issue. The only question raised upon the appeal is the correctness of the trial court's conclusions of law regarding certain real property. The court made a finding that said real property, situated in the city and county of San Francisco and more particularly described in said findings, stands of record in the names of plaintiff and defendant jointly; that the defendant has an interest therein in the sum of $1,000 as his separate property; that the community interest in said property is $700 and that said property is now subject to a mortgage on which there is a balance due and unpaid of $1,500; that a declaration of homestead was made upon said property by the plaintiff who selected said property as a homestead and made such declaration of homestead for the joint benefit of herself and the defendant.

The trial court did not make any disposition of this property, but entered herein the following conclusions of law respecting the future disposition of the same and also included in the interlocutory decree of divorce a similar statement:

"That in case of the dissolution of the marriage now existing between the plaintiff and the defendant by the decree of this court, the community property and the homestead, ought to be and should be, assigned as follows:

"(a) The proportion of the community property which should be assigned to the plaintiff Katie Radich is all of the community property;

"(b) The homestead of the parties to this action, which is all of the real property hereinbefore described, and which was selected by the plaintiff Katie Radich, as a homestead and which stands of record jointly in the name of plaintiff, Katie Radich, and the defendant, Martin Radich, and in which the said defendant, Martin Radich, has an interest therein of the value and in the sum of $1,000, as his separate property, and of which the community interest in said property is in the sum and of the value of $700, ought to be and should be assigned to Katie Radich, the innocent party, in the manner following:

"The community interest in said described real property to the value of $700 to the said Katie Radich absolutely to have and to hold the same thereafter as and for her separate property; the separate property interest of the defendant Martin Radich in said homestead to the value of $1,000 ought to be and should be, assigned to Katie Radich, the innocent party, for a limited period, to wit, for a period of 12 years, and thereafter, and when said limited period of 12 years will have expired, the separate property interest of said defendant Martin Radich in and to said above-described real property ought to be and should be assigned to the defendant, Martin Radich."

[1, 2] The contention of the appellant is that while section 146 of the Civil Code provides what may be done with community property and what may be done with a homestead selected from either the community property or the separate property of the spouses upon the dissolution of a marriage, the property contemplated thereby must be entirely community or entirely separate property, and that the trial court had no power to make disposition of property which was in part community and in part separate property. No actual disposition of the property was made by the trial court. The marriage was not dissolved by the interlocutory decree of divorce (London G. & A. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 181 Cal. 460, 463, 184 Pac. 864), and consequently the court could not assign or dispose of the community property or homestead until such time as the marriage was dissolved absolutely by the final decree of divorce. Remley v. Remley, 49 Cal. App. 489, 193 Pac. 604; Strupelle v. Strupelle (Cal. App.) 211 Pac. 248.

The case last cited is authority for the disposition of the property in the manner suggested by the trial court in its conclusions of law in the instant case. The property involved in the Strupelle Case consisted of two parcels of land in the city of Santa Barbara, one of which had been purchased by the husband with his separate property and the other with community funds. A homestead had been declared which covered both lots. The trial court assigned the homestead to the plaintiff as the innocent party in the divorce action. Upon appeal it was said:

"In its findings, and likewise in its interlocutory decree, the trial court properly determined the status of the property and properly determined how it ought to be assigned. But the actual assignment of the property should have been left for the final decree of divorce. A court may assign to the innocent party the community property or the homestead 'in case of a dissolution of the marriage.' Civ. Code, § 146. * * * The interlocutory judgment is not a decree of divorce, nor does it dissolve the marriage. The court therefore should not assign or dispose of the community property or homestead until such time as the marriage is absolutely dissolved by the final decree of divorce. * * * Upon entering its final decree of divorce the trial court will assign the property according to the determination expressed in the interlocutory decree."

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HAINES. (Cr. 1081.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 5, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 31, 1924.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Failure to impose sentence within statutory time is procedural error; "miscarriage of justice."

Failure to impose sentence within the time specified by Pen. Code, § 1191, held an error of procedure not resulting in a "miscarriage of justice," within Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Reversal for new trial not granted for failure to impose sentence in time unless resulting in "miscarriage of justice."

A new trial will not be granted because of failure to impose sentence within the time specified by Pen. Code, § 1191, since the error occurred after verdict and did not result in "miscarriage of justice," within Const. art. 6, § 4½.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 1160—Supreme Court will not review rulings on credibility of prosecuting witness.

The trial court's ruling upon the credibility of the prosecuting witness in denying a new trial is not reviewable on appeal.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 824(1)—Defendant could not complain of failure to give instructions not requested.

Where defendant did not request certain instructions, he could not complain that they were not given.

5. Criminal law ⚡698(1)—Failure to object to admission of evidence waived objection.

In a rape case defendant waived objection to reception of evidence of other offenses against prosecutrix by failing to object when the evidence was admitted.

6. Criminal law ⚡940—Affidavits containing evidence to impeach prosecutrix and disprove chastity held not to require new trial.

Affidavits disclosing matters which would impeach the prosecuting witness and affect her chastity, the latter not being an issue, did not require a new trial.

7. Rape ⚡54(3)—Prosecutrix's testimony, corroborated by father, as to age, held sufficient.

Prosecutrix's testimony, corroborated by father, that she was 15 on November 13, 1921, and the offense was committed on October 8, 1921, when she was 14, held sufficient to establish her age.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; George Samuels, Judge.

Thomas Haines was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of conviction of the crime of rape. Objection is strongly urged against the ruling of the trial court in denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant urged his motion for a new trial upon the ground that judgment had not been pronounced within the time provided by section 1191, and therefore he was entitled to a new trial under the provisions of section 1202 of the Penal Code.

[1, 2] The verdict of the jury was rendered on March 24th; sentence was continued until March 28th. At that time notice of motion for new trial was given, and the court continued the matter until April 6th, the period allowed by statute. Upon April 6th the matter came up for hearing and after argument by counsel was continued until April 7th. Upon this last-named date the matter was referred to the probation officer for his report and continued until April 20th. At the request of the defendant, continuances were had to May 4th, May 25th, June 8th, June 22d, July 6th, July 13th, July 20th, upon which latter date defendant's request for probation was denied and sentence was pronounced. This was 118 days after the date of the verdict, and 3 days later than the maximum time allowed by section 1191 within which sentence should have been pronounced. It is urged that because of this delay the defendant was entitled to a new trial and that the judgment should be reversed. This contention is met by the recent case of People v.

Zuvela (Cal. Sup.) 215 Pac. 907, wherein it was held that the failure to impose sentence within the time specified by section 1191 of the Penal Code is clearly an error of procedure within the meaning of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, and that a new trial would not be granted because of such error unless an examination of the entire record disclosed that the error complained of had resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[3] As pointed out by the respondent, the error complained of occurred after the verdict of the jury and could not have changed the verdict in any way. The verdict is supported by substantial evidence in the record. If the testimony of the prosecutrix was believed, and there is nothing about it to arouse the suspicion of falsity, the defendant was guilty as charged. The trial court passed upon the credibility of the prosecuting witness in denying the motion for a new trial and that matter is not subject to our review. People v. White, 5 Cal. App. 329, 90 Pac. 471. Indeed, it appears that the trial court in an effort to see that no injustice was done in this case, after the verdict of the jury and before passing upon the motion for a new trial, sent for the prosecutrix and talked with her alone in his chambers, explaining to her that she would be doing great wrong if she unjustly accused the defendant and pleaded with her to tell him the truth, assuring her that no harm would come to her and that justice would be done the defendant. The trial judge stated, at the time of pronouncing sentence upon the defendant, that he had had this conversation with the prosecuting witness and that the child had reiterated word for word her story as the absolute truth.

[4] Some complaint is made that the instructions of the court were not sufficiently full and complete in that no instruction was given to the jury that the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix must be viewed with caution and that her testimony of what she told her sister was not evidence of the facts themselves and other similar matters. We think there is no merit in this contention. The defendant did not request instructions upon any of the matters now urged upon our attention, so far as the record discloses, and, consequently, is in no position to complain that they were not given. People v. Stirgios, 23 Cal. App. 48, 136 Pac. 957; People v. White, 5 Cal. App. 329, 335, 90 Pac. 471. We have examined the instructions as a whole and find no error therein requiring a reversal of this judgment.

[5] Objection is made to the reception of evidence of other offenses against the prosecutrix by the defendant. All of this testimony was admitted without objection and cannot now be made the subject of attack upon the record. As was said in People v. White, supra, a defendant is entitled "to have only competent evidence introduced upon the trial," but "failing to assert his right, he is deemed to have waived it."

[6] The contention is also made that a new trial should have been granted upon the affidavits filed showing newly discovered evidence. These affidavits disclose matters which would impeach the prosecuting witness and also matters which affect her chastity. The latter is not an issue in this case, and newly discovered evidence affecting the former does not form the basis for a motion for a new trial. People v. Loui Tung, 90 Cal. 377, 379, 27 Pac. 295; People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 352, 19 Pac. 161; People v. Anthony, 56 Cal. 397, 399; Stoakes v. Monroe, 36 Cal. 383, 388.

[7] A contention is made that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; the particular in which the insufficiency is charged is that the age of the prosecutrix was not clearly proven. She testified that she was 15 years of age on November 13, 1921, and that the offense was committed on October 8, 1921, when she was 14 years of age. This testimony was corroborated by her father, who testified at the trial that the girl was 15 years of age on November 13, 1921, which was previous to the time of the trial. This is certainly sufficient upon that element of the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

BAR ASS'N OF SAN DIEGO v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY.
(Civ. 4575.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 30, 1923.)

1. Attorney and client — 54—Accused in disbarment proceeding has no absolute right to be present.

In disbarment proceedings, accused has no absolute right to be present and be confronted by the witnesses.

2. Depositions — 9—Trial court's order, in proceedings to take deposition, not assailable, in absence of limitation on court's power.

A proceeding to take the deposition of a witness, being a proceeding of the court in which the action is pending, is subject to the control of such court, whose order in the exercise of his discretion, in law or equity, cannot be assailed, unless his power is limited by statute or otherwise.

3. Depositions — 55—Court's power to extend time for taking held not limited by statute.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2031, authorizing the taking of depositions after service of five days' notice of the time and place, with a copy of the affidavit that the case is within section 2021, simply prescribes the minimum notice as in the case of the hearing of motions noticed under section 1005, and does not limit the court's general powers to control the proceedings and extend or continue the time fixed in the notice.

4. Depositions — 49—Officer taking and proceedings subject to control of court.

A notary public or other officer, before whom a deposition is noticed to be taken, is an ex officio officer of the court for such purpose, and he and all proceedings before him are subject to the control of the court. Code Civ. Proc. § 128, subd. 5.

Certiorari by the Bar Association of San Diego, to review an order of the Superior Court of San Diego County, continuing the taking of depositions in disbarment proceedings. Order affirmed.

Lewis J. Utt and Stephen Connell, both of San Diego, for petitioner.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. On September 12, 1923, the petitioner filed, in the superior court of said county, an accusation against Abram Rosenthal, an attorney at law, charging said Rosenthal with a violation of his duty as such attorney, and praying for an order of said court that his name be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors of said court. The said Rosenthal appeared and filed his answer to said accusation. Thereafter the said Bar Association served a notice upon the attorneys of the said Rosenthal that it would on October 16, 1923, before a notary public named therein, take the depositions of certain witnesses. With said notice there was served an affidavit by the attorney of the said Bar Association, complying in all respects with section 2031 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After said notice was served as aforesaid, and on October 11, 1923, said Rosenthal served upon the attorney of petitioner a notice of motion to continue and postpone the taking of said deposition, on the ground that said Rosenthal was physically unable to be present and confront said witnesses, that he was entitled to be present for the purpose of consulting and advising with his counsel in the cross-examination of said witnesses, and that he could not, with safety to his health, proceed with the taking of said deposition on said 16th day of October, 1923. With said notice said Rosenthal served and filed affidavits of himself and two physicians as to the state of his health. On the hearing of said motion the said superior court made an order continuing the taking of said depositions from October 16, 1923, to November 22, 1923; whereupon petitioner instituted this proceeding for the purpose of reviewing said last named order, and to have the same annulled by this court.

[1] We do not understand that it is seriously contended that in a proceeding of disbarment it is the absolute right of the accused to be present and be confronted by the witnesses. It was held to the contrary in a recent decision rendered by this court. In re Morganstern (Cal. App.) 215 Pac. 721-725.

[2] It is contended, however, by respondent that a proceeding in an action to take the testimony of a witness before a notary public or other officer authorized to take the same is a proceeding in the court in which said action is pending, and therefore, like all other proceedings therein, is subject to the reasonable control of said court.

On the other hand it is claimed by petitioner that the procedure for taking depositions is definitely prescribed by sections 2020 to 2038, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and having complied with all the requirements of these code provisions applicable to taking depositions within the state, it has the absolute right to have said deposition taken at the time and place fixed in its notice of motion to take the same, and that there is no authority vested in respondent to vary said procedure by extending the time or fixing a different date on which said deposition should be taken. It is admitted by all parties that this precise question has never been before the appellate courts of this state.

In the case of Burns v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 1, 73 Pac. 597, the Supreme Court held that the superior court in which an action was pending had jurisdiction, upon proper showing, to punish as a contempt the disobedience of a witness to a subpoena requiring him to attend and give his deposition before a notary public. In this case the court traces the legal history of the taking of depositions, showing that originally they were used only in courts of equity, and in such courts they were the only means whereby the testimony of a witness could be obtained or produced at the trial. For the purpose of taking depositions in a court of equity, a commissioner, usually styled an examiner or master, was appointed by the court to take the answers of witnesses to certain interrogatories settled by the court. These examiners or masters were, of course, under the jurisdiction of the courts appointing them, and subject to their orders. With the establishment of the superior courts of this state, they succeeded to all the powers and rights of both courts of law and equity.

"Instead of requiring a court order (always given of course), and leaving the appointment of the examiner to the court, the law authorizes the depositions, alike in law as in equity, and itself provides the examiners, by giving that authority to any officer authorized to administer oaths; that is, in effect, constituting such officers ex officio officers of the court for the purpose of taking such depositions as they may be called upon to take."

Finally the court says, in the Burns Case:

"The taking of a deposition is as clearly one of the proceedings of the court as was the taking of testimony before the master or examiner in a suit in equity."

[3] Being a proceeding of the trial court in which the action is pending, it is subject to the control of such court, and any order of the trial court, made therein in the exercise of the legal discretion with which said court is vested, cannot be assailed unless there is a limitation placed upon the powers of said court by statute or otherwise. Do the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, above cited, constitute any limitation upon the powers of the court to postpone the time of the taking of the deposition fixed in the notice for the taking of the same? Section 2031 provides that either party may have the deposition taken of a witness in this state, by serving upon the adverse party previous notice of the time and place of examination, together with a copy of the affidavit showing that the case comes within the provisions of section 2021. Said notice must be at least five days, unless for good cause shown a judge, by order, prescribe a shorter time, except in cases where the place of examination is a greater distance than 25 miles from the residence of the person to whom the notice is given. There is nothing peculiar in the phraseology of this section prescribing the notice to be given to the opposite party. There are instances without number prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure and other statutes of the state whereby notices are required to be given in different proceedings, wherein the wording of the statute is very similar to the language used in section 2031. For instance, section 1005, Code of Civil Procedure, prescribes in regard to motions generally, that notice of the hearing thereof must be given if the court is held in the county in which at least one of the attorneys of the party notified has his office, five days before the time appointed for the hearing; otherwise ten days. We have never heard questioned the power of the court, for good cause shown, to continue or postpone the hearing of motions noticed under the above section. In fact, it is the universal practice of courts to grant continuances of motions when the ends of justice would seem to require such continuances, and a failure to do so under such circumstances would be an abuse of discretion.

Section 2031 of the Code of Civil Procedure simply prescribes the minimum notice that must be given to the adverse party upon the taking of a deposition, and is no limitation upon the general powers of the court to control proceedings to take depositions and to extend or continue the time fixed in said notice for the taking of the same.

[4] Furthermore, as was held in Burns v.

Superior Court, supra, the notary public or other officer before whom the deposition was noticed to be taken is by the law of the state constituted an ex officio officer of the court for the purpose of taking such deposition. As such officer he and all proceedings before him are subject to the control of the court. Subdivision 5, § 128, Code Civ. Proc.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the superior court of San Diego county had jurisdiction over the proceeding to take such deposition, that its order continuing the hearing thereof was valid, and should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

GOLDEN STATE REALTY CO. v. GOLDWATER. (Civ. 4419.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 23, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Finding on substantially conflicting evidence not disturbed.

Trial court's finding on substantially conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Money lent $\S$ 7(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that transaction constituted a loan and not merely an exchange of checks.

In an action to recover money loaned, in which the defendant claimed that the transaction was not a loan but was merely an exchange of checks, evidence held to sustain finding that the transaction was a loan.

3. Corporations $\S$ 186—Corporation's failure to apply money to discharge of obligations, as provided by a contract, did not justify stock purchaser's refusal to repay money borrowed from corporation.

Where contract provided for the sale by certain stockholders of specified shares of stock and for the payment by the stockholders of debts due from them to the corporation and the application by the corporation of the money so received to the discharge of its outstanding obligations, and where the money was paid to the corporation pursuant to the contract and the corporation thereafter made a loan to the purchaser, the corporation's failure to apply the money received from the former stockholders to payment of debts did not justify the purchaser's refusal to repay the money borrowed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank S. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by the Golden State Realty Company against S. W. Goldwater. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank E. Dominguez and Milton M. Cohen, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred W. Heatherly, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover the sum of $2,026.50 alleged to have been loaned by the plaintiff to the defendant. Plaintiff obtained judgment for the full amount, and defendant has appealed.

Under date of March 1, 1916, the defendant became obligated to purchase certain shares of stock. The offer and acceptance constituting the agreement are as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., March 1, 1916.

"To Mr. S. W. Goldwater—Dear Sir: We hereby agree to sell and deliver to you stocks of the Golden State Realty Co., California Agricultural & Farm Lands Ass'n, and Anaheim Land Syndicate, in amounts hereinafter set opposite our respective names, upon payment to us of the several amounts set opposite said names, to wit:

	G. S. R. Co.	A. L. Synd.	C. A. & F. Ass'n.	Amts.
Sol Davis	33,825	7,588	23,271	$3,700.01
Alfred W. Allen....	11,702	1,795	8,045	1,479.00
Leon Kornfeld	4,473	105	3,069	547.50
	50,000	9,488	34,385	$5,726.51

"Said stock is to be sold with the understanding that we will, with said moneys, immediately pay to the Golden State Realty Company all indebtedness owing by us to said company as shown by its books of account; and further that when said moneys are so paid in by us same shall be disbursed forthwith toward discharging outstanding obligations of said Golden State Realty Company.

"If this proposal meets with your approval kindly sign acceptance hereon and the same shall constitute our agreement.

"Yours very truly,

Sol Davis.

"Alfred W. Allen.

Pursuant to the foregoing agreement, the defendant, by checks dated March 6, 1916, paid to Sol. Davis, Alfred W. Allen, and Leon Kornfeld the several amounts to which they were entitled. These checks were forthwith indorsed by the payees and deposited in the bank to the credit of the Golden State Realty Company; and the defendant received certificates for the stock specified in the agreement showing the same to stand in his name on the books of the several corporations. On March 7, 1916, the plaintiff issued its corporate check for $2,026.50, payable to the defendant, and he deposited the same to his credit in the bank. To recover the amount so paid to the defendant is the subject of this action.

It is the contention of the defendant that the transaction whereby he obtained the money sought to be recovered was one for the mutual exchange of checks. The evidence on this point was sharply conflicting. The secretary of the plaintiff corporation testified that the defendant stated to him that his bank account was depleted, that he was short of money, and that he desired the use of the money only temporarily. He further testified that the defendant received the money as a loan and has never repaid the same. Mr. Allen was vice president of and attorney for the plaintiff corporation at the time. He testified that he assisted in conducting the negotiations for the sale of the stock to the defendant; that these negotiations extended over a period of three or four weeks; that several forms of contract were discussed before an arrangement satisfactory to the defendant was concluded; that so far as he knew there was no understanding whereby any of the payments made by the defendant for the stock was to be returned to him; and that prior to the commencement of this action the defendant caused a portion of the stock purchased from Davis and himself to be transferred on the books of the company to a purchaser not a party to the contract of March 1st.

[1, 2] The defendant testified that the deal was not a money transaction at all, but was one merely for the exchange of checks. But his explanation of the details was vague and uncertain. He admitted that he had received the stock and did not deny that he had deposited the amount of the check for $2,026.50 to his credit in the bank. The trial court found that the transaction was a loan as alleged in the complaint. The conflict in the evidence was substantial, and a finding on such a state of the record is conclusive and may not be disturbed on appeal. This rule is so well settled that it is unnecessary to cite authorities in support thereof. Furthermore, the contention of the defendant that the transaction was one for the exchange of checks is not in harmony with the terms of the contract to which he was a party and was unquestionably bound.

[3] During the cross-examination of Mr. Kornfeld, defendant's counsel referring to the money which had been paid to the witness by the defendant pursuant to the contract, propounded the following question:

"Do you know that that particular money, which you received from Mr. Goldwater, went to pay any debts?"

Objection to this question was sustained by the court, and the ruling is assigned as error.

It seems to be the position of defendant's counsel that the language of the contract of March 1st, to wit, "And further that when said moneys are so paid in by us same shall be disbursed forthwith toward discharging the outstanding obligations of the Golden State Realty Company," would justify the defendant in refusing to repay the money he had received from the plaintiff if he could show that the plaintiff had not devoted the funds it received from Davis, Allen, and Kornfeld toward the discharge of its outstanding obligations. But the Golden State Realty Company was not a party to the contract of March 1st. The evidence showed that one of the main purposes of the contract was that the defendant acquire control of the plaintiff corporation and by it Davis, Allen, and Kornfeld surrendered their entire interests in the corporation. The defendant obtained such control. He was bound by the contract, and if any one were aggrieved by a breach of the provision of the contract referred to, it would be Davis, Allen, and Kornfeld for the reason that a failure of the plaintiff or of the defendant, who presumptively was in control of the plaintiff after March 6, to see that the moneys received by the plaintiff under the contract were disbursed in accordance therewith might subject them to a stockholder's liability. But in no event could such a breach constitute a defense to this action on the part of the plaintiff, a stranger to the contract, to recover from the defendant money to which it claimed to be entitled under the circumstances here shown. There was no error in the ruling complained of.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. RUBBATTINO. (Cr. 733.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 5, 1923.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 868 — Disqualification of sheriff to take charge of jury waived by failure to object.

Disqualification of sheriff to take charge of the jury during deliberations because he swore to the complaint in the cause was waived by failure to object thereto.

2. Intoxicating liquors $\S$ 236(11) — Evidence held to sustain conviction of selling intoxicating liquor.

In prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, evidence held to prove unlawful sales of liquor to persons named as purchasers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Louis Rubbattino was convicted of selling intoxicating liquor, and from judgment of conviction and order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

E. S. Bell, of Oakland, and John Delaney, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. By separate counts in the information the defendant was charged with three unlawful sales of intoxicating liquor.

He was convicted on all of the three counts and his motion for a new trial was denied. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. The appeal is submitted upon the appellant's opening brief, filed after the cause was called for oral argument.

Appellant contends that the court "committed prejudicial error in placing the jury in the custody of the sheriff and his deputy after said sheriff had been disqualified in the case." The record does not show that the jurors were placed in charge of the sheriff or his deputy. All that appears in that connection is the following, taken from the clerk's and the reporter's transcripts, respectively:

"The court now reads its instructions to the jury, and the jury now retire in charge of two sworn officers." "The clerk swears two officers to take charge of the jury, and the jury then retires to deliberate."

[1] During the impanelment of the jury, the sheriff, on the order of the court, summoned 10 persons as a special venire. The clerk's transcript contains the following record of proceedings when these 10 persons appeared in court:

"The court orders that C. E. Brown be excused. * * * The defendant now interposes a challenge to the special venire of jurors summoned by the sheriff on the ground the sheriff of Napa county swore to the complaint in the cause. The court orders that the challenge be allowed and that the nine persons summoned on the special venire be discharged."

A special venire was thereafter summoned by an elisor appointed by the court with the consent of both parties. There is no further reference in the record to the disqualification of the sheriff. If he was one of the officers placed in charge of the jurors during their deliberations, the record does not show that defendant made any objection thereto. Under such circumstances it must be held that the disqualification was waived. In People v. Le Doux, 155 Cal. 535, 544, 102 Pac. 517, it was held that where a sheriff is disqualified to summon a jury his deputy is likewise disqualified. In People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 193 Pac. 92, where the defendant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death, the sheriff of the county was admittedly disqualified and an elisor was appointed to summon two special venires of jurors. The jurors were placed in charge of a deputy sheriff on their retirement without objection by defendant. It was held that the disqualification was waived by failure to object. The decision in People v. Stennett, 51 Cal. App. 370, 197 Pac. 372, is to the same effect.

[2] The first count of the information charges an unlawful sale of liquor to C. P. Usher. Appellant contends that the evidence shows the sale was made to one McIsaacs. It is charged that the sale was made May 14, 1923. McIsaacs accompanied Usher to the defendant's home on that day. Usher testified:

"I purchased from Mr. Rubbattino one quart or one-fifth of intoxicating liquor. * * * I obtained this bottle of liquor from Mr. Rubbattino, himself, for the consideration of $2. * * * I believe Mr. McIsaacs asked him if we could get another bottle. * * * He told Mr. McIsaacs he could. * * * He gave a bottle to Mr. McIsaacs and I paid for it. * * * It was obtained by Mr. McIsaacs and paid for by me."

This evidence is certainly sufficient to show a sale to Usher.

Count 3 charges a sale to Harry Jones. Appellant urges that the evidence shows that the sale was made to Usher and not to Jones. Relative to that sale, Usher testified:

"I said: 'Good evening, Mr. Rubbattino. I wonder if it would be possible for us to get a quart of liquor.' And he answered that it would, and he brought out this bottle. * * * Q. Did he hand it to you? A. He handed it to me; yes, sir. Q. Did you thereupon pay him for it? A. I did not. I handed the bottle to Mr. Jones. * * * Q. Who did pay him for it, if anybody? A. Mr. Jones handed me the money and I gave it to Mr. Rubbattino. Q. So then you paid Mr. Rubbattino, you say, for this bottle? A. I paid Mr. Rubbattino with Mr. Jones' money. * * * Q. Did Mr. Jones get out of the car? A. He did not, no. Q. How far away from the car were you and Mr. Rubbattino? * * * A. I was standing about a yard from the car, talking to Mr. Jones, and Mr. Rubbattino came up and handed me the bottle. * * * Q. What did you do with the bottle the very next thing? A. I handed it to Mr. Jones. * * * He handed me $2. * * * Q. And you then gave the $2 to Mr. Rubbattino? A. I did."

The jury was justified in concluding from the foregoing evidence that the sale was made to Jones as alleged.

Appellant does not suggest any other errors, and there is nothing to warrant a reversal on any of the grounds urged or on any ground appearing in the record.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

WALSH v. SWANSON. (Civ. 4644.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 30, 1923.)

1. Municipal corporations ⇨293(2)—Description of street improvement in resolution of intention held sufficient.

Description of proposed improvement in resolution of intention as "the improvement of northerly side of Twenty-Second street, between Hampshire street and Potrero avenue, by the construction of an artificial stone sidewalk of the full official width, where not already constructed, at least six feet wide," held sufficient.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨293(2)—Description of improvement in resolution of intention read with plans and specifications.

The general description of the street improvement to be made in the resolution of intention is to be read with the plans and specifications adopted for the improvement and referred to therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Thomas G. Walsh against Gustava Swanson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NEEDHAM, Justice pro tem. This is an action to foreclose a street assessment lien. The work performed was the construction of a sidewalk in front of the defendant's property. The assessment was a public assessment and not by private contract.

In the court below the plaintiff obtained a decree of foreclosure and order of sale, which decree and order is dated the 10th day of January, 1918. Findings of fact were waived by stipulation of the parties. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied March 2, 1918, and thereafter in due time the defendant appealed from the whole of said judgment and in pursuance of sections 941a, 941b, and 941c of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendant presents two grounds of appeal, namely: A. The work and materials, to be performed and furnished, were not sufficiently described in the resolution of intention. B. The public proceedings, leading up to the contract for the doing of the work and the furnishing of the materials, were abandoned by the board of public works, one year prior to the contract with the plaintiff in this action.

As stated by the appellant, the proceedings in this case were taken under the "Street Improvement Ordinance" of the city and county of San Francisco, known as No. 2439 (new series) bill No. 2685. This ordinance has been before the appellate courts in several cases, including the following: Bienfield v. Van Ness, 176 Cal. 585, 169 Pac. 225; Federal Construction Co. v. Wolfson, 186 Cal. 267, 199 Pac. 512; Church v. Grady, 40 Cal. App. 194, 180 Pac. 548; Flynn v. Chiappari (Cal. Sup.) 215 Pac. 682; and Fay Improvement Co. v. Nelson, 55 Cal. App. 359, 203 Pac. 417.

[1] As to the first point, that is, that the work and materials to be performed and furnished were not sufficiently described in the resolution of intention, the description given is as follows:

"The improvement of the northerly side of Twenty-Second street, between Hampshire street and Potrero avenue, by the construction of an artificial stone sidewalk of the full official width where not already constructed, at least six (6) feet wide."

[2] According to the allegation of the complaint, the improvement described in the resolution of expediency is the same as that contained in the resolution of intention. The resolution of intention was introduced in evidence and is the same as that given in the complaint. This general description is sufficient. The meaning of artificial stone is well known. 12 Corpus Juris, 391. Furthermore, this general description is to be read with the plans and specifications adopted for the improvement and referred to in the resolution of intention. That part of the resolution of intention reads:

"The said improvements are to be made * * * in accordance with the specifications, or plans and specifications prepared therefor and on file in the office of said board and to which reference is hereby made."

The argument by the appellant that the following language: "Where not already constructed, at least six (6) feet wide" is insufficient is without merit. The only cases cited by appellant to sustain her contention are Lambert v. Cummings, 2 Cal. App. 642, 84 Pac. 266, and Fay v. Reed, 128 Cal. 357, 60 Pac. 927. Neither is in point. The case of Lambert v. Cummings, supra, was an action to foreclose a lien of a street assessment alleged to exist by virtue of proceedings instituted by the council of Berkeley. The resolution of intention recited, "the macadam shall be class 'C' as classified in Ordinance No. 62A." Ordinance No. 62A provided a classification of rock used in macadamizing, designated as "Class A," "Class B," and "Class C." The rock was specifically described in "Class A" and "Class B." "Class C" was defined as "such rock as shall be approved by the board of trustees from time to time." No rock was ever approved by the board as "Class C" rock. Hence, of course, the resolution of intention was insufficient to give the board jurisdiction and did not sufficiently describe the work to be done by specifying the kind or quality of rock to be used.

The case of Fay v. Reed, supra, was a case to foreclose an assessment for street improvement in the city of San Jose. The resolution of intention included as part of the proposed work that—

"Suitable drains and inlets are to be constructed at all intersecting crossings, to carry the surface water of intersecting streets and of Market street into the main branch sewer running along said Market street."

This resolution did not specify the number of drains and inlets, or the size of the drains, or the materials of which they were to be constructed, or the kind or character of the inlets, and was therefore held fatally defective.

The second and last point urged by appellant is that—

"The public proceedings, leading up to the contract for doing of the work and the furnishing of the materials, were abandoned by the board of public works one year prior to the contract with the plaintiff in this action."

This proposition of appellant is, we think, fully met and answered by the case of Fay Improvement Co. v. Nelson, 55 Cal. App. 359, 203 Pac. 417, decided by this court in an opinion by Mr. Justice Richards in November, 1921. The decision is a recent one, and the reason for the decision need not be restated.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SPADY. (Cr. 1123.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 28, 1923.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1174(2)—Action of juror in leaving seat to adjust window while witness was being questioned held not ground for reversal.

The action of a juror in leaving his seat to adjust a courtroom window while a witness was being questioned held not ground for reversal where the court immediately admonished the juror and directed the reporter to read the question, and thereafter sustained an objection to the question.

2. Indictment and information $\S$ 189(5)—Rape $\S$ 16(1)—No degrees of assault to rape, and defendant charged therewith cannot be convicted of simple assault.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape on a girl under the age of consent, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 220, defendant could not be convicted of simple assault notwithstanding section 1157, requiring the jury to find the degree of crime, and section 1159, authorizing verdict for any offense necessarily included in that charged, since assault to commit rape is not divided into degrees.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 824(3)—Defendant who presented no instructions on lesser crime could not complain of failure to instruct.

A defendant who presented no instructions authorizing the jury to find him guilty of a lesser crime could not complain on appeal of court's failure to give such instruction.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 742(3)—Credibility of prosecutrix held question for jury.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, the credibility of the prosecutrix was a question for the jury, though there were discrepancies and variations in her testimony on preliminary hearings and on the trial.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 1159(2)—Verdict not disturbed if there is evidence from which a rational inference of guilt can be drawn.

The appellate court will not disturb the verdict of guilty if there is any evidence from which a rational inference of guilt can be drawn.

6. Criminal law $\S$ 1037(1)—Defendant could not complain of argument in absence of assignment of remark as error or request for action by court.

Where the defendant's attorney did not assign the argument of the prosecuting attorney as error, or request the court to take any action relative thereto, the defendant could not complain of such argument on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; George Samuels, Judge.

Abraham Spady was convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, and from the judgment of conviction and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. Ingraham, of Oakland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NEEDHAM, Justice pro tem. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of assault with intent to commit rape. He was convicted of that crime, and now appeals from the final judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The prosecuting witness is the defendant's daughter, 14 years of age.

[1] The first point presented by the defendant is the alleged misconduct of a juror, who, during the course of the trial, and while a witness was on the stand, left his seat for the purpose of adjusting one of the courtroom windows. The court immediately admonished the juror, and said, "Mr. Reporter, will you turn back and read that question again?" The question was re-read by the reporter. The court thereupon sustained an objection to the question. It is evident from the record that if in fact the juror did not hear the question while he was adjusting the window the court had the question re-read, for the evident purpose so that the juror should not miss whatever he possibly may not have heard while he was adjusting the window. The fact that the question was not allowed makes it manifest that the action of the juror in leaving his seat and adjusting the window was in no wise prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

[2] The next point made by the defendant is that the court erred by not instructing the jury that they might find the defendant guilty of simple assault, and the defendant in support of that contention cites sections 1157 and 1159 of the Penal Code. Section 1157 of the Penal Code reads as follows:

"Whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty."

The crime of assault to commit rape (section 220 of the Penal Code) is not divided into degrees, and therefore section 1157 of the Penal Code cannot apply to this case. Neither does section 1159 of the Penal Code apply, and it is so decided in the case of People v. Gomez, 118 Cal. 326, 50 Pac. 427. It is therein held that assault is not an element of "assault with intent to commit rape" where the prosecuting witness is under the age of consent. It is stated in that case:

"It is claimed that the court committed an error in charging the jury that their verdict should be either guilty of the offense charged, or not guilty. It is insisted that by such charge the court in effect told the jury that the offense of 'assault' was not included in the information. We assume that such was the effect of the instruction, and yet upon such assumption the charge given was the only proper one. The prosecutrix was a girl under the age of consent. Whatever occurred between her and the defendant took place with her entire free will. * * * Under such circumstances the offense of 'assault' is not in the case. The evidence in no way points toward it; for an attempt to use force is a necessary element of every assault. Here there is no pretense of such an attempt."

[3] Furthermore, it appears that the appellant presented no instructions to the court directing the jury that they might find the defendant guilty of a lesser crime. The appellant, therefore, cannot complain. People v. Worden, 113 Cal. 569, 45 Pac. 844; People v. Bailey, 142 Cal. 434, 76 Pac. 49.

[4] The defendant presents as his next point for a reversal that the verdict of the jury is contrary to law and the evidence in the case. The counsel for the defendant shows great industry in the briefs which he has filed upon this branch of the case. After a most careful examination of the entire record, including a painstaking consideration of the argument of counsel for defendant, it amounts to little more, as we view it, than a reargument of the facts adduced before the jury, and is a plea, in effect, that the jury should not have given credence to the testimony of the prosecuting witness because of some variations in her testimony. It appears that there were two preliminary examinations held in the case, and there are some discrepancies and variations between the testimony given by the prosecuting witness in the preliminary examinations as compared with her testimony given upon the trial in the superior court. These are questions, however, for the jury, as has been repeatedly held by the appellate courts of this state.

In the case of People v. Cesena, 90 Cal. 381, 27 Pac. 300, the following language appears from the decision:

"The defendant, having been convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, appeals from the judgment and an order refusing him a new trial. * * * He contends that the testimony of the main witnesses against him is contradictory, and so improbable that they are not to be believed; that it furnishes proof of a conspiracy, and that the charge is a pure fabrication. But it does not strike us in that way. * * * We do not attribute very much importance to the testimony as to time. It is easy to be mistaken in such matters. And then the value of the evidence depends largely upon the credibility of the witnesses—a matter peculiarly for the jury."

[5] We do not consider it necessary to review the testimony given upon the stand in this case. It is of a sordid nature, and no useful purpose will be served thereby. It is well established in this state that, if this court finds any evidence from which a rational inference is drawn that the defendant is guilty, the court's inquiry can go no further. People v. Bond, 13 Cal. App. 182, 109 Pac. 150.

[6] The last and concluding ground which the defendant urges is that the district attorney committed error in his closing argument to the jury. We have carefully examined the entire argument of the district attorney, and we are of the opinion that the district attorney did not commit prejudicial error. Furthermore, it appears from the record that the attorney for defendant interrupted the district attorney's closing argument but twice. The record shows that upon the first interruption the following proceedings took place:

"Mr. Ingraham: If your honor please, I don't think the district attorney ought to make that kind of a remark.

"The Court: Do you desire it stricken from the record?

"Mr. Ingraham: I do.

"The Court: It is stricken from the record and the jury instructed to disregard it."

Upon the second interruption, the record shows that a colloquy took place between the attorney for the defendant and the district attorney, but it nowhere appears that the attorney for the defendant assigned the remark of the district attorney as error, or requested the court to take any action. Under these circumstances, the defendant cannot complain. See People v. Warr, 22 Cal. App. 663, 136 Pac. 304, and People v. Mancuso, 23 Cal. App. 146, 137 Pac. 278.

In the case of People v. Panagoit, 25 Cal. App. 158, on page 165, 143 Pac. 70, 73, appears the following:

"It was the duty of the counsel for the defendant to call the attention of the court to improper remarks then and there, so that the court might have advised the jury to disregard them. It is too late to raise such question for the first time on appeal," citing authorities.

Again, in the case of People v. Vaughn, 25 Cal. App. on pages 737 and 738, 147 Pac. 116, we quote the following:

"In regard to the alleged misconduct of the district attorney, we think that, while the comment of that officer upon the conduct and character of the defendant may have been somewhat harsh, nevertheless it was apparently but a deduction from the evidence. * * * Moreover there was no request to the trial court to admonish the jury to pay no heed to the alleged misconduct. It has been the rule of this court—and we think the settled rule generally—that, even though misconduct be conceded, in the absence of a request to the court to admonish the jury to pay no heed to it, complaint of the same will not be heard in this court."

Furthermore, in the general instructions given by the court to the jury as to the law of the case, we quote the following:

"While it was your duty to listen to and consider the arguments of counsel, I instruct you that such arguments are not evidence; that the only legitimate purpose of argument is to assist you in arriving at a proper verdict from the evidence in the case, applying to such evidence the law as given you by the court. Your duty is to decide this case upon the evidence introduced upon this trial, applying to such evidence the law as given you by the court and in so doing you have no right to be controlled by the opinion of an attorney in the case either for the prosecution or the defendant."

The court also instructed the jury as follows:

"The law will not permit jurors to be governed by mere sentiment, conjecture, sympathy, passion or prejudice. A verdict founded upon sentiments of pity for the accused or upon public opinion or public feeling or upon passion or prejudice or upon conjecture would be a false verdict."

For the reasons herein given we believe that the defendant was fairly tried and legally convicted, and the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

CALIFORNIA PACKING CORPORATION v. STONE et al. (Civ. 2550.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 22, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 21, 1924.)

1. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 117—Mortgage held to cover barley grown on land described therein.

Where granting clause conveyed to chattel mortgagee all growing crops or those to be grown during seasons 1921-1925, inclusive, on described property, on which barley was grown during a year covered by the mortgage, the mortgage covered the barley crop, though reciting that it was to secure performance of a contract covering fruit crops.

2. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 136—Tortious removal of mortgaged barley crop did not defeat lien.

Where the removal of mortgaged barley from premises on which grown was tortious, Civ. Code, §§ 2888, 2972, providing that the lien of a mortgage on a growing crop continues after severance, so long as it remains on mortgagor's land, are inapplicable.

3. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 172(1)—Replevin or claim and delivery lies to obtain possession of mortgaged chattels.

Replevin or claim and delivery will lie to obtain possession of property covered by chattel mortgage, where such mortgage provides for delivery of the chattels to the mortgagee.

4. Replevin $\S$ 10—Possession must be in defendant at commencement of action.

In action in replevin or claim and delivery, to sustain judgment for plaintiff, it must be shown that possession was in defendant at time of the beginning of the action, or that he had power to make delivery of the personal property, recovery of which is asked.

5. Replevin $\S$ 10 — Judgment unwarranted against defendants not having possession at beginning of action.

In replevin, a judgment against certain defendants was unwarranted, where possession of the barley at commencement of the action was shown to be in other defendants, and that the defendants first mentioned were in no position to make delivery.

6. Replevin $\S$ 117—Plaintiff in replevin held entitled to costs, though defendant not in possession of property at commencement of action.

Although certain defendants in replevin were not in possession of the property at commencement of the action, where their answer put in issue the title and right of possession of plaintiff, plaintiff was entitled to its costs against such defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by the California Packing Corporation against Casper P. Stone and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named and Elizabeth N. Alexandrian appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Geo. D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. [1] This is an appeal in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants and appellants the possession of 2,600 sacks of barley and 400 sacks of oats or the value thereof in the sum of $3,750. The plaintiff had judgment against the appellants and against Garrette & Agnew, a copartnership, for the recovery of 1,918 sacks of barley or the value thereof in the sum of $1,918, in the event that recovery could not be had. The defendants Garrette & Agnew have not appealed. It appears from the transcript that the barley in question was raised upon a certain tract of land situated in the county of Butte, farmed and operated by the appellants; that on or about the 16th day of June, 1920, the appellants executed a certain crop mortgage and delivered the same to the plaintiff and respondent herein, covering all crops to be grown upon the premises hereinbefore referred to and described in said mortgage, including all crops growing or to be grown on said premises during the seasons of 1921-1925, inclusive. The points made by appellants for reversal are: First, that the mortgage does not cover the barley crop grown upon said premises; second, that the plaintiff was not entitled under the terms of the mortgage to the possession of the barley; and, third, that this is an action in claim and delivery or replevin, and that the appellants were not in possession of the barley crop at the time of the commencement of this action. That the first contention has no merit is readily perceived by the mere reading of the mortgage. The granting clause of the mortgage is as follows:

"Does by these presents grant, bargain, sell, and convey to the mortgagee, and its successors and assigns forever, all the crops now growing or to be grown during the seasons 1921-1925, inclusive, on the following described real property."

Then follows a description of the property upon which the barley in question was grown during a year covered by the mortgage. Then further along, after providing for the right of the mortgagee to enter upon the premises, it is further specified that upon "harvesting thereof it (plaintiff) shall be entitled to the possession of the same and may haul, store and ship the same at the expense of the said mortgagor." It is also provided in said mortgage that, in case of any default on the part of the mortgagors, the mortgagee is authorized to take possession of the crops and sell the same. It is also provided in said mortgage that upon harvesting the crops grown on said premises the mortgagor will deliver the same immediately into the possession of the mortgagee or its successors. It is further covenanted that the mortgage is intended to secure, not only the principal sum mentioned in the mortgage, but also advances that might be made thereunder. The last clause of the mortgage is as follows:

"This mortgage is also intended to secure the performance of the term fruit contract between the mortgagors and the mortgagee, covering the sale of the crops of fruit on said premises for the years 1921 to 1925, inclusive."

It is upon this last provision that appellants base their argument that the mortgage did not cover the barley crop and hence that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession thereof. The foregoing recital disposes completely of the appellants' first contention.

[2] The court found that default had been made by the mortgagors; that the crops had been harvested; that the plaintiff made demand upon the mortgagors for the possession of the barley in accordance with the terms of the mortgage at a time when the appellants were in possession of the crop of barley grown on the mortgaged premises. The court further finds that the crop of barley was wrongfully and tortiously removed from the mortgaged premises upon which it was grown, and that the lien of the plaintiff upon the barley by reason of the mortgage was not extinguished. The crop having been removed from the mortgaged premises by the mortgagors, it is claimed by the appellants that, under the provisions of sections 2888 and 2972 of the Civil Code, plaintiff's lien thereon was extinguished.

[3] The court having found, however, that the removal was tortious, this case comes under the rule frequently announced by the Supreme Court of this state that under such circumstances the sections referred to are inapplicable and the lien still continues. Wilson v. Prouty, 70 Cal. 196, 11 Pac. 608; Benson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 550. That replevin or an action in claim and delivery will lie to obtain possession of property covered by chattel mortgage, where such chattel mortgage provides for delivery of the chattels to the mortgagee, is also well settled. Flinn v. Ferry, 127 Cal. 648, 60 Pac. 434; Harper v. Gordon, 128 Cal. 489, 61 Pac. 84.

These and other cases which might be cited clearly establish the right of the plaintiff to possession of the mortgaged crops after harvesting, and the right to maintain an action to obtain such possession where delivery is refused.

[4] The third contention of appellant is more serious. The court found that at the time of the beginning of the action the de-defendants Garrette & Agnew were in possession of all of the property referred to herein, and for which judgment was awarded the plaintiffs. There is no finding that the appellants had any control over the property or were in any position to make delivery thereof. The finding of the court upon the question of the possession of the barley for which judgment was awarded the plaintiff is as follows:

"That all of the said barley was at the time of the commencement of the action in the possession of the defendants Garrette & Agnew, a copartnership, said property having been delivered to said defendants Garrette & Agnew, a copartnership, in the following manner: 801 sacks of said barley were delivered on a car marked SN 2150; 800 sacks of said barley were delivered on a car marked WP 17655; and 317 sacks of said barley were delivered on a car marked NE 2058."

The court further found that the transportation company or railroad company was the agent of the defendants Garrette & Agnew. The court also found that the plaintiff had, by taking proceedings under the provisions of the Code relating to claim and delivery, obtained possession of all of the 1918 sacks of barley herein just referred to.

[5] In an action in replevin or claim and delivery, being an action for the recovery of specific personal property, in order to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff, it must be shown that possession was in the defendant at the time of the beginning of the action, or that he had the power to make delivery of the personal property for the recovery of which the action is prosecuted. Riciotto v. Clement, 94 Cal. 105, 29 Pac. 414; Richards v. Morey, 133 Cal. 439, 65 Pac. 886. Cases from other states follow the same general rule. A distinction, however, is made in actions where the complaint, though entitled a "complaint in claim and delivery," in truth and in fact a cause of action in detinue or trover is alleged. This distinction is pointed out in Faulkner v. First National Bank, 130 Cal. 258, 62 Pac. 463. If it appears that the action is really one for the conversion of personal property, a judgment awarding the plaintiff the value of the property converted will be upheld, even though plaintiff entitles his action one in "claim and delivery." The facts pleaded and not the name given to the complaint determine whether it is one in claim or delivery or one in trover for the conversion of the property. As stated in the case of Riciotto v. Clement, supra, the complaint in claim and delivery might be amended so as to support a judgment for the value of the property in the event the testimony shows conversion on the part of the defendant. In the case at bar no application was made to amend the pleadings, and, whatever the testimony may show upon this subject, there are no allegations in the complaint and no findings made by the court on the subject of conversion by the defendants. It thus appears the judgment for the recovery of the property against the appellants was unwarranted, by reason of the fact that the possession of the property at the time of the institution of the action was shown to be in others than the appellants, and it further not being shown that the appellants were in a position to make delivery of the barley sought to be recovered.

[6] It appears in the answer filed by the appellants that they put in issue the title of the plaintiff to the mortgaged barley and the right of the plaintiff to possession thereof. This entitled the plaintiff to a judgment for its costs against the appellants herein.

It necessarily follows from what has been said that the appellants are entitled to have and it is ordered that the judgment against them be modified to the extent of striking out that portion thereof which awards to the plaintiff as against appellants judgment for a recovery of the property or the value thereof in the sum of $1,918, in the event that the recovery cannot be had. In all other respects the judgment is hereby affirmed. We think the respondent is entitled to recover its costs on appeal, and it is ordered.

BROCK v. NEWMARK GRAIN CO., Inc.
(Civ. 4290.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 28, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 24, 1924.)

1. Sales §44(3)—Evidence held to sustain findings as to breach of warranty to furnish "Sonora seed wheat."

In buyer's action for breach of warranty to furnish "Sonora seed wheat," evidence held to sustain findings that there was a variety of wheat known as Sonora wheat, that buyer and seller so understood at the time the order was taken, and that the wheat actually delivered did not belong to such variety.

2. Sales §44(2)—Finding that seller warranted that wheat would be of particular variety held warranted.

Where seller accepted orders for "Sonora seed wheat," and all parties understood the wheat sold was to be Sonora wheat, a finding that the seller warranted that the wheat delivered would be of such variety held warranted.

3. Sales §251—Fraud not essential to implied or express warranty of commodity sold by name or character.

Fraud on the part of the seller is not essential to implied or express warranty of a commodity sold by name or character.

4. Appeal and error ☞1010(1)—Findings supported by evidence not reviewable.

Findings of fact supported by evidence are not reviewable on appeal.

5. Sales ☞262—That buyers saw seed wheat held not to justify sale as particular variety.

Sales of an inferior grade of seed wheat as "Sonora wheat" by an agent unskilled in distinguishing it in the kernel from similar varieties to farmers unable to detect the difference until near harvest time held not justified because the buyers saw the wheat in the warehouse.

6. Sales ☞284(1)—Seller not authorized to deliver different seed wheat of same general class.

That "Sonora wheat" belonged to the general class known as "club wheat" did not authorize seller to fill an order for Sonora seed wheat with any club wheat.

7. Sales ☞445(1)—Damages sustained because of seller's delivery and buyer's use of seed inferior to the grade ordered held for jury.

In buyer's action for breach of warranty to deliver Sonora seed wheat, the damages sustained because of the delivery by seller and the planting by buyer of wheat of an inferior quality held a question for the jury.

8. Sales ☞440(3)—Testimony as to difference in yield of wheat and comparison of samples held admissible.

In buyer's action for breach of warranty to deliver Sonora seed wheat where there was evidence of features distinguishing Sonora wheat from club wheat, comparisons of samples by witnesses and testimony as to the difference in yield held admissible.

9. Evidence ☞417(12)—Parol evidence admissible to prove sales agreement where only documents admitted were sales slips or receipts.

In buyer's action for breach of warranty to deliver a particular variety of wheat, in which the only documents received in evidence were sales slips or receipts obviously not intended as complete evidences of agreement, parol evidence was admissible to prove the agreement between the parties.

10. Appeal and error ☞1051(1)—Admission of testimony held harmless in view of other testimony.

The admission of opinion testimony without proper foundation held harmless in view of other ample testimony as to same facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Phil. D. Swing, Judge.

Action by W. M. Brock against the Newmark Grain Company, Incorporated. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. R. Simon, of El Centro, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This action is one brought to recover damages for alleged breach of contracts of warranty to furnish "Sonora seed wheat." There are seven causes of action, the respondent suing upon one contract entered into with the Newmark Grain Company by himself, and six other contracts received by him through assignments from other farmers. The cases were tried before the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for $6,005.90, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

The facts involved in the seven causes of action are substantially the same. The complaint alleges, and the evidence shows, that W. M. Brock applied to the agent of the Newmark Grain Company, at Brawley, Cal., to purchase Sonora wheat to be used as seed. M. O. White was appellant's agent at Brawley, and he sold seed wheat to Brock which he represented to be Sonora wheat; neither Brock nor any of the other six farmers whose claims are involved, nor White, had sufficient knowledge of Sonora wheat to be able to distinguish it from other wheat with any degree of certainty by merely examining the kernels, although Brock and White and some of the others were well enough acquainted with that variety to know its appearance when growing.

It is also in evidence that the Imperial valley is naturally arid, so that irrigation is necessary to produce crops; that the climate is very warm during the month of June, and that the time to sow this spring wheat is during the months of January and February, in order that it may mature before the extreme heat of the summer. On January 28, 1919, Brock purchased the seed wheat as above stated, and in the early part of the following month he sowed it on 32 acres of land which he had prepared for that purpose. The soil was well adapted to raising the variety of spring wheat known as Sonora; he irrigated it and cared for it in the customary manner, and did not discover that the wheat was not Sonora wheat until it began to head. In due time the crop was harvested. It appears that the seed which was furnished Brock and his assignors was a variety known as "club wheat" other than Sonora wheat. The former is a hard wheat, requiring two or three weeks longer to mature than Sonora wheat, which is classed as a soft milling wheat. From this it results that the club wheat, if sown when this was, is not adapted to being grown in Imperial county for milling purposes. The court found from evidence to which we shall refer later that Brock's land, if sown to Sonora wheat, would have produced 22,500 pounds in addition to the quantity of wheat which he did produce from the Newmark seed, and that, allowing for the expense of harvesting the additional yield, he was damaged in the sum of $652.50. It was also found that plaintiff's assignors thereby lost, in production and revenue, respectively, 12,200 pounds, $353.80; 30,300 pounds, $878.70; 38,600 pounds, $1,119.40; 78,750 pounds, $2,283.75; 18,750 pounds, $543.75; 6,000 pounds, $174.

[1] Appellant relies principally upon the contention that the evidence does not warrant the findings in a number of essentials. The court found generally that the allegations contained in the complaint were true, and that none of the allegations contained in the answer were true or were sustained by the evidence. Appellant avers that there is "no evidence" that there is a wheat classified as Sonora wheat; that there is "a total failure of proof" that the defendant sold to plaintiff and his assignors a wheat of different classification than actually ordered; and that there is "no evidence" to sustain numerous other elements necessary to the plaintiff's case. It will serve no good purpose to quote extensively from the testimony of the witnesses, but we find substantial evidence to sustain each of the material allegations of the complaint, and, consequently, the findings of the court that these allegations are true.

Upon the issue as to whether or not there is a wheat commonly known in the Imperial valley as Sonora wheat, Brock testified that he raised it in 1918 and 1920, and distinguished it from his 1919 crop produced by the seed here in controversy; that the wheat which bore the earlier, heavier crop he knew as the type "Sonora wheat." Hertel, a graduate from a college of agriculture, and former farm adviser of Imperial county, testified that he made a study of special wheat conditions in that locality, as to the better varieties for Imperial county, and that there is a wheat in said county commonly known as Sonora wheat which grows more compactly and closer together than other varieties, and with a golden color, which is not characteristic of them, and that he would know this type and be able to distinguish it at a distance of 100 to 300 yards. The witness testified that the exhibits from plaintiff's 1919 crop had no Sonora wheat among them. Caldwell, one of plaintiff's assignors, and Kaylor, another of plaintiff's witnesses, testified that there was wheat in the Imperial valley known as Sonora, and described it, identifying heads which they knew as "White Sonora," among other exhibits upon the trial.

Concerning appellant's claim that there was no evidence that the wheat sold by the defendant was not that which plaintiff and his assignors requested, the record discloses that White, defendant's agent, and the various purchasers testified that they asked for Sonora wheat, and that the product from the seed which they received was not Sonora wheat.

[2] Appellant further argues that there was no express warranty contained in the contract of sale of the seed in question, and that, under the circumstances, as shown by the evidence, no warranty was implied that the seed should be of any particular variety, or would produce any stated quantity. The evidence amply sustains the allegations and the court's findings to the effect that the defendant delivered to plaintiff and his assignors seed wheat, representing and warranting that it was Sonora wheat, and that the plaintiff and the other purchasers accepted the same, relying upon such representations and warranties. There can be no doubt that the defendant's agent and the purchasers all understood that the seed sold was to be Sonora wheat, and, if this was true, it would be immaterial that no warranty was made as to the quantity to be produced. Each one testified that he stated to White at the defendant's place of business that he had come to get Sonora seed wheat, and that White replied that he had it, showed them samples which he stated were Sonora wheat, and in some instances exhibited the billing to his branch of defendant's business, bearing the name "Sonora seed wheat."

But it is urged that, as the several parties who purchased wheat claimed to know what Sonora wheat was, as grown in Imperial valley, and since they saw the seed and knew what they wanted to purchase, there could be no legal reliance upon the representations of defendant's agent that it was Sonora wheat.

[3] The law in California has uniformly implied that, where the circumstances are such as to amount to a representation of fact on the part of the vendor that an article sold is of a particular kind as ordered in terms, he will be held to warrant the article as being of that kind, although he may not have made any declaration in words to that effect. Hughes v. Bray, 60 Cal. 284; Rauth v. Southwest Warehouse Co., 158 Cal. 54, 109 Pac. 839; Firth v. Richter, 49 Cal. App. 545, 196 Pac. 277. Fraud of the vendor is not essential to implied or express warranty of a commodity sold by name or character. In Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573, 579, the opinion in Henshaw v. Robins, 50 Mass. (9 Met.) 83, 43 Am. Dec. 367, is quoted with approval, wherein it was said that—

"To create an express warranty, the word 'warrant' need not be used, nor is any precise form of expression necessary; but every affirmation, at the time of the sale of personal chattels, amounts to a warranty."

In that case indigo was sold, but subsequently was discovered to consist of Prussian blue, chromate of iron and potash, so prepared as to deceive skillful dealers, but an order for indigo was filled with this preparation, and it was held to constitute a warranty that it was indigo.

[4-6] The facts found by the trial court, and which are supported by evidence, are not reviewable, and it must be regarded as established that these purchasers ordered, and defendant's agent sold, Sonora seed wheat, which was of a character and quality unquestionably understood by all the parties. They had raised it before this transaction, and had sold their crops to appellant, and these sales by an agent unskilled in distinguishing it in the kernel from similar varieties, to farmers admittedly unable to detect the difference until near harvest time, of a grain of inferior grade, could not be satisfactorily justified by the argument that the buyers saw the wheat in the warehouse. It is not contended, nor does the evidence indicate, that there was willful misrepresentation, but it is shown that some of the purchasers questioned the genuineness of the seed, and that appellant's agent said it had been raised in the San Joaquin valley, and that it was perhaps the locality which rendered it a little smoky in appearance, but that it was Sonora wheat. Nor is the mere fact that Sonora seed wheat may belong to a general class known to the trade as "club wheat" a substantial foundation for the argument, as advanced by appellant that any "club wheat" may satisfy the requirements of an order for Sonora seed wheat.

It is insisted by appellant that, if a buyer accepts goods after an examination of them, with knowledge that they do not correspond with the contract, he cannot recover in an action based upon a breach of warranty; and Rauth v. Southwestern Warehouse Co., 158 Cal. 55, 109 Pac. 839, is cited as authority for the rule stated. While we assume that such is the law, this case is distinguished from the instant one, in that there was "absolutely nothing in the evidence to indicate that the difference in yield was not due solely to the fact that the seed barley was grown in a different locality and at a greater altitude," and by the further fact that "the evidence showed without conflict and the jury found in response to special interrogatories that the selling agent told the buyer that the barley was northern barley raised at Tehachapi, but did not tell him that it was bearded barley." On the other hand, it was there held that, in the sale of a chattel as being of a particular kind or description requested, a warranty would be implied. The only other authorities cited by appellant which are here worthy of comment are Newmark & Co. v. Smith, 26 Cal. App. 339, 146 Pac. 1064, and Alexander v. Stone, 29 Cal. App. 488, 156 Pac. 998. In the former case it was said that the sole question before the court was whether the buyer was entitled to inspection as a condition precedent to the making of payment; and in the latter, certain woolen goods were sold without representation as to kind or quality, the court saying that "both parties, by reason of their occupation, had expert knowledge of the kinds of cloth in question," so that mere "puffing" of goods by the statement that they were first class amounted to no more than an expression of opinion, and not the representation of a fact. In the case at bar the evidence warrants the inference that the purchasers had no such expert knowledge as that an examination of kernels of Sonora seed wheat would enable them to determine its identity.

Firth v. Richter, 49 Cal. App. 545, 196 Pac. 277, presents facts very similar to those of the instant case. There the purchasers requested Valencia orange trees, whereupon the dealers delivered to them trees represented to be of that variety; that it was impossible to determine whether or not the trees were of the kind ordered, and the buyers accepted them, relying upon the statement that they were Valencia orange trees. When they bore fruit it was for the first time discovered that they were not Valentinas. Upon appeal from a judgment in favor of the purchasers it was said:

"In the case at bar it appears that the buyers definitely limited their request by asking for Valencia orange trees, and the seller not only delivered the trees in direct response to that request, but further, in a written contract agreed to deliver Valencia orange trees. We are aware that, as shown by the evidence to which we have been referred, the particular trees were first selected by the buyers. Appellant had bought from O. M. Bert a quantity of trees, including those delivered to respondents. The trees were growing in rows in Bert's nursery. At the request of appellant, Bert exhibited to respondents certain rows of trees which he said were all Valencia orange trees. Respondents then selected these particular trees from the rows thus designated, and those are the trees that were delivered. No charge of bad faith is made herein, but, on the contrary, the court found and the parties admit that there was no such bad faith or deception; nevertheless appellant assumed the responsibility of selling these trees as Valencia orange trees, and there is nothing in the evidence showing any conduct on the part of respondents which would estop them from claiming the benefit of that warranty. The terms used were sufficient to state an express warranty. Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573, 578, 579."

Newhall Co. v. Hogue-Kellogg Co., 56 Cal. App. 90, 204 Pac. 562, held that:

"Where an article of a particular variety or type is ordered by name and the seller purports to furnish the same, with or without any express statement that the article furnished is of the kind ordered, a warranty of the identity of the variety or kind arises. Flint v. Lyon, 4 Cal. 17, 21; Purge v. Albany Nurseries, Inc., 176 Cal. 313, 168 Pac. 343; Firth v. Richter, 49 Cal. App. 545, 196 Pac. 277; Rauth v. Southwestern Warehouse Co., 158 Cal. 54, 60, 109 Pac. 839."

[7] Appellant next asserts that there is no evidence to enable the trial court to determine the amount of wheat claimants would have raised on the same ground had the seed been Sonora. Plaintiff and his assignors testified to having raised profitable crops in 1918 and 1920 from Sonora seed, and that their crops in 1919, from the seed in controversy, ran from one to $5\frac{1}{2}$ sacks per acre, weighing from 87 to 128 pounds per sack. Two of the farmers interested in this action, and three of their neighbors, testified that the Sonora seed wheat which they sowed in this same year, some of it at the same time and under identical conditions, produced from $6\frac{1}{2}$ to 18 sacks per acre, weighing from 127 to 140 pounds per sack. Kaylor, one of the assignors, harvested but $6\frac{1}{2}$ sacks per acre of the Sonora wheat, but appellant's seed, which he sowed beside it at the same time, produced but 3 sacks per acre. Some rust appears to have struck these crops, but it was testified that this did not damage them more than 10 per cent. and there were instances where the rust problem was negligible. The evidence was clear and uncontradicted on these amounts, and it is difficult to imagine how a more intelligible comparison could be shown as a basis for computation of damages. It was further testified that portions of the crops from ordinary club wheat were of little or no value, and that Sonora wheat grown in the same and other years was sound and marketable. The court gave judgment for about one-fourth of the amount demanded in the complaint, and it would seem that all of these factors were taken into consideration; at any rate, it is the peculiar province of the trial court to weigh this evidence, and its conclusions will not be reviewed upon appeal.

[8] It was objected consistently throughout the trial, and is here insisted, that the evidence continually reflects the fact that the claimants called a certain kind of wheat which had been raised in Imperial valley "Sonora wheat," but that there is no distinguishing feature when it comes to classifying the so-called Sonora wheat with the only other wheat referred to, i. e., white club, and that the court erred in permitting witnesses to testify to comparisons from identified samples, and to the fact that the former would produce three times as much yield as the latter. The evidence shows that distinguishing features exist; this is true both in appearance before harvest and in quality and quantity of the grain produced. It follows that these facts were material to the determination of the issues before the trial court, and the evidence was properly received and given consideration.

[9] The contention of appellant that evidence was improperly admitted to contradict a written contract between the defendant and the plaintiff, and is erroneous, is without merit. The documents offered and received in evidence were merely sales slips or receipts, and were obviously not intended as complete evidences of agreements.

It is insisted that the poor results obtained from the seed sold by the defendant might have been due to any one of six other causes than the fact that the wrong seed was sold. For instance, it is said that wheat should be planted in November in Imperial valley, whereas this was not planted until February. A complete answer to this is that there is substantial evidence to the fact that a successful crop may be produced by planting in February. This was testified to by witnesses Hertel, Kaylor, Young, Carner, and others. It is also a fair conclusion from the fact that a number of these farmers actually planted Sonora wheat in February, and raised three times as much crop as was obtainable from defendant's seed under similar conditions. Under these circumstances, of course, the findings of the trial court are not subject to review.

[10] Again, the argument that the differences found to exist between the wheat produced from defendant's seed and that ordinarily characterizing Sonora wheat are due to the peculiar climatic conditions of Imperial county and other causes specified is disposed of in the same way, that there is evidence to sustain the court's findings, and it is immaterial that there is also some evidence to the contrary. Likewise the rulings admitting evidence of various witnesses concerning the conditions existing must be sustained. Any error in permitting certain witnesses to give their conclusions without laying proper foundation in connection with this phase of the appeal are harmless, since there is ample testimony not subject to that objection to establish the essential facts, and especially to show that Sonora wheat is a distinct variety which under the conditions shown to exist would produce substantially a greater crop than club wheat, and that the failure to secure a normal return of Sonora wheat was due to the fact that seed of that variety was not supplied by the appellant.

There being no other points of sufficient merit to require a ruling, the judgment is affirmed.

Application by John Bogden for writ of habeas corpus. Denied.

John Bogden, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The petitioner seeks relief on a writ of habeas corpus. The facts in connection with his sentence and imprisonment are stated in the opinion heretofore rendered by this court. In re Bogden (Cal.) 218 Pac. 1017. We there held that the effect of the Governor's pardon was that the prisoner should serve the balance of the 10-year term expiring July 6, 1924. He now claims that by reason of good conduct the period has been so far decreased that he is now entitled to release. We have heretofore held that since 1917 credits for good conduct are not allowed as a matter of right. In re Mann, 219 Pac. 71. The petitioner is not entitled to a discharge as a matter of right, and if under a rule of the board of prison directors, he is entitled to credits, and if such credits have been in fact allowed him, the petition should aver the facts in that regard.

PEOPLE et al. v. DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL et al. (S. F. 10931.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1924.)

1. Courts  90(4)—Decision rendered within first year after amendment held entitled to great weight in construing it.

A decision rendered within the first year after organization of the District Court of Appeal, under the amendment of 1904 (St. 1903, p. 737) to Const. art. 6, § 4, is entitled to great weight in construing the amendment.

2. Constitutional law  18—Amendment re-adopting constitutional provision adopted in interpretation theretofore placed thereon; "cause."

The amendment of 1918 (St. 1917, p. 1956) to Const. art. 6, § 4, readopting the provisions of the amendment of 1904 (St. 1903, p.

737), allowing the Supreme Court to order causes transferred from the District Court of Appeal within 30 days after final judgment, thereby adopted the interpretation theretofore placed thereon by the courts, which had construed "cause" to include original proceedings for mandamus.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Cause.]

3. Appeal and error  1188—District Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction to issue mandate writ until 60 days after judgment.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, as amended in 1904 and 1918 (St. 1903, p. 737; St. 1917, p. 1956), allowing the Supreme Court to order causes transferred from the District Courts of Appeal within 30 days after final judgment therein, the District Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction to issue its writ of mandate until expiration of 60 days from rendition of its judgment.

Application by the People of the State of California and others for writ of prohibition directed to the District Court of Appeal, and others. Writ granted.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. and Sloane & Sloane, and Crouch & Sanders, all of San Diego, for petitioners.

Jesse George, of San Diego, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. The petitioner seeks a writ of prohibition to prevent the District Court of Appeal from issuing its writ of mandate in pursuance of an opinion rendered by that court November 24, 1923. An alternative writ of prohibition was issued, returnable January 8, 1924. The only question which this court considered worthy of consideration upon the application for the writ of prohibition was the question as to whether or not the District Court of Appeal should issue its writ of mandate before the expiration of 60 days from the rendition of its opinion and judgment. The respondents concede that under the opinion of the District Court of Appeal in Noel v. Smith, 2 Cal. App. 158, 83 Pac. 167, in which a rehearing was denied by this court, and under dicta in the decisions of this court (In re Wells, 174 Cal. 467, 163 Pac. 657; In re McCowan, 175 Cal. 511), the respondents should not issue their writ of mandate until after the expiration of 60 days; but it is contended that these decisions are in conflict with the case of In re Zany, 164 Cal. 724, 130 Pac. 710, and it is therefore urged that we reconsider the question in the light of the argument advanced by respondents. We do not, however, consider the question an open one in this state.

[1, 2] The decisions above referred to merely state the general rule of practice which has been followed in a multitude of cases since the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution and is the settled rule of practice in this court. The decision of Noel v. Smith, supra, was rendered within the first year after the organization of the District Courts of Appeal under the constitutional amendment of 1904 to article 6, § 4 (Stats. 1903, p. 737), and is therefore entitled to great weight in the construction of that amendment (Knowles v. Yates, 31 Cal. 82; 5 Cal. Jur. p. 603, § 36). The decision of this court in denying a rehearing in Noel v. Smith, supra, and In re Wells, 174 Cal. 467, 163 Pac. 657, were rendered before the amendment of 1918 to article 6, § 4 (Stats. 1917, p. 1956), to the Constitution readopting the same provisions with reference to the power and jurisdiction of District Courts of Appeal. The readoption of these provisions without change in effect adopted the interpretation theretofore placed thereon by the courts, which had construed the word "cause" to include original proceedings for mandamus. People v. Webb, 38 Cal. 467; Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353; Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 50 Pac. 644; 5 Cal. Jur. p. 600, § 35.

[3] It follows that the District Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction to issue its writ of mandate until the expiration of 60 days from the judgment.

The demurrer to the petition is overruled, and the alternate writ of prohibition will remain in force until and including January 23, 1924.

We concur: LAWLOR, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LENNON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; WASTE, J.; MYERS, J.

Mandamus by Elmira J. Wilbur against the Superior Court of Sutter County, and K. S. Mahon, Judge thereof, requiring the court to certify engrossed bill of exceptions. Writ granted.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank McGowan and Blaine McGowan, both of San Francisco, Lawrence Schillig and A. H. Hewitt, both of Yuba City, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The bill of exceptions herein was settled and ordered engrossed in pursuance of a stipulation between the parties. The time for the engrossment of the bill of exceptions was extended from time to time, and was presented for certification to the trial judge more than 40 days after the order settling the bill. Upon application to the trial judge for certification of the engrossed bill of exceptions, objection to such certification was made by the opposing party, upon the ground that the engrossed bill did not conform to the order settling the proposed bill, for the reason that certain matter referred to in the order was not incorporated in the engrossed bill. The trial judge declined to certify to the bill, and made an order dismissing the proceedings for a bill of exceptions. The trial court had jurisdiction to settle the bill of exceptions, notwithstanding that the orders of extensions granted by it extended the period for engrossment more than 30 days beyond the period fixed by the statute. McCarty v. Wilson, 184 Cal. 194, 193 Pac. 578. Upon the hearing, if there was anything omitted from the bill as engrossed, the trial judge, instead of dismissing the proceedings, should have directed the petitioner to incorporate therein the portion of the record so omitted, and, if the order settling the bill of exceptions was uncertain, should have remedied the defect by its order directing the addition of omitted portions of the record to the engrossed bill tendered by the petitioner.

We have not passed upon the contentions of the parties with relation to what should be included in the engrossed bill of exceptions, but will leave that matter solely to the determination of the trial judge. A writ of mandamus will be issued, requiring the respondent judge to settle and certify the bill of exceptions.

(L. A. 7106.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1924.)

1. Corporations ⚡259(1)—Action by creditor for unpaid subscriptions rests in contract.

An action by a creditor to recover unpaid subscriptions to corporate stock rests in contract and is in the nature of an equitable garnishment in aid of execution.

2. Corporations ⚡259(8)—Creditor's bill to recover against holder of bonus or watered stock predicated on tort.

The gist of an action in the form of a creditor's bill against the holder of watered or bonus stock of a corporation is the fraud and deceit of the corporation in falsely representing its corporate capital to have been paid in full, it being essential to recovery that plaintiff shall actually have been deceived and injured, and the amount of the recovery being the difference between the amount actually paid by the stockholder and that which would have been paid had the representations been true.

3. Corporations ⚡243(6)—Creditor deceived and misled may recover against holder of bonus or watered stock, though corporation could not.

The creditor of a corporation, who has been deceived and misled by false representations of the corporation that its stock had been paid in full, may recover against the holders of bonus or watered stock, though the corporation itself could not.

4. Corporations ⚡243(6)—Holder of bonus or watered stock not liable unless he has participated in fraud.

A creditor of a corporation cannot recover against the holder of bonus or watered stock unless the latter has participated in the fraud practiced by the corporation or has ratified it by accepting the stock with knowledge thereof.

5. Corporations ⚡243(6)—Injury to creditor prerequisite to recovery against holder of bonus or watered stock.

The creditor of a corporation cannot recover against the holder of bonus or watered stock until he has established actual injury from the fraud practiced by the corporation.

6. Fraud ⚡25—Injury from fraud essential.

Wrongful misrepresentations are not actionable unless they result in injury.

7. Corporations ⚡80(1)—Purchaser of stock on false representations is injured as soon as purchase consummated.

One induced to purchase corporate stock by misrepresentation of material facts is injured thereby as soon as the purchase is consummated.

8. Limitation of actions ⚡58(4)—Limitations do not run against creditor's right of action against holder of watered stock until judgment against corporation returned unsatisfied.

One extending credit to a corporation upon false representations does not suffer injury until he has been prevented from recovering his debt or some portion thereof, and consequently his cause of action against the holder of watered or bonus stock does not accrue or the statute of limitations commence to run against it until a judgment has been recovered against the corporation and an execution returned nulla bona.

9. Limitation of actions ⚡58(4)—Creditor's action for subscriptions does not accrue or limitations run against until judgment had against corporation and execution returned unsatisfied.

A creditor's right of action against a stockholder for corporate subscriptions does not accrue, or the statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 343, begin to run against it, until judgment against the corporation has been had and an execution thereon returned unsatisfied.

10. Corporations ⚡262(2)—Creditor may not recover on subscription contract where corporation barred from enforcing payment by limitations.

Though an action by a creditor against stockholders for unpaid subscriptions may not be barred by limitations, recovery is precluded where the stockholders' contract prescribes particular dates for payment and such time has elapsed that the corporation's right to enforce payment under the subscription contract has been barred by limitations, since the creditor sues in the corporation's right by equitable assignment or subrogation.

11. Limitation of actions ⚡58(4)—Where subscription contract silent as to terms of payment, call is necessary to set limitations in running.

Where subscription contracts are silent as to the terms of payment, a call is necessary to fix the time of payment and set in running the statute of limitations in favor of the subscriber.

12. Limitation of actions ⚡58(4)—Effect of call for subscriptions on running of limitations, stated.

The sole purpose and effect of a call upon a stockholder for corporate subscriptions is to make absolute and fix the time for performance of his contract, and where same already contains an absolute promise to pay at a certain date, a call would add nothing to the obligation thereof nor serve to toll the statute of limitations already running in favor of the stockholder.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by E. B. Spencer against Alice H. Anderson, Francis L. Anton, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dana R. Weller and C. F. Culver, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. E. Lady, Leander O. Hatch, Henry O. Wackerbarth, Stutsman & Stutsman, Harry B. Washburn, Clarence L. Variel, William F. Adams, W. T. Craig, Denis Evarts Bowman, Muhleman & Crump, H. T. Morrow, A. R. T. Truex, S. F. Macfarlane, Henry Schaefer, Jr., Roland H. Mulford, Mattison B. Jones, Overton, Lyman & Plumb, D. H. Laubersheimer, and Williams & Williams, all of Los Angeles, John B. Nichols, of Santa Ana, and John B. Haas, Flint & MacKay, H. S. MacKay, Jr., and Emery & Rehart, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MYERS, J. This is a creditor's action to recover on unpaid subscriptions to the stock of the Medical Building Corporation. The plaintiff alleged and proved himself to be a judgment creditor of the corporation, he having commenced an action against the corporation on July 12, 1915, and secured a judgment thereon on December 31, 1917, against the corporation, upon which judgment an execution was taken out and returned unsatisfied. The present action was begun April 25, 1918. The contract upon which the plaintiff's claim arose was entered into on March 12, 1912, upon which last-named date and prior to the execution of the contract the corporation was formed. The services were rendered pursuant to the contract, from the date of its execution until November 1, 1914. The plaintiff was at all times after the incorporation a director, vice president, and general manager of the concern, and his duties included assisting in the sale of stock and bonds. Although this proposition is disputed, we think that for the purposes of this appeal the defendants must all be regarded as having subscribed for stock and bonds, having placed their subscriptions between the 12th of July, 1912, and the 1st of February, 1913. They each signed an instrument consenting to the creation of a bonded indebtedness of the corporation of $1,500,000, which instrument recited that the signers were stockholders. With a few exceptions, they made payments to the Medical Building Corporation upon their subscriptions after March 12, 1913. The corporation was organized to erect a building for the use of members of the medical profession, to cost about $800,000. They signed contracts providing for the payment of a certain sum down and installments thereafter until the whole amount should be paid. The subscription contracts executed by the several defendants respectively differed somewhat in terms, but they all provided for the payment of the purchase price in specified installments at specified times, and the latest installment to mature under any of the contracts here in question fell due not later than November, 1913, which was more than four years prior to the commencement of this action. The following copy is fairly illustrative of all of the subscription contracts involved herein:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 20, 1913.

"Medical Building Corporation, 230 Consolidated Realty Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.

"I here subscribe for $500.00 par value of 6 per cent., second mortgage gold bonds, and $500.00 par value of the stock of the Medical Building Corporation, for which I agree to pay $50 cash and $50 each month for the next 9 months.

"Name: Randall Hutchinson.

"Address: 330 Bradbury Bldg., L. A. Cal.

"Make all checks or drafts payable to Medical Building Corporation.

"Note: Terms may be changed to 10 per cent. cash and balance April 1st."

The subscription in each instance called for not less than one share of stock and an equal number of bonds at a unit price of $100 for each share of stock and one bond. None of the defendants had completed payments under their agreements, although the installments were long past due. At the close of the plaintiff's case a motion for nonsuit was made by the defendants and granted, and judgment entered pursuant thereto.

The respondents maintain that the trial court was justified in its ruling for the following reasons: That the action is barred by the statute of limitations; that the plaintiff's case was incomplete without proof of tender of stock and bonds; that the plaintiff had knowledge of the circumstances existing and surrounding the making of all the subscriptions, and therefore cannot avail himself of the right of an ordinary creditor against stockholders for whose stock the corporation has not received full value; that many of these defendants were not in fact subscribers of the Medical Building Corporation, but of the Los Angeles Medical Association Building Company, which preceded the former corporation, and that such as subscribed for Medical Building Corporation stock did so after the issuance of the stock; that the judgment against the Medical Building Corporation is void because its charter had been forfeited through nonpayment of its corporation tax.

[1] In considering the questions presented by the defense of the statute of limitations, it is important to keep in mind essential differences between actions by a creditor of a corporation to recover upon the stockholders' unpaid subscriptions, on the one hand, and actions by such a creditor to recover from stockholders who have received bonus or watered stock, upon the other hand. Some of these differences are clearly pointed out in Rhode v. Dock-Hop Co., 184 Cal. 367, 194 Pac. 11, 12 A. L. R. 437. Actions of the first class sound exclusively in contract, while the gist of the actions of the second class is tort. The two classes of actions present many points of similarity, and the failure to distinguish between them has led to unfortunate confusion, particularly in the earlier cases. Both are creditors' bills in equity, both are actions by a creditor of a corporation, seeking the aid of equity for the satisfaction of his claim out of assets not reachable by the ordinary processes of the law, and in both (but for different reasons) the plaintiff is required to allege and prove the recovery of a judgment against the corporation and the return of execution nulla bona (or that the corporation has become insolvent). But here the similarity ceases.

The cause of action to recover upon unpaid subscriptions rests in contract as to every element thereof. It is in the nature of an equitable garnishment in aid of execution. By it the creditor seeks to recover, not upon a debt due to him, but upon a debt due to his debtor. He seeks the interposition of equity to aid in the execution of his judgment by applying to the satisfaction thereof assets of the judgment debtor which consist of debts owing from third persons to such judgment debtor. In so doing he places himself in the shoes of the judgment debtor and prosecutes the action against the debtors of the latter, not in his own right, but in the right of the judgment debtor—the corporation.

[2-8] The creditor's bill against the holder of watered stock, on the other hand (i. e., one who has received stock from the corporation and paid therefor ostensibly in full, but in property at a fraudulently excessive valuation), proceeds upon entirely different principles. Here, though the creditor's claim against the corporation may rest in contract, his claim as against the stockholder rests in tort. The gist of his action against the latter is the fraud and deceit of the corporation in falsely representing its corporate capital to have been paid in full when it was not. Harrison v. Armour, 169 Cal. 787, 790, 147 Pac. 1166; Rhode v. Dock-Hop Co., supra. In this action the creditor does not stand in the shoes of the corporation and he is not suing to recover upon a claim of the corporation against the stockholder. He may recover, though the corporation have no such claim. His action is not upon a debt due from the stockholder to the corporation. It is to recover compensation for a wrong done directly to him by the corporation acting for the stockholder and participated in by the latter. The gist of the creditor's action is that he was induced to extend credit to the corporation by the false representations of the corporation respecting the amount paid in by the stockholder to the corporate capital, and the measure of his recovery is the same as in ordinary actions for damages for deceit, namely, the difference between the amount which has actually been paid in by the stockholder to the corporate capital and the amount which would have been paid in had the representations been true. It follows that the creditor cannot recover in this class of cases unless he was actually deceived by the misrepresentations. If he in fact knew that the stock was watered at the time he extended credit to the corporation, he cannot claim to have been misled by the misrepresentations, and therefore cannot recover. Sherman v. Harley, 178 Cal. 584, 174 Pac.

901, 7 A. L. R. 950; Sherman v. S. K. D. Oil Co., 185 Cal. 534 546, 197 Pac. 799. It also follows that a creditor who has been so deceived and misled may recover in this class of cases against the stockholders, even though the corporation itself could not. Rhode v. Dock-Hop Co., supra, at page 379 of 184 Cal. It also follows that a creditor cannot recover against the holder of bonus or watered stock unless the latter has participated in the fraud, or has ratified it by accepting the stock with knowledge thereof. Rhode v. Dock-Hop Co., supra; Sherman v. S. K. D. Oil Co., supra. It also follows that a creditor cannot recover in this class of cases unless and until he has been actually injured. No matter how wrongful a misrepresentation may be, it is not actionable unless and until it results in injury. One who is induced to purchase stock in a corporation by misrepresentation of material facts is injured thereby as soon as the purchase is consummated, because the stock which he has received in return for his money or property is worth less than it would have been had the representations been true. But one who merely extends credit to a corporation upon the faith of such misrepresentations, does not thereby become interested in the assets or welfare of the corporation or the value of its shares. He is interested only in the collection of his debt when due. It matters not how culpable the misrepresentations may have been by which he was induced to extend credit, nevertheless, if his claim is paid in full at maturity, he is not injured thereby, and therefore has no right of action thereon. It follows that such a creditor suffers no injury, and therefore has no cause of action unless and until he is prevented from recovering his debt or some portion thereof. If and when that occurs, his cause of action against the stockholder comes into being. That time occurs, in contemplation of law and under the rules of equity jurisprudence, when a judgment has been recovered against the corporation and execution returned nulla bona (or when the corporation has become insolvent and thus unable to pay its debts). Therefore the statute of limitations does not commence to run against the right of action of a corporate creditor to recover from the holder of bonus or watered stock until he has recovered judgment against the corporation and finds no corporate assets from which to satisfy it. In some states the insolvency of the corporation will also start this statute running, but such seems not to be the rule in California. Sherman v. S. K. D. Oil Co., supra.

[9] Returning now to the case wherein, as at bar, the corporate creditor is seeking to recover upon an unpaid subscription of a stockholder, we find an entirely different situation. "The foundation of this cause of action was defendant's contract to pay the residue of his subscription [as required] * * * " (as specified in his contract). Glenn v. Saxton, 68 Cal. 353, 358, 9 Pac. 420. It is clearly an action upon contract. Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741. "The object of this suit is to compel the corporation against whom the judgment was recovered to satisfy the same out of its assets. * * * " Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 591, 27 Pac. 674, 676 (29 Am. St. Rep. 158). "All of the California cases sustaining judgments of foreign tribunals fixing a stockholder's indebtedness for unpaid subscriptions go upon the principle that such subscriptions are part of the assets of the corporation. * * * " Miller v. Lane, 160 Cal. 90, 93, 116 Pac. 58, 60. While the obligation thus sought to be enforced rests wholly in contract, there is no privity between the corporate creditor and the stockholder (Matteson, etc., Co. v. Conley, 144 Cal. 483), and the creditor must therefore resort to equity for the enforcement of the obligation. But equity will not intervene until the creditor has exhausted his remedies at law, so he is required to first obtain a judgment against the corporation and the issuance of an execution thereon which remains unsatisfied. His right of action in equity therefore does not arise until the recovery of such judgment and the return of such execution, and the statute of limitations thereon (Code Civ. Proc., § 343) runs from that time. Sherman v. S. K. D. Oil Co., supra, 185 Cal. at page 545, 197 Pac. 799.

[10] The present action was commenced within less than a year after judgment was obtained against the corporation; therefore the statute of limitations has not run against the right of the plaintiff to commence and maintain this action. But this conclusion does not dispose of the contention made by the defendants herein. The plaintiff is here seeking to apply to the satisfaction of his judgment certain corporate assets consisting of choses in action of the corporation against its stockholders. Briefly put, he is seeking to collect certain debts alleged to be owing from the defendants to the corporation. This raises the question whether or not such debts exist. If they never existed, or if they once existed but have been satisfied, of course the creditor cannot recover upon them, even though his right to maintain his creditor's bill be unchallenged. San Bernardino Co. S. Bk. v. Denman, 186 Cal. 710, 200 Pac. 606. The creditor sues as the equitable assignee of the judgment debtor, and it would seem to follow that any defense which would be good as against the latter should be equally good against the former. This, in effect, is the contention of the respondents herein. They assert that the statute of limitations has run—not against the right of action of the plaintiff to maintain this creditor's bill—but against the right of the corporation to collect upon their subscription contracts, which is the right the plaintiff is here seeking to enforce. We think this contention must be upheld. Each of the subscription contracts upon which the plaintiff is seeking to recover was an express written contract to pay money at times certain, and each had been in default more than four years at the time this action was commenced. This fact would afford a complete defense to an action by the corporation upon these contracts, and we see no good reason why it should not be equally available as against the plaintiff who sues in the corporation's right by equitable assignment or subrogation.

This precise question does not appear to have been decided in this state, but there are decisions which foreshadow its solution. In Turner v. Fidelity Loan Concern, 2 Cal. App. 122, 83 Pac. 62, 70, it was held that the rights of a judgment creditor seeking to enforce the subscription of stockholders to the corporation as its debtors cannot in general be greater than those of the corporation if there is no fraud, actual or constructive, and no facts showing an estoppel of the stockholders as against the creditor. In San Bernardino Co. S. Bk. v. Denman, supra, 186 Cal. at page 716, 200 Pac. at page 609 this court said:

"The suit of a creditor to have the stock subscriptions applied on his debt is merely one instance of a resort to the equitable remedy of a creditor's bill; a proceeding in equity to reach assets of the debtor which cannot be got in an ordinary action at law. The creditor is seeking for assets of the debtor, that is, money or credits due to the debtor. He cannot reach anything that does not constitute assets of such debtor. His standing in the court must always be in the shoes of the debtor, and he can obtain no greater relief than his debtor could obtain, at least to this extent, that he cannot force payment from one who is not the debtor of his debtor. A valid obligation must exist in favor of the debtor against the party sued, or the creditor's bill will not lie against him. Hence, if the obligation once existed, but has lawfully been paid before the proceeding on the creditor's bill attached to it, the bill must fail."

That in a creditor's bill to enforce unpaid subscriptions the defense may be available to a stockholder that the statute has run as against the corporation upon his subscription contract has been repeatedly recognized in this state. Glenn v. Saxton, 68 Cal. 353, 358, 9 Pac. 420; Vermont Marble Co. v. Deelez Granite Co., 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143; Union Savings Bank v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 696, 79 Pac. 441; Miller v. Lane, 160 Cal. 90, 93, 116 Pac. 58; Sherman v. S. K. D. Oil Co., supra.

[11] In each of the cases last cited it was held that the statute would not commence to run in favor of the stockholders until the making of a call either by the directors or by a court of equity upon a creditor's bill. Those were all cases wherein the subscription contracts were silent as to the terms of payment, and a call was therefore necessary to fix the time of payment and put the subscriber in default. In such case the liability of the subscriber is conditional and becomes absolute only when the call is made. As was said in Miller v. Lane, supra:

"The stockholders are bound to pay only when a proper call has been made for the amounts promised by their subscriptions, such call setting the statute of limitations in motion."

Obviously, where the subscription contract itself fixes the time of payment at a time certain and that time has passed, the making of a call thereafter would be but a work of supererogation. See Horseshoe Pier, etc., Co. v. Sibley, 157 Cal. 442, 446, 108 Pac. 308.

[12] This last consideration furnishes the answer to appellant's contention that the corporation still possessed the power to levy assessments under sections 331, 332, and 349 of the Civil Code, and that the continued existence of that power prevented the statute from running against it in favor of the stockholders. Respondents reply that the corporation here in question never possessed this power because one-fourth of its stock was never subscribed. But, aside from this, the sole purpose and effect of a call upon the liability of a subscriber for an unpaid subscription is to make absolute that which was conditional and to fix the time for the performance thereof. When the subscription contract contains an absolute promise to pay at a time certain, the making of a call after that time could add nothing to the obligation thereof, and by the same token it would not serve to toll the statute already running thereon.

The decisions of the courts are not in complete accord upon this question, but the overwhelming preponderance of authority is in support of the following conclusions as to the application of statutes of limitation to creditors' bills in equity seeking to enforce the liability of stockholders as upon unpaid subscriptions: (1) That where the liability is predicated upon the issuance of bonus or watered stock, the statute does not begin to run until the recovery of judgment against the corporation and return of execution nulla bona (or in some cases upon the notorious insolvency of the corporation); (2) that where the liability is predicated upon the issuance of stock which is only partly paid and does not purport to be otherwise, the statute begins to run in favor of the stockholder, as against the corporation and also as against the corporate creditors (in the absence of circumstances of fraud or estoppel), at the times when the subscription payments fall due; that when the subscription contract is silent as to the times of payment of the balance (or provides that it is payable upon call), the statute does not begin to run until a call is made either by the directors or by a court of equity (or in some cases upon insolvency of the corporation); that when the subscription contract is express and unconditional and the terms of payment are therein specified, the statute begins to run upon each installment thereof as the same falls due.

"There are some early decisions and some dicta to the effect that subscribers for stock in a corporation cannot oppose the statute of limitations to a claim in equity by creditors to have the stock paid up, on the ground that, before payment, the stockholders are chargeable with a trust in favor of creditors, and this trust 'is a continuing subsisting trust and confidence to which the statute of limitations has no application.' According to the decided weight of authority, however, unpaid subscriptions simply create, as to the amount due thereon, the relation of debtor and creditor between the subscribers and the corporation, and if the statute of limitations runs against an action by the corporation to collect a subscription, as it may, it also runs, in the absence of fraud, against a suit in equity by creditors to compel payment, or an action by a receiver or assignee." Fletcher, Cyclopaedia Corporations, vol. 6, p. 7133.

"If the subscription is payable in installments at specified times, so that no call is necessary, the statute commences to run as to each installment from the time when it becomes due.

"In some jurisdictions it is held that the right of action does not accrue, and hence that the statute does not commence to run against it, until the corporation is shown to be insolvent by the recovery of a judgment and a return of nulla bona, and that it does begin to run from that time."

Id., p. 7139.

The cases which are relied upon as holding that the statute does not run in such case until judgment and execution against the corporation do not in reality so hold. Upon analysis, they will be found to group themselves into three classes: (1) Cases involving bonus or watered stock and therefore resting in fraud. Lester v. Bemis Lumber Co., 71 Ark. 379, 74 S. W. 518; Montgomery Iron Works v. Roman, 147 Ala. 434, 41 South. 811; Vaughn v. Ala. Nat. Bank, 143 Ala. 572, 42 South. 64, 5 Ann. Cas. 665; Montgomery Iron Works v. Capital City Ins. Co., 137 Ala. 134, 34 South. 210; King v. Pony Gold Min. Co., 28 Mont. 74, 72 Pac. 309; Jones v. Whitworth, 94 Tenn. 602, 30 S. W. 736; Christensen v. Colby, 43 Hun. 362; Christensen v. Quintard, 36 Hun. 334; Sherman v. S. K. D. Oil Co., 185 Cal. 534, 197 Pac. 799; Rhode v. Dock-Hop Co., 184 Cal. 367, 194 Pac. 11, 12 A. L. R. 437; Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez Granite Co., 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143; J. F. Lucey Co. v. McMullen, 178 Cal. 425, 173 Pac. 1000; R. H. Herron Co. v. Shaw, 165 Cal. 668, 133 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1265. (2) Cases involving unpaid subscriptions, where the subscription contract was silent as to the time of payment, or provided for payment upon call and no call had been made. Curry v. Woodward, 53 Ala. 376; Cherry v.

Butchers' & Drovers' Bk., 107 Mo. 133, 17 S. W. 644, 28 Am. St. Rep. 405; Appeal of Mack (Pa.) 7 Atl. 481; Union Sav. Bk. v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 697, 79 Pac. 441; Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158; Glenn v. Saxton, 68 Cal. 353, 9 Pac. 420; Welch v. Sargent, 127 Cal. 72, 59 Pac. 319. (3) Cases involving a peculiar statutory liability and governed by statutory provisions. Barrich v. Gifford, 47 Ohio St. 180, 24 N. E. 259, 21 Am. St. Rep. 798; Leighton v. Leighton Lea Ass'n, 146 App. Div. 255, 130 N. Y. Supp. 935; Miller v. Lane, 160 Cal. 90, 116 Pac. 58.

There are many cases holding that where the subscription is unconditionally payable at specified times the statute runs from those times. See cases cited in note 61 of 6 Fletcher, Cyc. Corp., p. 7139, 14 C. J. 1102, note 84, and 3 Clark & Marshall, Private Corporations, § 802. No case to the contrary has been cited herein, and we have found none to the contrary with the single exception of the case of Payne v. Bullard, 23 Miss. 88, 55 Am. Dec. 74, decided in 1851. In that case the court concluded, erroneously as we think, that the "trust fund doctrine" was applicable thereto and operated to prevent the statute from running in favor of stockholders as against corporate creditors. In the absence of circumstances of fraud (actual or constructive) or estoppel, there is no real trust relationship between the stockholders of a corporation and its creditors. The trust fund doctrine has been generally rejected in the later decisions. 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Rem. (2d Ed.) § 2319, p. 5142; 3 Clark & Marshall, Private Corporations, § 768, and cases there cited. Whether that doctrine still obtains in this state or not, it is at any rate not now to be regarded as modifying or adding to the established rules of equity jurisprudence for relief upon the ground of fraud. Rhode v. Dock-Hop Co., supra, 184 Cal. at page 377, 194 Pac. 11, 12 A. L. R. 437.

It has been suggested that the conclusions here reached do violence to the spirit and purpose of the law and will have the effect of reducing the rights of corporate creditors to little more than a sophistry. The same suggestion was directed with equal force and with equal validity against the interpretation of section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which resulted in "an anomalous condition of affairs," whereby the statute might run against the stockholders' liability imposed by the Constitution itself, even before the creditor's right of action thereon could arise. Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 615, 34 Pac. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87. The answer there made was that the situation so complained of "would be the result of the voluntary act of the creditor done in the face of the law." The same answer applies with equal validity to the criticism here made. If a creditor elects to extend long-term credits to a corporation upon the faith of its unpaid subscriptions, knowing them to be unpaid, and neglects to ascertain the terms of the subscription contracts, the result which follows may be justly ascribed to his own act; a fortiori in the case where he extends such credit with actual knowledge of the terms of subscription. The record discloses herein that the plaintiff, who was at all times vice president and manager of the corporation, had an intimate personal knowledge of the contracts here sued upon; that, in fact, he personally participated in procuring many of them from the defendants. It is suggested that the stockholders could interpose delays in the proceedings to obtain a judgment against the corporation, and by appeals to the Supreme Court could delay the entry of final judgment until the statute had run upon their subscriptions, even against the will of the creditor. But the taking of an appeal does not stay the execution of a judgment unless a bond is given which is adequate to secure the judgment creditor.

We conclude that the corporate creditor has four years after the recovery of judgment against the corporation and return of execution thereon within which to commence his action in equity to subject the corporate assets to the payment of his judgment; but in so doing he can (in the absence of fraud or estoppel) realize upon only such assets as would be enforceable at the suit of the corporation itself.

The foregoing conclusions render it unnecessary to give consideration to the various other contentions submitted by respondents in support of the validity of the judgment below.

The judgment is affirmed.

LUCKEHE v. MAHON, Judge. (S. F. 10960.)(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1924.
Rehearing Denied Feb. 6, 1924.)1. Appeal and error §571—Mandamus to trial judge to compel certification of transcript on appeal denied.

Where there was evidence at a hearing to have a transcript certified for appeal justifying the trial judge in believing that attorney for appellant was in fault in perfecting the record, the Supreme Court could not say that the judge abused his discretion in refusing to certify the transcript, and a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel him to certify it was denied.

On Application for Rehearing.2. Appeal and error §571—Newly discovered letter and affidavit from court reporter not considered on mandamus to compel judge to certify transcript.

Upon petition for mandamus to trial judge to certify a transcript, a newly discovered letter and affidavit from the court reporter stating that he had filed the transcript and had forgotten that he had so written could not be considered since they should be presented first to respondent judge for action.

In Bank.

Petition for a writ of mandate by Charles J. Luckehe against K. S. Mahon, Judge of the Superior Court of Sutter County, to compel him to certify a reporter's transcript. Writ denied.

Clinton W. Johnson, of Gridley, for petitioner.

A. H. Hewitt, of Yuba City, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a petition for writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to certify to a reporter's transcript of the trial prepared under the provisions of section 953a et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. The transcript was prepared and paid for within time and after due and legal notice requiring its preparation. Either two or three copies of the transcript were prepared by the reporter. Two of these were handed to the attorney for the petitioner. The petitioner claims that he relied upon the reporter to file the other copy of the transcript with the clerk, as provided by law. Nothing was done by the respondent in connection with the certification of the record until after a motion to dismiss was made in this court. This motion was at first granted, but the petitioner, claiming that he had received the notice of motion to dismiss only the day before it came on for hearing, and that there was then pending a proceeding for the settlement of the record, asked for a rehearing, which was granted, and, upon the hearing of the motion to dismiss, it was denied upon the ground that it then appeared there was a proceeding pending for the settlement of the record in the trial court. Subsequently the trial judge considered the matter of the certification of the transcript, and affidavits and testimony were taken upon the question, and after a hearing he dismissed the proceedings for the settlement of the record, and declined to certify to the transcript. This petition was brought to compel the trial judge to certify to the transcript. His order refusing to certify the record requires us to consider that the trial judge resolved all conflicting statements in the testimony and exercised his discretion in favor of the respondent in the appeal. There is evidence which justified the trial court in believing that the reporter furnished the transcript to the attorney upon the promise or expectation that the attorney would file the transcript with the clerk. If this testimony is true, as the court in effect held, of course, the neglect and delay in perfecting the record was the fault of the petitioner. We cannot say that it was an abuse of discretion under the circumstances to refuse to certify the transcript. Petition denied.

On Application for Rehearing.

The petitioner bases his application for a rehearing upon the ground that since our decision he has discovered a letter from the court reporter, the original of which he files with his petition, in which the reporter states under date of May 22, 1923, that he has filed the transcript in Luckehe v. Reclamation District, and supplements this letter with an affidavit of the court reporter that he had forgotten that he had so written. The letter and affidavit cannot be considered by us, for the reason that the petition here is necessarily based upon the proposition that the trial court improperly refused to certify the transcript under the facts as presented to him. The evidence now presented to us should be presented to the respondent for whatever action may be appropriate.

Petition denied.

DANLEY v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR MERCED COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 2763.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. Dec. 1, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 28, 1924.)

1. Injunction ☞164—Injunction without notice not vacated or modified by court after losing jurisdiction.

Though Code Civ. Proc. § 532, provides that, if an injunction is granted without notice, the person enjoined may on reasonable notice apply for its dissolution or modification; if the court in which it was obtained has lost jurisdiction of the subject-matter, then he is not entitled to hearing.

2. Appeal and error ☞447—After appeal, trial court without jurisdiction over injunction.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 946, providing that when appeal is perfected it stays proceedings in the court below, where the purpose of an action was injunctive relief which trial court denied and after an order reinstated an original restraining order appeal was taken from the order denying application for temporary injunction, the trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain a motion to vacate the prior order.

Application for writ of prohibition by L. E. Danley against the Superior Court in and for the County of Merced and others. Writ granted.

James F. Peck and Robert L. McWilliams, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This is an application by the petitioner for a writ of prohibition commanding and directing the respondent, the superior court of the county of Merced, J. J. Trabucco, judge presiding, from further proceeding with the hearing of or disposition of a certain motion made by the other respondents above named to vacate, set aside, and annul an order theretofore made reinstating a temporary restraining order pending the determination on appeal of an action prosecuted in said court entitled "L. E. Danley, Plaintiff, v. Merced Irrigation District, C. E. Kocher, L. L. Burchell, E. V. Givens, George Bloss, Jr., C. L. Garvin and E. F. Treadwell, Defendants."

The facts involved are in substance as follows: That on or about the 11th day of September, 1923, the petitioner filed a complaint in the superior court of Merced county having for its purpose the restraining of the Merced irrigation district and its directors from making or entering into certain contracts relating to water and water rights set out in the complaint; that at the time of the filing of the complaint the court issued a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued pending the trial of the action; that at the time set for the respondents to show cause the defendants in said action, the respondents in this, appeared and filed demurrers to the plaintiff's complaint, which demurrers were subsequently sustained by the court without leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint in said action; that the order of the court sustaining the demurrers of the defendants in the action referred to was made and entered on the 28th day of September, 1923. The court also at said time denied the plaintiff's petition for a temporary injunction. On the 29th day of September, 1923, on the application of the plaintiff in said action, the petitioner in this, the court made an order reinstating the original restraining order pending the appeal or appeals by the plaintiff from the order of the court denying the plaintiff's application for a temporary injunction and from any judgment that might be entered in said action following the court's order sustaining the defendants' demurrers to the plaintiff's complaint. Thereafter and on the 29th day of September, 1923, the said superior court made and entered its judgment of dismissal of the action herein referred to, based upon its order theretofore made sustaining the defendants' demurrers to plaintiff's complaint, without leave to amend, immediately after the entry of the judgment herein referred to, and on the same day the plaintiff duly served and filed his notice of appeal from the order denying his application for a temporary injunction and also from the judgment of dismissal entered after sustaining the defendants' demurrers. The order reinstating the restraining order pending the appeals above mentioned was made without notice. On the 9th day of October, 1923, the defendants in the action referred to, the respondents in this, served upon the plaintiff in said action the petitioner in this, a notice of motion to set aside the order reinstating the restraining order herein referred to, and on the 16th day of October, 1923, moved said court to vacate such order. At the time set for the hearing of this latter motion, the petitioner herein appeared by his attorneys and objected to the consideration of said motion on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the same; that, notwithstanding said objection so interposed, the superior court proceeded to entertain said motion, and will, unless restrained by the order of this court, proceed to pass upon the same.

[1] On the part of the petitioner it is here contended that, immediately upon filing his notice of appeal in the action referred to, the trial court was immediately divested of jurisdiction to entertain or hear any motion pertaining to or to take any proceedings whatsoever in relation to the matters embraced in said action or the orders appealed from. On the part of respondents it is contended that, as the reinstatement order was made without notice, the motion to vacate comes within the provisions of section 532 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads:

"If an injunction is granted without notice to the person enjoined, he may apply, upon reasonable notice to the judge who granted the injunction, or to the court in which the action was brought, to dissolve or modify the same."

The literal reading of this section would seem to support the contention of the respondents, but, in order to correctly interpret it, it must be read in the light of the circumstances to which the wording of the section is to be applied. If the court in which the original injunction or restraining order has been obtained or the judge who issued the order has lost jurisdiction over the subject-matter involved, then the fact whether the injunction was or was not issued upon notice cannot be held to entitle the moving party to a hearing. The correct interpretation would seem to be that so long as the court or judge issuing the order has jurisdiction to alter or modify the same, the party against whom the injunction runs, and which was issued without notice, may, upon notice, move that the injunction be dissolved or the restraining order set aside.

[2] Did the trial court on either the 9th or the 16th day of October, 1923, have any jurisdiction over the injunctive matters sought to be litigated in the action theretofore instituted by the petitioner against the respondents in the action hereinbefore referred to? Section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as material upon this hearing, reads as follows:

"Whenever an appeal is perfected, as provided in the preceding sections of this chapter, it stays all further proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from, or upon the matters embraced therein.

This language refers specifically to the matters which are embraced in the orders and judgment appealed from, and not merely matters which may appear upon the same sheet of paper; that is, the real substance matter of the action. A reading of the complaint shows that the action heretofore referred to instituted by the petitioner against the respondents had for its purpose injunctive relief. The sole and entire object of the action sought to be attained was to prevent, enjoin, and restrain the respondents, as directors of the Merced irrigation district, from entering into certain contracts involving the Merced irrigation district and placing upon said district certain financial obligations and responsibilities set out in the complaint. No other relief is sought. It necessarily follows that the whole subject-matter of injunctive relief was embraced in the orders and judgment of the trial court in denying the plaintiff the relief prayed for and in dismissing his complaint. The restraining order, though so called, is but a temporary injunction under another name, and calls into exercise the power of the superior court to maintain the status quo for a specific period.

The whole power of a superior court to reinstate and continue in force a restraining order pending appeal, whether that order be incorporated into a judgment denying either a temporary or perpetual injunction or made in a separate order concurrently with or preceding the entry of the judgment is fully considered in the case of City of Pasadena v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 781, 109 Pac. 620, 21 Ann. Cas. 1355. It is there set forth distinctly that this equitable power exists and may properly be exercised by trial courts whenever in the judgment of the trial court its discretion should be used to maintain the status quo pending an appeal from its judgment in an action where an injunction is sought and denied. In Mulvey v. Superior Court, 22 Cal. App. 514, 135 Pac. 53, the same question was considered, and it was again held that such power existed, and it was also further held that, after such restraining order had been made and a notice of appeal filed, the jurisdiction of the trial court to entertain any motion in respect to such injunctive order was suspended; the language of the court being:

"There can be no question but that the court possessed the inherent power, notwithstanding its order and judgment dismissing the action, to make a renewal order the effect of which was to preserve the rights of all the parties until the appeal was determined. When the appeal was perfected the effect thereof was to remove the subject-matter of the order from the jurisdiction of the lower court, and that court is without power to proceed further as to matters embraced therein until the appeal is determined"—citing Vosburg v. Vosburg, 137 Cal. 493, 70 Pac. 473.

There, as here, the revival order was made previous to the entry of the judgment dismissing the plaintiff's action. No significance was given by the court to this fact. The fact that no specific appeal was taken from the renewal order, and the further fact that the renewal order is not mentioned in the order denying the injunction sought nor in the judgment dismissing the petitioner's action, does not take the renewal order from under the provisions of section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to appeals. That section relates, in so far as it stays proceedings in the court below, not to the particular orders that may have been made, but to all proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from and the matters embraced therein. It can scarcely be argued that the right of plaintiff to an injunction in the proceeding instituted by him was involved and embraced in the judgment dismissing the same, and the same is true concerning his right to an injunction whether called a restraining order, a temporary injunction, or a perpetual injunction. And while it is true as contended by the respondents, that the opinion and judgment of another department of the District Court of Appeal is not binding upon this court, nevertheless such opinion and judgment has its persuasive effect, and if we agree both in the reasoning advanced and the conclusion reached it is our privilege and our duty to adopt the same. The reasons advanced in the two cases to which we have referred and the application made of the principles involved to the facts in the case of Mulvey v. Superior Court, supra, which are identical with those presented to us, we think conclusively disposes of the questions presented to us for consideration. We hold that, after filing of the notices of appeal in the action to which we have referred, the superior court of Merced county was thereupon divested of jurisdiction to entertain a motion made by the respondents in this action to vacate the renewal order referred to in this opinion and that a writ of prohibition should issue; and it is so ordered.

HATFIELD v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY. (Civ. 2698.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 3, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Determination of conflict of testimony for trial court.

Where there was conflict in material testimony, its determination was for the trial court.

2. Executors and administrators §315(4)—Relying on erroneous advice on question of law held excuse for mistake in allowing distribution.

Where moneys were deposited by decedent and G. in their names, under agreement that the deposits were payable to either, or to the survivor, and on decedent's death there was evidence to support conclusion that G. was misled to his prejudice by erroneous advice of an attorney that the moneys belonged to decedent, G. was excusable for having mistakenly allowed it to be distributed as decedent's estate.

3. Executors and administrators §315(4)—Client justified in relying on advice of attorney.

Where moneys deposited in a bank by decedent and G. were payable to either, or to their survivor, and on decedent's death G., in reliance on advice of his attorney that the moneys belonged to decedent, permitted distribution as part of her estate, G. was justified in relying on such advice until convinced to the contrary.

4. Executors and administrators §315(4)—Vacating decree of distribution not abuse of discretion.

Where moneys were deposited by decedent and G. payable to the order of either, or their survivor, and on decedent's death G., relying on advice of attorney, permitted distribution of the moneys as part of decedent's estate, where the fee allowed the attorney from the estate had not been paid, there was no abuse of discretion in setting aside decree of distribution, even though property of the estate had been delivered before motion was made to set decree aside.

In the matter of the estate of Henrietta Kaiser, deceased. Application for writ of review by V. L. Hatfield against the Superior Court of California in and for the County of San Joaquin. Writ denied.

Martin I. Welsh and W. H. Hatfield, both of Sacramento (J. T. McMenamin, of Sacramento, of counsel), for petitioner.

Johnson & Lemmon, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of review whereby petitioner prays for the annulment of an order of the respondent court setting aside its decree settling the final account and distributing the estate of Henrietta Kaiser, deceased.

Petitioner was the attorney for George Kaiser, the executor of decedent's last will. As such attorney, petitioner conducted all the legal proceedings in the administration of the estate and prepared and filed a final account and petition for distribution, which the executor duly verified. The final account credits the executor with $802.69 as attorney fees and the same amount as commissions of the executor. These commissions and fees were computed upon the value of the estate as set forth in the final account, consisting of cash in the sum of $27,169.83 and other property of the value of $100. The court settled the account as presented and distributed the estate, in accordance with the terms of the will, in equal shares to George and Alexander Kaiser, the sons of decedent.

The decree of distribution was entered June 5, 1922. On the 6th day of October, 1922, George Kaiser and Alexander Kaiser filed notice that on the 16th of that month they would move the court for an order setting aside the decree settling the final account and distributing the estate on the ground that the same was made and taken against them "through their mistake, inadvertence, surprise and excusable neglect." Accompanying the notice of motion, there was filed the affidavit of George Kaiser, stating that the moneys set forth in the final account and petition for distribution as a part of the estate of decedent had been deposited by Henrietta Kaiser and affiant in several banks "in the names of the said Henrietta Kaiser and George Kaiser under agreements entered into between said Henrietta Kaiser and affiant and the said several banking institutions that the said sums of money so deposited and its accumulations were deliverable or payable to either the said Henrietta Kaiser or affiant or to the survivor of them"; that after the death of decedent and prior to the filing of the petition for probate of her will, affiant consulted petitioner herein relative to the property of decedent and fully informed him that said bank accounts "were joint accounts standing in the names of affiant and said decedent and payable to either or to the survivor"; that petitioner herein thereupon "advised affiant that the said bank accounts belonged to the estate of said Henrietta Kaiser, * * * deceased, and must be probated upon in order that the title thereto be finally passed to the heirs of said decedent; that affiant relying upon said advice of said V. L. Hatfield employed and engaged the said V. L. Hatfield as his attorney for the purpose of probating the estate of said decedent"; that in reliance upon said advice affiant included said moneys as a part of said estate in the petition for the probate of the will, the inventory and the final account and petition for distribution; that affiant has not paid the sums allowed as attorney's and executor's fees; and that the moneys deposited in said bank accounts have been the property of affiant at all times since the death of decedent. At the hearing of the motion to set aside the decree, George Kaiser testified: "I placed all my money into a joint tenancy agreement with my mother, so that in case of my death she would be—it would go absolutely to her, and we had the agreement, and she placed hers the same way. * * * She * * * went into this joint tenancy agreement with the sole intent that I became sole possessor of her money at her death;" that all the money which was listed as the property of the estate had been deposited by decedent out of her own funds; that the witness had placed none of his own money into those particular deposits, but that decedent and the witness had other joint bank accounts in which the witness had deposited his own moneys. The testimony of the witness was corroborated by certain deposit cards showing joint accounts in various banks. The evidence was such as to warrant the court in concluding that the moneys in these joint accounts passed to George Kaiser on the death of his mother.

Alexander testified that after his mother's death he and George Kaiser sought the advice of petitioner relative to the inheritance tax due the state on the moneys in the joint accounts which passed to George upon his mother's death, gave him the deposit books, and stated the facts relative to the deposits; that petitioner advised them that such moneys did not so pass, but that they were a part of the mother's estate; that, having implicit confidence in petitioner, they followed his advice and employed him as attorney for the administration of the estate; that in December, 1921, the witness became convinced that petitioner's advice was erroneous and took the matter up with him; that petitioner informed the witness that the money "could not be withdrawn from the estate"; and that the witness then informed George Kaiser that petitioner said "it could not be taken out, and we might as well let it ride to the end of the term." After the witness had consulted petitioner in December, as stated, the latter wrote the witness relative to the withdrawal of the moneys from the estate, stating what it would be necessary to set forth in the petition therefor, and saying:

"He (George) will have to set forth a declaration that when he filed his petition for letters testamentary, and when he prepared the inventory, that he did so under a misapprehension of facts, and that he had forgotten that when he and his mother signed the joint tenancy agreement deposit cards, that she had told him that upon her death the money was to be absolutely his, and that neither you nor any one else was to participate therein. Such change of face and reversal of attitude on George's part is going to exhibit him to the court as a 'bone-head' and I doubt very much if the court would believe him even though he so testified. * * * That there may be no misunderstanding of the subject under discussion, and that I may know how fully George will testify in support of the petition to be prepared and filed, I am sending him a copy of this letter."

Alexander requested petitioner not to send a copy of the letter to George, and it was not sent to him. George learned in December, 1921, that the money in question was not the property of the estate. He testified:

"I found out in December—that is, we investigated in December, and, as I said, I protested the way it was handled, and asked it be taken out, and Mr. Hatfield informed us that it could not be taken out. Q. Informed you? A. No, sir; not me. * * * Q. You knew your brother was making objections back in December, and had this discussion with Mr. Hatfield? A. Certainly."

He also testified that he did not see the letter herein referred to until after the estate was closed.

In order that the relations of the parties may be the better understood, it may be said that George Kaiser and petitioner were not acquainted with each other prior to the employment of the latter by the former, but Alexander Kaiser and petitioner had been personal friends and George employed petitioner at the solicitation of Alexander. George lived in Lodi while petitioner and Alexander resided in Sacramento. During the administration of the estate, George seems to have given but little personal attention to the matter, but left the details thereof to Alexander and petitioner.

[1-3] The testimony of petitioner is contradictory of that of Alexander and George Kaiser in material respects, but the determination of the conflict thus raised was for the trial court. There is sufficient evidence to support the conclusion that George Kaiser was misled to his prejudice by erroneous advice given him by petitioner, however honestly the advice may have been given, and that he is excusable for having mistakenly allowed the property of the estate to be distributed as it was in reliance upon such advice. Whether, under the facts stated, the moneys in question passed to George upon the death of his mother, was a question of law. When, after stating in the petition for probate of the will and in the inventory that such moneys were a part of decedent's estate, George became convinced that they were not such, then the question whether they could be withdrawn from administration was again one of law. In a controversy arising between an attorney and his client, it certainly must be the law that the client is justified in relying upon the advice of the attorney prior to the time of the controversy. In Douglass v. Todd, 96 Cal. 655, 31 Pac. 623, 31 Am. St. Rep. 247, where the defendant, in reliance upon the advice of his attorney to the effect that he had no defense to the action, had failed to answer the complaint, the court said:

"Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is broad enough to justify the action of the court below in relieving a party from a mistake of law on the part of his attorney, when, by his reliance upon it, he is prevented from making any defense."

See, also, Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, 105 Pac. 590, and Williams v. Thompson (Cal. App.) 213 Pac. 705.

The instant case is stronger in favor of George Kaiser for relief, in that he was prevented from making his claim to the property, at the time the estate was settled, by relying upon the advice of his attorney who became his adversary on the motion to set the decree aside.

[4] Petitioner contends that the property of the estate had been delivered to the distributees under the decree of distribution before the motion was made to set the decree aside and that therefore the court was without jurisdiction to vacate the decree. Whatever the fact may be in that regard, the fee allowed petitioner has not been paid, and if the moneys in controversy did not belong to the estate, then petitioner is entitled to only a small part of the amount so allowed and is not entitled to payment out of the moneys mentioned in the decree. In the final settlement of the estate petitioner will be afforded an opportunity to show, if he can, that such moneys were a part of the estate of decedent. On the record here, it cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in setting aside the decree of distribution and the order settling the final account.

The petition is denied and the order is affirmed.

Ex parte HUMPHREY. (Crim. 744.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. November 28, 1923.)

1. Statutes $\S$ 51—Penal provisions of Volstead Act adopted by Wright Act become law of state.

As the Wright Act adopts by reference the penal provisions in section 29 of the Volstead Act (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, § 10138 $\frac{1}{2}$ p), such penal provisions became a part of the law to the same effect as if they had been set out at length in the Wright Act.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 27—Term "punishable by imprisonment in the state prison," as found in Penal Code, construed; "felony."

In Pen. Code, § 19, which provides a felony is a crime punishable with death or with imprisonment in the state prison, the term "punishable by imprisonment in the state prison" implies an imprisonment expressly authorized by law, either by directly providing for imprisonment in such prison as a punishment for the commission of a particular offense, or by denominating the offense a felony and providing generally for such imprisonment of those convicted of felonies for which a specific punishment is not prescribed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Felony; Imprison—Imprisonment.]

3. Criminal law $\S$ 27—Second offense of selling intoxicating liquor held a misdemeanor; "felony."

The second offense of selling intoxicating liquor as prohibited by the Wright Act, which adopts by reference the penal provisions in section 29 of the Volstead Act (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, § 10138 $\frac{1}{2}$ p), which, though it permits an imposition of more than one year's imprisonment, does not specify whether the offense is a misdemeanor or a felony, held a misdemeanor under the state law, in view of Pen. Code, § 17, providing that a felony is a crime punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison, and that every other crime is a misdemeanor, that being true notwithstanding that under the federal law the offense is a felony by reason of Pen. Code U. S. § 335 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10509), the word "felony" as there used, as is demonstrated by Pen. Code Cal. §§ 18a, 245, and Rev. St. U.

S. § 5541 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10527), meaning something different from the word "felony" as used in the state laws, under the federal law the term of imprisonment which a court is authorized to impose being the test to determine whether a crime not punishable by death is a felony or a misdemeanor, while under the state law the place of imprisonment, and not the term thereof, determines the character of the offense, and it was not intended that the Wright Act should adopt the federal classification of crimes.

4. Statutes ☞149—With respect to punishment for crimes Legislature of 1872 could not tie hands of Legislature of 1921.

With respect to the prescription of punishment for crimes such as the second offense of selling intoxicating liquor, as prohibited by the Wright Act, which is a misdemeanor for which a punishment by imprisonment for over a year may be imposed, the Legislature of 1872, in which year section 19 of the Penal Code was adopted, and which provides as a punishment for a misdemeanor imprisonment in county jail not more than six months, unless otherwise prescribed, could not tie the hands of the Legislature of 1921, in which the Wright Act was enacted; and hence it cannot be successfully contended that section 19 limits imprisonment to six months in the county jail for a second offense of selling liquor in violation of the Wright Act.

5. Criminal law ☞991(2)—Court, in imposing sentence, part of which was valid and part invalid, exhausted its powers.

Where the court's sentence imposed on petitioner for a second offense of selling intoxicating liquor, in violation of the Wright Act, was void as to that part of the sentence which imposed imprisonment in the state prison, but was valid as to that part which imposed a fine of $1,000, the court's power to sentence petitioner was exhausted, and he was entitled to be released from prison.

Ray T. Coughlin, G. J. Raymond, S. Luke Howe, R. B. Hibbitt, and Markham Johnston, all of Sacramento, for petitioner.

J. J. Henderson, Dist. Atty., and Ben P. Tabor, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner was charged with the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, and with a prior conviction of a like sale. He admitted the prior conviction, and was convicted of the unlawful sale charged. The court sentenced him to pay a fine of $1,000 and to be imprisoned in the state prison "for the term provided by law." Petitioner contends that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in sentencing him to imprisonment in the state prison.

[1-3] The Wright Act adopts by reference "the penal provisions of the Volstead Act." Stats. 1921, p. 79. Such provisions thereby became a part of the law of this state to the same effect as if they had been set out at length in the adopting act. Ex parte Burke (Cal. Sup.) 212 Pac. 193. Section 29 of the Volstead Act provides:

"Any person who manufactures or sells liquor in violation of this title shall for a first offense be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not exceeding six months, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $2,000 and be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than five years." Fed. Stat. Ann. 1919 Supp. p. 215 (U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1923, § 10138½p).

The act contains no provision as to the place of imprisonment, nor does it specify whether the offenses therein enumerated shall constitute felonies or misdemeanors. If the offense of which petitioner was convicted is a misdemeanor only, then the court exceeded its powers in sentencing him to imprisonment in the state prison. In a case in which the defendant had been sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary contrary to law it is said:

"The court below was without jurisdiction to pass any such sentences, and the orders directing the sentences of imprisonment to be executed in a penitentiary are void. This is not a case of mere error, but one in which the court below transcended its powers." Ex parte Mills, 135 U. S. 263, 10 Sup. Ct. 762, 34 L. Ed. 107.

Section 17 of the Penal Code provides:

"A felony is a crime which is punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison. Every other crime is a misdemeanor. When a crime, punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, is also punishable by fine or imprisonment in a county jail, in the discretion of the court, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor for all purposes after a judgment imposing a punishment other than imprisonment in the state prison."

The term "punishable by imprisonment in the state prison" implies, of course, an imprisonment expressly authorized by law, either by directly providing for imprisonment in such prison as a punishment for the commission of a particular offense or by denominating the offense a felony and providing generally for such imprisonment of those convicted of felonies for which a specific punishment is not prescribed. See, generally, Brooks v. People, 14 Colo. 413, 24 Pac. 553; Ex parte Cain, 20 Okl. 125, 93 Pac. 974; Ex parte Smith (Okl. Cr. App.) 218 Pac. 708. The question here presented is not a new one in this state. In the case of Union Ice Co. v. Rose, 11 Cal. App. 357, 104 Pac. 1006, the court had under consideration the provisions of the Cartwright Law (Stats. 1907, p. 984), making certain acts punishable by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, without specifying the place of imprisonment. After quoting the definition of a felony contained in section 17 of the Penal Code, the court said:

"The conclusion would therefore seem irresistible that, since the offense is clearly a crime for which a penalty is imposed, the punishment for which, however, is not that prescribed for a felony, it must necessarily and logically follow that it is a misdemeanor."

The determination of the question was necessary to the decision in that case, and a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court. It may be said, therefore, that petitioner's contention is sustained by the decision of the court of last resort in this state.

Section 335 of the Penal Code of the United States provides:

"All offenses which may be punished by death, or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, shall be deemed felonies." 7 Fed. Stats. Ann. (2 Ed.) p. 987 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10509).

Basing his argument upon the provisions of this section, the district attorney contends that, since more than one year's imprisonment may be imposed for a second offense of selling liquor, the crime is a felony under the federal law, and is therefore made a felony under the state law by the adoption of the penal provisions of the Volstead Act. The argument is fallacious in assuming that the word "felony" has a fixed and certain meaning, whereas the word may have as many meanings as there are lawmaking bodies. Under the federal law, the question whether a crime, not punishable by death, is a felony or a misdemeanor depends upon the term of imprisonment which a court is authorized to impose, while under the state law it is determined by the place of imprisonment, the term of imprisonment authorized not being a factor. The Penal Code provides for the maximum term of imprisonment for the commission of certain felonies, without prescribing a minimum term. In such cases, under the provisions of section 18a of the Penal Code, a defendant could be imprisoned in the state prison for as short a term as six months, but the offense would be a felony notwithstanding the short term. On the other hand, section 245 of the Penal Code authorizes imprisonment in the county jail for a term of ten years for assault with a deadly weapon. If a defendant were so sentenced for the maximum term, the offense would not thereby lose its classification as a misdemeanor. Section 5541 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

"In every case where any person convicted of any offense against the United States is sentenced to imprisonment for a period longer than one year, the court by which the sentence is passed may order the same to be executed in any state jail or penitentiary within the district or state where such court is held, the use of which jail or penitentiary is allowed by the Legislature of the state for that purpose." 8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d Ed.) p. 278 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10527).

It has been held that the words "state jail" and "penitentiary" as used in this section mean the same thing. Ex parte Mills, supra. If the imprisonment imposed, though for a felony, be for a shorter term than one year, the defendant cannot be confined in a penitentiary, or "state jail." Ex parte Mills, supra. It thus clearly appears that the word "felony" as used in the federal laws means something different from the word "felony" in the state laws, and there is no more reason to hold that it was intended by the Wright Act to adopt the federal classification of crimes than there would be if the federal law had used the term "high misdemeanor" instead of the word "felony" in section 335.

[4] Section 19 of the Penal Code provides:

"Except in cases where a different punishment is prescribed by this Code, every offense declared to be a misdemeanor is punishable by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both."

The district attorney says:

"Under section 19 of the Penal Code except where a different punishment is prescribed by that Code the maximum period of imprisonment in a county jail shall not exceed six months. No different punishment for a sale after a prior conviction of sale under the Wright Act or Volstead Act is prescribed in the Penal Code."

If this statement is intended as an argument to the effect that section 19 limits imprisonment in the county jail for a second offense of selling liquor to a period of six months, while other complete answers might be made, it is sufficient to say that section 19 was adopted in 1872, and that it is elementary that the Legislature of 1872 was without power to tie the hands of the Legislature of 1921.

[5] If the sentence imposed by the court were wholly void it would still be within the power of the trial court to pronounce a valid sentence of imprisonment in the county jail. Petitioner, however, argues that the part of the sentence imposing a fine is valid, and that therefore the power of the court to sentence him is exhausted, and that he is entitled to be discharged from imprisonment. To this contention the district attorney makes no reply. Petitioner's contention seems to be well founded. In re Sullivan, 3 Cal. App. 193, 84 Pac. 781.

The petitioner is discharged from custody.

EASTWOOD v. STEWART. (Civ. 3844.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 4, 1923.)

1. Executors and administrators $\Rightarrow$ 513(9)—Agent for sale of land, being a person "interested in the estate," held concluded by settlement and allowance of account.

Where executrix, pursuant to an order of the probate court granted under Code Civ. Proc. § 1559, procured an agent to sell the property of the estate, he was a person "interested in the estate" by virtue of his claim for commissions in view of section 1643, subd. 5, and sections 1635, 1637, and was concluded by the settlement and the allowance of the account of the executrix by the probate court.

2. Courts $\Rightarrow$ 472(4)—Probate court held to have exclusive jurisdiction to pass on demand of agent employed to sell property of estate; "claim"; "expense."

A court of probate has exclusive jurisdiction to pass upon the demand of an agent employed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1559, to sell the property of an estate, though not a "claim" against the estate within the meaning of sections 1490-1514, not having accrued against decedent in his lifetime, it being an "expense" in the care and management and settlement of the estate in view of section 1616.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by H. H. Eastwood against Anna Stewart, executrix of the last will and testament of Mary E. Sebastian sometimes known as and called Elizabeth E. Sebastian, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles F. Blackstock, of Oxnard, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action by a real estate agent to recover commissions alleged to have been earned by him in finding a purchaser for certain real property which was a part of the assets of the estate of Mary E. Sebastian, deceased. The defendant, the executrix of the last will and testament of the decedent, is sued in her representative capacity; i. e., she is sued "as" the executrix of the last will and testament of her testatrix. The action is based upon a written contract for commissions entered into by plaintiff and the executrix during the course of the latter's administration of the estate of her testatrix. The executrix appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

On November 11, 1918, the superior court, sitting in probate, made an order authorizing the executrix to sell all the real property belonging to the estate of her testatrix. The preliminary steps essential to the making of the order were duly taken under the law then in force. On December 24, 1918, the court, acting under the grant of power contained in section 1559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, made its order authorizing the executrix to employ a real estate agent. On December 31, 1918, plaintiff and the executrix, pursuant to the authorization thus given by the court, executed the contract upon which this action was brought. By the terms of their contract the executrix authorizes plaintiff to secure a purchaser for the property and agrees that, upon a purchaser being secured whose bid shall be accepted and to whom a sale shall be made by her and confirmed by the court, she will pay plaintiff a commission of 5 per cent. on the first $10,000 and 2½ per cent. on the balance of the purchase price. On November 8, 1920, the property was sold by the executrix to a purchaser procured by plaintiff; and on November 22, 1920, the sale was confirmed by the court.

On December 11, 1920, the executrix rendered her final account, prayed a settlement of her administration, and petitioned for final distribution of the estate. She set up that all debts had been paid, but made no mention of plaintiff's claim for commissions. A day was appointed for the settlement of the account and notice thereof was given as required by law. On December 27, 1920, the court settled the account and made final distribution of the estate. Plaintiff did not contest the account, nor did he appear at the settlement thereof to make any claim for commissions. Instead, he brought this action against defendant, as executrix, some time after her final account had been settled and the decree of final distribution had been made.

[1] One of the points made by appellant is that respondent's remedy was in the probate proceeding, and that because he did not appear therein he is concluded by the settlement of the final account and may not now maintain this action for his commissions. We are constrained to hold with appellant on this contention.

At the time when respondent made his contract with appellant section 1559 of the Code of Civil Procedure—added to the Code in 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 251)—empowered the court, sitting in probate, to make an order authorizing an executor or administrator to enter into a contract with any bona fide real estate agent to secure a purchaser of the real property of the estate. The section, as it then read, contained this provision:

"If a sale to a purchaser obtained by such agent is returned to the court for confirmation and said sale be confirmed to such purchaser, such contract shall be binding and valid as against the estate. By the execution of any such contract no personal liability shall attach to the executor or administrator, and no liability of any kind shall be incurred by the estate unless an actual sale is made and confirmed and unless such contract be by the court first authorized."

Prior to this Code amendment an executor or administrator could not create any liability against the estate in his charge by his contracts with real estate agents, attorneys, or others employed to assist him in the performance of his duties. The real estate agent, attorney, or other person so employed by the executor or administrator had no action or claim against the estate. Whatever claim he had was against the executor or administrator in his individual capacity, who in turn, if the expenditure was made in good faith and was proper, might be credited therewith in the settlement of his accounts with the estate. Maxon v. Jones, 128 Cal. 77, 60 Pac. 516; Estate of Willard, 139 Cal. 501, 73 Pac. 240, 64 L. R. A. 554; Hickman-Coleman Co. v. Leggett, 10 Cal. App. 29, 100 Pac. 1072; Briggs v. Breen, 123 Cal. 657, 56 Pac. 633, 886. Therefore, it formerly was held that a real estate agent, attorney, or other person employed by the executor or administrator to assist in the administration of the estate was not a person "interested in the estate" within the meaning of sections 1635 and 1637 of the Code of Civil procedure, and that therefore he was not required to contest the accounts of the executor or administrator nor was he concluded by the settlement thereof. Briggs v. Breen, supra.

Since the addition of section 1559 to the Code, the claim of a real estate agent, employed under authorization given pursuant to that section, constitutes one of the "demands against the estate," and as such it ranks among "the debts of the estate." Section 1643, subd. 5. Such agent, so employed, is therefore a creditor of the estate. Being a creditor of the estate, he is a person "interested in the estate," within the meaning of sections 1635 and 1637. He is entitled to appear and file exceptions to the administrator's or executor's account, and if his claim has been omitted therefrom he may ask to have the account surcharged to the extent of the commission found to be due him. "Upon the settlement of an account, every creditor [italics ours], heir, legatee, or devisee is a person interested, and as such has a right to enter an appearance and become a party." Estate of McDougald, 143 Cal. 479, 77 Pac. 444. Because he is a person "interested in the estate," a real estate agent, employed pursuant to authority conferred under section 1559 is concluded by the settlement of the account and the allowance thereof by the court. Section 1637, Code Civ. Proc.

[2] Moreover, jurisdiction to pass on the demand of a real estate agent employed, as was this respondent, under authority conferred pursuant to section 1559, is vested exclusively in the court sitting in probate. Though the claim of a real estate agent employed pursuant to an order of the court made under section 1559 may not be a claim against the estate within the meaning of sections 1490 to 1514, inclusive, for the reason that it is not a claim which accrued against the decedent in his lifetime, or resulted directly from contracts made, or acts performed, or wrongfully omitted to be performed, during the decedent's lifetime, it is nevertheless a claim which comes under the head of "expenses in the care, management and settlement of the estate" referred to in section 1616; and of such claims the court, sitting in probate, has the exclusive jurisdiction. Gurnee v. Maloney, 38 Cal. 85, 99 Am. Dec. 352.

The personal representative of the decedent being exempt, under the express terms of the statute, from all individual liability, and the real estate agent having no claim directly against the property of the estate in the hands of the administrator or executor, the claim is a matter for determination in the probate proceedings, where all persons interested in the estate can be heard. All persons interested in the estate, the heirs, legatees, and creditors, have the right to be heard upon the propriety of the claim. The place for such hearing is in the court sitting in probate after the administrator or executor has rendered his account of expenses and disbursements, upon notice thereof to the parties interested. Such parties could not be heard in an action such as the one now before us—an action at law by the real estate agent against the personal representative of the decedent. If the superior court, in the exercise of its general jurisdiction over actions at law, could render judgments on such claims, the other persons interested in the estate might never be heard at all; and the court sitting in probate, whose peculiar province it is to hear and determine all matters concerning the expenses and disbursements attending the administration of an estate, and wherein the heirs, legatees, and creditors may be heard as to the propriety of such expenses and disbursements, might be robbed of the jurisdiction which rightfully belongs to it in matters of probate.

As early as Gurnee v. Maloney, supra, it was decided that the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of claims which seek to charge the estate with expenses of administration. That was an action by an attorney to recover against the estate counsel fees and moneys expended for the benefit of the estate. The defendant, sued in his capacity as administrator of the estate, demurred to the complaint on the ground that the district court had no jurisdiction. In the course of its opinion the Supreme Court said:

"Conceding the liability of the estate upon such contracts as are set forth in the complaint, we do not think they constitute claims against the estate within the meaning of sections 128 to 140, inclusive, of the Probate Act [sections 1490-1504, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure]. The claims therein referred to are such as accrued against the intestate in his lifetime, or resulted directly from contracts made, or acts performed, or wrongfully omitted to be performed, during his lifetime. The charge now in question, if necessary and proper to preserve the estate, comes under the head of expenses of administration referred to in section 219 [1616 of the Code of Civil Procedure]. The whole estate is in the custody and under the control of the probate court. It has jurisdiction of the whole subject-matter, and it is its exclusive province, subject to appeal to this court, to determine what items of expenditure incurred during the administration under its own supervision, are proper charges against the estate. * * * The parties interested in the estate are entitled to be heard upon the propriety of such expenditures; otherwise, the administrator might, through judgments collusively permitted in the district courts, allow the whole estate to be squandered. The heirs and creditors cannot be heard in such actions in the district court. In Hope v. Jones (24 Cal. 93), we held that the district court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the apportionment of commissions between administrators, in a suit by an administrator against his coadministrator. If the district court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit, we do not see why it should have jurisdiction to intermeddle in any other matter purely of administration. * * * The assumption of jurisdiction by the district court, to hear and determine such questions, would, it seems to us, be a direct interference with the administration of an estate actually in progress under the supervision of the probate court."

These views do not conflict with anything said by our Supreme Court in Golden Gate Undertaking Co. v. Taylor, 168 Cal. 94, 141 Pac. 922, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 742. That case, an action by an undertaker against the executrix to recover funeral charges, is sui generis. In the first place, funeral charges are ordinarily incurred before the appointment of an executor or administrator, and are not, strictly speaking, expenses of administration. Whereas charges for services performed by a real estate agent in the sale of property of the estate are expenses of administration, and as such are allowable to the executor or administrator under section 1616, if the real estate agent was duly employed. Moreover, a charge for funeral expenses is made a preferred debt of the estate (section 1643, Code Civ. Proc.); and, as was said by the court in Golden Gate Undertaking Co. v. Taylor, supra, 168 Cal. 100, 141 Pac. 925, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 742: "To await the settlement of accounts would be destructive of the preference granted by the Code."

But such course of reasoning is not applicable to the demand of a real estate agent for commissions earned under a contract made pursuant to authority conferred under section 1559, for his is not a preferred claim, and there is therefore no reason why it should not await the settlement of the accounts in the probate proceeding.

The conclusion at which we have arrived makes it unnecessary to consider the other points presented by appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

ARTHUR v. GRAHAM. (Civ. 4439.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1923.)

1. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 116—Impossibility of exact reproduction of status quo no bar to rescission for fraud.

That a trust deed on property parted with by vendor under an agreement sought to be rescinded was paid by vendee, and a mortgage executed for a lesser sum on different terms and conditions, thereby rendering exact reproduction of the status quo impossible, will not preclude rescission for vendor's fraud, where it is possible to do substantial justice by adjusting the equities between the parties.

2. Pleading $\S$ 35—Allegations as to agency of brokers negotiating sale held unnecessary in suit to rescind contract.

Where the complaint, in an action to rescind a contract to purchase realty, sufficiently pleaded ultimate facts authorizing rescission for fraud, omission of allegations as to the agency of brokers between whom the negotiations were conducted may be disregarded as evidentiary and surplusage.

3. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 44—Evidence of brokers' agency for vendor held admissible in vendee's suit to rescind.

In a suit to rescind a contract to purchase realty for vendor's fraud, evidence that brokers negotiating the sale were vendor's agents, and that an apparent option to buy, given them by vendor, was only a pretense, held admissible.

4. Evidence $\S$ 241(1)—Agent's statement to third person or latter's agent for communication binding on principal.

Statements by an agent to a third person or the latter's agent for communication to his principal are binding on the former agent's principal.

5. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 44—Evidence of false statements by vendor to vendee or agent with knowledge of latter's agency held admissible in vendee's suit to rescind.

In a suit to rescind a contract to purchase realty for vendor's fraud, evidence of statements by vendor to vendee or the latter's agent with intent that they be repeated to plaintiff, the falsity thereof, and vendor's or his agent's knowledge that the firm, with which the latter dealt, was acting as plaintiff's agent, held admissible.

6. Vendor and purchaser — 44 — Particular matters held admissible in evidence in vendee's action to rescind for vendor's fraud.

Evidence of vendor's acceptance of vendee's deposit, an escrow agreement, receipt of the purchase money and a deed thereunder and an attempted rescission by vendee, including a tender of the deed, held admissible in vendee's suit to rescind for vendor's fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Adelphi A. Arthur against S. C. Graham. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Herbert J. Goudge, Harry W. Hanson, and F. Walton Brown, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, arising out of a suit for rescission of a transaction in which defendant sold certain real property to plaintiff.

So far as the questions here involved are concerned, the allegations of the complaint were, in substance, that defendant was the owner of the land in question; that he sold the property to plaintiff; that the purchase was induced by fraudulent representations of defendant and his agents made to plaintiff; that plaintiff offered to rescind and tendered to defendant a deed to the property, and offered to defendant or to the court to place defendant in statu quo and to do equity in the premises. The complaint contained further allegations showing, among other things, that at the time the sale was made the property was incumbered to the extent of a trust deed thereon to secure the payment of the sum of $15,420, and "that thereafter the plaintiff, not knowing the said representations and statements of the defendant made as hereinbefore stated to be false, fraudulent, and untrue, paid the said trust deed, and thereafter the plaintiff, still ignorant of the falsity of the said statements and representations, procured a loan on said real estate of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), * * * which loan is now secured by a first mortgage on said real estate." Also, that, prior to the sale to the plaintiff, defendant had given an option to certain persons by which they acquired the right to purchase the property, which option was extended personally by defendant in order that plaintiff might become the purchaser, and that the said optionees, "with the knowledge and approval of the defendant, consented that the said purchase and sale might be made directly by the plaintiff from the defendant and from the defendant to the plaintiff."

The pleadings and such evidence as was admitted by the court also developed the fact that the option alleged to have been given to plaintiff by defendant was not a direct contract, but that the facts were to the effect that defendant had originally given an option to purchase the land to the firm of Burnett & Co., and that, through the means of a written offer to Burnett & Co., the firm of Allen & Irwin had secured its option from Burnett & Co. (who accepted the offer), and which action by Burnett & Co. was personally authorized by defendant in the following words:

"I hereby authorize you to accept above offer on the condition that the payment of $500 for option is made to you to-day."

Plaintiff offered evidence to prove that, with the knowledge of Burnett & Co. and defendant, the firm of Allen & Irwin was acting on behalf of plaintiff; that both Burnett & Co. and defendant knew that it was plaintiff, and not Allen & Irwin, who was purchasing the property, and that any representations made to Allen & Irwin by either Burnett & Co. or defendant were made with the understanding and intention on the part of Burnett & Co. and defendant that they be communicated to plaintiff; that throughout the entire transaction Burnett & Co. was defendant's acknowledged agent; that the property was purchased by plaintiff directly from defendant, and that plaintiff paid to defendant personally the $500 deposit made at the time defendant consented to the option taken in the name of Allen & Irwin. Also that plaintiff entered into an escrow directly with defendant for the purchase of the property; that defendant received the purchase money deposited by plaintiff in the escrow, and through this escrow plaintiff received a deed to the property. Plaintiff also offered to prove that certain material representations made by defendant to plaintiff and by Burnett & Co., either to plaintiff personally or to Allen & Irwin to be communicated to plaintiff, were untrue; that plaintiff had offered to rescind the contract of purchase and had tendered a deed of the property to defendant. To each question propounded to witnesses called on behalf of plaintiff, and by which plaintiff expected to prove each of the foregoing elements of plaintiff's cause of action, objection was made by counsel representing defendant and each of which objections was by the court sustained. It is because of such rulings by the court that plaintiff seeks a reversal of the judgment.

In defense of the several rulings made by the court as to the admissibility of such proffered evidence, it is contended by defendant that the complaint fails to state a cause of action against defendant, in that "the complaint shows on its face that there was no power in the plaintiff to restore defendant to the status in which he was at the time of the transaction in question," and that the rule of law is that there can be no rescission unless the parties can be restored to statu quo, the point being that when the property was sold to plaintiff it was incurred by a trust deed amounting to $15,420, payable at a certain time and under certain conditions, whereas at the time of the attempted rescission the property was mortgaged for only the sum of $10,000, but with terms and conditions differing from those contained in the trust deed, and that plaintiff in her notice of rescission demanded from defendant not only the money which she had originally paid to defendant at the time the sale was made, but, in addition thereto, the sum of $5,420, being the difference between the original $15,420 incumbrance on account of the trust deed and the $10,000 mortgage against the property as of the date of the notice of rescission.

[1] The general rule is in accord with defendant's contention. However, the authorities are somewhat numerous to the effect that, where defendant has been guilty of fraudulent acts or conduct which have induced the agreement between him and the plaintiff, courts of equity are not so much concerned with decreeing that defendant receive back the identical property with which he parted in the transaction as they are in declaring that his nefarious practices shall result in no damage to the plaintiff. Persons who attempt to secure profits by deceitful means may not confidently expect to receive special consideration from courts of equity. In such a case, as a result of the rescission by the court, nothing is exacted from the plaintiff out of particular regard for the condition of the defendant. If his fraudulent acts have resulted in disastrous financial consequences to himself, it is no one's fault but his own, and he must sustain the necessary inconveniences thereby entailed. Neblett v. Macfarland, 92 U. S. 101, 23 L. Ed. 471; Masson v. Bovet, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 69, 43 Am. Dec. 651; Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 390, 80 Pac. 234. Where it is possible to bring about substantial justice by adjusting the equities between the parties, the fact that the status quo cannot be exactly reproduced will not preclude the plaintiff from equitable relief. No matter what may be the complications or complexities, the powers of a court of equity are so broad as to adequately meet the exigencies of the case and render a decree which will justly determine the rights of the respective parties. Green v. Duvergey, supra; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 510, 47 Pac. 369, 52 Pac. 797; California, etc., Co. v. Schiappa-Pietra, 151 Cal. 740, 91 Pac. 593; *Spreckels v. [2] Other objections by defendant to the complaint relate to the failure of plaintiff to allege that the firm of Burnett & Co. was the agent of defendant in the transaction in question, or that the firm of Allen & Irwin was the agent of plaintiff therein. An examination of the complaint, however, shows that ultimate facts are pleaded sufficiently to comply with the requirements of the rules of pleading in a suit for rescission on the ground of fraud; and the omission by plaintiff to insert in the complaint allegations with reference to the agency of Burnett & Co., or the agency of Allen & Irwin, may be disregarded on the ground that the inclusion of such allegations in the complaint would be evidentiary matter and surplusage.

[3-6] The remaining question for the consideration of this court has to do solely with the admissibility of the evidence to which defendant's objections were sustained by the court. Assuming that the proffered evidence would have been favorable to plaintiff's theory of the case, that is, that, notwithstanding an apparent option given by defendant to Burnett & Co., the only relationship existing between them was that of principal and agent and that the option was nothing but a pretense, under the issues raised by the pleadings any relevant and competent testimony going to establish such agency would be admissible (Sigafus v. Porter, 84 Fed. 430, 28 C. C. A. 443; Ellis v. Crawford, 39 Cal. 528; Bergtholdt v. Porter Bros. Co., 114 Cal. 681, 46 Pac. 738); and, the agency being established, any statements made by such agent to plaintiff, or to her agent to be communicated to plaintiff, would be binding upon the principal (Herdan v. Hanson, 182 Cal. 538, 189 Pac. 440; Bonnarjee v. Pike, 43 Cal. App. 502, 185 Pac. 479; Riser v. Walton, 78 Cal. 490, 21 Pac. 362; Quarg v. Scher, 136 Cal. 406, 69 Pac. 96; Brandt v. Krogh, 14 Cal. App. 39, 111 Pac. 275; Graham v. Moffett, 119 Mich. 303, 78 N. W. 132, 75 Am. St. Rep. 393; Henry v. Dennis, 95 Me. 24, 49 Atl. 58, 85 Am. St. Rep. 365; Culliford v. Gadd (Sup.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 457; Simonds v. Cash, 136 Mich. 558, 99 N. W. 754). Admitting the foregoing principles of law to be correct, evidence regarding any conversations either between defendant personally and plaintiff, or as between defendant personally and plaintiff's agent with like intentions that such conversations should be repeated to plaintiff, should also have been admitted by the court, as should any evidence tending to show knowledge on the part of defendant or his agent that the firm of Allen & Irwin throughout the transaction in question was acting as the agent of plaintiff. Statements made by either defendant or by his agent being admitted, plaintiff should have been permitted to show their falsity. The acts and conduct generally of defendant, especially with relation to the acceptance by him from plaintiff of the $500 deposit, the matter of the escrow, and the attempted rescission by plaintiff, including the alleged tender, were likewise admissible. Sigafus v. Porter, 84 Fed. 430, 28 C. O. A. 443.

The rulings by the court relating to the proffered evidence to which attention has been directed were prejudicial to plaintiff's substantial rights in the premises.

The judgment is reversed.

In re PATTERSON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 4381.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 5, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 31, 1924.)

1. Wills ⚡193 — Divorce held not to revoke will made by husband to wife prior thereto.

A divorce and a destruction of the wife's will in favor of testator does not revoke a will made by testator to the wife prior to divorce, in view of Civ. Code, § 4, providing that the Civil Code establishes the law on the subject to which it relates, and Civ. Code, §§ 1292, 1299, 1300, 1300a, and 1304, relating to the means by which a will may be revoked, which contain no reference to a divorce.

2. Wills ⚡70—Law of domicile of testator controls disposition of personal property by will.

That a statute, providing that a divorce subsequent to the making of a will shall revoke the will as to the divorced spouse was effective in the state where the will was made, did not have the effect of revoking a will made by testator in favor of his wife, in view that the law of the domicile of the testator at the time of his death controls the disposition of his personal property by will.

3. Courts ⚡95(1)—Divorce ⚡326—States ⚡5½, New, vol. 14A Key-No. Series—Full faith and credit clause held not to require courts of one state to accord full force and effect to laws and decisions of another state.

Const. U. S. art. 4, § 1, the "full faith and credit" clause, does not require the courts of one state to accord full force and effect to the statutes, decisions, and a decree of divorce of another state in determining the validity of a will of testator as to personal property domiciled within the state at the time of his death; the duty of the courts resting alone on comity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of A. A. Patterson, deceased. From an order admitting will to probate, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Morris & Shipley, of Seattle, Wash., and Yakey & Devin and Arthur W. Thompson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The facts herein appear to be as follows: That on the 11th day of April, 1916, at Seattle, in the state of Washington, the deceased, A. A. Patterson, executed his will in favor of his wife, Martha Isabelle Patterson, and at the same time and place Martha Isabelle Patterson executed her will in favor of her husband; that on March 9, 1920, a decree of divorce was rendered in favor of Martha Isabelle Patterson and against A. A. Patterson by a court of record and of general jurisdiction in the state of Washington, which said court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter; that prior to the rendition of a decree in said divorce action the parties effected a settlement of their property rights, which settlement was confirmed and adopted by the said court as being in full of all claims of plaintiff and defendant each against the other; that a division of all the property of the parties was made in accordance with said property settlement, and thereafter the deceased, A. A. Patterson, converted all his personal property into money and removed to Los Angeles, Cal., where he died on November 6, 1921: that the divorced wife, Martha Isabelle Patterson, following said divorce and prior to the death of her divorced husband, destroyed her will which had theretofore been executed in favor of her former husband; that on the death of said A. A. Patterson his former wife, Martha Isabelle Patterson, offered for probate the will of A. A. Patterson which had theretofore been executed by him in the state of Washington and which will was found among the personal effects of the deceased. A contest and objections to the probating of said will were duly filed by the brothers and sisters of the deceased.

From an order admitting the will to probate and directing the issuance of letters testamentary therein and appointing the proponent thereof, Martha Isabelle Patterson, as executrix thereof, this appeal is prosecuted.

On the trial of the issues in the lower court, the decree of divorce, certain statutes of the state of Washington, and certain decisions by the Supreme Court of that state were introduced in evidence. The statutes were as follows:

(a) "If, after making any will, the testator shall marry and the wife, or husband, shall be living at the time of the death of the testator such will shall be deemed revoked, unless provision shall have been made for such survivor by marriage settlement, or unless such survivor be provided for in the will or in such way as mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision, and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of revocation shall be received. A divorce subsequent to the making of a will shall revoke the will as to the divorced spouse."

(b) "Whenever judgment of divorce from the bonds of matrimony is granted by the courts of this state, the court shall order a full and complete dissolution of the marriage as to both parties."

The decisions by the Supreme Court were: Schirmer v. Schirmer, 84 Wash. 1, 145 Pac. 981; Hilleware v. Hilleware, 92 Wash. 99, 158 Pac. 999; McDonall v. McDonall, 95 Wash. 533, 164 Pac. 204; and which decisions are to the effect, among other statements of rules of law, that "if a decree of divorce is granted in favor of one of the spouses both are thereby necessarily divorced."

[1] The first contention on the part of appellants is that the execution of the concurrent wills of A. A. Patterson and Martha Isabelle Patterson, the settlement by them of their respective property rights, the subsequent divorce and the destruction by Martha Isabelle Patterson of her will in favor of deceased, A. A. Patterson, constitute a revocation of the will here in question and an estoppel against Martha Isabelle Patterson from probating or claiming under the will of her divorced husband, A. A. Patterson.

While it must be conceded that some of the cases, notably Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 54 N. W. 699, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, and in re Hall's Estate, 106 Minn. 502, 119 N. W. 219, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1073, 130 Am. St. Rep. 621, 16 Ann. Cas. 541, support the claim by counsel for appellants, certain other authorities, such as Baacke v. Baacke, 50 Neb. 19, 69 N. W. 303; in re Brown's Estate, 139 Iowa, 219, 177 N. W. 260; Cunningham's Succession, 142 La. 701, 77 South. 506, hold to the contrary. As is adverted to in the case last cited, the conclusion for which appellants contend and in which they are upheld in the cases to which reference has been made depends entirely upon a common-law doctrine, which principle has been expressly repudiated in this state in the case of In re Comassi, 107 Cal. 4, 40 Pac. 16, 28 L. R. A. 414, where it is said that—

"The Civil Code establishes the law of this state upon the subjects to which it relates' (Civ. Code, § 4); and, in order to determine whether a will has been properly executed or revoked, or whether after its execution there has been such a change in the status or personal relations of the testator as in law will effect its revocation, we have only to determine whether, in the one case, there has been a compliance with the requirements of the statute, or, in the other case, whether the changed condition of the testator is within the conditions named in the statute."

The several sections of the Civil Code (sections 1292, 1299, 1300, 1300a, 1304) which relate to and provide for the means by or through which revocation of a will may be effected contain no reference whatsoever to a divorce either as affecting a will or otherwise. Inasmuch as the rule is that "the Code establishes the law of this state upon the subjects to which it relates" (section 4, Civ. Code), and because of the fact that no provision is found therein which will warrant a revocation of the will in question arising out of the theory that the circumstances of the testator were so changed after his will was executed, by reason of the divorce or otherwise, as would raise the presumption that the testator intended a revocation, we conclude that the circumstances to which we have referred did not operate as a revocation of the will and that the proponent was not estopped from either probating the will or from claiming as a legatee or devisee thereunder.

[2] Appellant's next contention is that by virtue of that portion of the Washington statute which provides that "a divorce subsequent to the making of a will shall revoke the will as to the divorced spouse," the effect of the decree of divorce between the testator and his wife was that the will of A. A. Patterson was immediately revoked. The authorities cited by appellants in support of the principle for which they contend are to the effect that, under the provisions of certain statutes concerning the marriage of the testator or the birth of a child to the testator following the execution of the will, the will is thereby revoked. The statutory rule to which appellants refer appears to be common to many different jurisdictions; and where the question of revocation has arisen under such a statute and in the state where the statute was enacted, the decision of the courts thereunder seems to be quite uniform in accordance with counsel's contention. Those cases, however, were all decided in the same jurisdictions in which the statute was enacted and in which the testator was deceased. The facts of the instant case, though somewhat similar to many of the facts in some of the cases cited, differ largely therefrom, in that the question of revocation here depends upon the residence of the testator at the time of his decease within the state of California, while the revocatory statute was enacted by the Legislature of the State of Washington. Similar questions have been decided by courts of many different jurisdictions. They have generally arisen from a consideration of statutes which have provided for the revocation of wills by reason of the marriage of the testator or by reason of the birth of a child to the testator after the execution of the will, and by the great weight of authority the conclusion is reached that the law of the domicile of the testator at the time of his death controls the situation, especially as to personal property. Mr. Schouler, in his work on Wills, Executors and Administrators (5th Ed., vol. 2, p. 889), lays down the rule that—

"The law of the place of last domicile regulates as to the execution and validity of wills of personal property."

And Mr. Alexander in his Commentaries on Wills (volume 1, p. 338) says that—

"The general rule, except as modified or changed by statute, is that a will disposing of personal property is governed, as to the formal requisites essential to its validity and as to its construction, by the law in force at the place of domicile of the testator at the time of his death."

In Wharton on the Conflict of Laws (3d Ed.) vol. 2, p. 1351, is found the statement that—

"The question whether the marriage of the testatrix, or the birth of a child subsequently to the execution of the will, revokes the same, depends upon the lex domicilii so far as personal property is concerned, and upon the lex rei sitæ so far as real property is concerned."

And as announcing the same principle, see the following cases: Mills v. Fogal, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 559; In re Coburn's Will, 9 Misc. Rep. 437, 30 N. Y. Supp. 383; Evansville I. & C. S. Co. v. Winsor, 148 Ind. 682, 48 N. E. 592; Van Wickle v. Van Wickle, 59 N. J. Eq. 317, 44 Atl. 877; Ware v. Wisner (C. C.) 50 Fed. 310; Kingsbury v. Burnside, 58 Ill. 310, 11 Am. Rep. 67; Eyre v. Storer, 37 N. H. 115; In re Harwood, 172 N. Y. Supp. 296; Crandell v. Barker, 8 N. D. 263, 78 N. W. 347; In re Witter's Estate (Sur.) 15 N. Y. Supp. 133; Moultrie v. Hunt, 23 N. Y. 394; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 192; Lowndes v. Cooch, 87 Md. 478, 39 Atl. 1045, 40 L. R. A. 380; Lewis v. Corbin, 195 Mass. 520, 81 N. E. 248, 122 Am. St. Rep. 261; Martin v. Stovall, 103 Tenn. 1, 52 S. W. 296, 48 L. R. A. 130; McEwan v. Brown, 176 N. C. 249, 97 S. E. 20.

[3] Appellants also urge that because of the so-called "full faith and credit" clause of the United States Constitution (article 4, § 1), the Washington statute, as well as the decree of divorce by a court of general jurisdiction and the several decisions by the court of last resort, to all of which attention has already been directed, should be accorded their full force and effect and therefore be controlling upon the courts of this state in determining the question of the validity of the will. While we recognize generally the soundness of such rule, we fail to see its application to the facts of this case. Assuming (without deciding) that under the laws of the state of Washington, had the testator died in that state leaving all his property therein, the will executed by him would have been revoked, it does not follow that in the circumstance of his death in the state of California, where he left personal property, the same rule should prevail. The courts of this state had and have jurisdiction, and, in accordance with the authorities heretofore cited, should determine the case in conformity with its own laws governing the matter. Had the Washington courts jurisdiction of the question herein involved and had such courts rendered a judgment thereon, then in any subsequent action in this state involving such judgment it might well be claimed that the California courts would be bound by the "full faith and credit" clause of the United States Constitution. But no such condition, nor one analogous thereto, is here presented. A divorce decree was rendered between the testator and the proponent of his will; the state of Washington has simply enacted a statute affecting the status of the will under such circumstances; and certain detached and unrelated decisions by the court of last resort interpret the meaning of certain words which are found within that statute. Nowhere in such decisions is there any attempt on the part of the court to determine the direct question here involved; and, considering the facts, the effect of the statute is necessarily limited territorially to the boundaries of the state of Washington. Surely the statute of the state of Washington providing that "a divorce subsequent to the making of a will shall revoke the will as to the divorced spouse" possesses no greater strength than statutes of other states which in substance declare that a marriage of the testator subsequent to the making of a will shall revoke the will; or that the birth of a child to the testator after the execution of the will shall have the same effect; and the text-writers and the authorities generally, heretofore cited, are clear in their expression that statutes of the latter class will not prevail as against a rule that as to personal property a will must stand or fall in accordance with the law of the domicile of the testator at the time of his decease.

As has been heretofore adverted to, the several judgments rendered by the courts of last resort of the state of Washington, and which are especially relied upon to establish the "full faith and credit" contention of appellants, were in no way connected with the issues involved in this controversy. Their facts were in no wise, even remotely, related to the facts of this case, nor were their parties, nor their privies, nor their assigns. Those judgments are here entitled to no more than the same faith and the same credit and the same respect that they would receive in their home state. If the issues before this court were issues before a court in the state of Washington, while the decisions here pleaded and introduced in evidence would be entitled to great consideration, they would not necessarily be conclusive; indeed, the Supreme Court would have the power and the right to absolutely disregard them. The constitutional provision to which reference has been made "does not require that judgments in one state shall be followed by the courts of other states as matter of authority in other similar cases. The Constitution does not deal with the question of the effect of such judgments as precedents, nor with the opinions of the courts rendering them. * * * The duty of the courts of one state to follow those of another, upon questions arising upon the construction of the statutes of the latter, is a duty resting alone upon comity, and not one imposed by the federal Constitution." Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (C. C.) 11 Fed. 381.

From the views which we have expressed herein, it follows that the order from which the appeal is taken should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

I concur: CURTIS, J.

CONREY, P. J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment. As pointed out in the foregoing opinion, the Washington statute provides that "a divorce subsequent to the making of a will shall revoke the will as to the divorced spouse." I think that this provision of the statute should be construed so as to give some meaning to the phrase "as to the divorced spouse." If appellants' contention be correct, the phrase has no meaning at all. It seems clear that the Legislature intended that a party against whom a divorce had been granted for his or her misconduct should not be permitted to profit by the terms of a will made during the period of the marriage by the innocent spouse in whose favor the divorce was granted. While some Washington decisions hold, as well they might, that when a decree of divorce has been entered both parties are divorced, yet I do not understand that any of those decisions referred to or in any way involved the construction of the provision of the statute above quoted.

Upon the other questions discussed in the foregoing opinion I am in accord therewith.

TAYIAN v. TAYIAN. (Civ. 2669.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 5, 1923.)

1. Marriage ⚭57—Wife may file cross-complaint for separate maintenance in husband's action for annulment of marriage.

In husband's action for annulment of marriage under Code Civ. Proc. § 442, the wife may file a cross-complaint for separate maintenance under Civ. Code, § 137.

2. Divorce ⚭209, 231—"Alimony" defined.

"Alimony" is an allowance made to a wife out of her husband's estate or income for her support upon her divorce or legal separation from him, or during a suit therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Alimony.]

3. Divorce ⚭203, 231—Valid marriage must be pleaded and proved to warrant allowance of alimony.

To warrant the allowance of alimony a valid marriage must be pleaded, and, where permanent alimony is sought, must be proved.

4. Marriage ⚭62—Marriage regarded as valid in action for annulment until ground of annulment is established.

In husband's action for annulment of marriage the marriage is to be regarded as perfectly valid, so as to authorize alimony, until the ground for the annulment is established.

5. Husband and wife ⚭283(1)—Allowance to wife of separate maintenance held error.

In husband's action for annulment of marriage, in which the wife filed a cross-complaint for separate maintenance, and in which the husband's testimony that the wife refused to live with him was undisputed, and there was no testimony that the husband deserted or willfully failed to support the wife, or showing that she had a cause of action for divorce under Civ. Code, § 92, it was error for the court to award the wife separate maintenance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by Gaius Tayian against Houghaper Tayian, for annulment of marriage, in which the defendant filed a cross-complaint for separate maintenance. From so much of the judgment as awards defendant a certain sum per month for separate maintenance, the plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Julius Hansen and M. K. Harris, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Ohannesian & Ohannesian, of Fresno, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to secure a decree declaring the marriage between him and the defendant void upon the ground of fraud and for the annulment of said marriage.

The complaint, which was filed January 10, 1922, alleges that the parties intermarried in Fresno county on the 29th day of September, 1921; that the said marriage was the culmination of fraudulent acts and willful misrepresentations practiced upon the plaintiff by one T. G. Brave and his wife, uncle and aunt of the defendant. The gist of the charge of fraud is that the said T. G. Brave and wife conducted with the parents of the plaintiff negotiations looking to and eventuating in the intermarriage of the parties; that said T. G. Brave and wife represented to the plaintiff and his parents that the defendant was at the time referred to between 14 and 15 years of age, and that she was and had always been "a true Christian and a virtuous girl," whereas, so the complaint proceeds, the plaintiff alleges that he discovered after his marriage with the defendant that she was not "a true Christian and a virtuous girl." The complaint alleges that the defendant deserted and abandoned plaintiff, and refused to return to the plaintiff. Other allegations tending to state a case of fraud as the means by which the marriage was brought about are contained in the complaint, but, for the purposes of this decision, a sufficient statement of the ground upon which the plaintiff sought to have the marriage annulled has now been given.

The defendant, answering the complaint, admitted the fact of the marriage between plaintiff and her at the time stated in the complaint, but denied each and every other allegation of the last-named pleading. She also filed a cross-complaint, in which she alleged that the plaintiff, on the 4th day of December, 1921, deserted and abandoned her, and that he "has ever since lived separately and apart from this defendant, and has failed, refused and neglected to provide this defendant with the necessities of life." It is further alleged in the cross-complaint that there is no community property belonging to the parties, and that there are no children, the issue of said marriage. It is likewise alleged that the defendant is without means of support, and that she has no home or relatives with whom she may reside; that "she is now living at the home of T. G. Brave and his wife, Araxie Brave, and is dependent upon the charity of friends for her support and maintenance," etc. The prayer of the cross-complaint is that the relief sought by the plaintiff in his complaint be denied, that the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant be adjudged valid, and that the plaintiff "be required to pay to this defendant the sum of $100 per month for her permanent support and maintenance, and the further sum of $150, attorneys' fees, and for costs and expenses incurred by this defendant in the defense of this action," etc.

The plaintiff moved to strike the cross-complaint from the files on the ground that, in an action for annulment of a marriage, a cross-complaint for separate maintenance is not permissible. The motion was denied, and thereupon the plaintiff answered the cross-complaint denying all the essential averments thereof, except the allegation that there is no community property belonging to the parties, and the further allegation that there are no issue of said marriage.

The findings were against the plaintiff on the allegations of fraud as the inducing cause of the intermarriage of the parties and also as to the allegation that the defendant deserted plaintiff. As to the cause of action stated in the cross-complaint, the court found that the plaintiff willfully and without cause deserted and abandoned defendant, "and still continues so to do"; that the plaintiff is a "strong and able-bodied man and is capable of earning good wages," and that defendant "had not and has not any means of support"; that the plaintiff is the owner of 20 acres of land, free and clear of all incumbrances, situated in Fresno county.

As a matter of law, the court's conclusions are, among other things, that plaintiff, since the 4th day of December, 1921, "has been guilty of willful neglect of the defendant, and that defendant is entitled to a decree of separation from plaintiff, herein, and to the sum of $75 per month, separate maintenance, commencing from the 1st day of January, 1923, together with $150 attorneys' fees."

Judgment passed accordingly. The appeal here is by the plaintiff from so much of said judgment as awards defendant, as for separate maintenance, the sum of $75 per month.

The points urged for reversal are: (1) That the court erred in denying the motion of the plaintiff to strike from the files the defendant's cross-complaint; (2) that the findings and the judgment are not sufficiently supported.

1. An action by the wife for separate maintenance is authorized by section 137 of the Civil Code. Said section reads in part as follows:

"When an action for divorce is pending, the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself and her children or to prosecute or defend the action. When the husband willfully deserts the wife or when the husband willfully fails to provide for the wife or when the wife has any cause of action for divorce as provided in section ninety-two of this Code, she may, without applying for a divorce, maintain in the superior court an action against him for permanent support and maintenance of herself or of herself and children."

[1-4] It will be noted that said section includes a provision authorizing the court in the exercise of its discretion in a divorce action to require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary for the support of the wife and her children and to prosecute and defend the action, and also, in connection therewith, includes a provision authorizing an action by the wife for separate maintenance and support, independently of an action for divorce. It is true that the right to maintain the latter action comes entirely from the statute, but the principle at the bottom of it is the right of the wife to be provided with support suitable to the condition of the parties, at the hands of the husband, who holds the family "purse strings." The two proceedings, although in a sense different, are cognate in their nature, and, manifestly, relate to the same "transaction." Alimony merely means provision for the support of the wife in cases of divorce, either temporary or permanent, as the exigencies of the case warrant. In other words, it is "an allowance made to a wife out of her husband's estate or income for her support upon her divorce or legal separation from him or during a suit for the same." Bouvier's Law Dictionary. It is an incident of divorce. Divorce or separation without divorce and alimony spring from the same root, to wit, the marriage relation. It has repeatedly been held that the right of a court to allow alimony in actions for divorce may proceed from its inherent power to make such provision in such cases, and therefore the court could make an allowance of alimony in the absence of express statutory authority for such action. Dunphy v. Dunphy, 161 Cal. 87, 90, 91, 118 Pac. 445. Of course, there must be a valid marriage, or a valid marriage must be pleaded, and, where permanent alimony is sought, proved. The same rule applies to an action in which the annulment of the marriage is the relief asked for. In such cases the marriage is to be regarded as perfectly valid until the ground for the annulment is established. See Dunphy v. Dunphy, 161 Cal. 87, 118 Pac. 445, supra, and cases therein cited. In this case all the pleadings aver and admit that, on the 29th day of September, 1921, the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant was duly solemnized by a minister of the Gospel, duly authorized to perform such a ceremony. Upon the face of the pleadings there was a legal marriage. The defendant in her cross-complaint stated that the plaintiff had deserted her, and by her answer to the complaint denied the right of the plaintiff to an annulment of the marriage contract upon the ground stated in his complaint, and asked for a decree denying him the relief for which he prayed. It seems to us that there could not have been a more appropriate legal course on her part in the action, under the circumstances (the husband having shown that he did not desire that their marital relations should further be continued or perpetuated), than that which she did pursue, to wit, to seek a decree requiring him to provide her with sufficient means for her maintenance and support in case the court denied the relief sought by the plaintiff in his complaint. At any rate, it is perfectly clear that a complaint by the husband either for a divorce or for an annulment of the marriage contract and a cross-complaint by the wife for separate maintenance are so correlated, so far as the subject-matter of the litigation is concerned, that the two actions necessarily involve the same "transaction," within the meaning or contemplation of section 442 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It would be unreasonable, where the husband seeks a divorce from his wife or an annulment of the marriage between him and his wife, and the latter defends against the action, to require the wife to proceed in an independent suit for separate maintenance, if such relief she desired to secure. Such procedure would certainly fly in the face of the general rule following from the establishment of the reform procedure that all matters of a cognate nature or essentially growing out of the same transaction or subject-matter of the suit ought to be tried and determined in one and the same suit.

[5] 2. The contention that the findings upon which that part of the judgment appealed from is predicated are devoid of sufficient evidentiary support must be sustained. In fact, so far as the present record discloses, there was no trial of the issues made by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto.

The record shows that, on the opening of the trial of the case, the attorney for the defendant, addressing the court, said: "I assume that the court has looked over the pleadings—the cross-complaint for separate maintenance"—to which the judge replied, "That will not come in on plaintiff's case;" to which statement the said attorney agreed. The trial was thereupon proceeded with upon the theory as so suggested and agreed to by the court and counsel for the defendant, and as tacitly acquiesced in by counsel for the plaintiff—that is, the trial of the issues made by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto was not then proceeded with.

The only testimony given in the case was that which was presented by the plaintiff on the issue of the annulment of the marriage, and, incidentally, as to the alleged desertion and abandonment of the plaintiff by the defendant. The witnesses so giving said testimony were the plaintiff, his parents, and his sister. The defendant was not called to the witness stand, nor, as is to be implied from what is said above, did she offer any testimony or evidence of any character in her own behalf.

During the course of his examination the plaintiff testified that, after his marriage, and immediately upon the return of himself and wife from a week's "honeymoon," he took his wife to the home of his parents, by whom he was then employed, receiving the sum of $75 per month for his services, and with whom he intended that they should reside, and did reside, until her departure therefrom and return to the home of T. G. Brave, on the 4th day of December, 1921; that he accompanied his wife to the house of the Braves on the day just named, but, when he was ready to return to the home of his parents, she refused to go with him, both she and T. G. Brave declaring that she intended to remain with her aunt and uncle at the latter's home; that, about a week later, accompanied by a minister of the Gospel, he went to the home of the uncle and aunt of the defendant, and, upon meeting the latter, stated to her that he was there for the purpose of taking her home, and that she refused to return with him, offering no excuse therefor, and merely stating to him that he "could get a divorce." On cross-examination the plaintiff testified as follows:

"Mr. Ohannesian: Then I wish to ask a few questions as to the ownership of the property. Q. What property have you got, Mr. Tayian; what property have you? A. That 20 acres. Q. There is no mortgage on those 20 acres, I understand? A. No; there was no mortgage. Q. How much of a crop did you have off the place this year? A. Oh, about 900 pounds of peaches, I think. Q. 900 pounds of peaches? A. Yes. Q. But aside from that place you were working for your father and getting about $75 a month; is that correct? A. That was in addition; but I put something in the property. I didn't get anything extra; no. Q. You have not paid your wife any money for the past five or six months, have you? A. No.

"Mr. Ohannesian: That is all."

On redirect examination he testified:

"Mr. Hansen: Q. This $75 a month that you are receiving from your parents, do you get that and board, also? A. No. That is the wages for a whole month. Q. Well, have you received any of that money yet from your parents? A. For the last six months, no. Q. What do you have to pay, if anything, for board? A. About $30 a month, I suppose; at most $30.

"Mr. Hansen: I think that is all.

"Mr. Ohannesian: Q. Did you say about $30 a month? A. Yes, $30. Q. Well, don't you know what you were paying your parents? A. Well, $30. Of course they do my washing and things like that, which I never considered. Q. Well, have you paid your parents any money for your keep? A. Yes, sir. Q. How much did you pay for last month? A. $30 a month is what I paid. Q. Did you pay $30 for last month? A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you paid anything for this month yet? A. No. This month ain't finished.

"Mr. Ohannesian: Oh, the month is not finished yet. Well, that is all.

"The Court: That is all. Call your next witness."

After the plaintiff was excused as a witness his parents and his sister were each in turn called to the witness stand. When they had completed the giving of their testimony the plaintiff's case was rested, and thereupon the attorney for the defendant stated to the court that he did not "intend to put in any testimony [referring, as we are justified in inferring, to the plaintiff's action], but if the court desires to hear any evidence relative to our action, cross-complaint, for separate maintenance, I will do so;" to which the court rejoined, "Well, I suppose your evidence would be about the same as on these various hearings." Said attorney, replying, stated, in effect, that he was prepared to prove, in support of the averments of the cross-complaint, that the defendant said to the plaintiff at the time that he requested her to return to the home of his parents that her reason for not returning with him was because she desired him first to provide for themselves a home at some other place than that of his parents; that he also desired the defendant to testify to a conversation that took place between her and the plaintiff's sister. The court's response to these suggestions was: "I don't think there is anything in the conversation with the sister. * * * On the complaint, judgment will be for the defendant." Following this was a colloquy between court and counsel on both sides, in the course of which plaintiff's attorney objected to the issues made by the cross-complaint and answer thereto being tried in this action on the ground above stated and considered, and the court, in effect, overruled the objection, saying: "I don't think it is necessary to introduce any further testimony." Thereupon, and after further remarks by the judge, not material to the present inquiry, the court rendered and announced its judgment upon the cross-complaint, awarding the defendant the relief as above explained.

Annexed to the transcript is the court reporter's certificate to the effect that said transcript sets forth or comprises all of the testimony taken at the trial of this action, and of which there has been presented hereinabove substantially all the testimony which may warrantably be said to bear upon the defendant's alleged desertion of plaintiff and refusal to return to him and upon the question of the plaintiff's ability to pay the monthly amount adjudged by the court to be paid the defendant by the plaintiff for her permanent maintenance and support.

It will be observed that there is not a word of testimony in this record contradicting or to any degree tending to contradict the plaintiff's testimony that the defendant deserted him. There is not a line or word of testimony contradictory of the plaintiff's testimony that the defendant, a few months after the marriage, went to the home of her relatives and there remained, and refused, after he had besought her to do so, to return to the plaintiff's home and there live with him. There is no testimony satisfactorily showing that the plaintiff was or is able to pay the monthly sum of $75 to the defendant as in support of the latter. The testimony, as will be noted, is that he owned a 20-acre tract of land, and upon that land he raised, during the year 1922, 900 pounds of peaches, and that he was receiving, as services performed for his parents upon their place the sum of $75 per month. It was not shown how much the land referred to was worth or how much he received for the peaches raised thereon in the year 1922, nor was it shown whether he derived a yearly income in any considerable amount or, indeed, made any profit from the peaches grown on said land. He testified that out of the $75 per month he was receiving as wages he paid his parents for his board and other accommodations the sum of $30 per month, leaving the sum only of $45. It was not shown whether the defendant was financially in such a condition as to require for her support the sum of $75 per month.

It is true that the trial court was at liberty, in the sound exercise of its functions as a trier of the questions of fact submitted at the trial, to disregard the testimony presented by the plaintiff upon the question of the defendant's alleged desertion of him as carrying with it no probative force. Indeed, it is to be presumed, from the result arrived at below, that the court either did disbelieve the plaintiff's testimony as to the alleged desertion by defendant, or, if believing it, regarded his whole testimony as insufficient, as a matter of law, to entitle him to a judgment upon his complaint. But in either case the result would be the same, to wit, that there would be left in the record no evidence upon which the court could predicate any other decision than that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was entitled to the relief asked by their respective complaints. Upon the face of the evidence, however, no other conclusion is justified upon the question of desertion than that the defendant, without just or any cause, deserted the plaintiff. In the extended colloquy between the court and counsel, above referred to, and after the plaintiff's case was concluded, the court stated, when counsel for the defendant proposed to introduce proof upon the cross-complaint, that any further evidence which might be introduced in support of the allegations of the said complaint would involve a mere repetition of evidence received "on these various hearings." From this it may be assumed that at some other hearings of matters incidentally arising in the action—perhaps on an application for alimony pendente lite—the court received evidence in some form or another which applied with more or less pertinency to some of the matters set forth by the several pleadings filed in the action. But, whatever might have been the nature of the occasions calling for such hearings, the fact is that any evidence received at the "various hearings" referred to by the court is not embraced or set forth in the transcript here, unless the very same evidence certified to this court in the present transcript was received at said "various hearings." However, it is very clear that there is absolutely no evidence in this record which justified the court in granting the defendant the relief involved in the judgment entered in her favor. In other words, it was not shown that the plaintiff either willfully deserted or willfully failed to provide for the defendant, or that she had any cause of action for divorce as provided by section 92 of the Civil Code.

"The wife cannot abandon the dwelling place which he [the husband] may have provided for her, if it be a reasonable place, and then seek support at his expense by virtue of" section 137 of the Civil Code; "nor is she entitled [under such circumstances] to maintain the action for his mere neglect to provide her with suitable support. Hence, if, at the time she institutes the action, she is living separate and apart from him, it is essential for her to show that it is by reason of his desertion, or that by reason of his cruelty, or threats of bodily harm, she was forced to leave the family dwelling place." Hardy v. Hardy, 97 Cal. 125, 127, 128, 31 Pac. 906.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

64 Cal. App. 555

IN RE DAHNKE'S ESTATE AND GUARDIANSHIP. (Civ. 4308.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 27, 1923.)

1. Guardian and ward $\S$ 13(3)—Court without jurisdiction to appoint father guardian in absence of notice to mother or proof that notice could not be given.

Where mother was given no notice of petition for appointment of the father, from whom she was divorced, as guardian of infant child, and no proof was made that her address was unknown, or that for some other reason notice could not be given her, the court had no jurisdiction to appoint the father, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1747, as amended in 1921, requiring notice to the parents.

2. Guardian and ward $\S$ 13(3)—Statute as to notice of petition for appointment must be substantially complied with.

The power to appoint a guardian is a special power conferred by statute, and the provisions of the statute as to notice must be substantially followed in order to make valid the exercise of the power, for compliance with the statute is jurisdictional.

3. Judgment $\S$ 346—Judgment or order void on face may be set aside at any time by court which rendered it.

A judgment or order which is void on its face and which requires only an inspection of the judgment roll or record to show its invalidity may be set aside on motion at any time after its entry by the court which rendered the judgment or made the order.

4. Judgment $\S$ 346—Invalid judgment or order may be set aside on motion within reasonable time, though invalidity does not appear from judgment roll or record.

A judgment or order, which is in fact void for want of jurisdiction, but the invalidity of which does not appear from the judgment roll or record, may be set aside on motion within a reasonable time after its entry, not exceeding the time limit prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, an independent suit in equity being unnecessary.

5. Judgment ☞346—Motion to set aside for invalidity not appearing from judgment roll or record must be made within time prescribed by statute.

A motion to set aside a judgment or order for invalidity not appearing from the judgment roll or record must be made within the time limit prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, though the motion need not be based on such statute.

6. Judgment ☞346—Question as to reasonableness of time within which to move to set aside judgment dependent on circumstances of particular case.

The question of what constitutes a reasonable time within which to move to set aside a judgment or order because of invalidity not appearing from the judgment roll or record must depend somewhat upon the circumstances, and is not definitely determined further than that it will not extend beyond the time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

7. Judgment ☞392, 518—Facts dehors record as well as those appearing on the face of the judgment roll or record may be presented on motion to vacate.

A motion to vacate a judgment or an order is a direct and not a collateral attack, and any facts going to show the invalidity of the judgment or order, those dehors the record, as well as facts appearing on the judgment roll or record, may be presented.

8. Guardian and ward ☞18—Order to show cause held substitute for notice of motion to vacate order of appointment.

An order to show cause why order appointing a guardian should not be vacated, served on the guardian, was the equivalent of and a substitute for a notice on the guardian that motion would be made to vacate the order.

9. Appeal and error ☞935(1), 948—Presumptions indulged in favor of court's action as against contention, that motion was not made within a reasonable time, and burden on appellant to show abuse of discretion.

On appeal from an order vacating an order appointing a guardian, in which it is claimed that the court had no jurisdiction to vacate the order, because the motion was not made within a reasonable time, all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the correctness of the court's action, and the burden is upon the appellant to make it appear that the court abused its discretion in making the order.

10. Guardian and ward ☞18—Four months held reasonable time within which to move to vacate order appointing guardian.

Where father was appointed guardian of minor child without notice to divorced wife, the action of the court in vacating the order on the wife's motion made four months later held not an abuse of discretion as against the contention that the motion was not made within a reasonable time.

11. Guardian and ward ☞18—Petition for vacation of order appointing guardian held sufficient.

Mother's petition to vacate order appointing father guardian of minor child without notice to mother, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, as amended in 1921, stating as one of the grounds that no notice had been given her, as required by such statute, held sufficient, it being unnecessary that such petition should measure up to the requirements of the complaint in an ordinary action.

12. Guardian and ward ☞18—Mother petitioning for vacation of appointment for want of notice not required to prove power to give notice.

In a proceeding by mother to vacate order appointing father guardian of infant child without notice to mother as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, as amended in 1921, the mother was not required to prove that it was within the father's power to give such notice, since such statute requires that notice be given or that proof be made before entry of the order that notice could not be given.

13. Guardian and ward ☞18—Recitals in order prima facie true.

Recitals in order vacating an order appointing a guardian are prima facie true.

14. Guardian and ward ☞13(3)—Matters not defeating petition to vacate appointment without notice stated.

Where father was appointed guardian of minor child without notice to the mother, and without proof that mother could not be served with notice required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, as amended in 1921, the order was void for want of jurisdiction, and the father could not defeat the mother's petition for vacation thereof by proof that he did not know the mother's address, or that she was not a fit and proper person to have the custody of the child.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Esther Dahnke, a minor. From an order vacating an order appointing Henry Dahnke guardian, he appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur E. Koepsel, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Chas. D. Swanner, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an appeal by Henry Dahnke, the father of Esther Dahnke, a female minor of the age of 10 years, from an order made by the superior court for Orange county on March 8, 1923, vacating an order previously made by that court appointing appellant guardian of the person and estate of the minor. The order appealed from was made upon the motion of Selma Dahnke Wichman, who is appellant's divorced wife and the mother of the minor, the principal ground of her motion being that the court was without jurisdiction to make the order by which the father had been appointed guardian of their child.

The facts are substantially as follows: Appellant filed a petition for letters of guardianship on August 14, 1922, wherein he stated that the minor was under his care and custody, and that the only relatives residing in the county were himself, the minor's grandparents, and an aunt. The father's petition made no mention of the minor's mother, petitioner's divorced wife. Upon the filing of the petition the court made an order directing that notice be given to each of the grandparents and to the aunt by a citation requiring each of them to show cause, on September 1, 1922, why the petitioner should not be appointed guardian. Such notices were given, and at the time set, without any notice having been given to the mother of the minor, the court appointed appellant guardian of his child's person and estate, and directed the issuance to him of letters of guardianship upon his taking the oath and giving a bond in a fixed amount. Thereupon appellant qualified, and letters of guardianship were issued to him.

On January 3, 1923, the mother filed a petition praying that an order be made by the superior court requiring appellant to appear and show cause why the order appointing him guardian should not be set aside and his letters of guardianship revoked. In her petition Mrs. Wichman alleges that appellant had knowledge of her place of residence when he filed his petition for letters, but that she was not given any notice thereof or of the hearing thereon, and that she had no actual knowledge of her former husband's petition or of the proceedings thereon until after his appointment as guardian. Her petition also states, on information and belief, that at the hearing on her former husband's petition for letters of guardianship he falsely represented to the court that the child's mother was dead.

Upon the filing of the mother's petition for revocation of the letters of guardianship, an order was issued by the court directing appellant to appear on January 19, 1923, and show cause why the order appointing him guardian should not be set aside and his letters of guardianship revoked. In due time appellant filed a demurrer to his former wife's petition and also a notice of motion to strike out certain portions thereof.

At the hearing on the order directing appellant to show cause why the order appointing him guardian should not be revoked, namely, on February 28, 1923, the court overruled appellant's demurrer to his divorced wife's petition, and denied his motion to strike, and thereupon made the order from which this appeal was taken—the order setting aside the order appointing appellant guardian and revoking the letters of guardianship theretofore issued to him.

It is recited in the order of revocation that, "upon examining the files and records" in the proceeding, it appears to the court that it "had no jurisdiction to make said order appointing Henry Dahnke as guardian of the person and estate of Esther Dahnke, a minor, for the reason that no notice of the hearing of the petition of Henry Dahnke for appointment of himself as guardian of said minor child was given to Selma Dahnke Wichman, the mother of said minor, nor was proof made to the court that her address was unknown, or that for other reasons such notice could not be given.

[1] If, as the order of revocation recites, no notice of the hearing of appellant's petition for letters of guardianship was given to the mother, and no proof was made to the court either that her address was unknown or that for some other reason notice could not be given her, then the court was without jurisdiction to make the order appointing appellant guardian of his daughter's person and estate. Section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1921, provides:

"In all cases notice must be given to the parents of the minor or proof made to the court that their addresses are unknown, or that, for other reason, such notice cannot be given."

Obviously this means that, if the parents' addresses be known, and no reason exists why notice cannot be given them, notice of the petition for letters of guardianship must be given to both parents. So that, if both parents be living, and if one of them be the petitioner for the letters of guardianship, notice must be given to the other if his or her address be known, and no reason exists why it cannot be given. A fortiori must this be so where, as here, the parents are living separate and apart from each other. By the express terms of the statute it is made mandatory that notice be given to the nonpetitioning parent, or that, if such notice be not given, proof be made either that such parent's address was unknown or that there was some valid reason why the notice could not or should not be given.

[2] The power of the court to appoint the guardian is a special power conferred by statute, and the provisions of the statute as to notice must be substantially followed in order to make valid the exercise of the power; for compliance with the statute is a condition precedent to the valid exercise of the power, and is jurisdictional. Any attempt to exercise the power of appointment without compliance with such express requirement is a nullity. See Estate of Eikerenkotter, 126 Cal. 54, 58 Pac. 370. In the Matter of Lundberg, 143 Cal. 407, 77 Pac. 158, the court referring to the notice then required by the statute, said:

"The statute does in terms require that notice shall be given to the person having the care of the minor, and such notice, for such time as the court may determine to be reasonable, is necessary to give the court jurisdiction to make the appointment."

It follows that notice to Selma Dahnke Wichman, or statutory proof showing why it was not given, was absolutely necessary to give the court jurisdiction of the proceeding and power to make the order appointing appellant guardian. Therefore, the only question on this appeal is as to the power of the court to make the order setting aside its former order appointing appellant guardian and revoking his letters of guardianship.

[3-5] It is well settled that a judgment or order which is void on its face, and which requires only an inspection of the judgment roll or record to show its invalidity, may be set aside on motion, at any time after its entry, by the court which rendered the judgment or made the order. People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 448; People v. Temple, 103 Cal. 453, 37 Pac. 414. Equally well settled is it that a judgment or order, which is in fact void for want of jurisdiction, but the invalidity of which does not appear from the judgment roll or record, may be set aside on motion within a reasonable time after its entry, not exceeding the time limit prescribed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and an independent suit in equity to set aside the judgment or order is not necessary. Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 Pac. 535, 32 Pac. 452, 33 Am. St. Rep. 198; People v. Temple, supra; Smith v. Jones, 174 Cal. 513, 163 Pac. 890. The motion, in such case, is not necessarily based upon section 473; but, in determining whether it is presented within a reasonable time, the period prescribed by section 473 within which motions under it may be made is, as said in Smith v. Jones, supra, "the standard or criterion in all cases."

[6] The general common-law rule is that courts have power over their judgments during the entire term at which they are rendered, and may vacate them on motion (Freeman on Judgments, § 90 et seq.); but terms of court having been abolished with us, a motion to set aside a judgment, or order, not void on its face, must, as we have said, be made within a reasonable time, not exceeding the limit prescribed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. What is a reasonable time within which a motion may be made to set aside a judgment or order, not void on its face, must depend somewhat upon the circumstances of each particular case, and is not definitely determined further than that it will not extend beyond the limit fixed by the last-mentioned code section. Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., supra; People v. Temple, supra; Smith v. Jones, supra.

[7] A motion to vacate a judgment or an order is a direct and not a collateral attack; and on such motion, if it be made in time, any facts going to show the invalidity of the judgment or order may be presented—facts dehors the record as well as facts appearing on the face of the judgment roll or record. Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., supra; Estate of Eikerenkotter, supra.

In Estate of Eikerenkotter, which was an appeal from an order of the superior court refusing to set aside an order appointing a guardian, it is said that, if the "record" discloses that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order of appointment, then the order is void on its face and can be attacked at any time. 126 Cal. 55, 58 Pac. 370. Just what the court meant by its use of the word "record" in this connection is not altogether clear. In this state we have no statute prescribing, as in the ordinary action, what papers shall constitute "the judgment roll" or "record" of an order in a guardianship proceeding. In the present case, however, it will not be necessary to decide whether or not the "record," as that word is technically understood, affirmatively discloses the non-existence of the jurisdictional prerequisite—i. e., the lack of notice to the mother and the absence of all proof that her address was unknown, or that for other reason the notice could not be given her. This is so because, even if the absence of the jurisdictional requirement be not disclosed by what is technically called the "record"—the equivalent of the judgment roll—the motion to vacate the order of appointment and to revoke the letters of guardianship was made in time to permit the absence of the jurisdictional requirement to be shown by evidence aliunde the documents which constitute what is technically the "record" in the proceeding. That is to say, if, as we presently shall show is the case, the motion to vacate the order of appointment was presented within the time limit prescribed by section 473, then it was enough that, as the revoking order recites, the absence of the jurisdictional matters is shown by "the files and records," whether those files and records constitute the "record," in the technical sense of that term, or are aliunde such record.

[8] An order to show cause is the equivalent of and a substitute for a notice of motion. Ency. Pl. & Prac. vol. 15, p. 363; McAuliffe v. Coughlin, 105 Cal. 270, 38 Pac. 730; Dambmann v. White, 48 Cal. 440; Larson v. Minnesota, etc., R. Co., 136 Minn. 423, 162 N. W. 523; Spaeth v. Sells (C. C.) 176 Fed. 797, 799. "The purpose of such an order," says the court in Marty v. Ahl, 5 Minn. 34 (Gil. 14), "is to indicate to the attorney that he will find the judge at a certain place and time, ready to hear the motion, and nothing more or less." It follows, therefore, that the order to show cause, which was served upon appellant January 10, 1923, was the equivalent of and a substitute for a notice by the mother of the minor that she would move the court to vacate the order appointing appellant guardian of their child. The mother's motion for the revocation of the order of appointment was actually presented to the court not later than February 28, 1923. This is made evident by the fact that on that day the court signed an order which, after reciting that the mother had presented her petition, and that the court is satisfied that it had no jurisdiction to appoint appellant guardian, directs the mother's counsel to prepare the proper formal order of revocation. The period between September 1, 1922, the date of the order appointing appellant guardian of his daughter's person and estate, and February 28, 1923, the date of the ruling on the mother's petition to revoke the appointment, is 5 months and 27 days, or less than the maximum period of 6 months prescribed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[9, 10] If, as we are assuming for the purpose of this decision, the invalidity of the order appointing appellant does not appear on the face of the "record," i. e., on the face of what is equivalent to the judgment roll in ordinary actions, then it was necessary not only that the motion should be presented within the 6 months' limitation prescribed by section 473, but that it should be presented within a reasonable time after the entry of the order appointing appellant guardian. What is a reasonable time in any case depends, as we have stated, upon the circumstances of that particular case. In determining whether or not the motion is presented within a reasonable time, a large discretion is necessarily confided to the trial court, and the appellate court will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion of the lower court, unless it is plainly made to appear that such discretion has been abused. Smith v. Pelton, etc., Co., 151 Cal. 394, 398, 90 Pac. 934. All presumptions will be indulged in favor of the correctness of the court's action, and the burden in all cases is upon the appellant to make it appear that the court abused its discretion in making the order. Moore v. Thompson, 138 Cal. 23, 26, 70 Pac. 930. We cannot say that in this case the trial court abused its discretion in holding, as it must have done, that the mother's motion was presented within a reasonable time.

[11] From the foregoing it follows that the lower court did have the power to make the order from which this appeal has been taken, unless, as appellant claims, there were certain insuperable procedural defects. It is claimed that the mother's petition does not state facts sufficient to justify the order of revocation. There is no merit in this contention. It was not necessary that the petition should measure up to the requirements of a complaint in an ordinary action. All that was necessary was that the mother's petition should state the ground or grounds upon which her motion would be made. It sufficiently appears from her petition, read as a whole, that one of the grounds of her prayer for revocation of the letters of guardianship was that no notice had been given her as required by section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended, and that no proof had been made to the court which would dispense with the giving of such notice. More than that was not necessary. A copy of the mother's petition was attached to the order to show cause which was served upon appellant. Her petition thus became a part of her notice of motion—for that is what the order to show cause amounted to; and the grounds of her motion having in this manner been made to appear, it was not necessary that her petition should state the facts in detail. O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 Pac. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105. Indeed, the mother's petition unnecessarily details many facts which are not at all essential to the revocation of the order appointing appellant guardian.

[12] Appellant seems to think that it was incumbent upon his former spouse to show that it was within his power to give the notice which he failed to give. No such burden rested upon the mother of the minor. The statute requires the petitioner for letters of guardianship to give the parent notice of the petition, or, in lieu of such notice, to make to the court proof that the notice could not be given, either because the parent's address was unknown, or because of the existence of some other sufficient reason. Such notice must be given or such proof made before the entry of the order appointing the guardian; and the burden rests upon the petitioner for the letters either to give such notice or to make such proof. If he fails to do either, the court is without jurisdiction to make the appointment.

[13, 14] Appellant complains that he was deprived of his day in court because, as he asserts, the court, after overruling his demurrer to the mother's petition, and denying his motion to strike, proceeded with the hearing on the order to show cause without permitting him to introduce evidence that his former wife's address was in fact unknown to him, and without permitting him to show that she is not a fit and proper person to have the custody of the minor. The objection lacks merit. In the first place, the record before us does not suffice to show that appellant was not given every opportunity to present all relevant and material evidence. The appeal has not been brought up on a printed transcript, and consequently there is no bill of exceptions before us. The appeal was taken under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the record here consists only of the clerk's transcript of certain documents and orders—the documents and orders already mentioned. The clerk does not certify that these were all the documents filed in the case; nor does his transcript purport to show what took place at the hearing on the order to show cause why the letters of guardianship should not be revoked. For aught that appears to the contrary in the record before us, appellant may have been given every opportunity in the lower court to introduce all the evidence which he believed to be relevant to the question then before the court, i. e., the question of the court's jurisdiction to make the order appointing him guardian. In the next place, the recitals in the order appealed from—recitals which are prima facie true—show that the lack of the jurisdictional requirement appeared from an examination of "the files and records" in the proceeding. Appellant does not contend that notice of his application for letters of guardianship was given to his ex-wife. Indeed, his petition negatives any such idea, for it makes no mention whatever of his former spouse, although it does mention the other persons whom the statute entitles to notice of the proceeding. If, as a substitute for such notice, appellant had made proof to the court, prior to his appointment, that his former wife's address was unknown, then the trial court would be warranted in inferring that some reference to such proof would appear somewhere in the files or on the minutes of the court. True, we are assuming, for the purposes of this decision only, that the absence of the jurisdictional requirement is not shown affirmatively upon the face of what is technically the "record" in the proceeding. But, since the motion for the revocation of the letters of guardianship was seasonably presented, evidence dehors the "record" was admissible to show that the court had not acquired jurisdiction to make the order appointing appellant guardian. That is, the order of revocation could properly be based upon inferences reasonably deducible from the matters disclosed by the "files and records" in the proceeding, even though they were not such files or records as would constitute the "record" in the strict sense of the term. And in view of the inferences which may reasonably be drawn from the contents of appellant's petition for letters of guardianship, to say nothing of the other "files and records" in the proceeding, it is difficult to conceive how he could have succeeded in showing that his former wife had in fact been given notice, or that he had in fact made proof to the court that her address was unknown. But, be this as it may, appellant does not claim that he expected to give testimony at the hearing on the order to show cause which would have shown either that his former wife had in fact been given the statutory notice, or that, prior to his appointment as guardian, he did make to the court the statutory proof which would have dispensed with the necessity for such notice. What he does claim is that at the hearing on his divorced wife's order to show cause he was not given an opportunity to show at that time that he did not know his former spouse's address when he filed his petition for letters. But such proof, made after his appointment as guardian, would not have satisfied the requirements of the statute. If, as seems to be conceded, no notice was given to the mother of the child, then, in order to confer jurisdiction upon the court to appoint appellant guardian of the minor, it would be necessary for him to make proof, prior to the time when the court made its order appointing him guardian, that the mother's address was unknown or that for some other reason notice to her could not or should not be given. Such proof after the order appointing him guardian could not breathe the breath of life into the stillborn order.

If it be a fact that the court gave appellant no opportunity to show that the mother was an unfit person to have the custody of the child, that is no ground for a reversal. Such an issue was entirely immaterial on the hearing of the mother's motion. The court could not thereon determine any question as to the ultimate custody of the child. The sole question properly before the court was as to whether the mother should be relieved from an order which deprived her of all right to her child's custody but which the court was without jurisdiction to make. Guardianship of Van Loan, 142 Cal. 423, 428, 76 Pac. 37. When it appeared to the court that it was without jurisdiction to make the order appointing appellant guardian, it was its duty to set aside the order, recall the letters of guardianship, and hear the matter de novo, when all parties could have a showing.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DANIELS. (Cr. 988.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 27, 1923.)

1. False pretenses — Evidence held admissible to show falsity of statement.

Where, in prosecution for falsely representing to complainant that the assets of a corporation were in excess of $34,000 whereby complaining witness was induced to pay over $11,000 for a one-third interest in the corporation it appeared that defendant's representations were made by means of a written statement, which he represented to complaining witness was taken from the books of the corporation and correctly showed its condition, a second statement prepared at the instance of the defendant, after the purchase by complaining witness, and given to him for the express purpose of showing the assets of the corporation, and which showed such assets to be less than $17,000, was admissible as evidence of the falsity of the first statement.

2. False pretenses — Must be relied on by complaining witness.

To find defendant guilty of false pretense, it is necessary to find that complaining witness relied on false statements made by defendant.

3. False pretenses — Refusal of cross-examination of complaining witness as to whether he had made independent investigation held reversible error.

In prosecution charging defendant with obtaining money by false pretenses, consisting of representation as to the assets of a business concern by which complaining witness was induced to purchase a one-third interest therein, it was reversible error to refuse to permit cross-examination of complaining witness as to whether he had made independent investigation of the affairs of the company prior to his purchase, and as to whether he did not rely upon such investigation, irrespective of defendant's statements, in making of such purchase.

4. Criminal law — Witnesses held competent to testify as to contents of defendant's books.

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretense, where the charge was that defendant misrepresented in a statement the assets of a business concern, and induced complaining witness to buy one-third interest therein, defendant's bookkeeper and an expert accountant, employed by defendant to examine the books and prepare a statement showing assets and liabilities of the business, were both competent to testify as to contents of books.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

T. M. Daniels was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals. Reversed.

Walter J. Little, Randall, Bartlett & White, and Schenck & Kittrelle, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CURTIS, J. Appellant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment of conviction under an information charging him with the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. He relies upon three grounds for a reversal of the judgment: First, insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment; second, errors of the trial court committed in the admission and rejection of evidence; third, errors committed by the trial court in the giving of and the refusal to give instructions.

[1] As to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment, appellant contends that, as the charge against him was of obtaining money by false pretense, and that the false pretense in question was that the assets of a certain business concern, composed of the defendant and one W. L. Brown, doing business under the firm name of the Reliance Building Company, were in excess of $34,000, there was no evidence that the assets of said firm were not as represented by defendant. The complaining witness purchased a one-third interest in said business upon the representations of the defendant that the net assets of said firm amounted to the sum of $34,208.34. These representations were made by defendant to the complaining witness by means of a written statement purporting to show the assets and liabilities of the company. This statement, defendant represented, was taken from the books of the firm, and correctly showed the condition of the business of the company and its assets and liabilities. Shortly after making said purchase and paying therefor in cash and securities the sum of $11,402.78, being exactly one-third of the amount of the net assets of said firm as shown by said written statement, the complaining witness became convinced that he had been victimized by the defendant, and demanded of defendant a return of his money and securities. The defendant thereupon had prepared by an expert accountant a second statement of the affairs of the company showing its assets and liabilities. This second statement, which was given to the complaining witness by the defendant, showed that the net assets, including the $11,402.78 paid into the firm by the complaining witness, were slightly less than $17,000.

It is now claimed by appellant that this latter statement only shows the condition of the books of the company at the time of its preparation, and is no evidence whatever of the amount or character of the property or assets owned by the company. We are unable to agree with appellant in this contention. The evidence shows that this statement was prepared at the instance of the defendant for the express purpose of showing the assets and liabilities of the company, and that it was given to the complaining witness by the defendant for this purpose. Defendant at the trial took the stand in his own behalf, and he made no claim that this statement was not correct, nor that it did not correctly show the property and assets of the company. Under the circumstances surrounding the preparation and delivery of this statement we think the trial court committed no error in admitting it in evidence. It purported to show the character and value of the property and assets of the company, and therefore tended to prove the falsity of the representations made by the defendant to the complaining witness as to the net assets of the company.

[2, 3] It is next claimed by appellant that the court erred in the admission and rejection of evidence in two particulars: First, in its refusal to permit defendant to cross-examine the complaining witness, and, second, in permitting the prosecution to introduce evidence pertaining to the books of the company.

The court refused to permit the complaining witness to answer certain questions propounded to him on cross-examination, the answers to which appellant claims might have shown that the complaining witness had made an independent investigation of the affairs of the company prior to his purchase of an interest therein, and therefore that he did not rely upon any statement made by the defendant as to the property or assets of said company. Among other questions, the complaining witness was asked upon cross-examination:

"Did you make any inquiries of anybody regarding the truth or falsity of any of the items set forth in that statement prior to the time you signed the agreement of copartnership?"

The court sustained an objection to this question. The ruling of the court appears to be based upon the theory that the complaining witness had a right to rely upon the statements of the defendant, and was not obliged to make any further investigation. In this construction of the law we agree with the trial court, but it is further insisted by the appellant that, if the complaining witness made an independent investigation, and relied upon the information obtained thereby, and acting upon such information parted with his money or property, then the defendant cannot be found guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses, notwithstanding the falsity of the representations made by him. In order to find defendant guilty of such an offense it is necessary to find that the complaining witness relied upon the false statements made by the defendant. The question therefore propounded to the complaining witness, to which the court sustained an objection, might possibly have elicited an answer from the witness to the effect that he had made inquiries regarding the truth or falsity of the items contained in the statement, and as a result of these inquiries he became satisfied, irrespective of anything the defendant may have said to him that the statement was correct, and that he entered into the contract with defendant for the reason that he believed from the investigation made by him that the statement presented to him by the defendant was correct. The rule is stated in Wharton's Criminal Law as follows:

"When the prosecutor resorts to verification, this may be a defense. The prisoner offered a chain in pledge to a pawnbroker, falsely and fraudulently stating that it was a silver chain, whereas in fact it was not silver, but was made of a composition worth about a farthing an ounce. The pawnbroker tested the chain, and finding it withstood the test, he, relying on his own examination and test of the chain, and not placing any reliance upon the prisoner's statement, lent the prisoner 10 shillings, the sum he asked, and took the chain as a pledge. It was held that, if the money had been obtained on the statement made by the prisoner, he might have been convicted of obtaining it by false pretenses; but that, as the prosecutor relied entirely upon his own examination, and not upon the false statement, the prisoner was properly found guilty of only an attempt to commit that offense." Wharton's Criminal Law (11th Ed.) § 1442.

See, also People v. Gibbs, 98 Cal. 661, 33 Pac. 630.

Under these circumstances we must agree with the appellant that it was error on the part of the court to sustain the objection to this question propounded to the complaining witness upon cross-examination.

[4] There was no error upon the part of the court in permitting the witnesses Lewis and Blackman to testify as to the contents of the books of the company. These witnesses were both in the employ of the defendant—Lewis having been employed as bookkeeper, and Blackman as an expert accountant to examine the books and to prepare a statement showing the assets and liabilities of the company. They were, therefore, in our opinion, both competent witnesses to testify as to the contents of the books.

We find no error in the rulings of the court upon the instructions.

For the reasons heretofore given, the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Harold Loudereback, Judge.

Ruel Bigelow was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The appellant, a negro, was convicted of the crime of robbery, he made a motion for a new trial, his motion was denied, and he has appealed. In his opening brief he makes two points: (1) The uncontradicted evidence on the trial of this case is wholly insufficient to justify or sustain the verdict; and (2) the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1] To present both points the attorney for the appellant has been at much pains to state in narrative form the evidence. While, as we have quoted it, his main point regarding the insufficiency of the evidence is stated in very broad language, the appellant's exact claim is that the evidence was insufficient to prove that he committed the robbery in question. We make this statement in the beginning to simplify the record, and because the record shows, without any contradiction whatsoever, that on the evening of the 27th day of November, 1922, at and in his garage in San Francisco, Milton A. Rosenbaum was robbed, and at that time there was taken from him by the robber money in the sum of $16.50, one yellow metal wrist watch, one white metal ring set with one white stone, one overcoat, and one fountain pen, all of the aggregate value of $340. However, it will be conceded at the outset that Mr. Rosenbaum did not testify, in so many words, that he was robbed by Ruel Bigelow. The real question involved, then, is this: Was there evidence in the record on which the jury were entitled to base a verdict that Ruel Bigelow was the person who robbed Mr. Rosenbaum?

We think that question must be answered

In the affirmative. The reflected light was such that Mr. Rosenbaum was able to discern, and afterwards he testified, that the robber was a negro about the height and build of the defendant; that he wore a dark suit and a gray cap. Immediately after the robbery Mr. Rosenbaum ran into the street and he saw a Ford automobile going down Jackson street toward Fillmore street. On the day following the robbery the defendant was arrested in Oakland while trying to dispose of the watch and ring taken from Rosenbaum. He attempted to explain their possession by saying that he had won them in a crap game nearly a year previous to that time. But after he learned that the robbery had been reported to the Oakland police department, he then stated that the articles had been given to him by a man named Young, and that Young had requested him to dispose of them. In this connection he stated that he did not know Young's address. At the time of his arrest he had in his possession an automobile operator's license taken out in the name of R. Willes, which was the name he gave the arresting officer. Later he said his name was Ruel Bigelow, and that he was a prisoner on parole from San Quentin, and that that was the reason he had not given his true name. Whether we as jurors would have accepted the foregoing facts as sufficient evidence proving, or tending to prove, that the appellant was the individual who robbed Mr. Rosenbaum, is beside the case. It cannot be said that there was not some evidence on that subject, and the weight of that particular evidence in this particular case was for the jury.

The defendant attempted to prove an alibi. He called witnesses who testified they saw him in San Francisco on that evening. Only one of the witnesses testified to any fact or facts which, taken together, prove that at the time of the robbery, to wit, about 11:30 p. m., the defendant was at another point so far distant that he could not have committed the crime. That witness was a man by the name of Bond. It was for the jury to say whether or not they believed this one witness' testimony. This court has no right to disturb the conclusion of the jury.

As a part of his second point the appellant raises in another form the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence. That subject has been treated above and need not be reconsidered.

[2] Under the second point, the appellant complains of testimony coming into the record showing him to be an ex-convict. No objection to that evidence was made in the trial court, and the objection may not be entertained in this court for the first time.

The judgment is affirmed.

WILSON et al. v. EDGAR, Justice of the Peace. (Civ. 4833.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 6, 1923.)

Municipal corporations — 631(2)—Zoning ordinance held violated by nonconforming use of premises.

The saving clause of a zoning ordinance, which provided that "in any building or premises any lawful use existing therein at the time of the passage of this ordinance may be continued therein, although not conforming to the regulations of the use district in which it is maintained," held not to authorize the conducting of a nonconforming business in a building other than that business to which it was devoted at the time of enactment of the ordinance.

Petition by Charles M. Wilson and another for a writ of mandamus to be directed against Robert Edgar, Justice of the Peace of the City of Berkeley. Writ granted.

Frank V. Cornish, of Berkeley, for petitioners.

Lemuel D. Sanderson, City Atty., of Berkeley, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Petition for mandamus to compel the issuance of a warrant of arrest for the violation of a zoning ordinance regulating the use of buildings. The petition alleges: That on July 20, 1920, a certain ordinance was passed by the council of the city of Berkeley, districting the location of residences and certain trades, and the location of buildings designed for certain specified uses, establishing the boundaries thereof and providing a penalty for the violation of the ordinance. That defendant Robert Edgar is the regularly elected, duly qualified, and acting justice of the peace of the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, state of California, and that all complaints for violation of ordinances of the city of Berkeley are required to be issued out of the court of said justice of the peace. That Charles S. Shuey and Robert A. Shuey are residents of the city of Berkeley and the owners of a building on the east side of Telegraph avenue, between Stuart and Oregon streets, in said city of Berkeley, occupied and used by them prior to July 1, 1920, for a milk bottling and distributing station, and that said use of said property was continued by them on said premises until the early part of the year 1923, when said use was terminated. That thereafter, on or about the 1st day of August, 1923, the said Shueys leased the said building or a portion thereof to one E. Seidel, a resident of the city of Berkeley, for the purpose of conducting therein a dyeing and cleaning works, and that said E. Seidel thereafter established in said building a dyeing and cleaning works or business, which he has continued to conduct and is now conducting therein. That plaintiff Wilson is a resident of the city of Berkeley, residing at No. 2815 Telegraph avenue, in a house which he owns, and that this house, together with the adjoining residence owned by him, are directly south in the same block and adjoining said building owned by said Shueys, and that said houses are occupied by tenants of said Wilson. That plaintiff Kovacevic resides at No. 2803A Telegraph avenue, in one of the apartments of a building owned by him at the southeast corner of Stuart street and Telegraph avenue adjoining the property of said Shueys hereinbefore referred to. That said building contains also an apartment and three stores occupied by tenants of said last-named plaintiff.

It is claimed that the dyeing and cleaning establishment is maintained in violation of the ordinance, and that Robert Edgar, as justice of the peace, has refused to issue a warrant of arrest for such violation, for which reason it is prayed that a writ issue out of this court commanding that he perform his duty. The ordinance contains a saving clause relating to the continued existence of nonconforming buildings and premises. Section 11 of the ordinance reads as follows:

"(a) In any building or premises any lawful use existing therein at the time of the passage of this ordinance may be continued therein, although not conforming to the regulations of the use district in which it is maintained, providing that no new building or addition be erected except in conformity with the requirements of this ordinance, or unless required by law; and provided further that any such building or premises which is not used for such nonconforming use for a period of 180 days at any time after the passage of this ordinance, then the use of such building or premises must thereafter conform to the use of the district within which it is situated."

As indicated by the recitals in the petition, the premises in question were lawfully used at the time of the passage of the ordinance as a milk bottling and distributing station, and under section 11 thereof such use could be continued, though not conforming to the regulations of the use district, so long as such nonconforming use was continued. It is contended by the petitioner, however, that, such use having been discontinued, the future use of the property as to the character of business which may be conducted therein is subject to the restrictions imposed by the ordinance upon the district within which such property is situated.

The determination of the question depends upon the proper construction to be given to the saving clause of the ordinance. This clause, as above indicated, provides that in any building or premises any lawful use existing therein at the time of the passage of the ordinance may be continued, although not conforming to the ordinance. It is suggested by the respondent that this language of the saving clause is to be interpreted as not only permitting the continuance of the particular business which was being conducted in the building at the time of the passage of the ordinance, but that it might be succeeded by any other business which might prior to the enactment of the ordinance have been lawfully conducted in such building, although it could not subsequent to the enactment be originally established there. This contention is based upon the fact that elsewhere in the ordinance the phrase "use of the district" is employed, and that when so employed it refers to all businesses which may lawfully be conducted within the district, so that when the word "use" is employed in the ordinance it denotes the whole class of businesses permitted in a given district.

We cannot agree with this contention of the respondent. The sense in which the word "use" is employed is to be gathered from its immediate context. Sometimes the words are "use of the premises"; at others, "use of the district." The latter phrase evidently denotes the entire class of businesses permitted in a district, while the former with equal clearness refers to the particular business conducted upon given premises. In the phrase "any lawful use existing in any building may be continued therein" (which is but a transposition of the language of the ordinance) the word "use" plainly refers to the particular business conducted in the building. We think there is no merit in the contention of respondent that the word "use" must be given the same signification wherever it occurs in the ordinance.

Moreover, if the contention of the respondent be held to be correct, the purpose of the ordinance would be largely frustrated. That purpose is to confine certain classes of business to certain localities, but at the same time an exception is made for the purpose of alleviating any hardship which the immediate discontinuance of a particular use of a building might entail. The ultimate purpose, however, is plainly that nonconforming uses of premises shall gradually be eliminated, which purpose would be practically defeated if one nonconforming use might be succeeded by another.

The property in the case at bar being thus used for a purpose in violation of the ordinance, an injured and complaining party is entitled to a warrant of arrest of those violating its provisions.

It is ordered that the writ as prayed for be issued.

On an application for reinstatement after disbarment, the court is primarily concerned with the fitness of the applicant, and not with the question as to whether he has been sufficiently punished.

H. W. Glensor and Ernest Clewe, both of San Francisco, for respondent Bar Association of San Francisco.

TYLER, P. J. This is an application for reinstatement as an attorney and counselor at law after disbarment. The petition recites that the applicant was disbarred on February 20, 1921, upon the filing in the Supreme Court of a certified copy of a judgment of conviction of a felony, and that by said judgment petitioner was sentenced to imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a period of seven years, and that he was discharged June 5, 1923.

Petitioner alleges that he has suffered great mental and physical pain, and he has also suffered great financial and professional losses by reason of his imprisonment, and prays that he may be reinstated as an attorney and counselor.

[1] The question for determination in an application for reinstatement by a disbarred attorney is not the sufficiency of the punishment already suffered by him, but the fitness of the applicant to be admitted to the practice of the law. The disbarment of an attorney is not intended primarily as punishment, but as a measure for the protection of the public and the bar; and therefore a belief that the attorney has been sufficiently punished will not warrant his reinstatement. Courts will not ordinarily reinstate an attorney when his petition for reinstatement follows closely upon his disbarment. Accordingly it has been held that such application will not be considered where the attorney has been deprived of his license for only three years, though the application be supported by testimonials of numerous persons to his conduct and present good character. In re Cate, 54 Cal. App. 401, 201 Pac. 964; Id. (Cal. App.) 212 Pac. 694; In re Shepard, 35 Cal. App. 492, 170 Pac. 442; In re Stevens (Cal. App.) 210 Pac. 442; Id. (Cal. App.) 219 Pac. 1014. In proceedings of this character the court owes a solemn duty to the community and to the legal profession which must be performed without regard to feelings of sympathy for the applicant. In re O'Keefe, 62 Mont. 534, 205 Pac. 667.

TYLER, P. J. This is an application for reinstatement as an attorney and counselor at law after disbarment. From the record it appears that petitioner was convicted of a felony involving moral turpitude, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the state penitentiary. After serving a portion of his sentence, he was, on the 24th day of December, 1922, granted a full pardon by the governor of the state. Attached to the petition are numerous testimonials from officials and other persons, recommending the reinstatement of the applicant. On the other hand certain protests have been filed against such action. The case presents the identical situation with which we were called upon to deal in the matter of Daniel O'Connell (No. 4751) 222 Pac. 625, this day decided, in which we denied a similar petition. (Civ. 4450.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 7, 1923.)

1. Wills — 324(3)—Evidence held not to show undue influence, and to justify nonsuit.

In a will contest, in which neither the subscribing witnesses nor any person present when the will was executed were called as witnesses, evidence held insufficient to show undue influence, so that a nonsuit was proper.

2. Wills — 165(4)—Letters and declarations of testatrix, showing hostility to proponent, inadmissible to show undue influence.

In a suit to contest a will for undue influence of proponent, testatrix's letters and declarations showing hostility to proponent and friendliness to contestant, subsequent reconciliation having been proved, were inadmissible to show undue influence, though admissible to show testatrix's mental state when uttered.

3. Wills — 165(1)—Undue influence not provable by testator's declarations.

Testator's declarations, made during his lifetime, in a contest of his will, are inadmissible to prove undue influence.

4. Wills — 400—Rejection of declarations of testatrix held harmless error.

In a suit to contest a will for undue influence, failure of the evidence to show undue influence justifying nonsuit rendered harmless the rejection of letters and declarations of testatrix, admissible only to show her state of mind when made, since they were insufficient to send the case to the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Suit by Belle M. Hurley against Ida E. Johnston, to contest the will of Lottie E. Higley, deceased. From a judgment for respondent, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. Crail, Harold C. Morton, and Julius V. Patrosso, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. J. Fish and Ward Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This is a contest of the will of Lottie E. Higley, deceased, brought by Belle M. Hurley, a daughter, contestant and appellant, against Ida E. Johnston, proponent and respondent, on the ground of undue influence on the part of proponent. The trial court ordered a nonsuit, and entered judgment accordingly, and this appeal is from said judgment.

[1] The judgment of nonsuit was properly granted. Neither of the subscribing witnesses to the will was called as a witness in the case, nor was any other person present at the execution of the will called to testify on behalf of the contestant, nor was there any testimony that the proponent or any other person had directly or indirectly influenced or attempted to influence the decedent in the making of her will or in the disposition of her property. The proponent of the will, Ida E. Johnston, was called on behalf of the contestant, and testified that she was not present at the execution of her mother's will; that she had never made any suggestion to her mother as to the manner in which, or the persons to whom, the decedent should leave her property; that her mother had never indicated to her, prior to the execution of said will, how she intended to leave her property; and that, after the execution of the will, her mother had never informed her of its contents, and that she, proponent, had no knowledge of the contents of the will until the same was read to her and her sister, the contestant, immediately after the death of her mother, by the attorney in whose custody the mother had left the will, except that some time after the will had been executed the mother made a conveyance of six lots at Manhattan Beach, and at the time she made this conveyance the mother stated to the proponent that these were the lots that she had left to the contestant. The testimony further showed that decedent and her daughter Ida E. Johnston were estranged during a period of time beginning in 1908 and ending about the first part of the year 1916. During the latter part of the year 1915 a reconciliation was effected between the decedent and her daughter Mrs. Johnston, and in the early part of 1916 Mrs. Johnston took up her residence with her mother, and the two lived together until the death of the decedent in November, 1919. The will was executed in March, 1918. Prior to the death of her mother the contestant lived in Rockford, Ill., except for a visit made by her to her mother in 1905. The relations between the contestant and her mother were of the most friendly nature, and they corresponded regularly, except during the last year of her mother's life. There was evidence to the effect that the proponent, some years prior to her mother's death, had said that she would never live with an old person without she got everything she had. One of the neighbors of the deceased also testified that she had been very friendly with the deceased, and visited her in her home every day, but after the deceased and proponent became reconciled the relations between the witness and the deceased changed, and that decedent thereafter did not appear to want to see the witness. A mere statement of this evidence is in our opinion sufficient to show that it is utterly lacking in those essentials which go to make out a case of undue influence, and in our opinion the trial court committed no error in granting proponent's motion for a nonsuit. Estate of Anderson, 185 Cal. 700, 198 Pac. 407. In this case will be found an extensive reference to the authorities of this state upon this subject. These authorities undoubtedly sustain the ruling of the trial court in granting a nonsuit in the case at bar.

[2, 3] The further objection is made to rulings of the court in excluding certain letters written by the decedent to the contestant some years prior to the date of the execution of the will, and also in excluding certain declarations concerning the contestant and proponent, made by the decedent during her lifetime. So far as the letters are concerned they are not in the record and this court has no means of ascertaining their contents, and for this reason could not review the ruling of the court excluding them. However, what is said hereafter regarding the declarations of the decedent would also apply to these letters, as all were written during the year 1911, some seven years prior to the execution of the will. All of the declarations sought to be introduced in evidence, with one exception of such slight consequence that no further mention will be made of it, were made, it is claimed, by the decedent prior to 1916, and at least two years prior to the execution of the will. The date of some of them was given as far back as 1909. These purported declarations of the decedent in the main were expressions of friendliness towards Mrs. Hurley and of unfriendliness, and often of hostility, towards Mrs. Johnston. Appellant offered to prove by these declarations that decedent had said that her daughter Ida E. Johnston had received her share of her property, and in case of her death that she did not want Mrs. Johnston to step into her house, because she knew that she would take everything, and that she did not want Mrs. Johnston to step in and take away everything from Mrs. Hurley. Respondent contended before the trial court, and now contends, that these declarations were hearsay, and therefore were inadmissible in evidence as against respondent. The rule is well established in this state that the declarations of the testator made during his lifetime in a contest of his will, on the ground of undue influence, are inadmissible for the purpose of showing undue influence. Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583-594, 82 Pac. 252, and authorities there cited. They may, however, be admitted for the purpose of showing the state of mind of the testator at the time of their utterance. Estate of Anderson, 185 Cal. 700, 718, 198 Pac. 407, 415. In this case we find the following language used:

"But such declarations are competent only when they are indicative of the declarant's mental state at the very time of their utterance, and only for the purpose of that mental state. It follows from this that unless his mental state at that time is material to the issue under investigation, the declarations are not admissible, even though they do show his mental state at that time, not because they are not competent for that purpose, but because that purpose is not germane to the issue."

As we have already noted, the declarations which the court held to be inadmissible purported to have been made by the testatrix some time prior to the year 1916, and over two years before the making of the will. They were made at a time when an estrangement existed between the testatrix and her daughter Ida E. Johnston. The evidence shows without contradiction that there had been a reconciliation between the mother and daughter some time during the latter part of the year 1915, and that since this reconciliation they had lived together in the most friendly relations up to the time of the death of the testatrix, and that this friendly relation between mother and daughter existed in November, 1918, the date of the execution of the will. These declarations, therefore, under the circumstances, would throw absolutely no light upon the state of mind of the decedent at the time she executed her will, and were therefore properly excluded by the trial court.

[4] Even conceding that these declarations were admissible to show decedent's state of mind, yet their rejection was harmless under the facts of this case. If we are correct in our conclusion that the judgment of nonsuit was properly granted by the court, on account of a lack of evidence showing undue influence, then the admission of these declarations would not have helped the contestant's case. As we have already seen, they are admissible for one purpose only, that is, to show the state of the mind of the decedent, and are inadmissible and cannot be considered by the court or jury for the purpose of establishing undue influence. The case of the contestant, therefore, even with these declarations in evidence, would still have been insufficient to have been submitted to a jury, and the court would have been compelled to have granted a nonsuit.

Judgment affirmed.

64 Cal. App. 733

In re RICKEY'S ESTATE.

SCOTT et al. v. RICKEY et al.

(Civ. 4574.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 14, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 11, 1924.)

1. Wills §400—Review of judgment of nonsuit in will contest.

On appeal from a judgment of nonsuit against the contestants of a will, if there is evidence in the record which, standing alone or coupled with testimony erroneously excluded or erroneously stricken out, is sufficient to sustain a possible verdict that the will should be set aside on any of the grounds alleged, the judgment must be set aside.

2. Wills §164(5)—No presumption of undue influence.

Testimony showing reason for hostility by second wife towards contestants, and that she was a person capable of influencing testator, will not raise a presumption of fraud or undue influence in the making of a will.

3. Wills §324(3)—Evidence held not to show fraud or undue influence, and nonsuit proper.

In will contest, evidence held to warrant nonsuit on issues of fraud and undue influence.

4. Wills §163(6)—When unnaturalness of will is of importance in contest stated.

The consideration of the question whether or not a will is unnatural is of no importance in a will contest, except in a case where there is some evidence immediately tending to show mental incapacity, fraud, or undue influence, in which event it might serve to help out a weak case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas B. Rickey, deceased. Contest by Bertha Levina Scott and others, of will, propounded by Alice Belle Rickey and another. Judgment in favor of the will, and the contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Peter J. Crosby and John D. Murphey, both of Oakland, for appellant Scott.

J. W. Dorsey and W. E. Cashman, both of San Francisco, for appellants Charles T. Rickey and Jeanette Rickey.

James F. Peck and M. C. Chapman, both of Oakland, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This appeal is by certain heirs at law of Thomas B. Rickey from a judgment of nonsuit in an action in which they sought the revocation of an order admitting to probate a certain instrument as the will of Thomas B. Rickey, deceased.

Thomas B. Rickey died on January 11, 1920, and an instrument in writing was admitted to probate as his will by the superior court of the county of Alameda, state of California, on January 27, 1920. By this instrument the appellants and contestants were left small legacies, with the statement that the testator had made gifts to them at different times, a sister of the testator was given $100 a month for the remainder of her life, together with such additional sums as might be necessary for unusual expenses, such as illness, etc., the wife and youngest daughter of the testator, the proponents of the will, were given $5,000 each, and the income from the bulk of the estate was to be enjoyed by the wife and said youngest daughter of the testator during their joint lives; said youngest daughter taking the residuum of the estate after her mother's death. By the will, the wife and youngest daughter were named as executrices to serve without bond, and they were duly appointed and thereafter qualified, and were the acting executrices of the will at the time of the trial.

Within the statutory period, the appellants Bertha Levina Scott, a daughter of the testator by his first wife, and Charles Treadwell Rickey and Jeanette Rickey, children of a deceased son of said testator by his first wife, severally, filed petitions contesting the validity of said instrument and praying for the revocation of its probate. The residuary beneficiaries, individually and as executrices, severally, answered each of the petitions. The contests were consolidated. A jury was called in an advisory capacity by the court, but after the evidence was presented the trial court refused to submit the case to the jury, but granted the motion of the proponents of the will for an order of nonsuit against the contestants.

The petitions are lengthy, the allegations including recitals of incidents in the personal history of the testator occurring during a period of nearly 30 years. A detailed statement of these matters does not seem necessary, and we shall merely state the general issues as they are concisely outlined by the appellants in their brief, to wit: Was the paper writing probated executed by Thomas B. Rickey as his will? Was the signature to said paper writing procured by fraud exercised and practiced upon said T. B. Rickey by the proponents of the will? Was the signature to said paper writing procured by the undue influence of said proponents or either of them?

[1] It is, of course, beyond question that if there is evidence in the record, which, standing alone or coupled with testimony erroneously excluded, or admitted and subsequently erroneously stricken out, sufficient to sustain a possible verdict that the will should be set aside on any of the grounds alleged in any of the petitions for revocation of probate, the judgment upon the order granting the nonsuit must be set aside.

The trial of the case extended over a period of many days, sharp legal contests occurring over the admission of evidence, and much of the evidence admitted was subsequently stricken out upon motions of the proponents of the will. The reporter's transcript includes over 2,500 pages.

The appellants have printed in their brief the testimony upon which they rely, and have included therein, not only the testimony admitted by the trial court, but also the testimony which was stricken out upon motion. The rulings upon these motions present many intricate questions in the law of evidence, but for a decision upon this appeal a solution of these problems is unnecessary. For the purposes of this appeal only, we will concede to the appellants that every ruling on evidence of which they complain was erroneous; that all the testimony printed in their brief should have been admitted by the trial court. We consider the motion for nonsuit, then, in the light of all the testimony appearing in the appellants' brief, and accept it all as true.

That evidence indicates reasons for antagonism between the proponents of the will and the contestants, who were descendants of testator's first wife. It also shows that the testator and Alice Belle Rickey, one of the proponents of the will, had been husband and wife for over 25 years prior to his death; that they had married in 1893, after the children of his first marriage were grown, and after the death of their mother in 1891. A great deal of testimony was introduced tending to show that the second wife, before her marriage with the testator, and during the lifetime of his first wife, had been the cause of unhappiness in his home; that after the death of his first wife testator married said Alice Belle Rickey, and considerable hostility existed between the second wife and the children of the first wife; that testator was a man of great wealth and large business interests. After his second marriage he became involved in business difficulties in Nevada and was sued for a large amount of money and threatened with criminal prosecution because of the failure of a bank of which he had been president; that he feared his entire fortune would be subjected to the payment of judgments against him and entered into a scheme; with the consent and connivance of his second wife and his son by his first marriage, by which his property and assets were so manipulated as to be concealed from creditors until such time as he succeeded in disposing of the claims against him.

Testimony was offered showing the testator's apparent affection for his daughter Mrs. Scott, one of the contestants and appellants here. There was also some testimony that he had made remarks on some occasions during the last few years of his life indicating that he was not happy in his domestic relations, and that he disliked and distrusted his second wife; that his daughter, Mrs. Scott was without money for her support; that she was in poor health; that testator had told his sister that this daughter would be provided for; that the wife and her daughter, the chief beneficiaries under the will, had received valuable property from the testator at different times prior to the execution of his will.

[2] It is upon substantially these facts that the appellants rely. They argue that the wife knew of the concealment of the husband's property to avoid the payment of possible judgments against him, and used this knowledge as a means of coercion. There is not the slightest evidence that she so used this knowledge, but, on the contrary, the record discloses that the lawsuits which brought about the concealment of the property had been settled and the judgment paid years before the making of the will. The record does not even show that this matter furnished a possible means of coercion at the time of the making of the will, much less that such means were used by the proponents. The testimony regarding the early relations of the parties suggests a reason for the alleged hostility between the respondents and appellants. But that fact being established would not raise a presumption of fraud or undue influence in the making of the will. To prove that the wife was a person capable of influencing testator does not prove that she actually did so.

"It will not be presumed, because a wife has ample opportunity to exert an influence which may be undue, that she has in fact done so." Fulton v. Freeland, 219 Mo. 494, 118 S. W. 12, 19, 131 Am. St. Rep. 576.

See, also, Peery v. Peery, 94 Tenn. 328, 29 S. W. 1, and In re Langford, 108 Cal. 608, 622, 41 Pac. 701. In a Missouri case quoted with approval in Fulton v. Freeland, supra, it was said, in relation to matters urged upon our attention by the present appellants:

"The plaintiffs sought to raise a presumption of undue influence affecting the execution of the will by proofs of the relations existing between the testator and his second wife before their marriage, which was about 11 years before the making of the will; by testimony showing the dependent condition of the disinherited children; by showing that the testator had had difficulties with his first wife, and had separated from her, and that some of the disinherited children had taken sides with their father in those controversies; by showing that the relations between the testator and his disinherited children were friendly and affectionate about the time of the making of the will; by showing that some of the first wife's children had assisted the testator in accumulating property; and by proving some conversation of the testator, in the same year in which the will was made, concerning his intended disposition of his property. There was also an offer to prove that one of the testator's daughters by his first wife had been obliged to leave her father's house, by reason of his second wife's request or influence to that effect. All the offers of testimony upon these matters were, upon defendant's objections, refused by the court, and these refusals are assigned for error. We can discover no ground of admissibility for any of this proposed testimony. The plaintiffs have undertaken to prove that the paper purporting to be the last will and testament of their ancestor was the product of an undue influence exercised upon him by Sarah M. Ketchum. 'Undue influence is that which compels a testator to do that which is against his will, through fear, through the desire of peace, or some coercive power which he is unable to resist, and but for the exercise of which the will would not have been made as it was.' Pierce v. Pierce, 3 Cent. Law. J. 226. The testator was married to his second wife in 1855. His will was executed in 1866, and he died in 1877. Here is a period of more than 20 years, at some time during which these incidents of remote bearing, or none at all, are supposed to have indicated that the testator, in the hour when his will was written and signed, was acting under the coercive power above described, and that this coercive power was in fact held over him by Sarah M. Ketchum. Cause and effect are here far too widely separated for the purpose of fair investigation. All or any of the facts tendered might or might not coexist with a total absence of any such undue influence. They prove, or tend to prove, upon the question at issue, absolutely nothing. Their only effect, if introduced in evidence, might be, in the hands of ingenious counsel, to play upon the passions or prejudices of a jury, and give them an apparent excuse for thwarting the unkind discrimination of a father against some of his children."

[3] The facts appearing in the record show that the proponents of the will had nothing whatsoever to do with its execution and knew nothing of its terms. The following facts with relation to the testamentary disposition of testator's property appear uncontradicted in the record: The will was signed on August 14, 1918, about a year and a half before Mr. Rickey's death. At that time Mr. Rickey was in a sanitarium recovering from an illness. He was nearly 80 years old and his eyesight had been poor for some time. It was impossible for him to read, but he was able to distinguish persons and to go about unaided. He appears to have been a man of great mental vigor at all times, and the evidence shows that this condition had not changed at the time the will was made nor for considerable time after that. About August 10 or 11, 1920, testator asked his wife to telephone to his attorney and ask the attorney to call at the hospital. She stated she did not know why Mr. Rickey desired to see his attorney, but she complied with his request. The attorney was not alive at the time of the trial, but his deposition was introduced in evidence, and, in all essential particulars, it corroborates the proponents of the will in their account of the circumstances surrounding its execution. It appears, uncontradicted in the record, that the attorney went to the hospital in response to this telephone message and was told by Mr. Rickey that he wished to make a will. Mr. Rickey explained what provisions he desired and gave the attorney the names of his children and grandchildren. The conversation occurring at that time, as narrated by the attorney, showed a complete intellectual grasp of his personal affairs by the testator. The attorney made notes of what was desired and returned to his office and had a draft of a will made. He returned the next day with the typewritten will. Rickey asked the attorney to read the will to him, which was done. He then asked that it be read again. After the second reading, testator said, "Now that is all right, just the way I want it, but I forgot something. I want to make a provision for my sister, Anna Plate." The attorney took the draft of the will to his office and had it typewritten, incorporating therein a provision for the benefit of the sister of testator in accordance with directions from said testator. Upon the next day the attorney took the amended draft of the will to the sanitarium and at the request of Mr. Rickey read it aloud to him. Mr. Rickey asked questions about the legal effect of certain provisions, and then asked that the entire will be read to him again, which was done. Mr. Rickey then said that the will was what he wanted and that he was ready to execute it. The proponents of the will were not in the room with the testator during the times when any of these conversations occurred between him and his attorney. The attorney went into the office of the sanitarium and secured two nurses to witness the will. Mr. Rickey duly executed the will and handed it to his attorney, telling him to keep it and not disclose its contents to any one. The attorney kept the will in his safe deposit box until after the death of the testator, when he handed it to Mrs. Rickey. The attorney testified that he had known Mr. Rickey for years before his death; that at the time of the execution of the will—

"his mental condition was as clear and vigorous and keen as it ever was. * * * Physically he was getting over a spell of sickness. He was feeling well. He was cheerful, smiling, laughing, and joking with the nurse and sitting up in bed. He was all right, and within a few days afterwards he left the sanitarium and went home, and was discharged."

There is evidence that over a year later the contestant Mrs. Scott and a nurse employed to care for Mr. Rickey read to him daily books and magazines and newspapers, and that he took a keen interest in them and his mind was clear and active, and there is abundant evidence in the entire record that during his entire lifetime Mr. Rickey was a man of more than ordinary mental acuteness.

In relation to the making of the will, proponents testified in substantial accord with the attorney, and from their testimony it appears that they had no knowledge that a will was to be made and knew of none of its provisions until after Mr. Rickey's death; that, after the execution of the will and the departure of the attorney, they learned from the testator that a will had been executed by him and left with his attorney, but did not learn the contents thereof.

The motion for a nonsuit was made upon the ground that there was no evidence produced of any influence, undue or otherwise, upon the testamentary act. The appellants do not point out to us any such evidence. In this case, as in the case of Estate of Donovan, 140 Cal. 390, 73 Pac. 1081—

"The testator was of sound mind and in the active management of his own affairs; * * * no evidence was offered to show that it was executed at a time other than upon the date it bore; that no claim was made that the appellant [respondent here] was present when the will was made, or that she ever at any time requested the decedent to make a will, or that she ever made a suggestion in reference to the making of a will, or that she even knew of the existence of the will [in the present case, the contents of the will] until after her husband's death."

As stated in the Estate of Donovan, supra:

"General influence not brought to bear upon the testamentary act, however controlling, is not undue influence such as will afford ground for the setting aside of the will of a person of sound mind. Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17; Estate of Langford, 108 Cal. 609; Estate of Calkins, 112 Cal. 296; In re Wilson, 117 Cal. 262. Undue influence, however used, must, in order to avoid a will, destroy the free agency of the testator at the time and in the very act of the making of the testament. It must bear directly upon the testamentary act. Goodwin v. Goodwin, 59 Cal. 560; Engelbert v. Engelbert, 198 Pa. St. 327; Page on Wills (Ed. 1901) §§ 127, 130; Chaplin on Wills, p. 95. Says Chaplin: 'The true test of undue influence is that it overcomes the will without convincing the judgment.' It is apparent, therefore, that there is in this case an entire absence of evidence legally sufficient to show that the appellant here unduly influenced the mind of this testator in his testamentary act, and the conclusion seems irresistible that under the stimulus of their sympathy the jury substituted their views of a fair will for that which under the law the testator had the undoubted right to make. For, as has been said, 'A testator of full age, sound and disposing mind and memory, and not under restraint, may make such disposition of his property as does not conflict with the law. The fact, then, that a testator with such qualifications makes a foolish, unnatural, or unjust will, does not show that undue influence caused the will.'"

In Re McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 33, 30 Pac. 101, 106, it was aptly said:

"The beneficiaries of a will are as much entitled to protection as any other property owners, and courts abdicate their functions when they permit the prejudices of a jury to set aside a will merely upon suspicion, or because it does not conform to their ideas of what was just or proper. * * * Evidence must be produced that pressure was brought to bear directly upon the testamentary act; but this evidence itself need not be direct. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient. It must, however, do more than raise a suspicion. It must amount to proof, and such evidence has the force of proof only when circumstances are proven which are inconsistent with the claim that the will was the spontaneous act of the alleged testator. I think there is nothing beyond suspicion shown here. There is no proof. Circumstances have been proven which accord with the theory of undue influence, none of which are inconsistent with the hypothesis that the will was the free act of an intelligent mind. This does not amount to proof. And many circumstances are shown which are wholly inconsistent with the hypothesis of undue influence. And the presumption of law, in the absence of all proof, in a contest, is in favor of the will."

In re Langford, 108 Cal. 608, 41 Pac. 701, recites facts which liken it to the instant case. In that case, a second wife was the chief beneficiary of the testator to the disadvantage of children of his first marriage who contested the will. Evidence was introduced to show that the second wife of testator had worked in the home of his first wife during the first marriage, and that the relations between her and the testator had been illicit. The court said:

"All this was 17 years before the execution of the will, and 20 years before the codicil in which he reaffirmed the will; it was too remote in time to be admissible for any purpose; and that it was prejudicial to appellant is beyond question. There was also some testimony as to declarations and occurrences at a somewhat later period, but before decedent's removal from Illinois to California, and, if admissible at all, they are entitled to no weight in the absence of evidence, either direct or circumstantial, that undue influence was brought to bear upon the very testamentary act. And such evidence must 'do more than raise a suspicion. It must amount to proof.' * * * In order to set aside a will for undue influence, there must be substantial proof of a pressure which overpowered the volition of the testator at the time the will was made."

[4] With regard to the claim of appellants that the will we are considering in the instant case is an unnatural one and suggests by its contents undue influence, it is pertinent to quote further from In re Langford, supra:

"The consideration of the question whether or not a will is 'unnatural'—by which is meant, we suppose, different from what it might have been expected to have been—is of no importance except in a case where there is some evidence immediately tending to show mental incapacity, fraud, or undue influence; in which event it might serve to help out a weak case. But there is no evidence in the case at bar that could be thus helped out. * * * And indeed, if it were important to consider it, we do not see how the will in the case at bar can be considered unnatural in such extreme sense as to be remarkable. At the time of the execution of the will the contestants—children of the first wife—were all grown up, middle-aged people with families of their own. He had seen but little of them after his marriage. * * * They had strenuously opposed the marriage, and had said unkind things of his wife; and, as was very natural there was not much social intercourse between the families afterwards. * * * At all events, being of sound mind and memory, it was for him to dispose of his property as he chose."

The case of In re Calkins, 112 Cal. 296, 44 Pac. 577, is pertinent because of the testimony relied upon by appellants in the instant case to show that the testator did not have any affection for his wife at the time he made the will, and that he distrusted her. In the Calkins Case it was said:

"The claim of the contestant that the testatrix had no affection for her husband would rebut any presumption of undue influence on his part, as would also the claim that the testatrix had a hearty dislike for Mrs. J. W. Calkins."
